Young Men's Institute, No. 11, at a meeting held Friday evening, elected J. C. Gorman and J. J. O'Connor delegates to the Grand Council, to be held in Oakland in August. W. D. Kent and William Brightman were chosen as Alternates.

AUCTION SALE

—OF A—

Large Consignment of Elegant and Costly

Parlor and Dining-room Furniture

BELL & CO., Auctioneers

—WILL SELL—

TUESDAY, JULY 2, 1889

At 10 o'clock A. M., sharp.

AT SALESROOM, - - - NO. 927 K STREET,

The following consigned goods. No limit. No reserve. Must be sold.

Seven elegant Parlor Suits, beautifully upholstered in satin, silk and velvet plush;

Four beautiful Turkish Chairs—three in satin, one in plush;

Six magnificent Cherry, harp design, Chairs, all different;

Two Platform Biscuit Back Chairs;

Eight handsome Plush Chairs and Rockers;

One elegant Folding Bed, Mirror front;

One Antique Oak Desk, for parlor;

Two beautiful Cheffoniers;

Two grand Side Boards;

Two Walnut Extension Tables;

Nine Bed Lounges, silk and satin.

The goods will be on exhibition to-morrow all day and in the evening.

Sale Positive.

BELL & CO., Auctioneers.

FIRE! ACCIDENT! LIFE!

—Insurance a Specialty.—

COMBINED ASSETS, - $50,000,000

Best in the World!

Royal, Norwich-Union & Lancashire, Of England.

See my list of policy-holders and my prices.

"TRAVELERS," of Hartford, Conn. Everybody knows the name. I sell only first-class policies.
C. H. DENTON, 628½ J Street.

W. A. GETT, JR.,

Attorney at Law,

Southwest Corner of Seventh and J Streets,
SACRAMENTO, CAL.

GEORGE T. BOYD,

Manufacturer of

Pure Candies and Ice Cream

Temple of Sweets,

907 K Street, next to Odd Fellows' Temple,
SACRAMENTO, CAL.

Butchers' Home,

1020 J Street,

Between 10th and 11th, : Sacramento, Cal.

Fine Wines, Liquors and Cigars. Also, a

GOOD GLASS OF BEER.

JACOB GRUHLER, Prop'r.

Cooper's Music Store.

Mathushek!

Principal Music House in Northern and Central California.

Largest and Best Selected Stock of Musical Instruments and Musical Merchandise.

Indorsement of Merit.

I take pleasure in certifying to the excellence of the Mathushek Piano. I can cheerfully and truthfully recommend it in any of its various styles as a first-class instrument, the equal of any and the superior of most in the qualities necessary to the accompaniment of the voice; and I believe it to be more than any other suited to withstand the effects of our California climate. We use it exclusively at our rehearsals and concerts.
W. H. KINROSS,
Musical Director McNeill Club.

NO. 631 J STREET,

Corner of Seventh,

SACRAMENTO.

Fine Table Wines

From our Celebrated Orleans Vineyard.

Producers of the
ECLIPSE
CHAMPAGNE,
530 Washington St.
SAN FRANCISCO.

CHAMPAGNE

W. B. CHAPMAN,
123 California St. San Francisco.

SOLE AGENT FOR THE PACIFIC COAST

For sale by all first-class Wine Merchants and Grocers.

Samples and Instructions for Self-measurement sent by mail on application.

L. RADLOFF,
LADIES' TAILOR,218 POST STREET, SAN FRANCISCO.
Tailor Made Suits a Specialty.

A. AITKEN,

PREMIUM PIONEER MARBLE AND GRANITE WORKS

423 J Street, bet. 4th and 5th, Sacramento.

Costic Tile, etc. Cemetery lots enclosed with Granite. All kinds of work done in Italian and Vermont Marble. Direct importer of Scotch and Eastern Granite Monuments. Also, Marble, Slate, Wooden and Iron Mantels, direct from manufacturers, at Reduced Prices. Call and examine.

Ancient Assyrian Style.

[A German student's song, for THEMIS, by Max. Lipowitz.]

At the sign of the "Black Whale" at Askalon,
There was drinking a man day by day,
Till that as stiff as a broomstick he
By the marble table lay.

At the sign of the "Black Whale" at Askalon,
There spake mine host; "Avast!
He's drinking of my date-palm wine,
And for his purse, too fast!"

At the sign of the "Black Whale" at Askalon,
There brought the waiters' troop
Six tiles which summed in uniform
The stranger's reckoning up.

At the sign of the "Black Whale" at Askalon,
There spake the guest: "Woe's me!
My ready cash hath all been spent
In the 'Lamb' at Nivele!"

At the sign of the "Black Whale" at Askalon,
The clock struck half-past four:
Then was the stranger guest put out
By the porter from Nubia's shore.

At the sign of the "Black Whale" at Askalon,
No prophet is made glad;
And who there likes a jolly life,
Pays cash for what he's had.

SACRAMENTO, June 23, 1889.

How Romans Enjoyed Life.

The lavish expenditure of the Romans on the cena, the great meal of the day, was often fabulous. Vitellus is actually reported to have squandered 400 sesteria, about £3,228, on his daily supper, though surely this must be a monstrous exaggeration! The celebrated feast to which he invited his brother, Lucius, cost 3,000 sesteria, or £40,350. Suetonius relates that it consisted of 2,000 different dishes of fish and 7,000 of fowls, and this did not exhaust the bill of fare. His daily food was luxurious and varied beyond precedent.

The deserts of Lybia, the shores of Spain and the waters of the Carpathian Seas were diligently searched to furnish his table with dainties, while the savage wilds of Britain had to bear their part in replenishing his larder. Had he reigned long Josephus says that he would have exhausted the wealth of the Roman Empire itself.

Ælius Verus, another of those worthies, was equally profuse in the extravagance of his suppers. It is said that a single entertainment, to which only a dozen guests were invited, cost 6,000,000 sesterces, 6,000 sesteria, that is, or nearly £48,500. History relates that his whole life was passed eating and drinking in the voluptuous retreats of Daphne or at the luxurious retreats of Antioch. So profuse, indeed, was the extravagance of these times that to entertain an Emperor was to face almost certain ruin; one dish alone at the table of Heliogabalus is said to have cost about £4,000 of our money.

No wonder these imperial feasts were lengthened out for hours, and that every artifice, often revolting in the extreme, was used to prolong the pleasure of eating, or that Philoxenus should have wished that he had the throat of a crane with a delicate palate all the way down. One does not like to associate the name of Julius Caesar with habits of low gluttony that would disgrace a prize-fighter, and yet, if our memory does not play us false, even he did not disdain to take emetics to return to the banquet with a keen appetite.

Baron Munchausen Abroad.

A native newspaper published at Bitlis, in Asiatic Turkey, narrates the following remarkable story: Three Mussulman travelers were lately journeying to Ponlank. On arriving at a spot called Ahlat, on the Lake of Van, one of them approached the water and began his ablutions. As he was dipping his feet into the lake he uttered a scream. His leg had been seized in the jaw of a marine monster which was dragging him into the water.

His companions ran to his assistance, and, taking him by the hands, they succeeded in bringing him ashore, but what was their surprise when they saw the monster also emerge from the water firmly attached by the teeth to the calf of his leg. Knives, sticks and everything else that was brought to bear upon the monster proved unavailing, and at last the ingenious travelers bethought themselves of an heroic measure. They lit a good fire, and on it the jaw of the obstinate animal holding the man's leg was placed, the companions of the victim, who was yelling with pain all the while, standing near to watch the result.

The heat apparently aroused the animal from its torpor. It began to move its body and suddenly flew into the air, still holding the man by the leg. After flying up to a height of about forty yards it directed its course toward the lake, into which it plunged with a mighty splash, burying its victim in the depths of the water.

France pays a compliment to the United States by selecting the Fourth of July as the date for unavailing the Statue of Liberty at Paris. But what day the Monarchist party will select for pulling the statue down again when they get into power is yet an unsettled question.

Mr. and Mrs. Bowser.

In returning from a trip down town the other week I left my shopping bag in the car, and when I mentioned the fact to Mr. Bowser and asked him to call at the street railway office and get it, he replied:

"No, ma'am, I won't! Anybody careless enough to leave an article of value in a street-car deserves to lose it. Besides, you did not take the number of the car, and they would only laugh at me at the office."

"Do you take the number of every street-car you ride in?" I asked.

"Certainly. Every sensible person does. Day before yesterday I came up in No. 70. I went back in No. 44. I came up to supper in No. 66. Yesterday I made my trips in Nos. 55, 61 and 38. To-day in Nos. 83, 77 and 15. The street railways contract to carry passengers—not to act as guardians for children and imbeciles."

"Mr. Bowser, other people have lost articles on the street cars."

"Yes—other women. You never heard of a man losing anything."

I left the matter drop there, knowing that time would sooner or later bring my revenge. It came sooner than I expected. Mr. Bowser took his dress coat down to a tailor to get a couple of new buttons sewed on, and as he returned without it, I observed:

"You are always finding fault with the procrastinators of my dressmaker. Your tailor doesn't seem to be in any particular hurry?"

"How?"

"Why, you were to bring that coat back with you."

"That coat? Thunder!"

Mr. Bowser turned pale and sprung out of his chair.

"Didn't lose it going down, did you?"

"I—I believe I—!"

"You left it on the street-car when you came up?"

"Yes."

"Mr. Bowser, anybody careless enough to leave an article of value in a street-car deserves to lose it. However, you took the number of the car, I presume?"

"N—no!"

"You didn't! That shows what sort of a person you are. Yesterday when I went down after baby's shoes I took car No. 111. When I returned I took car 86. When I went over to mother's I took car 56. The conductor had red hair. One horse was brown and the other black. The driver had a cast in his left eye. There were four women and five men in the car. We passed two loads of ashes, one of dirt and an ice-cream wagon. The conductor wore No. 8 shoes, and was near-sighted. The street railways contract to carry passengers, Mr. Bowser, not act as guardians for sap-heads and children."

"But I'll get it at the office, to-morrow," he slowly replied.

"Perhaps, but it is doubtful. As you can't remember the number of the car, they will laugh at the idea; and perhaps take you for an impostor."

He glared at me like a caged animal and made no reply, and I confess that I almost hoped he would never recover the coat. He did, however, after a couple of days, and as he brought it home he looked at me with great importance and said:

"There is the difference, Mrs. Bowser. Had you lost anything on the car it would have been lost forever. The street car people were even sending out messengers to find men and restore my property."

One day a laboring man called at the side door and asked for the loan of a spade for a few minutes, saying that he was at work near by; and he was so respectful that I hastened to accommodate him. Two days later Mr. Bowser, who was working in the back yard, wanted the spade, and I had to tell him that I lent it. As it was not to be found, the natural inference was that the borrower had not returned it.

"This is a pretty state of affairs!" exclaimed Mr. Bowser when he had given up the search. "The longer some folks live the less they seem to know."

"But he looked honest."

"What of it? You had no business to lend that spade."

"I was sure he'd return it."

"Well, he didn't, and anybody of sense would have known he wouldn't. If somebody should come here and ask for the piano I suppose you'd let it go. Mrs. Bowser, you'll never get over your countrified ways if you live to be as old as the hills. It isn't the loss of the spade so much, but it is the fact that the man thinks you are so green."

In the course of an hour I found the spade at the side steps, where the man had left it after using, but when I informed Mr. Bowser of the fact he only growled:

"He brought it back because he probably heard me making a fuss about it, and was afraid of arrest."

Two days later, as Mr. Bowser sat on the front steps, a colored man came up and asked to borrow the lawn mower for a few minutes for use on the next corner.

"Certainly, my boy," replied Mr. Bowser, "you'll find it in the back yard."

When he had gone I observed that the man had a suspicious look about him, and that I should not dare trust him, and Mr. Bowser turned on me with:

"What do you know about reading character? There never was a more honest man in the world. I'd trust him with every dollar I have."

In about half an hour Mr. Bowser began to get uneasy, and after waiting a few minutes longer he walked down to the corner. No black man. No lawn-mower. By inquiry he found that the borrower had loaded the mower into a hand-cart and hurried off. It was a clear case of confidence.

"Well?" I queried, as Mr. Bowser came back with his eyes bulging out and his hair on end.

"It's—it's gone!" he gasped.

"I expected it, the longer some folks live the less they seem to know. If somebody should come and want to borrow the furnace or the bay windows you'd let them go, I suppose."

"But he—he—"

"But what of it? You had no business to lend that lawn-mower, Mr. Bowser. You'll never get over your countrified ways if you live—"

He would listen no further. He rushed out and sailed around the neighborhood for two hours, and next morning got the police at work, and it was three days before he would give up that he had been "hornswoggled," as one of the detectives put it. Then, to add to his misery, the officer said:

"We'll keep our eyes open, but there isn't one chance in five hundred. After this you'd better let your wife have charge of things. That darkey couldn't have bamboozled her that way."

Various Forms of Ghosts.

I have been in almost every country in the world, and everywhere I have found people who have seen and believe in ghosts. In Western countries, ghosts are generally harmless; but in Asia and Africa they are of a malignant and vicious type. The dread of ghosts is common to all the aboriginal races of India and China, and the only means employed to oppose their rancor and mischievous dispositions is to build shrines to them or make them offerings. Any severe illness, any epidemic disease, as smallpox, cholera, etc., is attributed to certain of these spirits, who must be propitiated accordingly. In India the man tiger is, perhaps, the most dreaded of all these demon ghosts, for when a tiger has killed a man the tiger is considered safe from harm, as the spirit of the man rides upon his head and guides him clear of danger. Accordingly, it is believed that the only sure mode of destroying a tiger who has killed many people is to begin by making offerings to the spirits of his victims, thereby depriving him of their valuable services. In China the ghosts most propitiated are of those who have met a violent or untimely death, whether by design or by accident. Even women who die in child-bed, or the wretches who are hanged for their crimes, are believed to have the same power of causing evil to the living as those who have been killed by any other violent causes, including poison, disease, lightning, etc. All these deified spirits are often distinguished by some term denoting the manner of his death. Thus the "tiger ghost" is the ghost of a man killed by a tiger; the "snake ghost" is the ghost of a person who was killed by a snake. In Africa the "waddy" and "lightning" ghosts are the most common, but the most dreaded spirit is the Sirocco ghost, which is reputed by the natives an implacable spirit. Most of the deceased persons whose spirits are now worshipped were the ancestors of some of the aborigines.

The ceremonies observed in propitiating the ghosts consist mainly of the offering of fowls, pigs, goats, as well as flowers and fruits, of the recitation and singing of certain prayers and charms before the different shrines. These charms or prayers are addressed to the deified ghosts of the dead, for the purpose of the spirits to desist from doing harm or to appear and receive the orders of the performers. After two or three successive performances the ghost is understood to be placated. In India and China the most vindictive spirits are those who die in child-birth, and in Africa the Sirocco ghost.

A newly elected justice of the peace delivered the following charge to the jury: "Gentlemen of the jury—Charging a jury is a new business to me, as this is my first case. You have heard all the evidence in the case as well as myself; you have also heard the learned counsel. If you believe what the counsel for the plaintiff has told you, your verdict will be for the plaintiff; but if, on the other hand, you believe what the defendant's counsel has told you, then you will give a verdict for the defendant. But if you are like me, and don't believe what either of them said, then I'll be d—d if I know what you will do. Constable, take charge of the jury."

Flossie is six years old. "Mamma," she asked one day, "if I get married will I have to have a husband like pa?"

"Yes," replied the mother with an amused smile.

"And if I don't get married will I have to be an old maid like Aunt Kate?"

"Yes."

"Mamma"—after a pause—"it's a tough world for us women, ain't it?"—Binghamton Republican.

L. K. Hammer

THE LEADING
MUSIC DEALER.

AGENT FOR

*Chickering
Pianos,*

Largest Stock of Musical Instruments in the City.

No. 820 J STREET.

REEVES & LONG, UNDERTAKERS,
609 J Street, bet. Sixth and Seventh.

WE KEEP ON HAND A COMPLETE
Stock of Coffins and Caskets; also,
Shrouds of every description. Orders from city or country receive prompt attention, day or night.
EMBALMING done in the best manner; and at reasonable rates.

FRIEND & TERRY
LUMBER CO.

Wholesale and Retail Lumber Dealers, Also Shakes,
Bolts, Ties, Doors, Windows, Blinds and Screens.
Main Yard and Office, No. 1310 Second Street.
Branch Yard, corner Twelfth and J Sts.
P. O. Box 233. E. J. Holt, Manager. Sacramento

Root, Neilson & Co.

UNION IRON WORKS, FRONT STREET,
Between N and O,
Steam Engines and Boilers Built to Order.
Steamboat and Quartz Machinery Constructed, Fitted up or Repaired.
Castings and Machinery of every description.

Patronize Home Industry!

CITY BREWERY

FRANK RUSSLER, Proprietor.

GENUINE

Pilsener Felsen Beer.

Corner Twelfth and H Streets,

Telephone 201.

SACRAMENTO.

CELEBRATED

WEINER LAGER BEER

CAPITAL BREWERY

LOUIS NICOLAUS,

Corner Twelfth and I Streets

SACRAMENTO.

COLUMBUS BREWERY

CHRIS. WAHL, Proprietor,

Corner of Sixteenth and K Streets,

SACRAMENTO, CAL.

Agent for the Celebrated W. J. LEMP'S ST. LOUIS
LAGER BEER

WISSEMAN'S SALOON,

Kiebetz & Green's Old Stand,

1020 Fourth St., bet. J and K, Sacramento.

GEO. WISSEMAN, PROPRIETOR.

Families and Saloons supplied by bottle or keg.

California State Bank

DOES A GENERAL BANKING BUSINESS.

Draws Exchange on all the Principal Cities of the World.

OFFICERS:

PRESIDENT.....N. D. RIDEOUT
VICE-PRESIDENT.....FRED K. COX
CASHIER.....A. ABBOTT
ASSISTANT CASHIER.....W. E. GERBER

DIRECTORS:

C. W. Clarke, Jos. Steffens, N. D. Rideout,
Geo. C. Perkins, J. R. Watson, Frederick Cox,
W. E. Gerber.

W. R. STRONG & CO.

Founded 1852.

Fruit Packers

and Shippers.

PROPRIETORS OF

CAPITAL NURSERIES,

SACRAMENTO, CAL.

King Bros.

State Capitol Cash Grocery, 131 J Street, corner Second.Goods sold on small margin, strictly for cash. Best Brands of Wines, Liquors and Cigars.

JAS. LONGSHORE,

SACRAMENTO TRUNK FACTORY,

530 K STREET.

Trunks, Valises & Bags Wholesale and Retail.

OSBORN & FOLGER

DEALERS IN

ICE and COAL, HAY and GRAIN.

New 10-ton Fairbanks' Hay Scales.

N. E. cor. Fifth and I Streets.
Wood Yard, 806 I Street.

Pacific Manuf'g. Co.

213 AND 215 J STREET.

Manufacturer of the CYCLONE Pumping and Geared Mills, and dealers in all kinds of Pumps, Tanks, etc.

Waterhouse & Lester

DEALERS IN

IRON, STEEL, CUMBERLAND COAL,

Wagon Lumber and Carriage Hardware,
SACRAMENTO.

Earthquake and Fire Proof BUILDINGS

Constructed on my patent system. Perfect protection guaranteed. For estimates and particulars see
E. HAWES,
Twelfth and B streets, Sacramento.

PUMPS

Our Factory is the Largest and Best Equipped in Northern California.Our Designs are New and Original and Calculated for Every Variety of Service.

CAPITAL IRON WORKS,

904 K Street, Sacramento.

CANCERS,

Ulcers, Wens, Lumps, Excreseences, etc.,
Positively Cured or no Pay.
No Knife Used.As to the success of my treatment, I give the names of a few of the many cured. By addressing them they will give any information required—and it pays
to investigate before being treated.

Mrs. O. C. Neilsen, Grass Valley, cancer.
John Service, Auburn, lupus.
Patrick Lynch, Sacramento, cancer.
Mrs. Jno. Shaw, Grass Val., birthmark removed.
N. S. Deek, S. P. R. R. Sacramento, cancer.
J. L. Woods, Washington, Yolo county, cancer.
John W. Douglas, Rocklin, cancer.
Miss Mamie Lynch, Yolo, tumor removed.
Chas. McLaughlin, Sacramento, cancer.
I might give many more. Those afflicted are invited to call and investigate for themselves. Consultation at office free. Send for circular.
Office, 426 K Street, Sacramento.

DR. J. H. SHIRLEY.

A. C. SWEETSER & CO.,

Real Estate & Insurance Brokers

Lands For Sale in all parts of the State.

Some Good Investments in School Lands.

Send for Catalogue.

Office, No. 1012 Fourth Street,

SACRAMENTO, CAL.

American Steam Laundry

NINETEENTH AND I STS.—WHITE LABOR
only. Linen polished in the neatest manner.
We guarantee satisfaction. All ordinary mending, sewing on buttons, etc., free of charge. Washing
called for and delivered to any part of the city.
Main Office at Sawtelle's Book Store, 708 and 710 J
street. Branch offices at all the Hotels.

RHOADS & TOWNSEND HOUSE

On European Plan.

Cor. Second and J Streets, Sacramento.

ARTHUR MILLER, PROPRIETOR.

CAPITAL ALE VAULTS.

Established in 1870, and still maintains the same reputation for keeping the best WINES, LIQUORS and Cigars in the city. The finest Hot Lunch in the city from 11 to 2. Clam Chowder a specialty every night.

NAGELE & SVENSSON, Prop'rs.

Telephone 38. 302 J and 1005 Third st.

GRAND OPENING

OF

NOLAN & SON'S

Boot and Shoe STORE.

603 J STREET, SACRAMENTO,

One door above Sixth.

Barrett & Berkey

PACIFIC RESTAURANT,
OYSTER HOUSE AND
WINE PARLORS

701 J Street, cor. 7th.

B. Ruhl

Bookbinder, Paper Ruler and

Blank Book Manufacturer.

Periodicals, Magazines, Music, and all kinds of Binding neatly done at the lowest prices.

No. 409 J STREET, SACRAMENTO.

Wm. J. Hassett.

A. J. Johnston.

A. J. Johnston & Co.

PRINTERS,

410 J Street,

Sacramento

CHAS. MONTGOMERY, President. R. C. PELL, Vice-Pres. W. T. BRERETON, Sec. and Treas.

Bull and Grant Farm Implement Co.

DEALERS IN.

AGRICULTURAL IMPLEMENTS,

Buggies, Carriages and Wagons.

T. A. LAUDER, MANAGER

211, 213 J STREET, SACRAMENTO.

FOR FRESH, CLEAN GROCERIES, GO TO

We invite a call at our new location, corner Eighth and K streets, where with our increased space we are enabled to give our large stock a fair display and our customers convenient room.

THE AMERICAN CASH STORE

Offers attractions to cash buyers of GROCERIES. A high quality of goods is carefully regarded.

O. F. WASHBURN, 801 K STREET.

PAUL GRAF,

Manufacturer of and dealer in Saddles, Harness, Robes, Collars,
Whips, Spurs, Brushes
Currycombs, etc.

1130 J Street, near Twelfth

Repairing Neatly Done.

Harness Made to Order.

ANHEUSER & BUSCH

BEER

Can be found on draught only at

John Gruhler's Saloon

No. 522 J STREET.

The finest and best Wines, Liquors and Cigars cou-stantly on hand.

NOTICE TO FRUITMEN!

Keep your trees free from scale and your apples
from being wormy by the use of

Warner's Scale & Insect Exterminator

FOR SALE BY

G. T. NOE, - - DRUGGIST,
AUBURN, CAL.

Put up in one-half gallon and quart cans.

A. L. HART,

ATTORNEY-AT-LAW

Sutter Building, cor. 5th and J.

W. A. ANDERSON,

ATTORNEY-AT-LAW,

No. 209 J Street, Sacramento.

F. F. TEBBETS, DENTIST.

No. 914 SIXTH STREET,

Bet. I and J, west side, opp. Congregational Church.

DR. J. A. WELDON,

Dentist,

Cor. Eighth and J Streets, over Drug Store,

Teeth extracted without pain.

DR. H. H. PIERSON,

SURGICAL & AND & MECHANICAL & DENTIST

511 J Street, bet. 5th and 6th.

Gas administered for the painless extraction of teeth.

Bainbridge Business College

J. C. BAINBRIDGE, }
PRINCIPAL.

1017 J Street, Sacramento. Send for Circular.

Joseph Hahn & Co.,

PHARMACISTS,

S. W. cor. Fifth and J Streets, Sacramento.

CHOICE PERFUMERIES, ETC.

Prescriptions carefully compounded, at all hours.

EARL BROS.

COMMISSION MERCHANTS

IN CALIFORNIA PRODUCTS

122 J STREET, : : SACRAMENTO.

GEORGE DIETRICH, Manager.

Chicago House, 157 South Water St.

CHANGED HANDS.

SACRAMENTO EXCHANGE,

(Formerly Wm. Gamble's.)

1012 SEVENTH STREET.

Fine Wines. All the celebrated brands of Liquors
and Cigars. ROBERT ALLEN,
Formerly of Agricultural Park.

BOOTS AND SHOES
made to order. Boots,
$5 to $11. Shoes, $4 to
$9. Ladies' Shoes, best quality French Kid, $5
to $7.

REPAIRING DONE
at lowest prices.NONE BUT BEST
mechanics employed.

WE GUARANTEE
to make perfect fitting
to the worst of crooked
and crippled feet.

COMPETE WITH any shoes on the market.

216 J Street

—AND—

208 K Street,

SACRAMENTO.

A. CASELLI

& COMPANY.

$500 REWARD.

PURSUANT TO A RESOLUTION OF THE BOARD
of Supervisors of Sacramento county, adopted May 7, 1889, said Board will pay the sum of Five Hundred Dollars ($500) for evidence leading to the arrest and conviction of any party illegally carrying on the business of hydraulic mining on the American river
or its tributaries, in any and all mines or claims which have been heretofore enjoined by any Court of competent jurisdiction; provided, however, that said
Board will pay but one reward for the arrest and conviction of a person or persons operating the same mine or claim.

Attest: F. F. TEBBETS,
Chairman of the Board of Supervisors.
[SEAL] W. B. HAMILTON, Clerk of Board.

SNOWFLAKE PARK.

Twenty-eighth and R Streets.

To-day (Sunday) June 30, 1889
At 2 o'clock P. M., sharp.BASEBALL—CALIFORNIA LEAGUE.
Sacramento vs. San Francisco.

Prices of admission: Men, 50 cents; ladies, 25 cents; small boys, 10 cents; reserved seats, 25 cents—can be obtained any time at H. C. Megerle's News Depot, Fourth street, between J and K, or at Park before the game.

Trains leave depot at 12:25, 1:45, 1:55, 1:25 and 1:45—stopping at Third, Tenth and Eighteenth sts. Fare, for round trip, 15 cents.

Admission to Park (including fare both ways), 50 cents.

HORRIBLES Still a BOOMING!

GENERAL COMMITTEE NOT NEEDED.

HURRAH FOR THE FOURTH!

Two hundred and fifty dollars will be given away in Cash Prizes. The streets will swarm with Horribles from 2 to 3 o'clock, and grand march from 3 to 4. Costumes, masks and dominoes furnished FREE at headquarters, on J Street, between Ninth and Tenth.

Come All, and Bring the Babies!

K. W. ROBBINS, Manager.

1776

1889

Fourth of July INVITATION.

HEADQUARTERS GRAND MARSHAL,
Golden Eagle Hotel,
SACRAMENTO, CAL., June 20, 1889.

THE GRAND MARSHAL OF THE Fourth of July Parade hereby extends a cordial invitation to all organizations, military and civic, in this city and adjacent towns, to participate with the citizens of Sacramento in a proper celebration of the Nation's * Birthday!

All who desire to take part are requested to communicate at once with the Grand Marshal, to the end that proper places may be assigned all who desire to join in the Parade.

R. D. STEPHENS, Grand Marshal.

GEO. W. RAILTON, Chief Aid.

O'BRIEN'S, 607 J.

SWEEPING REDUCTION IN LADIES' SHOES.

Best French Kid, hand turn, worth $7, reduced to $6. Ladies' French Kid Button, low heel, long vamp, worth $5, reduced to $4. Misses' and Children's Canvas Shoes reduced 25 per cent.

H. WACHHORST Leading Jeweler of Sacramento

SIGN OF THE TOWN CLOCK,

No. 315 J STREET, SACRAMENTO.

W. D. Comstock, 501 -- 507 K, cor. Fifth

Furniture

Bedding.

On Exhibition, THE LARGEST AND BEST SELECTED STOCK.

FAIR DEALING!

LOW PRICES!

GENSHLEA BROS.

624 J ST.

Strictly High Grade Goods in all Lines.

TRY THE LA ROSA ESPANOLA KEY WEST CIGAR.

FIREWORKS And FLAGS, Wholesale and Retail.

Country Orders Solicited.

NATHAN & DeYOUNG, 205 K St.

Just Received!

Immense Assortment!

LATEST STYLES!

LOWEST PRICES!

PERFECT FIT GUARANTEED.

420 J STREET.

SACRAMENTO.

NICOLL, THE TAILOR,

LATEST PATTERNS OF

Foreign & Domestic Woolens

For the season of 1889. Samples, with Instructions for Self-Measurement, sent free.

Trousers (to order), from $5.00.

Suits (to order), from $20.00.

NICOLL, THE TAILOR,

420 J ST., SACRAMENTO.

Branch of 816 Market street, San Francisco. Coast Branches: Los Angeles, 86 North Main street Portland, 126 First street.

CURTIS BROS. & CO.

Wholesale and Retail Dealers in and Shippers of all kinds of

Fruits, Vegetables

And GENERAL PRODUCE.

Careful attention paid to the selection and packing of Choice Fruits and Vegetables for distant markets.

Goods delivered in city free.

308 and 310 K Street, - - Sacramento, Cal.

Klune & Floberg, WATCHMAKERS and JEWELERS

Agents for Rockford Watch Co.

NO. 428 J STREET, SACRAMENTO.

F. KUEHNE & CO.,

NO. 906 NINTH STREET,

Between I and J,

SACRAMENTO,

Carpenters and Contractors

Store and office work a specialty.

ICE BOXES for Breweries and Saloons always on hand and made to order.

Jobbing and Repairing promptly attended to.

R. H. PETTIT,

Wholesale and Retail Dealer in

IMPORTED & DOMESTIC CIGARS

Smoke the "Lone Fisherman,"

The BEST FIVE-CENT CIGAR in the Market.

NO. 225 K STREET.

JESSE SLAUGHTER,

Office, No. 1217 Fifth Street.

Plastering, Whitewashing, Cleaning of Cesspools, Etc.

Also, CITY SCAVENGER.

Burying of dead animals attended to at short notice.

Don't forget the number—1217 Fifth street, the old stand, where I have been for 25 years.

WESTERN HOTEL

209 to 219 K Street.

The Leading Hotel of Sacramento, Cal.

FREE BUS TO AND FROM HOTEL.

Meals, 25 Cents. Rooms, according to Location.

WM. LAND, Proprietor.

BELL & CO.,

GENERAL AUCTIONEERS.

Salesroom, 927 K Street, Sacramento, Cal.

Regular Salesdays—Wednesdays and Saturdays at 10 o'clock A. M.

Assistants—W. T. Crowell, Real Estate; J. Pulvermacher, Bookkeeper; J. Lambert, Furniture and Stock.

Particular attention paid to sales of real estate, house sales, and sales of farms, stock, etc.

Highest price paid for all kinds of household goods.

BAKER & HAMILTON,

San Francisco and Sacramento,

Importers and Jobbers of

Hardware, Iron, Steel, Coal, Powder,

MACHINERY

And Agricultural Implements.

Send for Catalogue.

RAILROAD TIME TABLE.

Southern Pacific Company
PACIFIC SYSTEM.

June 26, 1889.

Trains LEAVE and are due to ARRIVE at SACRAMENTO.

Lv.	Trains Run Daily.	Arr.
7:00 A	Calistoga and Napa	11:40 A
4:05 P	Calistoga and Napa	8:30 P
11:00 P	Ashland and Portland	3:40 A
5:05 P	Denning, El Paso and East	7:05 P
7:30 P	Knights Landing	7:55 A
4:30 A	Marysville (Mixed)	4:25 P
9:00 A	Los Angeles	9:55 A
9:00 P	Second Class, Ogden and East	6:30 A
10:30 P	Central Atlantic Express	3:40 P
3:00 P	Ogden and East	9:50 A
11:00 P	Oroville	3:40 A
3:00 P	Oroville	9:50 A
10:40 A	Red Bluff via Marysville	4:05 P
4:00 A	Redding and Sisson via Willows	10:40 P
7:00 A	San Francisco via Benicia	8:30 P
4:05 P	San Francisco via Benicia	10:10 P
*10:00 A	San Francisco via Steamer	26:00 A
11:20 A	San Francisco via Livermore	2:25 P
3:05 P	San Francisco via Benicia	11:40 A
11:20 A	San Jose	2:25 P
9:00 A	Santa Barbara	9:55 A
5:05 P	Santa Barbara	7:05 P
7:00 A	Santa Rosa	11:40 A
4:05 P	Santa Rosa	8:30 P
9:00 A	Stockton and Galt	7:05 P
5:05 P	Stockton and Galt	9:55 A
9:00 P	Truckee and Reno	6:30 A
10:30 P	Truckee and Reno	3:40 P
8:30 A	Colfax	5:00 P
7:00 A	Vallejo	11:40 A
4:05 P	Vallejo	18:30 P
*12:15 P	Folsom and Placerville (Mixed)	*10:35 A
*7:15 A	Folsom and Placerville	*3:45 P
*5:20 P	Folsom	*6:50 A

*Sunday excepted. †Sunday only. ‡Monday excepted. A for morning. P for afternoon.
A. N. TOWN, Gen'l Manager.
T. H. GOODMAN, Gen'l Pass. and Ticket Agent.

H. K. WALLACE & CO.

NO. 920 K STREET.

Sacramento Stove House.

Headquarters for Plumbing, Gas and Steam Fitting.
Galvanized Iron Tanks of all sizes made to order.

Edwin K. Alsip & Co.

ESTABLISHED 1860.

REAL ESTATE

AND INSURANCE AGENTS.

FARMING LANDS A SPECIALTY.

Catalogues issued monthly.

No. 1015 Fourth Street, Sacramento.

Gregory Bros. Co.

Established 1852.

COMMISSION MERCHANTS,

Packers and Shippers of California Fruit and Produce,

126 and 128 J STREET,

San Francisco Office, 313 Davis St. SACRAMENTO.

MISS A. E. VOTAW,

Dealer in

French Millinery

523 J STREET, SACRAMENTO.

Careful and prompt attention paid to country orders.

ANGLO-NEVADA ASSURANCE CORPORATION

OF SAN FRANCISCO.

FIRE.—Cash Capital, $2,000,000—MARINE.

Sacramento Branch:

No. 1018 SECOND STREET.

JOSEPH STEFFENS,
Manager.HOWARD KIMBROUGH,
Local Agent.

Hotfilter & Grafmiller,

MANUFACTURING JEWELERS,

Jewelry made to order. Watches, Clocks and Jewelry Repaired and Warranted.

No. 1026 Sixth Street, Sacramento.

R. DAVIS,

NOTARY PUBLIC,

Real Estate and Insurance Agent.

Representing the following companies:

Manchester of England; Caledonian of Edinburgh, Scotland; London and Lancaster, England.

1002 J Street, Sacramento.

Restaurant de France,

FAURE & BECKER, PROPRIETORS.

(Successors to L. Payen.)

No. 427 K Street, Near Metropolitan Theater.

Family Entrance on Fifth Street.

Catering to Families, Banquets and Wedding Parties a specialty.

THE EMERSON

Vol. I.

SACRAMENTO: SUNDAY, JULY 7, 1889.

No. 20.

THEMIS: published weekly, by A. J. Johnston & Co. Publication Office, 410 J Street. Subscription—One year, by mail, $3 00; six months, by mail, $1 50, in advance; per month, by carrier, 25 cents. (Entered at the Post Office at Sacramento as second-class matter.)

To walk through one of our cemeteries impresses one that oblivion soon comes after death. It has been said, and very truly, that the life of an individual can be illustrated by putting a finger in a basin of water; when withdrawn no evidence remains that the water has been disturbed. We were impressed with this sentiment when walking in the city cemetery a few days ago. In the State plot are four monuments that are creditable. One marks a grave of Hugh C. Murray, who died here September 18, 1857, at the early age of thirty-two. He is said to have been the youngest man who ever occupied the position of Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of any State in the Union. Few residents in Sacramento outside of the legal fraternity now recollect him. Another monument marks the resting place of John C. Bell. He was a member of the Assembly from El Dorado county. He was shot and stabbed in the State Capitol, now the Court-house of this county, by Dr. W. H. Stone, of Georgetown, and died April 15, 1860, at the age of twenty-nine. Stone was afterward acquitted, and subsequently died at San José. In the southeast corner of the plot is the monument over the remains of William I. Ferguson, State Senator from Sacramento county, who died September 14, 1858, at the age of thirty-three, from the effects of a wound received in a duel fought with George Pen Johnston on the 21st of the preceding month. Ferguson was a remarkable man, and one of bravery. In the southwest corner is a handsome monument of marble over the grave of Thomas Campbell, a member of the Assembly from Calaveras county, who died December 30, 1862, at the age of twenty-five. There are also interred in the State plot Henry Edgerton, who died November 4, 1887, and Dr. Thomas M. Logan, who died February 13, 1876. The monument over the grave of Judge Murray was erected by his friends; those over the graves of Ferguson, Campbell, and Bell were paid for by the State; and those marking the graves of Logan and Edgerton were constructed by their friends. The last interment in the State plot was of William Irwin, the thirteenth Governor of California, who died at San Francisco, March 15, 1886. His grave is in the middle of the plot and is unmarked save by a plain redwood board, on which is stenciled his name and date of death. It seems a reflection on the great State of California that a man who rendered distinguished public service should not receive greater consideration. Irwin served two terms in the Assembly and three in the Senate; acted as Lieutenant-Governor after the resignation of Governor Booth, and from 1875 to 1879 was our Chief Executive. He was an honest man, and died comparatively poor. It would seem that a State so rich as California should at least render proper homage to its deceased Governors. Of the eight Governors of this State who are dead, the grave of but one is marked by a monument erected by the commonwealth—that of John Bigler, who died November 29, 1871, and who is buried in the Masonic plot in the city cemetery.

We believe that in the case of cemeteries owned by municipalities the caring for the plots should be at public expense. It very often has happened that persons have died who at the time of their death were popular, but years later their graves have been permitted to fall into entire neglect. We have an instance of this in our city cemetery. On one of the main driveways, near the entrance, is the grave of Charles A. King, who died February 5, 1857, at the age of thirty-six. The plot is entirely neglected, and the monument is broken and badly defaced. From what we learn of him, he was a man of many friends in his lifetime. It is with difficulty that one can read upon his monument the lines, "His life was gentle; and the elements so mixed in him that nature might stand up and say to all the world, this was a man." Speaking of his death, the Sacramento State Journal, of the 6th, said: "This gentleman and well-known theatrical manager, died yesterday afternoon at 4 o'clock, at Sonora, after a severe illness of some three weeks' duration. Mr. King had hosts of friends in this community, having been connected with theatrical affairs in this city from their earliest existence. He was a lively and sociable companion, whose virtues will not soon be forgotten by those who enjoyed his acquaintance. In many walks of the drama Mr. King was a most excellent actor. On the reception of the news of his decease last evening at the National Theater, the performances were closed for the night." His funeral took place on the 11th, from Grace Church, Rev. W. H. Hill officiated, and speaking of that occurrence, the same paper said: "Had it not been for the unpleasant state of the weather, there would doubtless have been a very large procession of our citizens on foot. Some twenty-five coaches followed the remains to their last resting place. The procession was preceded by a fine band of music, which discoursed the sweet and solemn strains that the departed son of genius loved so well to listen to when in life. * * * * Many were deeply affected during the services, as 'Charley King,' as he was affectionately called, was a general favorite, and much beloved by his theatrical associates and by his other acquaintances."

In our issue of June 23d, we called attention to the approaching school election, and suggested that instead of the nominees for school directors being named by political committees, they be nominated in convention. We again refer to this subject, in that we believe that our suggestion meets with the approval of all who are interested in the education of our youth. It will not be seriously denied that we have had many men on the Board of Education who should not have been there. It will not be gainsayed that above the heads of the teachers has been suspended the sword of Damocles, and that the power to sever the thread rested with the ward politicians of this city. It is certainly time there should be a reformation in this regard. No teacher who is capable should be removed without cause, and the matter of politics should not be considered when selections are made. There are many men of education who are in every way qualified who would accept positions on the school board, were the nominations tendered them by a convention of intelligent men, but they will not stoop to crave favor at the hands of a political committee, some members of which perhaps are not able to write a grammatical sentence, and have no appreciation of the responsibility involved in the naming of members of the Board of Education. Repeatedly have we been called upon to intercede to retain a capable teacher in place; it has been in the educational department in Sacramento that ability counted not against political backing.

The custom of newspapers nowadays to attempt to sustain their positions by interviewing citizens of the community is supremely absurd. It is in line with the matter of petitions—anybody and everybody will sign them, regardless of whether there is merit in what is asked for. Of late the dailies of this city have resorted to interviewing prominent citizens. It is amusing that the gentlemen interviewed are usually the same ones, and that their opinions are in accord with those of the reporter who propounds the interrogatories. This is a very cheap way of manufacturing what the press call "public opinion." It is questionable if the gentlemen who permit their views on these various subjects to be so expressed would be willing to subject themselves to a cross-examination to determine what investigation they have given to the subjects about which they attempt to reflect the opinions of the people of this community. It would seem that after a careful investigation of a subject, an editor of a newspaper would be able to confidently express himself, and that he would have no occasion to send reporters about the city to pick up the undigested street opinion of citizens to bolster up his position.

In our last issue we mentioned the fact that Hon. Hannibal Hamlin is the only survivor of President Lincoln's first administration. It might be interesting to mention our ex-Presidents, and what they followed after their retirement. There are only two living ex-Presidents—Hayes and Cleveland. Hayes has never held or sought any public office since the expiration of his term. Cleveland at once embarked in the practice of his profession—the law. The knowing ones are firm in their convictions that Cleveland will be the candidate of the national democracy for President in 1892. Our ex-Presidents have rarely survived more than a few years after their incumbency. Washington was made Lieutenant-General, but was never called on for any active duty. He only served about two years. John Adams lived for twenty or more years, and was impatient in private life. He was elected a member of the Massachusetts Constitutional Convention after his retirement. The only position Jefferson held after the Presidency was the rectorship of the University of Virginia. Madison and Monroe, in 1829, were elected members of the Virginia Constitutional Convention. Monroe served as a Justice of the Peace afterward. After John Quincy Adams retired, he was elected Congressman from his district, and served seventeen years in that branch of our national Congress. He died while a member. "Old Hickory" was satisfied with his private lot, and lived at his home near Nashville, Tenn. He only survived eight years. Martin Van Buren was not content to rest quietly, and "picked his flint" for another race in 1844 and in 1848, being defeated at both elections. John Tyler never sought or held any public office after his term, except that of "road master" in his district in Virginia, which he filled to the letter, making all the citizens comply strictly with the laws. Polk only survived four years. His widow is still living. Fillmore had the "bee in his bonnet" still, and was the American candidate in 1856. He lived seventeen years after his term. Pierce lived at Washington in privacy for nine years. Buchanan only survived seven years, and also resided in Washington as a private citizen. Andrew Johnson was a candidate for the United States Senate in 1870, and for Congressman in 1872, but was defeated for both places. In 1875 he was elected to the Senate, and died three months afterward. General Grant was placed on the retired list of the army, and died eight years after his retirement. President Arthur only lived one year after he vacated the executive chair. It seems that the American people do not have that veneration for the retired executives that the honor and dignity of the position should command.

A writer in July Century takes issue with the suggested idea of editorial writers being required to sign their names to their leaders. Nothing more unfortunate could happen to general editorial department. The potency of the editorial "we" has suffered too much already without any further innovations. Where the identity is unknown to the public, more power and force is given to articles of public importance. Opinions are expressed freely and clearly, which if the writer's name is to be attached would be weak and powerless. An individual will not provoke a contest or quarrel if he is to be held accountable for his article, and the avoidance of quarrels would be a great newspaper blunder. Antagonisms must be aroused in order to make any progress in journalism. The newspaper editorial of the present is not inferior to that of the past. There may be a disposition to be a little more politic, but the force and effect of the leader in a prominent newspaper carries its weight to the thinking and reading public. The Century writer seems to think that it is within the possibilities that the editorial page may entirely disappear and give place to the news demand. If this page is given to the essayist, writing over his own signature, there will be no reason for the continuance of its existence. The news editor and reporter would, if given full swing, abrogate the editorial department without any compunctions of conscience. As a matter of fact, on most of the great dailies the editorial writer has no power to express an opinion without having that opinion given him by the manager, who never puts an original line in the paper.

The Fourth of July celebration in Sacramento was one of the most creditable in the history of the city. The arrangements were perfect, and, considering that the funds were provided by private subscription, it reflects greater credit upon our people. We believe that the cost of all public demonstrations should be paid from the city treasury; and that when the taxes are levied provision should be made for them. As it is, the burden falls upon a few, and in many instances those most able to pay do not contribute. We suggest that next year the Trustees include in their estimate the expenses of properly commemorating the Fourth of July and Decoration Day. If the money is raised by a general tax it will not be felt by the people.

"Berries."

Our alleged scientist broke loose this week in the following strain: Science is a grand study. Evolution a wondrous theme. Political economy and science of government most valuable—a study of which would not be out of place by our "city fathers." History, geology, mathematics, etc., necessary for all. This brings us to the important consideration of "berries," which we proceed to classify thus:

The Elderberry—(genus sambucus). These berries were invented by a certain religious sect, and are not, as their name would indicate, the most ancient variety. When the elders make their accustomed circuit, the good housewives always prepare choice dainties, such as tarts and pastry made from a little blue berry, of which the elders were very fond—hence the name elderberry. It was long a matter of legislative concern whether or not to interdict the use of any berries, because pies and things (pizen things) were made from them.

Strawberries (fragraria virginiana) were invented for the wise purpose of using up cream and sugar, and to make shortcake. Strange as it may appear this kind of cake is always short in quantity, and we never knew a boy to get enough. This is one of the grave problems science has never been able to solve.

Then comes the Cranberry—(oxycoccus metocarpus). In our youth we were wont to call them "cramberries," which was suggestive of the manner of their consumption when made into tempting pastry, or as a succulent sauce for the tender roast turkey.

The Mulberry—(genus morus). It was once thought that "mulled" wine was the product of this species. This was an error of scientific judgment. This particular product is the great first cause of much trouble in the world. The mulberry shrub produces food for the silkworm, which in turn gives the silk dress. From this arises the trouble with husbands and fathers.

Now comes the Blackberry—(rubus villosus). Some naturalists claim that the name is taken from the South. This is error; these berries were free long before the "blacks." When the small boy makes a raid on the pantry and attacks a reserve of these berries, he usually has a very black stain around his mouth, which probably gave rise to the name.

The Raspberry (genus rubus) is next of kin to the strawberry and derives its name from the rasping effect often produced on the human stomach after eating an over-supply of the fruit.

Gooseberry—(rubus grossularia). Here we find a near approach of the animal to the vegetable kingdom. When anser produced the first fruit it was buried in the earth for reproduction. It did not produce the anser, but there came forth a shrub with a succulent little globe which thereafter took the name of the parent bird. This bird also produced the quill pen, which in turn makes geese and asses of many men.

Huckleberry—(vaccinium rosinosum). This is also famous with the small boy. Jam is its product. It is the only jam a small boy likes on his fingers.

There is a rare variety of Berry indigenous to Sutter county. It was once transplanted at Washington as an experiment, but did not thrive in that locality. An attempt was made to cultivate this species preparatory to transplanting at the State capitol last winter, but it proved a failure.

There is another species of berry which is the most expensive known, that is "Canterbury." The annual cost of one of this variety is fifteen thousand pounds sterling. This species is confined to a small territory in old England. For centuries this has been the king of berries.

Another bury is most universal and might be considered as the germ of barbarous times. This bury is called into requisition when a human being "shuffles off this mortal coil." The plant is very expensive, dealers inform us that $65 is the lowest price, and the figures extend up according to quality. At some period every person must have one, however, except those who are drowned at sea. Virgil, in describing the Regions Inferno, says that any one lost at sea and never receiving the rights of burial, shall wander one hundred years before old Charon will ferry him across into the regions of the dead. In many instances it is the absurd custom to incur great additional expense after the planting by marking the place with monuments.

We also have the Coffee berry—(coffea). This is in very general use, and was discovered by a goat. The goat was browsing upon some scorched branches of a shrub, and after his meal it was observed that he became unusually frisky. An investigation of the cause disclosed that he had eaten the browned berries, which are named coffea.

Currants (ribis rubrum) are properly classified as berries. They are good for pies and jellies, though current notes are much more desirable to a Bohemian.

Bury the hatchet is very common, and originated with "Lo" the poor Indian. This genus is often used, but the good effects are not permanent, because there is always some one who persists in digging up the plant before it ripens.

Some Secrets of the Wine Trade.

The United States Vice-consul at Cadiz, in a report on the adulterations of sherry, recently published, describes some of the arts employed in preparing low-priced sherries for the market. In these operations an important part is played by sweet or "checked" wines, which are made in this manner: During the vintage, and after the grape is pressed, twenty-five gallons of alcohol at about 66 per cent over proof are put in a butt, and the rest completely filled with the juice of the grape. The spirits stop the fermentation of the wine, which then becomes perfectly sweet. This can be got ready for shipment within twelve months or less; but it is only used as an auxiliary in the preparation of other wines. In general the low-priced sherries are blended or composed of four or more different ingredients, viz: alcohol, sweet wine, colored wine, and cheap new wines of different kinds, and sometimes a few gallons of older wines to help the whole to an older appearance. Fine sherries, on the contrary, are kept in their natural state, very pale and dry, for six or seven years, and sometimes longer, and these wines, which from their first growth are costly, become still more so by the length of time required. Another way of forcing wines is by the use of "soleras" and "mother wines." The soleras are a number of butts of old wines, more or less good but always old; these are generally half full, the other half being filled with a new wine, which in the course of time gets so forced that it becomes an old wine under that treatment. A quantity is then taken from each old wine butt to be made use of in the preparation of wines, and that quantity taken off is again replaced with new wine, to let it grow again in the same manner.—London Illustrated News.

The tomb of Virgil, at Posilippo, just outside of Naples, is for sale. Hitherto it has belonged to a Frenchman, who made a fair income from the entrance fees of numerous visitors, and the Government is being strongly urged to purchase the tomb as a national monument. The tomb is a small, square building, with a domed roof, standing on the hillside, amongst vineyards and orchards, and originally composed Virgil's farm, where the poet wrote part of the "Georgics" and "Æneid." Formerly the urn containing Virgil's ashes occupied one of the ten niches—now empty—and in 1326 marble columns and statues further decorated the edifice, together with the epitaph written by Virgil himself.

A Thrashing well Placed.

Old Dave Huntley would have starved to death had it not been for his daughter Lena.

When he fell from the scaffolding he hurt his back so that he was not able to walk, and of course could not work at his trade.

He was a painter, and a very good one—the best in Stockton.

He had not been there very long, but he had saved some money and had bought his house. There was a mortgage on it, owing to Henry Greenfield, one of the leading lawyers in the place, and also one of the most fashionable men there.

When David was hurt his daughter Lena left the normal school at once and set to work to earn her father's living as well as her own.

She managed to get some pupils, young children, also some sewing, which helped out, although the expenses seemed to eat up her earnings faster than they came in.

And the worst of it all was that Jack Bolton was away.

Jack was Lena's lover, and they were engaged to be married, but Jack had gone away to look for fortune in the mines.

It is rather a pretty story, the meeting between these two.

Stockton is sometimes flooded in the spring, and the year before the water rose so high it washed away several houses. Among them was that in which Lena was living.

Jack Bolton had just come to the city, and he joined the rescuing parties at once. They had been working hard all day, and toward evening he went into his room to go to bed. Looking out of the window he saw, far down the river, something white waving in the air.

Jack was so tired that he turned away and threw himself down on the bed; but he could not sleep, thinking of that signal.

At last he got up, got a boat, and rowed down the river toward the cottonwood trees, where, after half an hour's search, he found one with a girl perched in the branches.

She was almost insensible from cold and exposure, but Jack got her down and brought her back to town.

She told him the house had stuck in the mud, next to the cottonwood, and that she had got out just in time, for soon afterward a fresh wave had turned the house over and it had gone down.

Of course after this Jack saw a great deal of Lena, and it wasn't long before the two were engaged.

Now, Lena Huntley was the prettiest girl in the town. That every one agreed to.

It occurred to Mr. Henry Greenfield that such a girl was far too handsome to be Jack Bolton's wife, and when old David hurt himself Mr. Greenfield thought his chance had come.

For a time he was very kind; but when Lena told him that she cared for Jack Bolton's little finger more than she did for the lawyer's whole body, with the money thrown in, Mr. Greenfield left, vowing vengeance.

He made up his mind that he would break her spirit down, feeling sure that if he succeeded she would yield.

The first trouble came over the mortgage, which could not be paid. He forced the sale of the house, and Lena and her father had to look for lodgings.

Then suddenly every one who knew Lena was astounded at hearing she had been arrested and charged with theft.

The story told by Mr. Greenfield was that she had come to his office to receive a small balance of $10 or $15 due her father on the sale of the house. He had left her in his private office, while on his desk was some $500 which had just been paid in. He came back, paid her the money due, and she left. When he came to count the money on the desk there was $50 missing. No one had been in the room but her, and he had the numbers of the bills.

He got a search-warrant and went to the rooms where the Huntleys were living, and the policeman found the bills in the drawer of Lena's bureau.

Lena of course said she knew nothing of them, but admitted she had come home for a minute after leaving Mr. Greenfield before going to one of the houses where she taught.

The poor girl, crimson with shame at the disgrace, was taken to the police court and held for trial.

If it had not been for Mr. Castle—one of the gentlemen who employed her to teach his children—she would have gone to jail.

Mr. Castle went on her bond, secured a lawyer to defend her, and did what he could for her. But with this accusation hanging over her head Lena almost broke down.

She wrote to Jack that their engagement was at an end, for she determined she would not disgrace him. But the day after her letter went one came from him saying he was going up to Idaho prospecting.

The landlady of the house in which the Huntleys lived was a fat, bad-tempered old woman, whom no one cared for.

The one thing she loved was money. One day Lena went into her room and found Mrs. Brown in a high fever. She got her sewing and sat by her, and, when the doctor came, took him in. He prescribed and went away.

Lena nursed the patient, dividing her time between her father and Mrs. Brown, and working away at her sewing in every spare minute.

The woman was cross and very exacting, but Lena went on with the nursing uncomplainingly and did her best.

It was no use. Mrs. Brown got worse and worse, and finally the doctor said that she must die.

Lena broke the news to her gently and tenderly, and then had an awful time, for Mrs. Brown was terribly frightened.

At last she wanted to see a clergyman, and when one came she told him a story, and when he heard it Mr. Foster sent for a magistrate, and got the dying woman to tell it once more. It was properly signed and witnessed, and not long afterward Mrs. Brown died.

It was while Lena was out of the room, when the story was being written down, that a young man rang the bell and asked to see her.

She came down stairs, and when she stepped into the hall the first thing she knew Jack had her in his arms and had kissed her again and again.

For a minute she lay still, it was so sweet to feel that some one who loved her was with her once more. Then, drawing back, she asked him to come with her, and led the way to the little sitting-room up-stairs.

Here, standing against the wall, with her cheeks flaming red with shame, Lena told bewildered Jack that she would not and could not marry him—that she was disgraced and would have to stand her trial as a thief.

Jack protested that he did not believe the story—that it was a foul lie—and that he would marry her if she had stolen the Bank of California.

In the midst of this—she crying and begging him to go away, and he swearing that he would not until she consented to be his wife—Mr. Foster opened the door, and with Mrs. Brown's confession in his hands sprung over to Lena and shook hands.

Then he told them, in a few hurried words, what Mrs. Brown had sworn to, and Lena, for the first and only time in her life, fell to the floor in a faint.

Mrs. Brown's story can be told in a sentence. Mr. Greenfield had paid her $100 to put the money where it was found in Lena's bureau. The confession was complete in every respect.

When Lena came to herself she did not repulse Jack any more. She went to her father's room and told him, and then went down to take her place once more with the dying woman.

Jack, with a curiously white face, went out into the street, and walking along till he came to a saddler's shop, went in and bought the heaviest cowhide whip in the place. The strips of rawhide had great edges that stood up as hard as iron—it was heavy in the hand, and it bent from tip to butt with an even spring.

Jack asked for a piece of stout cord, with which he carefully wound the handle. Then, with the same curiously white face, he walked to the bank building, went up one flight of stairs, turned into Mr. Greenfield's office, passed into the private office, closed the door behind him, and locked it.

Mr. Greenfield sprang to his feet, and, with a very pale face and a quivering mouth, asked what his visitor wanted.

Jack looked at him for a moment without speaking. Then he quietly told him that Mrs. Brown had confessed, and sworn to the confession.

Whiter than before, the lawyer backed a step away, and Jack sprung at him.

In less than a second he was down on his knees, held by the collar, and the heavy whip was raising and falling with the steady stroke of a machine. The man struggled and fought, but the tempest of passion which filled him gave Jack Bolton the strength of a giant.

The pliant whip, with its sharp edges, cut the clothes into strips and brought blood with every stroke.

Up and down, up and down, the sharp swish and the dull cut, as it struck the writhing form!

The clerks hammering at the door, the screams of Mr. Greenfield, the struggle—nothing had any effect upon the machine-like work of that terrible whip.

At last, when the screams had sunk into moans, Jack flung the whip away, and, letting go, allowed Mr. Greenfield to fall upon the floor.

Then he unlocked the door, walked out, and no man dared to stop him.

It was the next day that Jack, Mr. Foster, and Mr. Castle took the confession to the prosecuting attorney, and the day after that the case was dismissed in court.

The newspapers got hold of it and published it, and Mr. Greenfield was, as soon as he could be moved, taken away.

Neither Lena nor Jack wished to prosecute him, but it was not long before his house was sold, and Stockton heard of him no more.

There is no real necessity to say that a wedding took place. However, Jack stammered most awfully when he tried to answer the toast of "The Bride and Groom." In fact, he made a terrible failure of his speech and sat down in a violent perspiration.—Saturday Night.

The Sultan's Ring.

A neck-exalting Lord, a Median King,
Heard one in rags, sore-troubled, say this thing
Under the palace-arch, haggard and faint,
Rocking upon the carpet of complaint:
"O Sultan! at the door of God liest thou,
As I at thine! therefore accomplish now
Mercy toward me, as thou for mercy prayest:
'Make glad my heart!' To Allah so thou sayest—
Therefore, from sorrow's fetters bring forth mine!"
Now on that Sultan's thumb a stone did shine,
Pigeon-blood ruby, such a gem, the Shroff
Stammered in telling what would weigh enough
Of gold to ransom to price it; in the night
It glowed as if the sun had left roselight
Of afternoon, and in the day it seemed
As though a red, belated star still gleamed.
The Sultan drew this wonder from his thumb,
While at his stirrup-irons, grim and dumb,
His aghas watched, stroking black beards—he drew
The ruby off, and, quotha, "That was new Upon our lips—the prayer! God may delay
To hear us if we turn our hearts away
When others cry! Go sell my ring, and buy
Oil of content for sore of misery!"
Better a King's hand lacking royal seal
Than King's ears guilty of unheard appeal!
—Sir Edwin Arnold.

Book Chat.

Our colleges have become the gateways to the inheritance of honorable manhood. It mattered not a great deal whether a man was college educated two or three generations ago. It is beginning to matter a great deal now. Stricter lines are being drawn everywhere, says the Chicago Inter-Ocean. So much is this the case that many men who "quit school" for business now find it necessary to take special instruction in various lines in order to achieve the ambition new conditions have inspired. Men who cared nothing for college themselves are eager to send their sons and daughters to institutions that will amply qualify them for the life struggle that advancing civilization is making more difficult and exacting. As a result, our colleges are graduating more students than ever before, and woman is taking her proper place among the number. We no longer smile patronizingly upon "sweet girl graduates." Young women now are driving young men a close race, and some of them are graduating at the head of classes in which the long time imperial sex have crammed in vain for preferment. There will be more in proportion anon.

Henry Clews has just finished an article for the August number of the North American Review, with the controversy over England's attitude towards the North during the civil war as the subject of it. The controversy was begun by Mr. Gladstone writing a letter to Mr. Clews and making some comments on a chapter in "Twenty-eight Years in Wall Street," devoted to the Palmerston Cabinet, and, thus started, the controversy has attracted wide attention through the country.

It is said Lloyd S. Bryce will succeed Mr. Rice as editor of the North American Review. Mr. Bryce is a thorough literary man, and will bring the Review to the first place among the magazines of the world. The late Lawrence Oliphant was the genius who guided Mr. Rice, and prompted the telling features of the Review. He suggested the famous Gladstone article. Allen Thorndyke Rice was not a writer, but a shrewd and fortunate manager.

Do not be afraid to tell the editor of any news you might get on to; because he cannot be around all the time and neglect his office duties. Besides, do not expect too much from him when you do not care to do much yourself. The above is meant for the other fellow, because we know you do all you can to help your paper along; we know you do not hunt for mistakes and laugh over them, because we know you could do better.

"You have spent eight years in college, three at a theological school, and two in the study of theosophy, and yet you do not intend to enter the ministry. May I ask what special career you are fitting yourself for?" "I am studying for marriage with a Boston girl," replied the scholastic enthusiast, his voice tremulous and his dark, melancholy eyes lighting up with an eager, aspiring gleam.

During the years 1887 and 1888 Germany produced thirty-six editions of separate Shakespearian plays, as compared with twenty-nine for England and America, thirteen for France, and eleven for Russia. There were also translations into Danish, Finnish, modern Greek, Croatian, Polish, Portuguese, Roumanian, Swedish, Spanish, and Hungarian.

The latest venture in the magazine line, that is the latest up to date, is a Negro-American Monthly. It is sincerely to be hoped that no cloud of adversity will blacken its prosperity. It cannot be a colorless affair, whatever criticism may be advanced against it.

Lew Wallace says there is more happiness for him in a day's literary work than in a generation of politics. This marks the difference between the mere earthly man and the being who lives in the clouds amid the stars.

Mrs. Frank Leslie says she wears a bustle and a corset, and doesn't care who knows it. Guess we'll all have to take her word for it. By the way, she is just as plump and pretty as ever.

Apollo is said to be the first gentleman who ever struck a lyre. If he had only hit him a little harder we might not have so many magnificent liars at the present time.

George Augustus Sala has declined an offer of knighthood from Queen Victoria. George has advanced beyond the "hand-out" stage of journalism.

Whittier, it is said, falls asleep in his chair when visitors begin to praise his poetry. Earthly honors grow less valuable to him as the years wane.

"I am sorry, but the editor can not talk to any one to-day." Author—Oh, that's no matter. I will do all the talking myself.

Julia Ward Howe has begun the study of the Russian language. This in order to keep in the Boston swim.

Prof. Whitney, of Yale, has been made an LL. D. by the University of Edinburgh.

Thomas Nelson Page, the Virginia author, is making a tour through Ireland.

The editor of the Century gets $20,000 a year for his services.

Professional Chat.

James Lansing, who met such an untimely end at the hands of that Siberian Tartar (Raten), was one of the rough diamonds, and many laughable stories were told of him. Frank Rhoads, Bill Hunt and Buck Harrigan, none of whom could be called saints in the orthodox sense. It was Jim Lansing's boast that he made lemon syrups—minus the lemon—on the street corner, while Edgar Mills was driving a hack, J. H. Carroll was a disciple of St. Crispin, and Geo. Cadwallader was selling bacon and flour over the counter of his uncle's store. Rhoads, Hunt, Lansing and Harrigan were so firmly imbued with the spirit of devilry that they were constantly playing practical jokes upon everybody, but with that generous impulse that always prompted them to lend their assistance to the oppressed and abused at any and all times. With them, however, all was fish that came into their nets, in a figurative sense. One day Frank Rhoads was "broke," and wanted to raise the wind—Frank, in those days, was often "broke," but always managed to come to the center in due time—so, on this occasion he went to Bill Hunt for assistance. Bill had in custody a number of barrels of tallow, but there was no immediate sale. The plan was hit upon to have Frank go up to a large tallow house and order a large quantity of tallow, more than was in store, at an advanced price. The scheme worked, and the proprietor took Frank's order, and, knowing that Hunt had some tallow on hand, rushed down and purchased it at once at Hunt's advanced figures, to fill his supposed order. The margin realized was $100, which was Frank's dividend. The owner of the store never delivered the large order, nor did his customer ever return for the tallow.

During the exercises at the Pavilion on the Fourth, and while the reverend gentleman who officiated as Chaplain was delivering the prayer, there was very great confusion and noise among the audience, and to remedy this as far as possible the committees and District Attorney Bruner moved among the vast concourse, trying to preserve quietness. There was one fellow who evidently had no fear of the Lord and but little veneration for prayer, for he paraded the room and with a sharp, harsh voice proclaimed, "Fine lemonade, five cents a glass!" attracted the attention of the godly District Attorney, who addressed him with the question, "Who authorized you to go about here making such an infernal noise?" The lemonade vendor gave some unsatisfactory response, when the District Attorney, who by the way is a presiding elder's son, gave vent to the following emphatic admonition: "How in h—l do you suppose anybody is going to hear the prayer if you keep up such an abominable racket?" It is needless to say the lemonade vendor was suppressed.

Sam Seabough, who was for many years editor-in-chief of the Sacramento Daily Union, was in early days at Folsom elected a Justice of the Peace. His first and last case was too much for his judicial mind, and he could not then, like he did later in life, call to his aid all those old Grecian and Roman fellows he invoked in his thunder editorials. Well, his first case was against a poor fellow for stealing a sack of flour. He sent Ben Bugley, who was the constable at that time, armed with an original warrant (original, for there never was one like it before or since) to arrest the culprit. The Court, in all his dignity, tried the defendant and found him guilty. Then he made an order discharging the defendant, presented him with the sack of flour, and admonished him to get out at once. Following this immaculate order, Seabough resigned his office, thus making a brief, if not brilliant record as a judicial officer.

The Stage.

[Under this caption will appear a fair and impartial criticism of the drama, actors, music, and all noteworthy matters pertaining to the stage.]

Those who know anything of Agnes Herndon, whom her press agent describes as "the noted actress," will be somewhat amused to hear that she has written a play for herself, and will star in it during the coming season. No one ever suspected Miss Herndon of any literary accomplishments. The arrangement under which actors and actresses and other people in public life get literary hacks to do work for them, which is afterwards put forward as the literary work of the prominent people hiring such services, is becoming exceedingly common, and, curiously enough, a large portion of the public is misled into crediting these people with a skill in literary matters which is about as foreign to them as Japan is.

This has been a remarkable season for the sale of actors' and actresses' effects. The latest member of the profession to put her goods under the hammer was Miss Rose Coghlan, whose sale occurred recently, and included the furnishing of her very pretty house on West Fifty-ninth street, New York city. Miss Coghlan has a three years' engagement in California, which accounts for the auction.

At a certain Continental opera house, which shall be nameless, a prima donna and her manager recently had a dispute. The manager, to bring the lady to her senses, resolved to give away no dead-head tickets, and the prima donna consequently sang to an audience of about a hundred people. The manager and the artist are now on the friendliest possible terms.

This is the season when the critic sharpeneth his scalpel—for some of the reviewers of the drama lean more to surgical instruments and the art of dissection than they do to any desire to find any merit in a new play—for the slashing and cutting process in case any young author dares to show his temerity in writing or attempting to write a new play.

Ellen Terry's son Edward, who is now seventeen years old, will be seen upon the London stage for the first time when The Dead Heart is played at the Lyceum in the autumn. The mother and son of real life will be the mother and son of the play. The lad appeared in the first act of Eugene Aram, when that piece was played in New York.

Dr. Hans von Bulow is suffering from an affection of the muscles of the right arm, probably brought about by overwork.

Eighty thousand marks is to be spent in the construction of the Oberammergau theater for the next summer.

Mr. Robert Buchanan has been commissioned to write new plays for Beerholm Tree and Richard Mansfield.

In Howard P. Taylor's melodrama, Lost in Africa, a live camel and an orangoutang will figure as performers.

Signor Tamagno, the noted tenor, used to be a manufacturer of mineral waters.

The Musical Militiamen.

EDITOR THEMIS: After reading the article in the Saturday's issue of the Record-Union, "Shall the law be respected," I made up my mind to find out what is the law on the subject of military bands, and I have come to the conclusion that if the San Francisco musicians are enlisted after the manner of our local organization that the State, in law, can do nothing with them whatever. Where is the law, or proviso, that says to a man upon enlisting, "You shall give your professional services upon stated occasions," either for value received or otherwise? If such a law exists we have never seen it. We are simply enlisted as members of the National Guard of California, nothing is said about our duties, or what they shall consist of, or what the remuneration for any work we may do shall be. We are not even made members of or even attached to a company; we stay in the National Guard as long as we feel like it, and leave when we wish to. I have been a member of the National Guard for three enlistments, yet I have never received a discharge for any term of service. I have been an officer in the regiment for the same length of time, and yet have never received an appointment. I have no notion of what I may be allowed by the State or regiment for services rendered on the Fourth of July, military encampments, or any other occasion. Who says I shall leave my business and accompany the regiment to camp for less than I might be able to make at home? If anybody has fixed these things why are they not explained to us? And yet if I refuse to give my professional services when called upon to do so, you think I could be made to do it. Let them just put the musician where he belongs, state to him what are his duties, what the remunerations, what kind of a position he holds toward the State, and there will be no trouble. I may say that musicians as a class are law-abiding, and I do not believe in berating anybody until we hear both sides of the question. One year we were taken to camp, and three months after our return were paid our salaries, less about twenty-five per cent, and every man in the band "lost money on the goods." So, before you try people by courts-martial for mutiny, find out their position toward the State. I am proud of belonging to the National Guard, and would cheerfully acquiesce to try any man for mutiny that disobeyed an order, but as a member of the National Guard would like to "see the law" for these things, know what are my duties, privileges, and punishments; and I know about twenty more in the same fix as myself. Yours, C. A. NEALE.

Those Fish Cases.

Yesterday, the cases of The People vs. Mahuka, et. al., were called for hearing before Hon. P. W. Keyser, Superior Judge of Sutter county. Major W. A. Anderson appeared for defendants, and K. S. Mahon and Phipps for the prosecution. The point for determination by the Court was: Does the language of the statute, "Waters of the State," mean only public or navigable waters, or does it include all private lakes and ponds, on private domain? Judge Keyser listened attentively to the arguments, and was somewhat emphatic in his views that private property could be used at the pleasure of the owners, and that the right to fish on one's own premises, in waters that he may have stocked for his own use, certainly could not be controlled by the State. He called on the prosecution for some authority to counter this idea. The matter was taken under advisement. A decision will be rendered at an early date. This is an important question, and as it now stands, the fishing interests are at a standstill until this point is finally settled by the appellate Court. Many authorities were cited by defendants' counsel, showing that the State could only control public or navigable streams, or streams that the legislature may particularly designate as within government control.

To-night's Concert.

This evening's open-air concert will be given at the Plaza. The First Artillery Band will render the following programme, commencing at 6:45:

1. "Governor's March" Sherman
 2. Overture—"The Diadem" Herman
 3. Pilgrims' Chorus, from "I Lombardi" Verdi
 4. Waltz—"Among the Pond Lillies" Luskomb
 5. Overture—Scott Melodies Conterno
 6. Concert Schottische—"My Pretty Black-eyed May" Casey
 7. Overture—"Poet and Peasant" Suppe
 8. Selections—"Reiniscences" Downing
 9. "America's New National Hymn" Millard
- As played by Cappa's and Gilmore's bands.

An English wife suing for divorce alleges in the complaint that "the defendant does not come home until ten o'clock at night, and when he does return he keeps plaintiff awake talking, sometimes until midnight." In another case the complaining wife declares that the "defendant is guilty of cruel and inhuman treatment in this—when he suffers financial loss he lays it to the plaintiff and censures her in bitter terms."

The Pioneers.

On the afternoon of Thursday the members of the Sacramento Society of California Pioneers met at their hall and participated in their usual Fourth of July banquet. President Powell S. Lawson sat at the head of the table. The banner and flag recently presented to the society, and to which we made reference in the last issue of THEMIS, were in the banquet hall. President Lawson, after the collation, spoke of the day and referred to the work that had been done by the Pioneers of California in adding another star to our national banner. He announced the toast then of "The State of California," which was responded to by W. C. Hendricks, Secretary of State, who made happy remarks appropriate to the subject. The next toast was "The Grangers of California," and it was responded to by Hon. Hugh M. LaRue. He compared the early days with the present in the matter of agriculture in California, and in the course of his remarks stated that in 1851 he attended a public dinner at Sonoma; that then everything upon the tables was imported, "now we sit at a banquet table and everything before us is the production of our State." Our space does not admit the publication of the remarks of the various gentlemen in extenso, though their publication would be interesting and instructive. During the course of Mr. LaRue's remarks, ex-President Geo. W. Chesley came into the hall, and was greeted by all who sat at the banquet board. The next regular toast was "The Ladies," and it was responded to by E. F. Aiken, happily. Secretary John S. Miller read a telegram from Rev. Carroll M. Davis, expressing regrets that he could not be present, and congratulations to the Pioneers. Mr. LaRue suggested that a toast be drank in honor of ex-President Chesley; it was drank standing, and the response was made by President Lawson. Mr. Chesley, however, could not refrain, and expressed himself in feeling remarks. The volunteer toasts were responded to by Winfield J. Davis, the historian of the Society, Col. Jas. McNasser and L. C. Chandler. Altogether, the meeting was fully up with the characteristic gatherings of the Sacramento Pioneers on the Fourth of July.

The Horrible Prizes.

The following are the prizes awarded by the committee of the Horribles, Best burlesque brass band and drum major, eight or more, Noack's Band, $40. Second best burlesque brass band and drum major, six or more, Fiske's band, $25. Best float in line, Oklahoma Chinese laundry, $20. Second best float in line, hook and ladder, $10. Best group of six or more, Sullivan and Kilrain, $15. Best group of four or more, snake charmer with circs, $10. Best group of two or more, George Vallert, $7 50. Best local character, hanana peddler, R. E. Kent, $10. Best sustained character, Scotchman, $6. Best original character, "No flies on him," Al. Parsons, $6. Best comical character by lady or gent, Jockey and Boxer on horseback, $6. Best representation of circus, O. Kaufman and others, $6. Most comical character on mule or donkey, J. H. Harris, $6. Richest costume on horseback, in lady's costume, C. H. Herzog, $7. Richest costume on horseback, in gents' costume, David Nash, $8. Best representation of a marksman, Ed. Conner, $5. Richest costume on foot, representing a lady, C. B. Conn, $6. Richest costume on foot, representing a gent, "devil," C. Wait, $8. Most comical costume on a bicycle, Adam Fabien, $5. Best acting character of two, W. P. Tierney and friend, Topsey and Darkey, $6.50.

Fatal Accident.

At about four o'clock yesterday afternoon, at the new brewery at Twenty-first and Q streets, a laborer named Fredrico Valdaia fell from the upper story and was instantly killed. His skull was crushed and his brain protruded. The deceased was a native of Cuba and was aged about 37. He had followed the life of a seaman, and before working at the brewery had been employed by Captain Sims Emory. The remains were removed to the Coroner's office and the inquest will be held to-morrow.

The Weather.

The highest and lowest temperature during the past week was 100 on Tuesday and 55 yesterday. The highest and lowest for the same time last year was 97 and 52. The highest and lowest temperature yesterday was 85 and 55, while for the same time last year it was 92 and 52. The highest temperature yesterday was as follows for the places named: Olympia, 76; Walla Walla, 78; Spokane Falls, 70; Fort Canby, 60; Portland, 80; Roseburg, 80; Eugene, 60; Red Bluff, 94 and Sacramento, 85.

Robbery and Probable Murder.

Yesterday morning about two o'clock a man was found on one of the Marysville streets with his head crushed and otherwise beaten and bruised. Hewas brought to the police headquarters, where it was ascertained that his name was Kennedy, and that he was a farmer, who resided near Smartsville. He came to Marysville on Friday to attend to some business and make purchases for his farm. The gentleman is well-known by all the prominent people of Yuba and Sutter counties. It seems that he must have been watched and waylaid, as he was found at an unseasonable hour in one of the unfrequented streets with a terrible gash on the side of his head, which broke the skull and from the wound the brains oozed, making a most horrible and ghastly wound. There were other deep and murderous cuts and bruises on the face and head of the victim. The object of the murderous assault was evidently money, as the victim was known to possess considerable money at such times, as he visited the city. Medical aid was summoned, but there is little hope of the recovery of the unfortunate victim. The Marysville officers were prompt in making a search for the perpetrators of this foul crime, and at this time it is probable that they have secured the murderer. At an early hour yesterday morning, within a few hours after the terrible crime had been committed, the officers fastened on a rough and dangerous character by the name of Armstrong as the one who perpetrated the crime. On the person of the suspect was found a heavy pair of brass knuckles and other evidence which pointed strongly to his guilt. Unfortunately the victim was unconscious, and therefore unable to identify the accused. The way the officers gained a clew to the arrested party was from the fact that he also made an assault on the driver of the United States Hotel bus about two o'clock Saturday morning, and for which last assault he was arrested, when the other circumstances developed which gave rise to the suspicion that he was the person who committed the murderous assault on Kennedy. There was considerable excitement in Marysville all day yesterday over this affair, and it will not go easy with the person who may be found guilty.

An Accident.

A letter was received here last night announcing an accident that occurred to a party near Leesville, Lake county. The party was composed of ex-Senator Gorman, Col. Perrie Kewen and others, of Sacramento. The stage ran over an embankment between Sites and Allen Springs. Three horses of the six in the team were killed. A young lady of this city had her arm broken in two places; others were more or less hurt. Gorman and Kewen had got out at a watering place when the team started to run, and escaped injury.

Tuesday next, we will commence our great semi-annual summer clearing sale. The first lot of goods on sale will be from the clothing department. Men's light, medium and heavy suits, men's pants, youths' suits, boys' suits, men's vests, etc.

$20 suits for - - - - - $14 50
$19 suits for - - - - - 9 75
$15 suits for - - - - - 10 00
$12 suits for - - - - - 7 50
$10 suits for - - - - - 5 95
$5 suits for - - - - - 3 50

These suits are in lots of three to eight suits of a kind. The sizes are broken for this season. We are closing them at these low prices.

Men's fine worsted and mohair coats and vests at half price.

Men's $2.50 fur hats for 99c.

Boys' $2.50 suits for $1.39.

Men's $2.00 pants for $1.00.

See their show window. * RED HOUSE.

Indian Statistics.

The Indian agencies are sixty-one in number.

Number of houses occupied by Indians, 21,232.

Estimated number of Indians in Alaska, 30,000.

The total Indian population of the United States is 247,761.

Number of Indians living on and cultivating lands is 9,612.

Number of Indian church members in the United States is 28,663.

Number of Indians in the United States who wear citizens' dress is 81,621.

Number of Indians in the United States who can read English is but 23,495.

There are ten Indian training schools located in different parts of the Union.

Number of Indians in the United States who can read the Indian language is 10,027.

Bellini's piano, on which he composed his earliest operas, has just been found in possession of a widow lady of Catania, whose husband bought it for $1100. The Catanians have petitioned the owner to present the piano to the town—Bellini's birth place—that the relic of their townsman may be preserved as a souvenir, and not pass into careless hands.

ANOTHER DEFEAT.

The Senators Defeated by the Oaklands at Snowflake Park Yesterday.

The Sacramentos suffered another defeat at the hands of Colonel Robinson's heavy-hitting team. It was an interesting contest from beginning to end, and the playing of the contending teams was only marred by three errors.

Coughlin was a giant in the box against the home team, and allowed them only four scattering hits. Burke also pitched good ball, but a few timely hits, after two men were out in the fourth inning, gave the Oaklands three runs. Gagus made his first appearance on the diamond this season, and his faultless playing at short won for him the appreciation of the audience. He accepted all the chances offered, and made many vigorous kicks when some play was disputed by the opposing team. An importation from the Texas League umpired, and his decisions were generally satisfactory.

The game opened with the home team to bat. They were retired in short order, as were the Oaklands. No runs were scored until the third inning, when McDonald's wide throw of Goodenough's grounder, and Veach's pretty single gave the Sacramentos the only run they made during the game.

Oakland scored three runs in the fourth after two men were out. Dailey's base on balls, a sacrifice by Long, and McDonald's hit for two cushions scored Dailey. McDou-ld scored on Dooley's single over second. Dooley reached first on his hit, a steal gave him second, and Cahill's single scored him. Again in the fifth Oakland scored by Hardie's driving the ball into the carriage paddock for a home run. These were all the runs scored by Oakland, but all of them were earned, and another victory is added to the Athenian aggregation.

Following is the score:

Sacramento.	T.B.	R.	B.H.	S.H.	P.O.	A.	E.
Goodenough, c. f.	4	1	1	0	0	0	0
Veach, 1st b.	3	0	1	0	12	1	1
McSorley, 3d b.	4	0	0	0	2	3	0
Krehmeyer, c.	3	0	0	0	3	0	0
Gagus, s. s.	4	0	0	0	0	5	0
Roxburg, r. f.	3	0	0	0	0	0	0
Burke, p.	3	0	0	0	4	0	0
O'Day, 2d b.	3	0	1	0	2	2	0
Roberts, 1. f.	3	0	1	0	1	0	0
Totals	30	1	4	0	24	11	1
Oakland.	T.B.	R.	B.H.	S.H.	P.O.	A.	E.
O'Neill, 3d b.	4	0	1	0	1	2	0
Hardie, c.	4	1	1	0	3	1	0
Dailey, r. f.	3	1	2	0	1	0	0
Long, c. f.	4	0	0	1	4	0	0
McDonald, 2d b.	4	1	1	0	2	5	1
Dooley, 1st b.	3	1	1	0	9	0	1
Cahill, 1. f.	3	0	1	0	1	0	0
Wilson, s. s.	3	0	0	0	3	0	0
Coughlin, p.	3	0	0	0	3	2	0
Totals	31	4	7	1	27	10	2

Runs by Innings. 1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9
Sacramento 0 0 1 0 0 0 0 0 1
Oakland 0 0 0 3 1 0 0 0 4

Summary—Earned runs, Oakland 4; stolen bases, Goodenough, Dailey 2, Dooley, O'Neill; home run, Hardie; three-base hit, Roberts; two-base hit, McDonald; first base on errors, Sacramento 2, Oakland 1; first base on balls, Sacramento 2, Oakland 1; struck out, by Burke, 1, Coughlin 3; left on bases, Sacramento 5, Oakland 4; double play, Coughlin, McDonald, Dooley; umpire, McCue, official scorer, Martiu Divine; time of game, 1 hour and 30 minutes.

NOTES.

Gagus is quite a coacher, and the Sacramento team play with a great deal more life than heretofore.

Krehmeyer caught a great game yesterday, and base-runners were rather wary of stealing bases on him.

The Gus Lavenson's play the second league game of the Northern California League with the Placers at Auburn to-day. Managan and McHale will constitute the battery for the Lavensons, and Ranlett and Johnson for the Placers.

Our semi-annual clearing sale will commence Tuesday next, at 8 o'clock, in clothing department, and in a few days there will be added furnishing goods, boots and shoes, millinery, dry and fancy goods. Prices will be such an inducement that we expect to sell $50,000 inside of forty days. See show window to-morrow for value in fine clothing. * RED HOUSE.

German Etiquette.

Perhaps the best criterion of the minuteness of German etiquette is the little unwritten code on pocket manners. German good form is shocked by the helter skelter condition of the American pocket. A well-bred German never allows his keys and his jack-knife, his small change, his shoe buttoner and his cigar cutter to jingle about loosely in his trousers pocket. The greatest offense against German pocket manners is to carry small silver coins loose in the pockets. A German lieutenant may have only half a dollar to his name, but he carries as big a purse as if he owned all the notes of the Imperial Reichsbank. In paying for 5 cents' worth of beer he goes down into his trousers and draws out his flabby pocketbook with dignity, thanking heaven that he is a manly high born Prussian, and not a vulgar tradesman like the American at his side, who has just slapped down on the table a mess of gold, silver, keys and manicure apparatus. The small German schoolboy is not even allowed to carry his car fare without a purse. —Detroit Free Press.

FLASHES.

The woman who lives in vanity lives in vain.

It may be a paradox, but some tenors are base singers.

The parcel clerk gives the business wrap-ped attention.

The air of society always makes a green man turn red.

A man in a peck of trouble is, in a measure, to be pitied.

Men get into hot water often by taking hot todies inside.

When a fellow gets beside himself is he next thing to a fool?

The college man, like the thermometer, is known by his degrees.

Ministers think hell is a necessity—it is not a luxury, that is sure.

The oldest twins are Wickedness and Want—and are with us at all times.

Those who are always complaining of being lonesome can realize what poor company they are.

Children shrink from being washed. This is a characteristic of all new materials—from flannels upward.

The fashionable game in Boston is poker. From this we infer that it is also the fashion in Boston to be broke.

Comedies acted on life's stage, behind the scenes, are much more spirited than those acted in sight of the audience.

"Get together," is the present rallying cry of the democrats. Let somebody call out "What'll you take?" and see how rapidly they will concentrate.

"Are you going to Miss Strummer's this evening?" inquired Spoffins. "She has got a pianoforte." "A piano for tea, has she," ejaculated Spiffins. "Humph! I'm afraid you'll find it rather stringy; however, if you wire in, you may succeed in getting a piece out of it.

They were speaking of a parson,
And Jones remarked that he was sure
That in his suburban parish
He really had a sinecure.

"If that's indeed the case," said Smith,
"We are very much his debtor;
For, with reference to a parson,
The more sin 'e cures the better."

The Australian Lyre-Bird.

We were just in the middle of "Tramp, tramp," when a long, clear whistle with a crack like a pistol-shot at the end, stopped us short. Sitting down on the roadside we listened, and soon the whistle began again; then followed the most exquisite mimicry of many of the songsters of the wood, varied by sounds resembling the clear tones of a distant bell, the rattle of a rickety wagon, raspings and gratings that made the cold chills run down one's back, whispers, moans, cries and laughter. I clearly distinguished the coarse laugh of the giant king-fisher, the cooing of the dove, the call of the black and white shrike, the song of the rusty-backed thrush, the scream of the hawk, and the hoarse screeching of the cockatoo. Sometimes the song, with a volume like a large organ, was loud and sweet, and it seemed as if the musicians must be within a stone's throw; then again it died away to the faintest whisper. There was a mellow richness in parts that reminded me of the liquid notes of the clarinet. We sat spell-bound until the song had ceased. I have heard most of our American songsters, and some of them are very fine, with voices rich and mellow, but the mocking-bird himself cannot compare with this prince of songsters, the Australian lyre-bird.—Sherman F. Denton.

In Paris lately a physician was arrested for practicing medicine without a diploma. He had a large and lucrative practice, and at the trial several patients testified that they had been ordered by the defendant, as a cure for their ills, to hold a copper rod on their hands until it fell off; to stand on one leg, etc. Such disclosures didn't unnerve the doctor in the least, and when asked what he had to say, to the great surprise of all, produced a diploma showing that he was a regular graduated physician. He then explained that for five years after leaving college he had vainly tried to make a living by regular practice. Then, to avoid starvation, he hit up his quackery dodge, and made considerable money. But now, that he had been obliged to show his diploma, the "trick" would work no longer, and he would be obliged to move to some other locality, where he would not be known as a regular physician.

Wickwire—I wish to goodness somebody would invent a way to distinguish between a type-writing machine and the girl who runs it. Yabsley—I should think a man of ordinary sense would have no trouble in doing so. Wickwire—O, you idiot, I mean in writing. I received a bill stating that I was indebted to Blank & Co. for "ribbon for type-writer," and my wife got hold of it and raised a dickens of a row for about an hour before she'd let me explain.—Terre Haute Express.

LOCAL BREVITIES.

Patsy Costello, a well known young man, is lying at the point of death.

The body of William Appleton, who was drowned at the foot of S street on Thursday, has not been recovered, notwithstanding the published reports to the contrary.

The sunflower seems to have taken possession of a number of the wheat fields between Marysville and Wheatland. Wild honeysuckle has invaded the orchards about Marysville.

About 11 o'clock last night an alarm of fire was turned in from box 41. The fire was in the rear of John Farren's blacksmith shop on K street, between Eighth and Ninth. The damage was slight.

The examination of the case of the People vs. George Borchers, charged with arson and threats against life, was called in the Police Court yesterday and continued to Thursday. Add. C. Hinkson appeared for the defendant.

George Nelson, charged with highway robbery, will have an examination before Justice Henry to-morrow morning. Nelson, it is alleged, "stood up" and robbed, a few days since, two men named Davis and Cowrie, on the Rancho del Paso.

At Haiden's saloon, on K street, between Third and Fourth, on Friday night, two men engaged in a scuffle, first in jest, but it became serious, and resulted in the attack by one upon the other, and two serious scalp wounds and a black eye was the result.

The Board of Supervisors are now sitting as a Board of Equalization, and will be in session for three weeks. It will be a matter of interest to every taxpayer during that time to inspect the tax roll, to see that his assessment is properly made. No errors can be corrected after the adjournment of the Board of Equalization.

The Sacramento Journal, which has been published in this city since 1868 by the late Major K. F. Weinmeyer, has been consolidated with the Nord-California Herald. The paper will hereafter be published under the name of the Nord-California Herald and Sacramento Journal, and will be issued on Wednesday and Saturday. Chas. Schmitt is the editor and proprietor.

The Board of Education has decided to purchase the lot on the southwest corner of Twenty-first and L streets, on which to erect a two-story school building. The purchase was made from the Enoch Jacobs estate, the price being $5,000 for the 160x160 feet lot. The upper story of the new building will be used for the grammar grades and the lower story for primary classes.

Yesterday morning about 10 o'clock J. J. Silva and John Asavedo discovered the body of a man floating in the river, about a mile this side of Freeport. The body was secured by the Coroner's assistants. The body is apparently that of a Mexican, and of a young man of probably 23 years of age. He was about five feet, six inches in height, and had a short dark mustache. It is thought likely that the body is that of the man seen to jump into the river at the foot of N street a few days since.

The different forms in which pride besets its victims afford an amusing study. Girls who work in shops carry school books or a music roll to and from their place of business so that they be mistaken for school girls, though their hours are certainly not those of the average pupil. Perhaps they hope to be taken for special students. The librarian of the Mercantile Library tells us that it is a common thing for "ladies" to tear the paper covers off the books they take from the library the moment they are outside the door. These silly creatures think it looks finer to carry an uncovered book than one that is covered, and they would rather seem to own a volume than to have taken it from a library.—The Critic.

In accordance with custom, the Court Journal of London, which announced the completion of Queen Victoria's 70th year, gave the ages of her royal contemporaries, as follows: King of the Netherlands, 72; king of Denmark, 71; king of Wurtemberg, 66; emperor of Brazil, 63; king of Saxony, 61; king of Sweden and Norway, 60; emperor of Austria, 58; king of the Belgians, 54; king of Portugal, 50; king of Roumania, 50; sultan of Turkey, 46; king of Italy, 45; emperor of Russia, 44; king of the Hellenes, 43; king of Bavaria, 41; king of Siam, 35; German emperor, 30; emperor of China, 17; king of Servia, 12; and the king of Spain, 3.

Among the bulls of English parentage recently perpetrated are these: "After the door closed," writes a novelist who is widely read just now, "a dainty foot slipped into the room, and with her own hand extinguished the lamp." "The chariot of socialism," wrote an editorial writer, "is rolling and gnashing its teeth as it rolls." "The Charity Association," wrote a reporter, "has distributed twenty pairs of shoes among the poor, which will dry up many a tear." "I was sitting," writes another novelist, "at the table enjoying a cup of coffee, when a gentle voice tapped me on the shoulder. I looked around and saw my old friend again."

SOCIAL.

Walter Bates came up from the bay last evening.

Max Hornlein left for San Francisco this morning.

Miss Mollie Gwynn, of Oakland, is visiting this city.

Nate Webb and Frank Webb left last night for Cisco on a fishing trip.

Miss Lizzie Parry, of Lincoln, is visiting Miss Nellie Davis, of this city.

Miss Jennie Van Emonds, of Michigan Bluff, is the guest of Miss Reta Gillis.

Miss Mary Alford, of Vallejo, is visiting her aunt, Mrs. W. H. Luther, of this city.

Mrs. E. J. Bradford, of Los Angeles, is visiting her sister, Mrs. Chas. Poud, of this city.

Mr. and Mrs. George Gale, Mrs. A. A. Van Voorhies and son, and Mrs. Dr. F. F. Tebbetts left yesterday for Bartlett Springs.

GENERAL NEWS ITEMS.

During the fire works display on the Common at Salem, Mass., a largeshell exploded, the fragments of the mortar hurling into the crowd, killing two persons instantly and injuring four, who cannot recover.

At the cathedral at Philadelphia yesterday Thomas Ewing Sherman, the eldest son of General Sherman, passed the first stage of ordination for the Roman Catholic priesthood. The final stage of ordination will be reached Sunday.

The United States steamer "Dispatch," with President Harrison on board, passed City Island at 1 o'clock yesterday afternoon. The "Dispatch" left Newport Thursday night and will arrive in Jersey City in time to take the 3:40 train for Washington.

The latest fad in photography is the portrait stamp. This unique device is a miniature photograph on a piece of paper the size of a postage stamp. It is gummed on the back side and is used in a variety of ways. In writing to absent friends the portrait is pasted at the head of the letter or in place of the signature. The stamps are also used on birthday and wedding cards, programmes of entertainments and in autograph albums. Business men who are anxious for notoriety use the stamp on the outside of letters. The idea is English, and the photograph stamps have been in use on the other side for several years. They are now being introduced in this country for the first time. The cost of the photographs is so low that a large sale is expected.

DEATHS.

HUFF—In Colfax, Placer county, July 4th, Samuel W. Huff (father of Mrs. Geo. W. Ficks and Mrs. Tillie Shearer), a native of Michigan, aged 75 years and 6 months.

Veterans of the Mexican War and friends are invited to attend the funeral services, which will be held at Calvary Baptist Church, I street, Twelfth and Thirteenth, this afternoon at 4 o'clock. Interment private.

McFALL—In this city, July 5th, Eleanor, wife of Andrew McFall, a native of Ireland, aged 63 years and 7 months.

Friends and acquaintances are respectfully invited to attend the funeral, which will take place from her late residence, M street, Eighth and Ninth, this afternoon at 2 o'clock, thence to the Cathedral, where funeral services will be held.

A. J. MUIR,
PLUMBER,
—Gas and Steam Fitter.—

Being a practical plumber, I can guarantee all work.

810 K STREET, Telephone 226.
SACRAMENTO, CAL.

ALBERT GRUBBS,
No. 1417 Fourth Street,
Will do all kinds of House Cleaning, Lay Carpets, Whitewashing, and everything in that line.
He also has the only wagon for the REMOVAL OF DEAD ANIMALS, and any orders left at his place of business will receive prompt attention.
Remember the address!
No. 1417 Fourth Street, Sacramento, Cal.

EARL BROS.
COMMISSION MERCHANTS
IN CALIFORNIA PRODUCTS
122 J STREET, : : SACRAMENTO.
GEORGE DIETRICH, Manager.
Chicago House, 157 South Water St.

Cooper's Music Store.

Mathushek!

Principal Music House in Northern and Central California.

Largest and Best Selected Stock of Musical Instruments and Musical Merchandise.

Indorsement of Merit.

I take pleasure in certifying to the excellence of the Mathushek Piano. I can cheerfully and truthfully recommend it in any of its various styles as a first-class instrument, the equal of any and the superior of most in the qualities necessary to the accompaniment of the voice; and I believe it to be more than any other suited to withstand the effects of our California climate. We use it exclusively at our rehearsals and concerts.
W. H. KINROSS,
Musical Director McNeill Club.

NO. 631 J STREET,

Corner of Seventh, SACRAMENTO.

Fine Table Wines
From our Celebrated Orleans Vineyard.
Producers of the
ECLIPSE
CHAMPAGNE,
530 Washington St.
SAN FRANCISCO.

CHAMPAGNE

W. B. CHAPMAN,
123 California St. San Francisco.
SOLE AGENT FOR THE PACIFIC COAST

For sale by all first-class Wine Merchants and Grocers.

Samples and Instructions for Self-measurement sent by mail on application.

L. RADLOFF,
LADIES' TAILOR,
218 POST STREET, SAN FRANCISCO.
Tailor Made Suits a Specialty.

A. AITKEN,
PREMIUM PIONEER MARBLE AND GRANITE WORKS
423 J Street, bet. 4th and 5th, Sacramento.

Costic Tile, etc. Cemetery lots enclosed with Granite. All kinds of work done in Italian and Vermont Marble. Direct importer of Scotch and Eastern Granite Monuments. Also, Marble, Slate, Wooden and Iron Mantels, direct from manufacturers, at Reduced Prices. Call and examine.

A Fish of Prey.

Ob, do not bring the catfish here;
The catfish is a name of fear.
Oh, spare each stream and spring,
The Kennet swift, the Wandle clear,
The lake, the loch, the broad, the mere,
From that detested thing!

The catfish is a hideous beast,
A bottom feeder that doth feast
Upon unholy bait;
He's no addition to your meal,
He's rather richer than the eel,
And ranker than the skate!

His face is broad and flat and glum;
He's like some monstrous miller's thumb;
He's bearded like the pard.
Beholding him, the grayling flee,
The trout take refuge in the sea,
The gudgeons go on guard!

He grows into a startling size;
The British matron 't would surprise,
And raise her burning blush,
To see white catfish, large as man,
Through what the bards call "waters wan!"
Come with an ugly rush!

They say the catfish climbs the trees,
And robs the roost, and down the breeze
Prolongs his caterwaul
Ah, leave him in his Western flood,
Where Mississippi churns the mud;
Don't bring him here at all.

Ghosts and Witchcraft.

This wild, wooded, and rock-ribbed region less than a day's journey from Gen. Putnam's historic wolf den in northeastern Connecticut, is full of superstition, says a Gloucester correspondent of the New York Times. It is one of the queerest of localities. In the center of Gloucester lies Ponagansett lake, and all about the shores of this lake are the dwellings of a hale and hearty people, who make this country, far from the busy haunts of man, a veritable wonderland of legend and reminiscence. The old men delight in telling ghost stories, and the young people like to listen. Gloucester lies on the crooked old Indian trail which ran between Connecticut and the Providence plantations.

For generations back the Gloucester farmers have believed in wizardry. They will do much of their work only during the full of the moon. Otherwise they would expect to die or to have very bad luck. Planting must not be done until the signs of the zodiac are propitious, and gardens must never be plowed on Fridays. Even a tooth must not be pulled unless the stars are right; if it is, it will come hard and cause great suffering.

Pork, if killed during the small of the moon, will shrink to nothing in cooking, while that butchered at the full of the moon will continue white and firm. To insure luck in the management of domestic animals the sign of the zodiac must be in the leg. The wishbones of all fowls are preserved on sticks. Some families keep hundreds on hand all the time. When the zodiacal sign is in the head, then the Gloucester people believe one can do the most at catching pickerel and can hook the biggest fish. Hence the almanac hung by the kitchen fireplace in all Gloucester houses is a thing the settlers could not live without. Its study, if one would reap good harvests, "catch" good clamming tides and avoid misfortunes, is imperative.

These people also believe that if you take up a blacksnake and bite it your teeth will never decay; that if the nails are pared on Friday toothache will be prevented, and that a child born in the heat of the day can see into the future, and will be exempt from influences of witchcraft. A ship that has such a one on board they say will never sink.

Perhaps the most curious belief still haunting these hearthstones of interior Rhode Island, is that relating to the character of the little fish in Ponagansett reservoir. This pond is the source of the Pawtuxet river, which flows easterly into the Narragansett bay, and years before the building of the dam across the outlet of the lake herring from the salt sea used to swim up the stream to the shoal waters of the lake to spawn. The old settlers who have lived about the lake all their lives aver that the shiners which now glisten in its crystal waters are naught else but the degenerate descendants of the herring race, and show the same characteristics. One of "the Bowen boys" at the lake frequently says that "my father used to say there was no shiners before any d-d dam was built to fence out the herrin's."

That Small Boy.

The small boy is the same the world over. He has the universal language, and if he landed during the marble season in Timbuctoo he'd be perfectly able to make the Timbuctoo boy understand his opinion of alleys and torts. The small boy is a democrat—fine clothes do not obtain with him; in fact, they are rather scorned, and a well-dressed boy is at present grabbed by his fellows and taunted with being "Little Lord Hamlet" and asked in a whining tone: "Why doesn't 'oo go home to dearest?"

There is no sentiment about the small boy.

He is all things to all men, and that is impudent. No pavement is too sacred to keep him from writing his opinion in whitest chalk upon it, and no lamp-post is too high and no step too much decorated for him to occupy it and view any passing show. He confesses to but one weakness, and that is dogs. Cats he holds in utter contempt, regarding their tails merely as an appendage by which to swing them; and girls he loaths and in his heart wonders what they were made for.

For a few years he will run away from them, and after that time or until he gets married he will run after them. The small boy is an institution we could ill-afford to dispense with, says a writer in the Louisville Courier-Journal, and, like a great many other institutions, he occasionally needs a thorough warming up. I would like to suggest to his guardians that nothing is quite so efficacious for this purpose as a very high-heeled slipper; the heel affords a fine grip and the slipper is less likely to get out of your hand because of this, as you make it caress the eel-like creature in your grasp. The clergy commend this, for it draws the blood from the boy's head and lets him coolly think out the right and wrong of his actions, while it quickens his conscience.

Loving Memory of Dogs.

The late Dr. Eyre, a clergyman, left a dog which was very much attached to him at the country house of a friend while he left England for a long sojourn abroad. After two years, Mr. Eyre returned, arriving at his friend's house late at night and retiring without having the dog called.

Next morning Mr. Eyre was awakened by the dog bursting into his bedroom and leaping upon him with the wildest demonstrations of delight.

"How on earth did he know I had arrived?" asked the gentleman of the servant who brought hot water.

"Oh, sir," the man replied, "it is the most curious thing! As I was cleaning your boots the dog recognized them and became excited beyond measure, and I have not been able to quiet him until he saw where I was carrying them, and rushed up along with me to your door."

A correspondent of the same English paper relates that he gave away, at a year old, a dog which he was unable to keep in his London home. After eight years the dog was returned to its first owner.

"The dog met me," says the correspondent "at first as a stranger, and then, with little animated sniffs of inquiry, going round and round me. I remained still for a few moments, while she grew more and more excited. At last I stooped and patted her and called her by name, 'Dee.'"

"On hearing my voice the poor beast gave what I can only describe as a scream of rapture, and leaped into my arms. From that moment she attached herself to me as if she had never left me, and with the tenderest devotion."

Her Nose Wasn't Plumb.

I have been making a study of noses lately, and really it's astonishing to find how large a proportion of the noses are twisted to one side or the other. Try to find the median line of a person's face by tracing it from the tip of his nose and see how you come out! Many people who imagine that their noses are perfectly straight would find by a close inspection that those appendages gee or haw a little—perhaps to their amusement and maybe to their chagrin.

A Portland dentist tells a story to the point. Says he: "After I had fitted a set of false teeth to a lady, she exclaimed, 'Why you haven't got the middle of the set in the middle of my face!'"

"I looked again, and thought I had. 'But just look at my nose!' said she. 'The middle of the set certainly is not in line with the middle of my nose.'"

"That may be," said I, "but your nose"—

"Do you mean to tell me that my nose ain't straight?"

"I think you will find that such is the case."

"How much is your bill? I'll pay it, and you can keep your old teeth!"

"She paid the bill, threw down the set, and flounced out, as angry as an angry woman could be. She went home, her friends told her how foolish she was, she lay awake all night, and the next day came back, apologized, and had her work finished."

The Sahara.

The Sahara as a whole is not below sea level; it is not the dry bed of a recent ocean, and it is not as flat as the proverbial pancake all over. Part of it, indeed, is very mountainous, and all of it is more or less varied in level. The Upper Sahara consists of a rocky plateau rising at times into considerable peaks; the Lower, to which it descends by a steep slope, is "a vast depression of clay and sand," but still, for the most part, standing high above sea level. No portion of the Upper Sahara is less than 1,300 feet high—a good deal higher than Dartmoor or Derbyshire. Most of the Lower reaches from two to three hundred feet—quite as elevated as Essex or Leicester. The two spots below sea level consist of the beds of ancient lakes, now much shrunk by evaporation, owing to the present rainless condition of the country; the soil around these is deep in gypsum, and the water is considerably saltier than the sea. That, however, is always the case with fresh water lakes in their last dotage, as American geologists have amply proved in the case of the great Salt Lake of Utah. Moving sand undoubtedly covers a large space in both divisions of the desert, but according to Sir Lambert Playfair, our best modern authority on the subject, it occupies not more than one-third part of the Algerian Sahara. Elsewhere rock, clay and muddy lake are the prevailing features, interspersed with not infrequent date groves and villages, the product of artesian wells, or excavated spaces, or river oases. Even Sahara, in short, to give it its due, is not by any means so black as it's painted.

Her Philosophy.

Husband—Now here's a thing, Nellie, that I wish to ask your opinion about. I am reading some items of philosophy here and one of these items states there is a fool in every family. What do you think of that?

Wife—Well you lost $20 at poker the other night, as you confessed to me.

H.—Yes, my dear.

W.—And you buy what is called pools sometimes, in the expectation of making a great strike.

H.—Well, that's a fact. But what has that to do with there being a fool in every family?

W.—I am coming to it. Now you have left your family—the family composed of your brothers and sisters—you left your family when you married me.

H.—That's correct.

W.—Well, there's no fool in your family now.

Then the husband fell into deep meditation, while the wife watched him out of the corner of her eye.

Leprosy is increasing in Russia. During the last ten years forty-nine patients were treated in the St. Petersburg hospitals, half of whom were natives of the city.

Dissolution of Copartnership.

Notice is hereby given to all concerned that the firm of SMITH & MUIR, Plumbers and Gas-fitters, at 412 J street, is this day dissolved by mutual consent. The business will be carried on at the old stand by A. M. SMITH, who is now the sole proprietor of said business. All accounts due said firm are payable to A. M. SMITH, who is authorized to receipt for the same, and all debts of said firm will be paid by him.

Sacramento, June 26, 1889.

All claims against the firm to be presented at once, and all parties indebted to the firm will please call and settle.

A. M. SMITH.

A. J. MUIR.

O'BRIEN'S, 607 J.

SWEEPING REDUCTION IN LADIES' SHOES.

Best French Kid, hand turn, worth $7, reduced to $6.
Ladies' French Kid Button low heel, long vamp, worth $5, reduced to $4.
Misses' and Children's Canvas Shoes reduced 25 per cent.

GEORGE T. BOYD,

Manufacturer of

Pure Candies and Ice Cream

Temple of Sweets,

907 K Street, next to Odd Fellows' Temple,
SACRAMENTO, CAL.

Butchers' Home,

1020 J Street,

Between 10th and 11th, : Sacramento, Cal.

Fine Wines, Liquors and Cigars. Also, a

GOOD GLASS OF BEER.

JACOB GRUHLER, Prop'r.

CHANGED HANDS.

SACRAMENTO EXCHANGE.

(Formerly Win. Gamble's.)

1012 SEVENTH STREET.

Fine Wines. All the celebrated brands of Liquors and Cigars. Formerly of Agricultural Park.

L. K. Hammer

THE LEADING

MUSIC DEALER.

AGENT FOR

Chickering
Pianos,

Largest Stock of Musical Instruments in the City.

No. 820 J STREET.

REEVES & LONG, UNDERTAKERS,

609 J Street, bet. Sixth and Seventh.

WE KEEP ON HAND A COMPLETE
Stock of Coffins and Caskets; also,
Shrouds of every description. Orders from city or country receive prompt attention, day or night.
EMBALMING done in the best manner; and at reasonable rates.

FRIEND & TERRY

LUMBER CO.

Wholesale and Retail Lumber Dealers. Also Shakes,
Bolts, Ties, Doors, Windows, Blinds and Screens.
Main Yard and Office, No. 1310 Second Street.
Branch Yard, corner Twelfth and J Sts.
P. O. Box 233. E. J. HOLT, Manager. Sacramento

Root, Neilson & Co.

UNION IRON WORKS, FRONT STREET,

Between N and O,

Steam Engines and Boilers Built to Order.
Steamboat and Quartz Machinery Constructed, Fitted
up or Repaired.

Castings and Machinery of every description.

Patronize Home Industry!

CITY BREWERY

FRANK RUINSTALLER, Proprietor.

GENUINE

Pilsener Felsen Beer.

Corner Twelfth and H Streets,

Telephone 201.

SACRAMENTO.

CELEBRATED

WEINER LAGER BEER

CAPITAL BREWERY

LOUIS NICOLAUS,

Corner Twelfth and I Streets

SACRAMENTO.

COLUMBUS BREWERY

CHRIS. WAHL, Proprietor,

Corner of Sixteenth and K Streets,

SACRAMENTO, CAL.

Agent for the Celebrated W. J. LEMP'S ST LOUIS
LAGER BEER

WISSEMAN'S SALOON,

Klebetz & Green's Old Stand,

1020 Fourth St., bet. J and K, Sacramento.

GEO. WISSEMAN, PROPRIETOR.

Families and Saloons supplied by bottle or keg

California State Bank

DOES A GENERAL BANKING BUSINESS.

Draws Exchange on all the Principal Cities of the World.

OFFICERS:

PRESIDENT.....N. D. RIDEOUT
VICE-PRESIDENT.....FRED K COX
CASHIER.....A. ABBOTT
ASSISTANT CASHIER.....W. E. GERBER

DIRECTORS:

C. W. Clarke, Jos. Steffens, N. D. Rideout,
Geo. C. Perkins, J. R. Watson, Frederick Cox,
W. E. Gerber.

W. R. STRONG & CO.

Founded 1852.

Fruit Packers

and Shippers.

PROPRIETORS OF

CAPITAL NURSERIES,

SACRAMENTO, CAL.

King Bros.

State Capitol Cash Grocery, 131 J Street,
corner Second.Goods sold on small margin, strictly for cash. Best
Brands of Wines, Liquors and Cigars.

JAS. LONGSHORE,

SACRAMENTO TRUNK FACTORY,

530 K STREET.

Trunks, Valises & Bags Wholesale and Retail.

OSBORN & FOLGER

DEALERS IN

ICE and COAL, HAY and GRAIN.

New 10-ton Fairbanks' Hay Scales.

N. E. cor. Fifth and I Streets.

Wood Yard, 806 I Street.

Pacific Manuf'g. Co.

213 AND 215 J STREET.

Manufacturer of the CYCLONE Pumping and Geared Mills, and dealers in all kinds of Pumps, Tanks, etc.

Waterhouse & Lester

DEALERS IN

IRON, STEEL, CUMBERLAND COAL,

Wagon Lumber and Carriage Hardware,

SACRAMENTO.

Earthquake and Fire Proof

BUILDINGS

Constructed on my patent system. Perfect protection guaranteed. For estimates and particulars see
E. HAWES,
Twelfth and B streets, Sacramento.

PUMPS

Our Factory is the

Largest and Best Equipped in Northern California.Our Designs are New and Original and Calculated for Every Variety
of Service.

CAPITAL IRON WORKS,

904 K Street, Sacramento.

CANCERS,

Ulcers, Wens, Lumps, Excrescences, etc.,
Positively Cured or no Pay.
No Knife Used.As to the success of my treatment, I give the names of a few of the many cured. By addressing them
they will give any information required—and it pays
to investigate before being treated.

Mrs. O. C. Neilsen, Grass Valley, cancer.
John Service, Auburn, lupus.
Patrick Lynch, Sacramento, cancer.
Mrs. Jno. Shaw, Grass Val., birthmark removed.
N. S. Peck, S. F. R. R. Sacramento, cancer.
J. L. Woods, Washington, Yolo county, cancer.
John W. Douglas, Rocklin, cancer.
Miss Mamie Lynch, Yolo, tumor removed.
Chas. McLaughlin, Sacramento, cancer.
I might give many more. Those afflicted are invited to call and investigate for themselves. Consultation at office free. Send for circular.
Office, 426 K Street, Sacramento.
DR. J. H. SHIRLEY.

A. C. SWEETSER & CO.,

Real Estate & Insurance Brokers

Lands For Sale in all parts of the State.

Some Good Investments in School Lands.

Send for Catalogue.

Office, No. 1012 Fourth Street,

SACRAMENTO, CAL.

American Steam Laundry

NINETEENTH AND I STS.—WHITE LABOR
only. Linen polished in the neatest manner.
We guarantee satisfaction. All ordinary mending,
sewing on buttons, etc., free of charge. Washing
called for and delivered to any part of the city.
Main Office at Sawtelle's Book Store, 708 and 710 J
street. Branch offices at all the Hotels.

RHOADS & TOWNSEND HOUSE

On European Plan.

Cor. Second and J Streets, Sacramento.

ARTHUR MILLER, PROPRIETOR.

CAPITAL ALE VAULTS.

Established in 1870, and still maintains the same reputation for keeping the best WINES, LIQUORS and Cigars in the city. The finest Hot Lunch in the city from 11 to 2. Clam Chowder a specialty every night.

NAGELE & SVENSSON, Prop'rs.

Telephone 38. 302 J and 1005 Third st.

Wm. J. Hassett.

A. J. Johnston.

A. J. Johnston & Co.

PRINTERS,

410 J Street,

Sacramento

CHAS. MONTGOMERY, President. R. C. PELL, Vice-Pres. W. T. BRERETON, Sec. and Treas.

Bull and Grant Farm Implement Co.

DEALERS IN

AGRICULTURAL IMPLEMENTS,

Buggies, Carriages and Wagons.

T. A. LAUDER, MANAGER

211, 213 J STREET, SACRAMENTO.

FOR FRESH, CLEAN GROCERIES, GO TO

We invite a call at our new location, corner Eighth and K streets, where with our increased space we are enabled to give our large stock a fair display and our customers convenient room.

THE AMERICAN CASH STORE

Offers attractions to cash buyers of GROCERIES. A high quality of goods is carefully regarded.

O. F. WASHBURN, 801 K STREET.

PAUL GRAF,

Manufacturer of and dealer in Saddles, Har-
ness, Robes, Collars,
Whips, Spurs, Brushes
Currycombs, etc.

1130 J Street, near Twelfth

Repairing Neatly Done.

Harness Made to Order.

GRAND OPENING

OF

NOLAN & SON'S

Boot and Shoe

STORE.

603 J STREET, SACRAMENTO,

One door above Sixth.

Barrett & Berkey

PACIFIC RESTAURANT,
OYSTER HOUSE AND
WINE PARLORS

701 J Street, cor. 7th.

B. Ruhl

Bookbinder, Paper Ruler and Blank Book Manufacturer.Periodicals, Magazines, Music, and all kinds of Binding neatly done at the lowest prices.

No. 409 J STREET, SACRAMENTO.

A. L. HART,

ATTORNEY-AT-LAW

Sutter Building, cor. 5th and J.

W. A. ANDERSON,

ATTORNEY-AT-LAW,

No. 209 J Street, Sacramento.

W. A. GETT, JR.,

Attorney at Law,

Southwest Corner of Seventh and J Streets,

SACRAMENTO, CAL.

F. F. TEBBETS, DENTIST.

No. 914 SIXTH STREET,

Bet. I and J, west side, opp. Congregational Church.

DR. J. A. WELDON,

Dentist,

Cor. Eighth and J Streets, over Drug Store,

Teeth extracted without pain.

DR. H. H. PIERSON,

SURGICAL & AND & MECHANICAL & DENTIST

511 J Street, bet. 5th and 6th.

Gas administered for the painless extraction of teeth.

Bainbridge Business College

J. C. BAINBRIDGE, } PRINCIPAL.

1017 J Street, Sacramento. Send for Circular.

Joseph Hahn & Co.,

PHARMACISTS,

S. W. cor. Fifth and J Streets, Sacramento.

CHOICE PERFUMERIES, Etc.

Prescriptions carefully compounded, at all hours.

FIRE! ACCIDENT! LIFE!

—Insurance a Specialty.—

COMBINED ASSETS, - $50,000,000

Best in the World!

Royal, Norwich-Union & Lancashire,
Of England.

See my list of policy-holders and my prices.

"TRAVELERS," of Hartford, Conn. Everybody knows the name. I sell only first-class policies.

C. H. DENTON, 628 1/2 J Street.

BOOTS AND SHOES
made to order. Boots,
$6 to $11. Shoes, $4 to
$9. Ladies' Shoes, best quality French Kid, $5
to $7.REPAIRING DONE
at lowest prices.NONE BUT BEST mechanics employed.WE GUARANTEE
to make perfect fitting
to the worst of crooked and crippled feet.COMPLETE WITH any shoes on the market.

216 J Street

—AND—

208 K Street,

SACRAMENTO.

A. CASELLI

& COMPANY.

$500 REWARD.

PURSUANT TO A RESOLUTION OF THE BOARD
of Supervisors of Sacramento county, adopted May
7, 1889, said Board will pay the sum of Five Hundred Dollars ($500) for evidence leading to the arrest and conviction of any party illegally carrying on the business of hydraulic mining on the American river
or its tributaries, in any and all mines or claims
which have been heretofore enjoined by any Court of competent jurisdiction; provided, however, that said
Board will pay but one reward for the arrest and conviction of a person or persons operating the same mine or claim.Attest: F. F. TEBBETS,
Chairman of the Board of Supervisors.
[SEAL] W. B. HAMILTON, Clerk of Board.

ANHEUSER & BUSCH

BEER

Can be found on draught only at

John Gruhler's Saloon

No. 522 J STREET.

The finest and best Wines, Liquors and Cigars constantly on hand.

NOTICE TO FRUITMEN!

Keep your trees free from scale and your apples
from being wormy by the use of

Warner's Scale & Insect Exterminator

FOR SALE BY

G. T. NOE, - - DRUGGIST,
AUBURN, CAL.

Put up in one-half gallon and quart cans.

MISCELLANY.

The longest day is in June, they say;
The shortest in December.
They did not come to me that way:
The shortest I remember
You came a day with me to stay,
And filled my heart with laughter;
The longest day—you were away—
The very next day after.

There is not enough religion in the world to admit of the annihilation of religions.

For many natures it is as much a duty of cleanliness to change opinions as to change clothes.

Not when it is dangerous to tell the truth will she lack a prophet, but only when it is tiresome.

Humility is most serviceable as an undergarment, but should never be worn as an overcoat.

The Good Samaritan helps the unfortunate wayfarer without asking him how he intends to vote.

Those things which engage us merely by their novelty cannot attract us for any length of time.

Socialism is the fantastical younger brother of a nearly spent despotism, whose inheritance he claims.

Man should command his flesh as a slave his master. The dominion of the enfranchised is the most imperious.

Two lovers at parting: He—Shall you remain true to me, my love, till I return? She—Ye-e-es; but come back soon.

Washington Critic: Mr. Gladstone is doing England on a stumping tour. Now we know why the G. O. M. chops down trees for exercise.

Washington Post: President Harrison's nepotism shows itself in permitting thousands of red ants to hold positions in the White House.

New Orleans Picayune: A young lawyer has taken to bragging in a theatrical way. He says: "My business last year was something fee nominal."

Binghamton Republican: This is a faster age than preceding ages probably because clocks now go with springs, while they used to be weighted down.

That Missouri doctor who has challenged his neighbor, a lawyer, to a duel with bowie knives, to settle a dispute, is clearly seeking a mean advantage. It is much as if the lawyer were to challenge the doctor to a lawsuit in a branch of legal practice wherein the lawyer was an expert.

Prince Albert Victor, oldest son of the Prince of Wales, is to be sent to India to divert his mind from his disappointment at the failure of his love affair with the Princess Victoria of Teck. He will visit Princes who have too many wives and may thus become reconciled to the fact that he has none.

As to the value of gems, the following may be taken as nearly correct: Opal is worth $15 to $40 per carat; cat's-eye is worth $15 to $50 a carat; oriental ruby is worth $100 per carat; emerald is worth $50 to $200 per carat; a diamond is worth $50 to $150 per carat; a sapphire is worth $100 to $150 per carat.

There is a curious story of the blackbird that its original color was white, but it became black because one year three of the days were so cold that it had to take refuge in a chimney. Mr. Swainson says that "these three days (January 30, 31, and February 1) are called in the neighborhood of Brescia, "I giorni della merla," the blackbird's day.

Captain Eyan P. Howell, of the Atlanta Constitution, who is a capital story-teller, illustrated the persistent industry of the Chatanooga by an anecdote of a man in Georgia who keeps bees, and, not satisfied with their proverbial industry, actually attempted to cross them with lightning-bugs, in order to secure a continuation of honey-making through the night.

A good natured plant has been discovered, one which has the same desire as Punch is supposed to feel, namely, to make people laugh. The seeds are black, resembling a French bean in size and shape, and have a sweet taste, a flavor somewhat like opium, and a sickening odor. Small doses of the pulverized seeds give rise to peculiar manifestations. The person laughs boisterously, sings, dances, and cuts up all kinds of fantastic capers. The excitement continues about an hour, when the subject falls into a deep sleep of an hour or more, and then awakens utterly unconscious of his late ridiculous behavior.

The French Court of Appeals has confirmed a judgment annulling the will of a Frenchman named Louis August Travers, who died in 1883, and left his money to the London Workhouse of poor. He instructed his executor to consign his body to the deep just off the English coast, declared that France had always oppressed him, that the French were a nation of dastards and fools, and that he only wished that he might give them to the English, the born enemies of stupid France. The Court held that the London poor and workhouses had no legal representatives, and that such anti-patriotic sentiments indicated insanity.

H. WACHHORST

Leading Jeweler of Sacramento

SIGN OF THE TOWN CLOCK,

No. 315 J STREET, SACRAMENTO.

W. D. Comstock, 501 -- 507 K, cor. Fifth

Furniture

Bedding

On Exhibition, THE LARGEST AND BEST SELECTED STOCK.

FAIR DEALING! LOW PRICES!

GENSHLEA BROS.

624 J ST.

Strictly High Grade Goods in all Lines.

TRY THE LA ROSA ESPANOLA KEY WEST CIGAR.

FIREWORKS And FLAGS, Wholesale and Retail.
Country Orders Solicited.
NATHAN & DeYOUNG, 205 K St.

My Boy, My Girl, My Tailor

For the season of 1889. Samples, with Instructions for Self-Measurement, sent free.

Trousers (to order), from $5.00. Suits (to order), from $20.00.

NICOLL, THE TAILOR, 420 J ST., SACRAMENTO.

Branch of 816 Market street, San Francisco. Coast Branches: Los Angeles, 86 North Main street Portland, 126 First street.

CURTIS BROS. & CO.

Wholesale and Retail Dealers in and Shippers of all kinds of

Fruits, Vegetables

And GENERAL PRODUCE.

Careful attention paid to the selection and packing of Choice Fruits and Vegetables for distant markets. Goods delivered in city free.

308 and 310 K Street, - - Sacramento, Cal.

Klune & Floberg, WATCHMAKERS and JEWELERS
Agents for Rockford Watch Co.
NO. 428 J STREET, SACRAMENTO.

F. KUEHNE & CO.,

NO. 906 NINTH STREET,

Between I and J, SACRAMENTO.

Carpenters and Contractors

Store and office work a specialty.

ICE BOXES for Breweries and Saloons always on hand and made to order.

Jobbing and Repairing promptly attended to.

R. H. PETTIT,

Wholesale and Retail Dealer in

IMPORTED & DOMESTIC CIGARS

Smoke the "Lone Fisherman,"

The BEST FIVE-CENT CIGAR in the Market.

NO. 225 K STREET.

JESSE SLAUGHTER,

Office, No. 1217 Fifth Street.

Plastering, Whitewashing, Cleaning of Cesspools, Etc.

Also, CITY SCAVENGER.

Burying of dead animals attended to at short notice.

Don't forget the number—1217 Fifth street, the old stand, where I have been for 25 years.

WESTERN HOTEL

209 to 219 K Street.

The Leading Hotel of Sacramento, Cal.

FREE BUS TO AND FROM HOTEL.

Meals, 25 Cents. Rooms, according to Location.

WM. LAND, Proprietor.

BELL & CO.,

GENERAL AUCTIONEERS.

Salesroom, 927 K Street, Sacramento, Cal.

Regular Salesdays—Wednesdays and Saturdays at 10 o'clock A. M.

Assistants—W. T. Crowell, Real Estate; J. Pulvermacher, Bookkeeper; J. Lambert, Furniture and Stock.

Particular attention paid to sales of real estate, house sales, and sales of farms, stock, etc.

Highest price paid for all kinds of household goods.

BAKER & HAMILTON,

San Francisco and Sacramento,

Importers and Jobbers of

Hardware, Iron, Steel, Coal, Powder,

MACHINERY

And Agricultural Implements.

Send for Catalogue.

RAILROAD TIME TABLE.

Southern Pacific Company

PACIFIC SYSTEM.

June 26, 1889.

Trains LEAVE and are due to ARRIVE at SACRAMENTO.

Lv.	Trains Run Daily.	Arr.
7:00 A	Calistoga and Napa	11:40 A
4:05 P	Calistoga and Napa	8:30 P
11:00 P	Ashland and Portland	3:40 A
5:05 P	Deming, El Paso and East.	7:05 P
7:30 P	Knight's Landing	7:55 A
4:30 A	Marysville (Mixed)	4:25 P
9:00 A	Los Angeles	9:55 A
9:00 P	Second Class Ogden and East	6:30 A
10:30 P	Central Atlantic Express	3:40 P
3:00 P	Ogden and East	9:50 A
11:00 P	Oroville	3:40 A
3:00 P	Red Bluff via Marysville	9:50 A
10:40 A	Redding and Sisson via Willows	4:05 P
4:00 A	San Francisco via Benicia	10:40 P
7:00 A	San Francisco via Benicia	8:30 P
4:05 P	San Francisco via Benicia	10:10 P
10:00 A	San Francisco via Steamer	26:00 A
11:20 A	San Francisco via Livermore	2:25 P
3:05 P	San Francisco via Benicia	11:40 A
11:20 A	San Jose	2:25 P
9:00 A	Santa Barbara	9:55 A
5:05 P	Santa Barbara	7:05 P
7:00 A	Santa Rosa	11:40 A
4:05 P	Santa Rosa	8:30 P
9:00 A	Stockton and Galt	7:05 P
5:05 P	Stockton and Galt	9:55 A
9:00 P	Truckee and Reno	6:30 A
10:30 P	Truckee and Reno	3:40 P
8:30 A	Colfax	5:00 P
7:00 A	Vallejo	11:40 A
4:05 P	Vallejo	10:30 P
12:15 P	Folsom and Placerville (Mixed)	10:35 A
7:15 A	Folsom and Placerville	3:45 P
5:20 P	Folsom	4:50 A

*Sunday excepted. †Sunday only. ‡Monday excepted. A for morning, P for afternoon.
A. N. TOWNE, Gen'l Manager.
T. H. GOODMAN, Gen'l Pass. and Ticket Agent.

H. K. WALLACE & CO.

NO. 920 K STREET,

Sacramento Stove House.

Headquarters for Plumbing, Gas and Steam Fitting.
Galvanized Iron Tanks of all sizes made to order.

Edwin K. Alsip & Co.

ESTABLISHED 1860.

REAL ESTATE

AND INSURANCE AGENTS.

FARMING LANDS A SPECIALTY.

Catalogues issued monthly.

No. 1015 Fourth Street, Sacramento.

Gregory Bros. Co.

Established 1852.

COMMISSION MERCHANTS.

Packers and Shippers of California Fruit and Produce,

126 and 128 J STREET,

San Francisco Office, 313 Davis St. SACRAMENTO.

MISS A. E. VOTAW,

Dealer in

French Millinery

523 J STREET, SACRAMENTO.

Careful and prompt attention paid to country orders.

ANGLO-NEVADA ASSURANCE CORPORATION

OF SAN FRANCISCO.

FIRE.—Cash Capital, $2,000,000—MARINE.

Sacramento Branch:

No. 1018 SECOND STREET.

JOSEPH STEFFENS,

Manager.

HOWARD KIMBROUGH,

Local Agent.

Hotfilter & Grafmiller,

MANUFACTURING JEWELERS,

Jewelry made to order. Watches, Clocks and Jewelry Repaired and Warranted.

No. 1026 Sixth Street, Sacramento.

R. DAVIS,

NOTARY PUBLIC,

Real Estate and Insurance Agent.

Representing the following companies:

Manchester of England; Caledonian of Edinburgh, Scotland; London and Lancaster, England.

1002 J Street, Sacramento.

Restaurant de France,

FAURE & BECKER, PROPRIETORS.

(Successors to L. Payen.)

No. 427 K Street, Near Metropolitan Theater.

Family Entrance on Fifth Street.

Catering to Families, Banquets and Wedding Parties a specialty.

THEMIS

Vol. I.

SACRAMENTO: SATURDAY, JULY 13, 1889.

No. 21.

THEMIS: published weekly, by A. J. Johnston & Co. Publication Office, 410 J Street. Subscription—One year, by mail, $3 00; six months, by mail, $1 50, in advance; per month, by carrier, 25 cents. (Entered at the Post Office at Sacramento as second-class matter.)

The county assessment roll this year has been increased about half a million dollars; it is still not large enough. The State Constitution provides that all property in the State, not exempt under the laws of the United States, shall be taxed in proportion to its value, to be ascertained as provided by law. Our revenue laws fix the estimation of the value of property for assessment purposes at its full cash worth. As a rule the assessments are much below the actual value, and there has been a disposition with County Assessors to lower assessed valuation in order to escape the percentage of taxation for the maintenance of the State government. The State Board of Equalization has on several occasions raised the entire assessment of a county; sometimes, perhaps, unjustly. We believe the better policy would be for the County Assessors to as nearly as possible ascertain the actual value of the property they assess. The State levy is small. If the property in Sacramento county were assessed upon the basis contemplated by the law, the tax rate would be very materially diminished. It must be recollected that strangers coming among us, desiring to invest capital, look at the rate of taxation, and not at assessed valuations. We venture that if the valuations of property in this city and county were placed at the figure they justly should be, the percentage would be reduced about one-half. The subject of providing revenue for the support of government is one of intricacy. Very many who have given the matter thought conclude that taxation should be on land only, and that improvements should not be considered. There is much justice in that. It does seem wrong that a man who expends labor to improve a piece of land, no more valuable primarily than that lying on the other side of his boundary fence, should be taxed for that which his industry and enterprise created. As it is, he who plants a vineyard or orchard or places valuable improvements upon realty is taxed for them.

Theories are nearly always uncertain guides, particularly in science of government and political economy. The great reformer with a theory only, is dangerous to the public welfare. The poorer classes are ever ready to adopt any fallacy—theory, if the term suits better—that promises an advancement in their social or financial standing. They never look squarely at the great law of cause and effect. There are thousands of political economists who are going about abolishing poverty and making wealthy communities—on paper—by sophistry, by visionary schemes that allure the ignorant and unreasoning. Anti-poverty societies are organized with the view of changing stone into gold without knowing how this is to be accomplished. There is no man who is endowed with any reasoning or thinking qualities, who does not possess the hope of some time bettering his condition. Take away that hope and you destroy all human progress. In the struggle for existence, every man in this country has an equal chance. Competition is the underlying principle that governs us, and notwithstanding the apparent inequalities of the competitors, it is the source of civilization and advancement. We have a distinct recollection of the great schemes advanced here a few years ago by the so-called workingmen's agitation, and during which the loud-mouthed orators were going to enrich all the poor at the expense of the wealthy. Thousands of poor dupes subscribed their mite, which in the aggregate made large sums, only to learn, too late, that the demagogues were fattening upon ignorance and credulity. These same demagogues, in many instances, through this scheme of abolishing poverty, secured at the hands of their credulous followers, important positions of emolument and honor, only to turn upon those who foisted them into positions. Instead of ameliorating their condition, the poor are made poorer and more helpless. Some brilliant and genuine reformer said that the laborer could best advance his condition by avoiding the dram shop.

"Great genius is to madness near allied," saith the poet. Now comes a medical writer and declares that there exists in the popular mind a notion that genius, like madness, is a form of mental degeneration. The genius of inventors and creators of ideas is not usually accompanied with intellectual wealth. It is observed that the great genius has his whole mind set on some particular object which excludes the due consideration of all surrounding affairs, and thus, by this exclusiveness, is oblivious to environments. Such men act upon and have a special mode of thought similar to that of the insane. Genius, with this regard, must be distinguished from talent—while talent may be a synonym for genius, their meaning is different. Genius is an extraordinary mental power leading to new and original ideas; talent depends more on high mental training and perfect command of memory, judgment, sagacity. Genius is a natural gift—talent may be acquired.

General Collis, in North American Review for July, gives a graphic description of the President and cabinet receptions for office-seekers. He takes as the text for this plague of office-seeking, General Sherman's trite saying: "Flesh and blood cannot long stand the strain to which we subject our President and cabinet every four years." It is certainly not in accord with decency that this terrible strain and ordeal should be inflicted on the Chief Magistrate. There is not a moment of actual privacy about the White House. While it is the idea of our people that the President is public property, and we have a right to approach him at any time, and that it is his duty to listen to us on any matter we may desire to present, still common sense and decency should suggest that this is an error. It might be a satisfaction to present our individual claims to him in person, but does not reason say that with the multitude of such interviews he cannot even charge his mind with each particular one, and that, therefore, all the personal interviews are of little moment, and, in fact, have little or no effect upon his mind? There should be some other way of getting at these matters than by the painful and humiliating system, if you can call it such, now in vogue. General Collis suggests that all applications shall be made by the representatives in Congress, and that no applicant shall be permitted to go near the President.

There is a disposition to always refer to the past as the "good old times," and to berate the present as degenerate. This is an age of corruption and fraud, according to the ideas of the pessimist. When we look back over the history of our country, we find the same sentiment expressed during the Presidential election for Washington's successor. Crimes against the ballot-box were then charged. It has been often charged in the early days of our republic that men have been placed in the cabinet for parts taken in corrupt practices. We complain of the scramble for office, and say that it is a sign of degeneracy. There never was more of a scramble than in Adams', Jefferson's and Jackson's times. The world is not degenerating. The present is a great advance on the past, as the future will be on the present. We suffer from some evils, but these evils existed in the past and will in the future. It is the bad habit of senility to lament the days gone by and look with pessimistic eyes toward the future, observes the New York World. The trouble is that as men grow old their capacity for enjoyment is impaired. But the world is not, in fact, growing worse nor weaker, and though we may not appreciate their quality, there shall still be cakes and ale, 'ay, and ginger shall be hot i' the mouth, too.' It is a sad mistake to wear one's eyes in the back of one's head. The human race is not decaying, and there will yet be "palmy days" as good as the old ones.

The Folsom Telegraph enters a protest against the unjust and unequal distribution of prisoners at the State prisons. It appears that San Quentin is overcrowded while there is abundant room at Folsom for five hundred more. Notwithstanding this fact and the further fact that the percentage of deaths among prisoners at San Quentin is more than double that of Folsom, in proportion to the numbers, and further, that there is abundant profitable employment for prisoners at the latter place, the Judges of the Superior Courts continue to sentence the great majority of prisoners to San Quentin, in a measure ignoring the existence of a prison at Folsom. It is true that there is a great work being prosecuted at Folsom, and that it would be to the advantage of the State to equalize the distribution of prisoners in a more just proportion. There was a false impression at one time that Folsom is unhealthy, and this has caused the wishes of prisoners to be considered when sentenced, and where a preference was expressed for San Quentin the commitments are so issued as to make the service of their terms at the latter place. There is justice in the Telegraph's demand.

In March last, when Senator Allison made such a forcible argument in his magazine article, for an extra session of Congress, to commence a month or two before the regular session, we were very favorably impressed with the idea, and so announced. At that time President Harrison was decidedly opposed to an extra session, and the idea seemed to have been abandoned. Now the more sensible view is taken, and in all probability we will have an extra session, beginning in the latter part of October or first of November. This will afford an opportunity to accomplish some valuable and needed legislation, and will remove such action from the baneful influence of obstructionists.

Placer mines heretofore have been found only in the beds of streams, or in channels of what were once streams. In Alaska, however, placer deposits have been discovered on the top of a mountain one thousand feet high. Indians report gold in the mountain passes of the Chilkat river. The latest discovery of gold, says Kate Field, in North American Review, is in a quartz ledge on the Island of Unga.

The late brutal exhibition in Louisiana is a reflection upon that State; the interest centered upon it by the people of this country was discreditable. It seems hardly possible that public interest could be so engrossed in a matter so degrading as was that fight between human beings. Sullivan may have his admirers; we have no admiration for the qualities that have given him fame.

THE SOUDANESE SPY.

"Listen, Bruce, what's that?" and Carriston raised his hand with a gesture of silence and looked at me intently. Then we both dropped our cigars and rushed out to the door of the embassy.

A gun-shot, plain and unmistakable, had echoed through the night air, and we certainly had heard a faint cry.

But in the dreary street all was quiet, and the solitary electric lamp reflected no shadows save our own on the pavement of the British embassy, while the palace across the way, with its coral façades and massive carved gates, showed no signs of life.

Then a gun went off, a drum began to rattle loudly, arms clashed, hurrying footsteps echoed on the stones, and shouts were given and answered. I listened in speechless astonishment, and then rushed back for my cap and sword. It was best to be prepared, though what possible ground for alarm existed I could not see. Suakim was protected by a line of sentries that extended a mile beyond the town. No signal had come from the outskirts, yet here was this turmoil in the very midst of the European quarter.

As I hurried back to the door the great palace gates swung open and a squad of Egyptian soldiers trooped out, their swarthy faces shining under their crimson caps. Close behind them, escorted by several officers, came a tall, dignified looking man. He was bare-headed and held an unsheathed sword in his hand.

I recognized him at first sight as Achmed Ras, the Egyptian governor of Suakim. He glanced up and down the street and then hurried across to the embassy.

"You are a British officer?" he said, breathless with excitement.

"Captain Dugdale, of the Ninth Dragoons, at your command, your excellency," I said briefly.

"Thank you. I am in need of your services. An Arab prisoner, a captured spy of the Madhi, has made his escape. My stupid soldiers are to blame. The fellow has been gone some time now, and it is important that he be retaken, for he has stolen valuable plans of the town and fortifications. I fear my soldiers can do little, but if your dragoons will scour the plain——"

"Your excellency," I interrupted, "what you desire shall be done at once."

I mounted my horse, waved a hasty salute, and galloped off down the narrow street, leaving Achmed Ras and Garriston hobnobbing together on the steps of the embassy, for Carriston was the British ambassador at Suakim. The hot blood was coursing madly through my veins, for I had only been at Suakim a week, and the faintest touch of excitement was intensely welcome.

I remembered, too, having seen this escaped Arab only a few days previous, when he was being led captive through the streets of the town—a great, black giant, with muscular, brawny limbs, and his black locks dangling in curls down his shoulders.

I spurred rapidly through the town, crossed the peninsula to the main land, where the troops were quartered side by side with the native population, and soon the bugle call to arms was floating out on the night air, and the jingling of spurs and the trampling of hoofs were heard on all sides. A few brief, concise orders and we galloped out into the desert and scattered over the sandy plain. Chances were in our favor, for the moon was coming up slowly, and the enemy's outposts, where alone the Arab could find safety, were at that time three miles beyond the town.

Not a stone or bush or a mound of sand escaped scrutiny. The men were widely scattered, circling far to the north and to the south, and drawing steadily nearer to the enemy's lines.

I galloped straight across the plain, closely attended by a solitary trooper, a brave fellow named Tom Fraser. I kept as far as possible in the direction I judged the fugitive had taken, and I hoped to have the pleasure of capturing him myself, for the trampling of my horse was muffled by the drifting sand and would not betray my approach until I should be close upon him.

A mile and a half from the town lay a belt of deserted intrenchments, from which the enemy had been driven a month or so previous. As we approached these we slackened our speed and began to look for a suitable crossing place. The British shells had leveled them in places, and at one of these points we soon found a break in the trench with a gentle slope on either side. We rode slowly down into the hollow, and as our horses were commencing to ascend again Fraser suddenly tugged fiercely at my arm.

"Look, captain, look!" he whispered, excitedly, and as I followed the range of his outstretched hand I saw a sight that made my heart leap. Off to the south extended the trenches in one unbroken formation, their mounds of sand rigid and exact, and outlined sharply in the moonlight against the right hand wall of earth was a swiftly moving shadow. Even as we looked the spectre vanished round a curve and we saw it no more.

We pulled our horses' heads round and dashed down the trench side by side, for it was fully wide enough for three horsemen to con fortably ride abreast. We thundered along in silence. I clutched the reins tightly with one hand and with the other held my saber. The Arab was unarmed and I would take him alive, I thought, and lead him back in triumph to Suakim. This all passed through my mind in an instant, and then we galloped round the curve and saw our prey in full view before us. He was struggling along painfully and limping as though one leg was hurt. The moon shone full upon him, and to my surprise I saw that he carried a great shield and one of those enormous double-edged swords which these Arabs use with such terrible effect. He had doubtless found them in the trench.

We called on him to surrender, but he never even turned until as we were close upon him he suddenly whirled around in desperation and confronted us menacingly. We drew our sabers and dashed upon him.

Just here, extending full across the trench, was a rugged depression, caused probably by an exploding shell. This we failed to see, and, while Fraser's horse leaped it gallantly, my animal stumbled and fell, and down I went, partly beneath him.

I tried to rise, but my ankle was badly sprained, and, with a cry of pain, I dropped down behind the horse. Then I forgot everything in what I saw going on before me. The Arab had retreated against the wall and was fiercely keeping Fraser at bay. Their swords clashed until the sparks, and Fraser's heavy strokes were intercepted by the Arab's leathern shield.

They fought on in silence, and in the moonlight I saw the Arab's terrible face, the eyes sparkling with hatred and the white teeth clinched in deadly determination. Clash after clash rang on the night air. Suddenly Fraser spurred on his horse, and dealt a fearful blow at the Arab's exposed head, but quick as flash the great sword flew up, and the short saber striking full and forcibly against the awful edge, broke off close beside the hilt and lay shining on the sand at their feet. What followed I can never forget. It will haunt me to my dying day.

Fraser threw up his right hand, with the broken hilt, and with the left reached for his revolver, and then, as I looked on, stupid with horror, the Arab raised his great sword aloft with both hands, and with all the force of his desperate strength he hurled it forward like a catapult.

The gleaming blade flashed the moonlight from its edge and crushed with an awful sound through poor Fraser's head, cleaving its way through the skull and between the shoulders and on down through the back until its point fairly touched the rear of the saddle.

Split in twain from head to waist the poor fellow dropped to the ground without a cry, and his plunging steed trampled over the body and then galloped in dead fright down the trench.

Wholly engrossed in this awful scene, I forgot my own peril, and only realized it fully when the Arab, bracing himself against the wall of the trench, began to drag his sword out of Fraser's body. With a shudder I reached for my pistol, and grew faint for an instant when I remembered that it lay under the horse in the holster. I was wholly at the Arab's mercy. The wretch was still tugging at the sword, and seemed unable to loosen it. If only I had my pistol how nicely I could bring him down.

All at once I saw something glitter in one of Fraser's outstretched hands, and the sight of it gave me a thrill of hope. It was his revolver, which he had succeeded in grasping just before the blow fell.

If I could reach it before the Arab could extricate his sword I was saved. If not—Fraser's fate would be mine. I gritted my teeth, seized my saber firmly and rose erect. The Arab saw me, and with a savage imprecation to Allah, he threw himself on the sword with a terrible effort. Still it clung to Fraser's body, and then as I leaped toward him, forgetful of my sprained ankle, and flourished my saber fiercely, he grabbed up his shield and fell back a few yards, keeping on the defensive. I uttered a loud shout to intimidate him, and then bent over poor Fraser.

The wary Arab was watching his chance and before I could even turn he leaped on me like a tiger and we rolled over on the sand, splashing through a pool of Fraser's crimson life-blood.

The Arab had clutched at my throat, but missed it, and clasping each other's shoulders we floundered about the trench, now one uppermost and now the other. With clinched teeth and struggling for breath we fought on desperately, knowing that one or the other must die. I could feel the Arab's hot breath upon my neck, and his huge, brass ear-rings flapped against my cheeks. I still held the pistol tightly in my left hand. If I could only get a chance to use it! Very foolishly I relaxed my grasp a brief second and in that lightning-like interval the Arab seized the advantage and fastened both his brawny hands firmly on my throat.

In vain I struggled and strove to turn, the bony fingers were pressing my windpipe and the hideous face was glaring into mine with a mocking smile.

I was choking, suffocating—all sense was leaving me.

Must I die thus? It was horrible.

With a fearful effort, the strength that madness alone can give, I twisted the Arab sideways. My left arm was free.

My hand still clutched the pistol. I raised it with a jerk. I put the muzzle to his ear, with the last atom of strength I pulled the trigger, and as the stunning report echoed through the trench with thundering reverberations every thing grew black and dim.

* * * * *

Attracted by the pistol-shot they found us there half an hour later, still locked in a close embrace. My uniform was spattered with the Arab's blood. Messengers were sent to Suakim for stretchers, and while waiting the body of my desperate foe was buried where he lay in the trench, and beside him was laid my horse, whose neck had been broken in the fall. We marched mournfully back to Suakim, and the next day poor Fraser was laid to rest in the English cemetery on the shores of the Red Sea. I've been in many a skirmish with the Arabs since, but that night in the trenches outside Suakim was the closest call I ever had, and as a living remembrance I have kept that great two-edged sword which split Tom Fraser nearly in half before my very eyes.

Little Romances.

A celebrated romance in real life, which has also found curious counterparts more or less authenticated in all lands and periods, is the Florentine story of Ginevra. Married against her inclination in the year 1400 to Francesco degli Agolanti, the one of her two lovers who loved her least, Ginevra was buried alive during a trance which looked like death. At midnight she awoke, and, horror-struck, made her way out of the vault to her husband's house. But he, sorrowful for her death as he was, refused to believe that this pale revenante crying at his door was aught else than a ghost, and repulsed her with a hasty benediction. So did her father, so did her uncle. Then, nearly dying in good earnest, she remembered her other and truer lover, Antonio di Rondinelli, and dragged herself to his doorstep.

He answered her timid knock himself, and though startled at the ghostly vision, calmly inquired what the spirit wanted with him.

Tearing her shroud from her face, Ginevra exclaimed: "I am no spirit, Antonio! I am that Ginevra you once loved, who was buried yesterday—buried alive!" and fell swooning into the welcoming arms of her delighted lover.

He took her in, warmed, fed and comforted her, and when she had been nursed back to health he privately married her. The next Sunday they appeared together as man and wife at the cathedral. There was universal consternation among Ginevra's friends. An explanation ensued, which satisfied all but the lady's first husband, who insisted that the original marriage had not been dissolved. The case was referred to the bishop, who decided in favor of Rondinelli, on the unscientific but none the less poetically satisfying ground that the lady had really died once and been released from all former ties. The first husband was even obliged to pay over to Rondinelli the dowry he had received with his bride.

Now, to be at once slangy and Hibernian, this story was a chestnut before it happened. Fifty years previous something very like it had been told by Boccaccio in the "Decameron," and back of Boccaccio the story can be traced far into the mists of antiquity. So true is it that history repeats itself, although skeptical historians are too apt to see in that repetition a reason for distrust.

It appears from the last statistical returns that there are about a million more women than men in England, and that these are nearly all widows. This is a very surprising discovery. It may be explained, however. In England, as in all old-settled countries, women predominate numerically over men, partly in consequence of the superior vitality of girl babies over boy babies; partly because of the large number of young men who go abroad to seek their fortunes, leaving their sisters behind; and partly because of the greater mortality among men, owing to the hazardous nature of the employments they follow. According to the tables, more boys are born in England than girls, the figures being 104,811 males to 100,000 females; but at ten years of age there are 100,000 girls to every 94,900 boys, and the discrepancy increases regularly for twenty years afterward.

"Laura," said the young lady's mother, not unkindly, "it seems to me that you had the gas turned rather low last evening." "It was solely for economy, mamma," answered the maiden. "There is no use trying to beat the gas company, my daughter. I have noticed that the shutting off of the gas is always followed by a corresponding increase of pressure." "Well, that lessens the waist, doesn't it, mamma dear?" replied the artless girl. And her fond parent could find no more to say.

This is the season of the year in which you can get what you do not want real cheap.

The Stage.

[Under this caption will appear a fair and impartial criticism of the drama, actors, music, and all noteworthy matters pertaining to the stage.]

Adelina Patti is in the forty-seventh year of her age.

Tommy Russell's new play, written for him by Ramsay Morris, is to be called A Little American.

George F. Marion occupies the responsible position of stage manager for Dockstader's Muistrels.

Mary Anderson has decided, after a conference with her physicians, not to appear on the stage again until October, 1890.

John Gilbert, the comedian, wore no jewelry of any kind. He was accustomed to say that ornaments were out of place on a man.

Mme. Christine Nilsson is making a sojourn in London. It is not probable that she will ever again sing in public, as she is afflicted with deafness and suffering from loss of memory.

Maze Edwards, an old-time Sacramentan, and at one time Assistant Adjutant-General, is rapidly booking the Bijou Theater at San Francisco with attractions. Maze Edwards was a member of the old Sacramento Dramatic Association.

Bronsou Howard, the dramatist, is subject to literary moods. He has learned by experience that work he produces when he is not under inspiration is practically of no value. He is a great smoker, and often finds that by lighting a cigar he can at the same time start the fire of his genius.

George Starr, agent of P. T. Barnum, has signed contracts on behalf of the American showman giving him control of the Olympia, the largest building in London, in which to give exhibitions. A large deposit was made, which is to be forfeited if the "Greatest Show on Earth" is not brought to London in 1890.

Colonel Ingersoll tells a good story of the late and lamented Larry Jerome. One day he was leaving a Saratoga hotel when the proprietor asked him, as a favor, to write a sentiment with his autograph, in the register. Uncle Larry thought a moment, and then wrote: "I came to this hotel for change and rest. The waiters got the change and the landlord got the rest."

It is said that whoever buys the right to produce Gilbert & Sullivan's new opera in America must engage Geraldine Ullmar as the prima donna. This condition is insisted upon by D'Oyley Carte. Rudolph Aronson is negotiating for the opera, but he will not take it until he reads the libretto and listens to the music. American managers do not care to "go it blind" on Gilbert & Sullivan now.

The massive silver shield or buckle presented to Richard Mansfield by the orchestra at the Globe Theater bears intaglio a bust of Shakespeare, and an inscription stating that the gift is in recognition of Mr. Mansfield's practical and successful efforts to elevate the standard of music in theaters. Mr. Mansfield was the first London manager to raise the entr'acte music to the dignity of a chamber concert.

The concluding lines upon John T. Raymond's monument are:

A true comedian this by Fate designed
To picture manners and to cheer mankind;
So Raymond lived and naught remains to tell
Save that too soon the final curtain fell.
Peace to his dust, where love and humor weep
In endless sorrow o'er their comrade's sleep.

Many young actors and actresses are imbued with the idea that it devolves on them to "create" the part allotted to them in new dramas entirely independent of the author's conception. It is such notions that make many new plays failures. The author certainly should know what he intends the actors to be and do. If every actor was allowed to "create" his part there would be many original presentations, and the author would fail to identify his handiwork.

The following story, told by George Augustus Sala, is interesting in connection with the revival of Jim the Penman: "I wonder whether Sir Charles Young, or the audiences who applauded his most successful production, were aware that, not so long since, the original Jim the Penman was alive and merry on ticket-of-leave in Western Australia. For aught I know, Seward, ex-barrister and forger, may be alive now. This noted criminal was transported to the antipodes about thirty years ago, and I remember a friend who was at the time named an officer in commissariat stationed at Perth, W. A., telling me a very curious story about the famous forger. The well-behaved convicts were allowed to earn some trifling money wages, and it was part of my friend's functions to pay them, they giving him a receipt for the same. 'Can you write, my man?' he asked one morning one of the batch of prisoners who came to the pay-table. 'Write, sir,' echoed the convict, 'why, I'm Jim the Penman.'"

Old Jed Prouty, as personated by Richard Golden, was presented to a Sacramento public on Monday and Tuesday nights at the Metropolitan. Mr. Golden is an accomplished comedian. He made a favorable impression with us when a member of Carleton's opera company on the first visit to this city. If Old Jed Prouty was original it would be a good play, and in some respects a true picture of early "down-east" life. The original, however, had its run with Josh Whitcomb, and Old Jed Prouty is but an imitation—a copy. Like the copy of a picture, even by an artist, from one of the old masters, it may be a fine copy, yet it is not the original, and has no real virtue other than an imitation. This fact robs the copy of the interest and effect that might otherwise have been inspired. When Coleridge wrote his paraphrase of the Bible, The Wanderings of Cain, it was a great literary event, but it was not original and no fame ever attached to the work. Thus Denman Thompson created the old Yankee character, and, while Golden's personation may be even superior to the original, yet it is not original, and the interest fails. Raymond was "Col. Sellers" and Florence, "Bardwell Sloze"; all others are mere imitators. Another false feature to the drama is the absurd court scene. It has always been a mystery why play writers do not select actual court scenes for representation on the stage. Certainly this could be done, and either the amusing, sensational or emotional be truly represented. The courts abound with genuine dramatic, as well as comedy events, that could be given without resorting to the ridiculous and impossible.

Frank McNish, in reply to a query, "How did you conceive the idea of 'Silence and Fun'?" the entertainment by which he is best known, the genial Frank gave us the following amusing bit of personal history: "I invented it in 1874 in Rochester, N. Y. In those days I was a song-and-dance man. My dancing was not so bad, but the singing! Say, my voice sounded like a lighthouse foghorn, with the steam low down. A lot of us were to give an old minstrel man, Charley White, a benefit. I had caught a cold, and could not sing passably well at rehearsals, and so I went through my specialty without uttering a vocal note. Of course, there is some side fun at rehearsals, and when I finished my act one day I tumbled about on the floor as a sort of climax. Well, the long and short of it is, I never did another song and dance. Most of my feats have grown out of mistakes in performing others. You see I got tangled up in some contortion act, and work out of it some way different from usual. If it pleases the audience, I modify and introduce it thereafter. I never train or practice, and have gained fifty-four pounds in the last thirteen years. Here, in London, however, I am up at 6 and take a three-mile spin before breakfast, which sets me up for the rest of the day. Falls? Yes; I've had a few. I went head foremost off two tables at Cincinnati a couple of years ago and mentally bade the world good-by while en route to the stage. Then I arrived at the destination. Everything grew suddenly dark and I could hear a roar which sounded to my confused brain like peals of thunder. I could see nothing, not even the proverbially casualty stars. Then I groped about for a leg of the table, and finally got on my feet. I was still blinded, but knew the only salvation for the success of the act was to continue as I did. They told me afterwards that my latest specialty had impressed the audience—it certainly impressed me."

Book Chat.

Thomas Bailey Aldrich has gone to London to write a poem of 1200 lines. Mr. Aldrich should have remained at home and made it shorter.

It is reported that Mr. Nast, the artist, lost his thousands in California speculations. He drew it all out, and now he hopes to "draw" it all in again.

When the college graduate finishes his beautiful oration and makes his retiring bow to the faculty and audience he always seems to feel that the Almighty must know more than he did before.

Sir Edward Baines, of Leeds, is perhaps the senior European journalist. He represented his father's paper at the Peterloo Massacre in 1819, and is probably the only survivor of that scene. He is more than 90 years old.

The poet Whittier has doubled his annual subscription to the Hampton (Va.) Institute. This he does to emphasize his continued confidence in the management, which has been the subject of considerable adverse criticism of late.

A Southern critic claims that the poetry of Miss Orelia Key Bell, of Atlanta, Georgia, is the nearest approach to Mrs. Browning's since "Aurora Leigh" was given to the world. Miss Bell's compositions, especially her sonnets, have a pleasant poetic ring to them, certainly.

Walt Whitman, referring to his health, says: "I am easier and rather better these days, and I am wheeled out in a strong willow chair every day. But I am a bad old wreck." Let us hope that the "old wreck" may find itself sailing on smooth waters and before gentle breezes for many days to come.

Harriet Beecher Stowe has been known to use the preposition "onto." It is also recorded that the good George Washington, on one occasion, swore "like our army in Flanders;" also, that Napoleon never showed symptoms of fright; that eminent physicians have prescribed for themselves; that milkmen have been known to sell real milk.

Mlle. Clemenceau, the daughter of the famous French politician and author—"the Minister-maker of France," he is called—was married recently in Paris. The mother of this young woman is an American, but the daughter is wholly French. M. Clemenceau's marriage has been a particularly happy one, which accounts for his interest in every-thing American.

The authorities at the British Museum recently passed a new rule prohibiting the issue to readers in the library of novels published within five years, unless such works were required for "special reasons," which should be approved by the superintendent of the reading room. This rule has worked very well, as a number of persons have disappeared from the library who went there solely to read new novels, and who gave a great deal of trouble. Some of the "special reasons" given by applicants for the prohibited works were very funny. A young curate asked for a complete set of Zola's novels because he was desirous of preaching a sermon against them, for which a preliminary study was absolutely necessary.

All great writers have imitated others before them. Some of these imitations have been brilliant, but no fame has ever rested thereon. Byron, in "Heaven and Earth," wrote a description of the flood which in power, and vividness, and grandeur was greater than that of the Bible picture, but it was only an imitation, therefore secondary. Onida's inspiration came from Abbe Prevost and Gautier, Amelie Rives followed Onida. Shakespeare availed himself largely from "Boccaccio," and Wolsey Coleridge paraphrased from the Bible. We might go over a list of great writers and find that each at some time followed in the groove of some former author and unconsciously became an imitator. Our American writers have spasms of imitation. Sometimes we are given to follow the French, then German, again Russian, occasionally an Oriental style becomes the rage. In other words, literature has its fashions which for the time hold the author and the public until the fever has passed.

We have examples of intelligent work successfully undertaken when men have been called old. Witness Cato beginning the study of Greek at an advanced age; and Quilby—whose translation of Homer won the approval of the critic and poet, Pope, beginning his classical studies when more than fifty years of age. Names have been made famous through writing begun in mature life. The first English novel was written by Samuel Richardson, a printer, who thus began authorship in his fiftieth year. Sir Walter Scott began his peerless historical novels when he was 43. And he was 34 years old before his first original poetry appeared. Of Cowper it is said that "he only began to write poetry in earnest when he was nearly 50 years old." His best poem was written at 54. John Bunyan, not a man of letters, must have been between 40 and 50 years old when he wrote his one immortal book, "The Pilgrim's Progress," in the jail at Bedford. The brilliant historian, William H. Prescott, published his first work at 41. George Eliot, it is supposed, began to be conscious of her original powers at about 35, after this time making her first attempt at story-writing, and entering upon her life work with "Adam Bede" at 40. The most popular novel ever written in America, "Uncle Tom's Cabin," was written in its author's 40th year. Henry Ward Beecher tried novel-writing after he was fifty years old, one encouragement to the writing of "Norwood" being the reflection that "Scott did not write till he was over 40." "Life is but thought," and thought grows never old.

One of the best scenes in the Vana of M. Emile Zola is where the wicked heroine, lying in bed on the morning after her debut at the Varieties, has the maid read the comments and criticisms of the morning papers to her. "Mademoiselle Nana" was doubtless surprised at the diversity of opinion prevalent among her critics. She ought not to have been. One of the most amusing chapters of literary and dramatic history is this very diversity of critical opinion. Examples of this are as numerous as ruffled programmes after a show. But critics, like weather prophets, are not infallible. Sir Oracle did not like the Held by the Enemy of Gillette, when that sterling play was first produced. Mr. Sincerwell turned up his nose at the Hazel Kirke of Mackaye, the morning after its initial performance. But then, Rymcr did not see anything in Shakespeare either. Voltaire called Shakespeare a drunken barbarian, but Rymcr went Voltaire one better. "In the neighing of a horse," said he, "or the growling of a mastiff, there is as lively expression, and may I say more humanity, than many times in the tragical flights of Shakespeare." Waller didn't fancy Milton. "The blind old schoolmaster, John Milton," wrote he, "hath published a tedious poem on the fall of man. If its length be not considered a merit, it hath no other." We may sometimes be shocked at the harsh words and bitter innuendoes exchanged between Leander Richardson and Harrison Grey Fiske. But they used to strike a good deal harder in old times. Milton called Salmasius, his opponent, an ass, a puppy, a fool, and Salmasius hit back at Milton with similar epithets. Dr. Johnson called Harry Fielding a blockhead, and considered Rousseau worthy of ball and stripes. Theophile Gautier thought Molière wrote like a pig, and said so. Madame de Sevigne was of the opinion that the taste for the works of Racine had come in with the rage for coffee, and would go out with it. Horace Walpole compared Dante to a Methodist parson in Bedlam, and Theobald wrote of Pope that his wit was as thick as mustard. Scaliger saw nothing in Homer and everything in Virgil. Barbey d'Aurevilly tried to smash Diderot and Goethe to pieces. Jules Lemaitre is constantly picking at Victor Hugo. Bendix long banged away at Shakespeare. Blumenthal somewhere expresses the wish that Marlett's "Old Ma'mselle's Secret," a popular novel, had remained the secret of the old ma'mselle and had never been published. Howells has the audacity not to like Dickens and Thackeray. Poe is the most popular of our authors in France; Bret Harte is thought most of in Germany. On the wall to my left there hangs a masterly pen and ink sketch by Van Schaick. It represents a lot of critics in the dressing-room of an actor, discussing the play. What differences of opinion are here indicated. The men are all animation, wrapt in the discussion, each eager to maintain his views. The coffee and champagne are forgotten. The views of the disputants are as varied as the cut of feature or the cut of coat. I remember that Harry Edwards, after the performance of Elaine, at the Madison Square, published an amusing collection of extracts from the metropolitan dailies to illustrate how critics may disagree. But the contrast displayed the subject without explaining it. How shall one explain it, anyhow? Andrew C. Wheeler sees little in Mary Anderson; William Winter sees everything in her. Wagner considered Meyerbeer a clever charlatan. Stephen Fiske spoke of the piano legs of Edwin Forrest, and Robert Buchanan is hot in wrath against the fleshly instincts and poems of Algernon Charles Swinburne. The sum of it all is, perhaps, that there is no such thing as a science of criticism; it's all a matter of personal opinion. Critics are but men, influenced like all men, by prejudice, taste, fancy, the state of the stomach and the state of the purse. And the very diversity of dramatic, literary and musical criticisms makes me a philosopher. It's too warm nowadays to worry. I simply hum with Mendelssohn:

"Let a mau write as he will,
Still the critics fight;
Therefore let him please himself,
If he would do right." —To-Day.

Professional Chat.

The discovery of the Pandects of Justinian in the sack of Alfalmi, saved the world from relapsing into barbarism. But while the light thus shed by the laws of an ancient and extinct empire rescued Europe from the reign of brute force and ignorance, and while the general principles of justice are of universal application, yet the institutions of every people are the results of origin, race character, environment and climatic conditions. It is the glory of the ancestry from whom we derive our laws that, though sometimes conquered, they never lost their statutes and customs. All other nations have fallen under the codes of the invader, but William the Norman left untouched those sources of justice and freedom which were found in Saxon jurisprudence.

There is a woman's Lawyer Club in Boston. The club meets on Saturday afternoon—for a good dinner is discussed rather than Coke or Bacon. Shakespeare's invention of a woman lawyer in "Portia" has given rise to many feminine barristers in modern times. California has three or four women attorneys. There are several representative female lawyers in the United States. Belva Lockwood has probably reached the greatest prominence. There was, during the Middle Ages, in Italy, a woman professor of the law, who was so beautiful that contrivances were placed so as to secrete her face from the students, that they might not become infatuated with love for her. There is little danger of the modern female attorney inspiring any ardent love on account of beauty—the modern feminine counselor-at-law is usually very plain in features. France has granted legal diplomas to several women. Russia has women professors of law, but women are forbidden by the Czar from engaging in the practice of the law. One lady attorney, Miss Lella J. Robinson, of Boston, has written and published a work on law, called "Law Made Easy." Miss Bessie Bradwell-Hillyer, of Chicago, is said to be pretty—she married and abandoned law practice, although she was the reporter who prepared the last twelve volumes of Bradwell's "Appellate Court Reports."

We have changed the publication date of the THEMIS to Saturday. This is prompted by a possible question with regard to the publication of legal notices on Sunday, and the fact that our country subscribers could not receive the papers until late Monday, and sometimes Tuesday—they remaining in the post-office during Sunday, when the publication was on that day. The issuance being on Saturday avoids these embarrassments, the papers being carried on the outgoing trains on the afternoon of Saturday. THEMIS is literary in its character, and what news we publish will be presented to our readers condensed.

We have before us a fac simile of the first issue of the New York Herald, dated May 6, 1835. It was issued by James Gordon Bennett & Co., at No. 20 Wall street, basement story. It is a curiosity, and a striking contrast with the Herald of to-day and the other leading dailies of the country. The issue before us is printed on pages smaller than those of THEMIS, four columns to a page. It is laden with news; everything is boiled down. We believe there will be a return to condensation in journalism. The blanket sheets that are now issued carry too much matter; life is too short to give them attention. It is interesting to now look over a paper published at so early a day as the first issue of the Herald. In the personals are these notes: "John C. Calhoun, Henry Clay and Daniel Webster, are in their respective States, recruiting their bodies and minds, and preparing for the next year. The other Senators may move about, and no one say 'Who goes there?'" "Davie Crockett, at the last accounts, was grinning the bark off the trees in Tennessee; and Major Jack Downing is busy in giving lessons to Louis Philippe in the art and mystery of managing the Chamber of Deputies as regards the American claims."

We find that the discussion of the labor question was then equally as prominent as now; the question of the oppressions of monopolies was a subject of public interest. The leading editorial in the paper was entitled "The Mechanics." As a matter of curiosity we republish portions of the first editorial of James Gordon Bennett, printed fifty-four years ago. It was characteristic of the man who founded that great paper:

"A great deal of noise has been made during the last few months about monopoly, anti-monopoly, banks, circulation, mechanics' small notes, and many other matters supposed to be appertaining to the interests and feelings of the mechanics and working people. Promises of all sorts have been held out to them in abundance—ephemeral legislation has been evoked, and yet at the end of months and years, this honest, hard-working body just find themselves where they ever were—at the mercy of caprice, custom, pride and fashion. What has all this empty discussion amounted to? Nothing—mere 'springs to catch woodcocks,' the humbugs of hypocrites. Legislation has not reached the evil complained of. Society is becoming too complex and dense for the folks at Washington or Albany. What does the journeyman mechanic stand most in need of? Plenty of work and good wages."

The elder Bennett declared in his introductory really what should guide the journals of to-day. He said:

"In debuts of this kind many talk of principle—political principle, party principle—as a sort of steel-trap to catch the public. We mean to be perfectly understood on this point, and therefore openly disclaim all steel-traps—all principle, as it is called—all party, all politics. Our only guide shall be good, sound, practical common sense, applicable to the business of men engaged in every day life. We shall support no party, be the organ of no faction or coterie, and care nothing for any election, or any candidate from President down to constable. We shall endeavor to record facts on every public and proper subject, stripped of verbiage and coloring, with comments when suitable, just, independent, fearless and good-tempered. If the Herald wants the mere expansion which many journals possess, we shall try to make it up in industry, good taste, brevity, variety, point, piquancy and cheapness. It is equally intended for the great masses of the community—the merchant, mechanic, working people—the private family as well as the public hotel, the journeyman and his employer, the clerk and his principal. We have plenty of room without jostling neighbors, rivals or friends, and will leave something for others who come after us."

The first number of the Herald was issued by Bennett, Sr., and two young printers.

The paper was sold for one cent. Its entire contents were prepared by Bennett, who acted as editor and reporter. Bennett was perhaps the most remarkable journalist of any age. With a comparatively insignificant beginning he established one of the greatest newspapers ever published. He and Horace Greely were fathers of modern journalism in America. He was fearless, and the boldness of the policy of his paper created antagonisms against him. In 1852, an attempt was made to destroy him and his office. A parcel was left at the office addressed to him personally, and marked "private and with care." Just above the direction were the words "native silver and copper ore from the Cuba mountains, with letter inside the box." The marking clearly showed that the originator of the murderous attempt had determined that no one but Bennett should open it. He, however, examined it and found that it contained fulminating powder.

There has been of late much published in magazines concerning the prominent actors in the civil war, and some letters written by men of prominence at that time have been unearthed. Some written by Horace Greely, the editor of the New York Tribune, do not read well now. They were, however, consistent with the policy of Greely, for it will be recollected that he was opposed to the inauguration of the war; that after it was begun he lent the aid of his powerful journal to the Union side; that at the ending he favored a speedy reconciliation, and was one of the bondsmen of Jefferson Davis. In some of these articles Secretary Seward is represented as having advised President Lincoln to surrender the reins of government into firmer hands. The judgment of Seward, while he acted as Secretary of State during the administration of President Johnson, was adverse. Viewing, however, his course from the standpoint of history it must be concluded that his policy was correct, and that it was a reflection of that which would have been pursued by President Lincoln had he lived.

The publication of the articles to which we refer recalls the positions which men of prominence and journals took during that critical period in the history of this government. In our own State it is a fact not generally known that our representatives in both Houses of Congress favored the establishment of a Pacific republic—independent of the North or the South. This idea was endorsed by several of the leading papers of San Francisco. Had it not been for the timely arrival of General E. V. Sumner it is doubtful if California would not have been in rebellion against the Federal Government.

We cannot refrain in writing on this subject of the attitude of the States to the Federal Government, in 1861, from referring to the eminent services of Rev. Thomas Starr King. He did as much and more than any other individual to preserve California to the Union. When the announcement came that Fort Sumter had been fired upon, his eloquent voice urged the people to loyalty. It is to be regretted that his life was not spared; he was stricken down with diphtheria in early manhood. Though dead a quarter of a century the people of this State revere his memory; it is deserved.

On November 14, 1863, intelligence reached California of the election of Mr. Lincoln. A large element on this Coast who sympathized with the secession of the Southern States expressed themselves with boldness. One of our Congressmen wrote a letter from the federal capital in which he said: "Our government has fallen upon strange times. The dissolution of the Union, which but a short time ago seemed to be too far away in the future for me to give it even a passing thought, is now regarded not only with gravity and seriousness, but is looked upon by many wiser heads than mine as a fixed fact * * * * * It is not unreasonable to conclude that they (meaning the Southern leaders) may possibly prosecute successfully the work of disunion in which they are so earnestly engaged." In the same letter was written "The people of California and her neighbors should be of one mind on this subject, and be prepared for the emergency; and if the 'fates' should force us to this last sad resort, let us, with a disposition to welcome all who come to us from our 'old homes' seeking an asylum, raise aloft the flag of the 'bear,' surrounded with the hydra-pointed cactus of the western wilds, and call upon the enlightened nations of the earth to acknowledge our independence, and to protect us, the only 'waif' from the wreck of our once noble Union, the youthful but vigorous Caesarian republic of the Pacific."

NOTES.

This has truly been a year of disasters. In our issue of June 16th we made reference to the appalling calamities that have happened during this year. Since then has occurred the destruction of Bakersfield. Drawn upon as heavily as the people of this community have been to succor, the authorities hesitated not to volunteer aid were it necessary to the people of Bakersfield; they did right. We believe that had the necessities of the people of Bakersfield demanded it, the Mayor of this city would have been sustained by our people had he sent relief. We are not, however, admirers of the parading of charities; it is unfortunate that in some instances unscrupulous individuals have availed themselves of the opportunity to advertise themselves under the guise of charity. We are not inclined to endorse the practice of newspapers in publishing the names of those who contribute for purposes of charity. As a general proposition, those who give from motives of sympathy prefer that their donations should not be made public.

Next year a national census will be taken. We venture that the result of the enumeration in this State will be surprising, notwithstanding we know there has been a large augmentation to our population. In 1860 the census returns showed the population of the State to be 379,994; in 1870, 560,247; and in 1880, 864,694. In 1860, the population of Sacramento county was returned at 24,142; in 1870, at 26,830; and in 1880, at 34,390. We have no doubt that the forthcoming census will show a much larger proportionate decadal increase. In nearly every county in the State there has been a large influx from immigration.

The Board of Trustees has been engaged in a controversy, in its nature partisan, with regard to the granting of and modification of a franchise for the street railroad on J street and other streets. The Board of Trustees have no power to deal with contracts between subscribers and grantees of franchises. Its sole duty is to pass on the question of the feasibility of granting a franchise, and nothing more.

THEMIS has consistently favored broad and liberal views with regard to local improvements. But a few weeks ago, with regard to the subject of street railways in this city, we had occasion to point out the illiberality with which enterprises of that kind were treated here.

The View from Chapultepec!

Who can describe it? What the Yosemite is to California; what Niagara is to New York; what the Yellowstone is to Wyoming—this is what Chapultepec is to Mexico. To the extreme right, as we look down the Paso de la Reforma, rises Popocatepetl, grand beyond description, his snowy summit dotted with soft, white clouds. To the west of Popocatepetl is Iztaccihuatl, called "La Mujer Blanca"—the white woman—by the natives. This peculiarly shaped mountain is really wonderfully suggestive, by its shape of a woman in a white shroud prepared for burial. The dead face, as seen from Chapultepec, is simply perfect in outline, and her hair seems to stream in silvery locks from the marble-like forehead down over the bier. Of course, there is a legend connected with the White Woman. According to the Indians, the two volcanoes were once human beings, a giant and a giantess. One day they offended their Creator, who struck the giantess dead, turned them both into mountains and chained Popocatepetl, where he must gaze perpetually into the face of his dead wife. He occasionally expressed his grief by floods of fiery lava tears, and in his agony would cause the very earth to tremble beneath his writhings. So runs this very interesting tradition.

Advice to young married men—When your mother-in-law's curls stand out straight from her temples, climb to the roof and sit upon her trap-door.

GENERAL NEWS ITEMS.

Colusa wants an electric light plant.

The Germans captured Touga after a fierce resistance.

Walla Walla was visited by a fire yesterday. Loss not heavy.

The British steamer "Tortona" was burned yesterday at Koenigsburg.

The Crocker mausoleum at Mountain View cemetery will cost $100,000.

The workmen at Bessemer steel works, to the number of 2,000, are on a strike.

Emperor William has forbidden officers of the German army to visit the Paris Exposition.

The Mormon element in Idaho is likely to prove troublesome in a political point of view.

Prof. J. E. Blanchard has again been retained as teacher of the Folsom grammar school.

Jackson county, Oregon was visited by a devastating cloud-burst which did much damage.

There was a destructive earthquake in Russia. One half of the town of Djarkend was destroyed.

Fruit picking has commenced at Natoma ranch. All the boys in the neighborhood have been employed.

The Jacksonville, Oregon, jail was destroyed by fire yesterday. Three men perished in the conflagration.

A considerable force of men have been employed repairing the railroad track between Folsom and Sacramento.

Grass fires broke out yesterday at Buena Vista farm, Sonoma county. The fires were extinguished before any great damage was done.

The Folsom Telegraph says there is not an empty house in that town. There has been a scarcity of tenable houses there for some time.

The yield of gold in Queensland during the past half year amounted to 390,000 ounces. This is an increase of 166,000 ounces over the preceding half year.

Austria, through Cardinal Galemberiti, the Papal Nuncio at Vienna, has prevailed upon the Pope to remain in Rome in order to avoid embarrassing the Italian Government.

Fresno was visited by another disastrous fire yesterday. Losses to the amount of $250,000 were sustained. It would not be healthy for anyone caught in that community setting fire to a building.

Professor J. R. Dodge, the statistician, has been detailed by Secretary Rusk to investigate the agricultural statistics of the States and Territories of the Rocky Mountain region. He will leave Washington next week.

C. A. ("Gus") Riegels died a pauper in San Francisco on Wednesday, and was buried at the expense of James G. Fair. He was at one time one of the most noted mining experts on the coast, and was once possessed of a large sum of money.

Nine hundred and fifty members of the Connaught Rangers have been sent to Malta to replace the troops that have been dispatched to Egypt. Four regiments stationed at Aldershot have been ordered to hold themselves in readiness to proceed to the front in Egypt at a moment's notice.

The Dervish prisoners arriving at Assouan are terribly emaciated, having suffered greatly from hunger and thirst. Among them are many women and boys. On the march many died and deserted, while many others were killed. Col. Wodehouse estimates the Dervish killed and wounded at 2,500.

From Consular information, England has taken steps to colonize Honduras. A syndicate of Englishmen is about to construct a railroad across the Republic of Honduras from the Atlantic to the Pacific, which will give the control of the commerce and trade to England, although it is only a private enterprise.

On Tuesday Colusa will have an election on the question of irrigation. The Sun is in favor of the irrigation project. This is one of the paragraphs: "We care not for 'a life on the ocean wave, or a home on the rolling deep,' but really we would like to live where we could make irrigation waters roll over the dry earth at our pleasure. Vote for the bonds."

Little Lizzie Case, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. F. Case, who reside at Oakland, has been during the past fifty-six days in a cataleptic trance. Her father is a well known Oakland business man. The child is fourteen years old. Her case is puzzling Dr. H. T. Webster, who is attending her, and other physicians whom he has consulted. Food is administered with a teaspoon, her teeth being first forced apart. During the past thirty-six hours the sleeper has taken no nourishment.

FLASHES.

The virgin forest has never been axed.
Grit is a good thing, but not in our sugar.
The drum was beaten because it called the harp a lyre.

When we are "broke up," it is time to mend our ways.

It is an aggravation for a hungry man to find only a fork in the road.

Stage fright—Some of the female stock that appear with star combinations.

The mantle of charity must be nearly worn out—it has been stretched to cover so many sins.

The great trouble with the pug as a professional beauty is that his skin is made to fit a shorter dog.

Lawyers will present to the Court a hundred pages of closely printed matter and call it a brief. This is a paradoxical lie.

These speeching mortals often find

In painting objects red;

They often come out way behind

Because they got a head

Evangelist—I shall deal to-day with especial reference to the curse of cards. Voice (from a back seat)—Shuffle 'fore yer deals an give us er chance ter cut.—Epoch.

Old Policeman (hurriedly)—Hide your star. New Policeman (innocently)—What for. Old Policeman—Here comes a gambler, you thundering fool. He'll take it away from you if he sees it.

The poet wrote of the buds and flowers,
And then, to wring his soul,
Came hail and snow in heavy showers,
And blasts from the Arctic Pole.

Then the poet threw aside his pen,
And his hair he wildly tore:

"I never will write an ode again
To the smiling Spring!" he swore.

And when the editors heard him swear,
They were all delighted so,
They threw their hats up in the air,
And they laughed, "Ha! ha! ho! ho!"

The Increasing Popularity of Lake Tahoe.

Our County Assessor, A. L. Frost, has owned quite a tract of land on Lake Tahoe for several years, a portion of which he has all along intended cutting up into lots and offering for sale on favorable terms. Until last year, however, the expense of getting there was too great, and one required to be little less than a millionaire to go to Tahoe to spend a month or so in the vicinity of the most beautiful mountain lake in the known world. A general reduction of fares and freights has now made the locality accessible to people of moderate means, and "Rubicon Park," adjoining Rubicon Point—the most famous fishing ground on the lake—is the result. It now costs only $13 for a trip from Sacramento to Tahoe, a ninety mile ride around the lake and return home. A very few years ago it cost double this amount. Common lumber suitable for cottages is now delivered at any point for $15 per thousand. A gentleman just returned from Tahoe, after an absence of three years, says the improvement in different quarters is very marked, but no locality on Lake Tahoe has as fine a beach, or more attractive scenery in the shape of meadows, mountain brooks, waterfalls, and fishing-grounds, than this place which Mr. Frost has selected for a summer town. The owner leaves to-night for an inspection of the premises, preparatory to the reception of Sacramento men who will make Rubicon Park their headquarters for a few weeks, commencing the first of August.

Fish Protected in Private Waters.

Judge Keyser rendered his decision yesterday in the case of The People vs. Mahuka et al., which was a charge of fishing with set, or fyke nets in a slough running into the Sacramento river. The question involved was, whether the statutory inhibition against any person fishing with a set net in any of the waters of the State, was intended to include sloughs or bodies of water exclusively on private domain. The parties defendant in this case had leased the exclusive right to fish in Sacramento slough from the heirs of Jackson Wilcoxson, who owned the premises through which the slough ran. It seems that the decision of Judge Keyser holds that the Legislature intended to include all waters of this character in its protective measures, from the fact that the word "public" in connection with the description of the character of the waters was purposely omitted, and intended to protect the fish in all waters, public as well as private. This decision will prevent any further fishing with set nets in any waters of this State, including sloughs, lakes, ponds, and all streams navigable and non-navigable, unless in some future proceedings the judgment is overruled.

Four hundred Silesian lace makers have been at work for five weeks on a magnificent veil for the sister of the German Empress, who is about to marry Prince Leopold of Prussia.

LOCAL BREVITIES.

The State Board of Prison Directors will hold a meeting at the Folsom Prison to-night. Directors Devlin and Shattuck left this afternoon to be present at the session.

John Kerwin, the veteran sexton of the Catholic cemetery, is in a critical condition from the effects of an accidental dose of carbolic acid.

The President of the State Senate, Hon. Stephen M. White, came to Sacramento to sign the journals of the Senate, which have recently been written up.

Henry Landis had his hand badly crushed in the machine shops of the Southern Pacific company in this city to-day. It is probable that amputation will be necessary.

J. B. Wright and a party of railroad officials were at Auburn, last week, inspecting the old depot and looking into the work that is to be done in making the proposed improvements which will be begun soon.

The Coroner's inquest on the body of Sue Key, the Chinaman who was shot by a countryman of his a few nights ago, will be held this evening at the Coroner's office at 7:30. W. A. Anderson has been retained for the defense of the accused, Ah Gong, and C. T. Jones for the prosecution.

The Board of Supervisors were in session this morning as a County Board of Equalization, and after receiving a number of applications for reductions in assessments, an adjournment was taken to Monday morning. Probably nothing will be done toward considering the applications until the latter part of next week.

Gilmore's Twelve Temptations, a spectacular drama, was presented last night at the Metropolitan. It is needless to say that the announcement of a performance of this character would fill the house to overflowing. There is little dramatic merit to the play, and that little is in very poor hands. Musically and artistically there was nothing to commend, unless we include scenic effects and costume within the term artistic. In the latter respect the performance was a success. There was fine scenery and rich costuming, and plenty of shapely forms. The same play to-night.

Baseball Notes.

Sylvester has been appointed an umpire for the California league.

The Sacramento and Oakland clubs play at Snowflake Park to-morrow afternoon at 2 o'clock.

Hughey Smith has been signed by Manager Harris of the Stocktons, Behan receiving his release.

Al Hapeman, the pitcher suspended by the Sacramentos, is said to be doing good work for the Colorado Springs club.

Baltz, the young pitcher, who was signed by ex-Manager Gillis, will be released to-morrow. One of the directors of the club stated that as Manager Lang had re-signed Burke, he will have no further use for the young pitcher.

The Gus Lavensons play the third league game of the Northern California league with the Heymans of Grass Valley, at the latter place to-day. Managan and McHale will constitute the battery for the Lavensons, and Ewing and Cullen for the Heymans.

Would Not Pay for Slain Burglars.

The refusal of the Governor to pay the reward recently offered, because at the time of the proclamation the fugitive had been killed by the Sheriff, reminds us of a story of John Boggs, who was formerly Sheriff of Placer county. While he was Sheriff there occurred at Lincoln, in that county, an extensive burglary of the store of one Zeigenbein. A large amount of property and money was secured by the burglars, two in number, and old Zeigenbein was so enraged that he offered a reward of $500 each for the capture of the burglars. John Boggs secured the services of a couple of assistants, and started in pursuit of the culprits. He got on their track, overtook them, but being desperate men they at once made a firm resistance. A desperate encounter followed, and both burglars were killed in the fray. After a short time, Boggs called on Zeigenbein for his reward. "Oh," said Zeigenbein, "I did not offer any reward for dead burglars." Thus he evaded payment of the reward, much to Boggs' disgust. The Governor did not offer any reward for a dead criminal.

The Macon (Ga.) Telegraph is responsible for the following story: One of those singular snakes known as coach whips was seen fighting a mocking bird in a North Albany garden the other day. It was dispatched, and measured five feet in length. A little boy who had heard that hanging up a snake by the tail would bring rain, tried it with the serpent, and though a drouth was prevailing, a cloud managed to rise from the horizon and a slight shower was the result.

The Russian government is sending material of war to Reno, in Bessarabia, and to the mouth of the Danube.

SOCIAL.

Miss Cordie McDonald, of Marysville, is visiting Miss Julia Wiseman, of this city.

Judge H. L. Buckley, Clerk J. N. Larkin, and H. L. Dillman returned yesterday from a sojourn at Bartlett Springs, all much improved in health.

Friday evening Sacramento Parlor, No. 3, N. S. G. W., had a public installation of officers at Granger's Hall. It was largely attended. The installed officers were: Chas. Root, Past President; Chas. Mier, President; Jas. Henderson, First Vice-President; J. B. Leonard, Second Vice-President; H. K. Johnson, Third Vice-President; John F. Brommer, Recording Secretary; Frank Garrett, Financial Secretary; C. T. Barton, Treasurer; W. Welch, Marshal. M. C. Withington, G. Morill, Ed. Manlove, Trustees. E. J. Gregory was the Master of Ceremonies.

MISCELLANY.

There are two sides to every story, but at house-cleaning time the only safe place is the basement.

There is a giant rose-tree in Roostoen, Holland, which has held 6,000 roses at the same time. The owner, Mme. Regnen, considers it one of the greatest wonders of the world.

Customer—How much are these trousers? High-priced Tailor—Twenty dollars. By the way, how will you have the pockets arranged? Customer (gloomily)—You needn't put in any.

A spring attachment enables one to be fanned automatically while lazily rocking in a chair. Now some genius will probably invent a machine to smoke your cigar while you have your teeth filled.

The simplest way to fumigate a room is to heat an iron shovel very hot and then pour vinegar upon it drop by drop. The steam arising from this is a disinfectant. Doors or windows should be opened that it may escape.

A writer on equine subjects says: "Observe your horse when he is drinking out of a brook; if in bringing down his head he remains square, without bending his limbs, he possesses sterling qualities, and all parts of his body are built symmetrically." This is said to be an Arab test.

A curious legend is associated with the birth of Mgr. Richard, one of the French Cardinals to whom the Pope has just sent their hats. The father of the Cardinal Archbishop of Paris, a distinguished doctor at Nantes, lost, when over sixty, his only son—a young man who had in his short life developed all the virtues. The mother of the deceased had passed her fifty-fifth year, and the story goes that as the youth lay dying he called his father and mother to him and said: "Console yourselves; another son will take my place!" And sure enough, before the first anniversary of their son's death came round the spouse of the worthy doctor had presented him with another son, who was always known as "l'enfant du miracle." This second son—Richard Francis Marie Benjamin—is now Cardinal Archbishop of Paris.

The following was overheard at the London Law Courts while the Parnell Commission was sitting: Two Irishmen were conversing when that devoted patriot, Mr. O'Brien, walked proudly past. "Ah!" said Irishman number one, "There's a man, now, who Balfour would like to imprison for life if he only dared." Without a moment's hesitation, Irishman number two replied: "Imprison for life, d'ye say? Sure, man, 't would be no use at all, at all. O'Brien would die long before such a brutal sentence could come to an end!" And, as though to remove any possible doubt as to his nationality, Irishman number one replied, with a significant shake of his head: "Ah, me bhoy! Faith, and I believe ye're right!"

EARL BROS.

COMMISSION MERCHANTS

IN CALIFORNIA PRODUCTS

122 J STREET, : : SACRAMENTO.

GEORGE DIETRICH, Manager.

Chicago House, 157 South Water St.

SNOWFLAKE PARK.

Twenty-eighth and R Streets.

Sunday July 14, 1889

At 2 o'clock P. M., sharp,

BASEBALL—CALIFORNIA LEAGUE.

Sacramento vs. Oakland.

Prices of admission: Men, 50 cents; ladies, 25 cents; small boys, 10 cents; reserved seats, 25 cents—can be obtained any time at H. C. Megerle's News Depot, Fourth street, between J and K, or at Park before the game.

Trains leave depot at 12:45, 1:05, 1:25 and 1:45—stopping at Third, Tenth and Eighteenth sts. Fare, for round trip, 15 cents.

Admission to Park (including fare both ways), 50 cents.

Cooper's Music Store.

Mathushek!

Principal Music House in Northern and Central California.

Largest and Best Selected Stock of Musical Instruments and Musical Merchandise.

Indorsement of Merit.

I take pleasure in certifying to the excellence of the Mathushek Piano. I can cheerfully and truthfully recommend it in any of its various styles as a first-class instrument, the equal of any and the superior of most in the qualities necessary to the accompaniment of the voice; and I believe it to be more than any other suited to withstand the effects of our California climate. We use it exclusively at our rehearsals and concerts. W. H. KINROSS, Musical Director McNeill Club.

NO. 631 J STREET,

Corner of Seventh,

SACRAMENTO.

Fine Table Wines

From our Celebrated Orleans Vineyard.

Producers of the
ECLIPSE
CHAMPAGNE,
530 Washington St.
SAN FRANCISCO.

CHAMPAGNE

PERRIER-JOUËT

W. B. CHAPMAN,
123 California St. San Francisco.
SOLE AGENT FOR THE PACIFIC COAST

To sale by all first-Class Wine Merchants and Grocers.

Samples and Instructions for Self-measurement sent by mail on application.

L. RADLOFF, LADIES' TAILOR.

218 POST STREET, SAN FRANCISCO.
Tailor Made Suits a Specialty.

A. AITKEN,

PREMIUM PIONEER MARBLE AND GRANITE WORKS

423 J Street, bet. 4th and 5th, Sacramento.

Costic Tile, etc. Cemetery lots enclosed with Granite. All kinds of work done in Italian and Vermont Marble. Direct importer of Scotch and Eastern Granite Monuments. Also, Marble, Slate, Wooden and Iron Mantels, direct from manufacturers, at Reduced Prices. Call and examine.

[Written for THEMIS.]

It Is Never Too Late.

It is never too late to do a kind deed,
It is never too late a wrong to repair;
It will bring to our lives a pleasure scene
If we have the courage to do and dare.

It is never too late to forgive and forget
An injustice done is here;
Forgiving a wrong will bring no regret
If the suppliant be truly sincere.

It is never too late, it is never too late,
To avoid contention and strife;
It is never too late for youth or man
To lead an upright life.

It is never too late a kind word to speak,
An error to forgive, an offense to condone,
For there is no one in life quite perfect, I ween,
Each and all have their faults, were they known.

It is never too late to eschew the path
Of sin, where temptations abound,
For it is only in seeking to attain the good
That true happiness is found.

The way through life is a thorny path,
And our progress tedious and slow;
Yet it is never too late to extend a helping hand
To others, as journeying onward we go.

MRS. NELLIE BLOOM.

West Oakland, July 7, 1889.

MR. AND MRS. BOWSER.Sad Trials of the Faithful Spouse Over Mr. B.'s Wardrobe.

When I got home from mother's the other afternoon Mr. Bowser was walking up and down the sitting-room like a caged lion. As he was an hour ahead of his usual time, I was naturally astonished, and as he looked so stern and dignified, I was fearful that some misfortune had occurred.

"Anything wrong, Mr. Bowser?" I managed to ask.

He halted, folded his hands under his coat-tails, and balancing himself on his heels and toes alternately, he replied:

"Mrs. Bowser, this is the last straw—the very last!"

"Why, what have I done?"

"I had an invitation to attend a banquet of the B. N. G. Club, and was down to deliver an address. I came home to get ready, and, lo! what do I find?"

"Robbers in the house?"

"Not much! No robber with any sense in his head would come to this house! It would take him a week to find anything! I go up stairs to get a clean shirt, collar, etc., but nothing of the sort can be found. I come down and ask the cook to see if my Sunday clothes are in the flour barrel, but she looks in vain. I go to the telephone and ask the coal man if he saw them in the basement when he put in that last ton, but he can't remember. You, of course, have no knowledge of them. You can't say whether they are in the oat-bin in the barn, or packed away in the garret for a rat's nest."

"Mr. Bowser, have you been drinking?"

"Have I been drinking! That's just like a woman! When she gets cornered she throws out just such insults to hide her own short-comings. It's a wonder I haven't been drinking. It's a wonder I don't come home drunk and wipe out this family. Mrs. Bowser, I demand to know what you have done with my clothes."

"They are upstairs, unless you have sold or given them away."

"No more insults, please. Come upstairs, and show me, for instance, where my shirts are."

"Very well. We shall find them in the second drawer of your bureau, where they have been kept for the last two years."

"I'll bet you a million dollars to a cent."

"Come on."

We went upstairs to the bureau and I pulled out the drawer and there lay five clean shirts, just where I had placed them as they came from the laundry two days before.

"But they were not there an hour ago," protested Mr. Bowser.

"But they were. How could they be anywhere else. In this other drawer are your socks, neckties, cuffs and collars. See?"

"I see, but that drawer was empty half an hour ago."

"And in this closet is your Sunday suit. See? Coat, vest and pants. Are you growing blind, Mr. Bowser?"

"There is some dark mystery connected with all this, Mrs. Bowser, and I will not rest until I unravel it. I spent a good half hour looking for my things, but not one single article could I find."

"Because you rushed upstairs and went into the spare room, just like lots of other husbands. Of course you did! See? Every drawer in the spare room bureau has been pulled out, and the clothes press door is wide open!"

"Mrs. Bowser, don't try to get out of it in this way! My eyesight is still good, and when I see an empty drawer I know it is not full of shirts. I have lost an hour looking for my things, and now I cannot go to the banquet."

He went downstairs and called up some one by telephone and said:

"I can't be there this evening. My shirts, collars and clothes had been mislaid by my wife, and I only found them a moment ago. Very sorry, but give my regrets to the boys and tell them how it was. Some wives are like that, and can't help it, you know. Good bye."

The next evening Mr. Bowser brought a friend up with him—the same one he had telephoned to. After a bit he took him upstairs for a smoke, and as they reached the head of the stairs they found the following notice on the bedroom door:

INSIDE THIS ROOM

will be found

MR. BOWSER'S SHIRTS, COLLARS, CUFFS AND SUNDAY SUIT.

Don't make the mistake of looking in the alley.

On the bureau I tacked a second sign, reading:

"First drawer—Your hair dye, etc.

"Second drawer—Collars, cuffs and neckties."

"Third drawer—Your shirts."

On the door of the clothes closet I had a third sign, reading:

"Your Sunday suit is in this closet—first hook to the left as you enter."

On each garment was marked the name, "coat," "vest," and "pants," and on the wall a set of instructions, reading:

"1. Fling your hat under the bed.

"2. Kick your pants over behind the lounge.

"3. Throw your vest behind the washstand and your coat on the floor.

"4. In removing the buttons from your shirt, jerk and twist from left to right and back again. This will enlarge the button-holes.

"5. If you drop one of the buttons, jump up and down and cuss and declare that you have been one button short all the week.

"6. If the buttonholes in your collar are too large, kick over a chair and declare your desire to murder some one. If too small, kick over two chairs and lay it to me.

"In changing your clothes, get your suspenders twisted, leave your shirt bunched up at the shoulders, and snap off as many buttons as possible.

I had intended those signs for Mr. Bowser's eyes alone, and I fully expected a national calamity when he came down and bade his friend good night. I was disappointed, however. He looked at me benignly, walked up and down for awhile and then observed:

"Mrs. Bowser, before we were married I had a long talk with your mother."

"Yes."

"She told me that you had never been called upon to exercise judgment or responsibility, and that I would find you a very great burden."

"Thanks, Mr. Bowser."

"But I agreed to bear with you and be patient, and so I shall. Twenty years hence you may know something about housekeeping and a wife's duty towards her husband's wardrobe. It's a long time to wait, but I will be patient. Perhaps this is my mission on earth, and is what the Lord wills me to do. Go ahead, Mrs. Bowser, and be just as mean as you can, and do everything to hurt my feelings. I shall do my duty and never let the world know how I suffer."

Some parties down South had been fishing and brought in some very fine trout, some of which fell into the hands of a certain doctor. Upon cleaning and dissecting them he found upon the inside lining of the swimming bladder the perfect picture of a tree displayed in crimson hue, as perfect and as distinctly as the most delicate and skilled hand of the artist painter could delineate. To find thus upon the fine and delicate body of a fish a beautiful picture of the different trees of the forest is something new and an advanced step in natural history. In this case there was a post-mortem made upon two fish. In one was found the picture of a pine tree, with trunk and branches remarkably distinct. In the other, a maple tree was seen as satisfactorily as could be desired. Naturalists say that the imprint thus appearing is made from the shade of the tree reflected in the water in which the fish constantly remains. If the fish lives in a lake over which the boughs of the maple extend, then we find in the fish the picture of the maple, and so of any other tree and in every other instance. This is true only of the trout, and found in no other fish.

Dr. Dight, who is Professor of Anatomy in the American College of Beirut, Syria, has made a careful comparison of a collection of human skulls, which are stored away in an old monastery in the Kedron Valley, midway between Jerusalem and the Dead Sea, with skulls of the same race at the present day. The measurements show some significant differences. The Caucasian skull has, during the past thirteen centuries, increased in circumference nearly two inches, and has gained in cranial capacity three and a half inches. There has been no increase in width. The brain has gained in height and length—i. e., there has been a development of the upper and anterior parts which we should expect to increase by education and civilization, as they preside over the moral and intellectual functions. The lower portions of the brain, in which the lower or more selfish propensities are centered, and which gives breadth to the head, have, in the march of the centuries, failed to grow as rapidly as the higher brain centers, hence the non-increase in the width of our skulls.

Wonder if the Africans will insist upon putting white passengers in second-class coaches when they open the Congo railway?

Gambrinus, the inventor of beer, is said to have been King of Brabant. His picture may be found in every beer and wine house in the Black Forest, the Eifel and the Odenwald. In the Divi Britannici (London, 1675, page 103), Sir W. Churchill, speaking of the English race, says: "Woden, their common ancestor, being descended in a direct line from Theutones, the grandchild of Gambrius (the first inventor of good ale and beer, which they have loved but too well ever since), he was third in descent from Manus, son of Tuisco, the oldest son of Gomer, the first son of Japhet, the third son of Noah, whom Moses remembers by the name of Aschenaz, from whom the Hebrews called the Germans Aschenims."

FRIEND & TERRY LUMBER CO.

Wholesale and Retail Lumber Dealers. Also Shakes, Bolts, Ties, Doors, Windows, Blinds and Screens. Main Yard and Office, No. 1310 Second Street. Branch Yard, corner Twelfth and J Sts. P. O. Box 233. E. J. HOLT, Manager. Sacramento

Root, Neilson & Co.

UNION IRON WORKS, FRONT STREET, Between N and O. Steam Engines and Boilers Built to Order. Steamboat and Quartz Machinery Constructed, Fitted up or Repaired. Castings and Machinery of every description.

Dissolution of Copartnership.

Notice is hereby given to all concerned that the firm of SMITH & MUIR, Plumbers and Gas-fitters, at 412 J street, is this day dissolved by mutual consent. The business will be carried on at the old stand by A. M. SMITH, who is now the sole proprietor of said business. All accounts due said firm are payable to A. M. SMITH, who is authorized to receipt for the same, and all debts of said firm will be paid by him. Sacramento, June 26, 1889.

All claims against the firm to be presented at once, and all parties indebted to the firm will please call and settle. A. M. SMITH. A. J. MUIR.

O'BRIEN'S, 607 J.SWEETING REDUCTION IN LADIES' SHOES.

Best French Kid, hand turn, worth $7, reduced to $6. Ladies' French Kid Button, low heel, long vamp, worth $5, reduced to $4. Misses' and Children's Canvas Shoes reduced 25 per cent.

GEORGE T. BOYD,

Manufacturer of

Pure Candies and Ice CreamTemple of Sweets,

907 K Street, next to Odd Fellows' Temple, SACRAMENTO, CAL.

A. J. MUIR,PLUMBER,

—Gas and Steam Fitter.—

Being a practical plumber, I can guarantee all work.

810 K STREET,

Telephone 226.

SACRAMENTO, CAL.

ALBERT GRUBBS,

No. 1417 Fourth Street,

Will do all kinds of House Cleaning, Lay Carpets, Whitewashing, and everything in that line.

He also has the only wagon for the REMOVAL OF DEAD ANIMALS, and any orders left at his place of business will receive prompt attention.

Remember the address!

No. 1417 Fourth Street, Sacramento, Cal.

CHANGED HANDS.

SACRAMENTO EXCHANGE,

(Formerly Wm. Gamble's.)

1012 SEVENTH STREET.

Fine Wines. All the celebrated brands of Liquors and Cigars. ROBERT ALLEN, Formerly of Agricultural Park.

L. K. Hammer

THE LEADING

MUSIC DEALER.

AGENT FOR

Chickering Pianos,

Largest Stock of Musical Instruments in the City.

No. 820 J STREET.

REEVES & LONG, UNDERTAKERS,

609 J Street, bet. Sixth and Seventh.

WE KEEP ON HAND A COMPLETE Stock of Coffins and Caskets; also, Shrouds of every description. Orders from city or country receive prompt attention, day or night. EMBALMING done in the best manner; and at reasonable rates.

Patronize Home Industry!CITY & BREWERY

FRANK RUHSTALLER, Proprietor.

GENUINE

Pilsener Felsen Beer.

Corner Twelfth and H Streets,

Telephone 201.

SACRAMENTO.

CELEBRATED

WEINER LAGER BEERCAPITAL BREWERY

LOUIS NICOLAUS,

Corner Twelfth and I Streets

SACRAMENTO.

COLUMBUS BREWERY

CHRIS. WAHL, Proprietor,

Corner of Sixteenth and K Streets,

SACRAMENTO, CAL.

Agent for the Celebrated W. J. LEMP'S ST. LOUIS LAGER BEER

WISSEMAN'S SALOON,

Klebetz & Green's Old Stand,

1020 Fourth St., bet. J and K, Sacramento.

GEO. WISSEMAN, PROPRIETOR.

Families and Saloons supplied by bottle or keg.

Butchers' Home,

1020 J Street,

Between 10th and 11th, : Sacramento, Cal.

Fine Wines, Liquors and Cigars. Also, a

GOOD GLASS OF BEER.

JACOB GRUHLER, Prop'r.

California State Bank

DOES A GENERAL BANKING BUSINESS.

Draws Exchange on all the Principal Cities of the World.

OFFICERS:

PRESIDENT.....N. D. RIDEOUT
VICE-PRESIDENT.....FRED'K COX
CASHIER.....A. ABBOTT
ASSISTANT CASHIER.....W. E. GERBER

DIRECTORS:

C. W. Clarke, Jos. Steffens, N. D. Rideout,
Geo. C. Perkins, J. R. Watson, Frederick Cox,
W. E. Gerber.

W. R. STRONG & CO.

Founded 1852.

Fruit Packers
and Shippers.

PROPRIETORS OF

CAPITAL NURSERIES,
SACRAMENTO, CAL.

King Bros.

State Capitol Cash Grocery, 131 J Street, corner Second.

Goods sold on small margin, strictly for cash. Best
Brands of Wines, Liquors and Cigars.

JAS. LONGSHORE,

SACRAMENTO TRUNK FACTORY,
530 K STREET.

Trunks, Valises & Bags Wholesale and Retail.

OSBORN & FOLGER

DEALERS IN

ICE and COAL, HAY and GRAIN.
New 10-ton Fairbanks' Hay Scales.

N. E. cor. Fifth and I Streets.
Wood Yard, 806 I Street.

Pacific Manuf'g. Co.

213 AND 215 J STREET.

Manufacturer of the CYCLONE Pumping and Geared Mills, and dealers in all kinds of Pumps, Tanks, etc.

Waterhouse & Lester

DEALERS IN

IRON, STEEL, CUMBERLAND COAL,
Wagon Lumber and Carriage Hardware,
SACRAMENTO.

Earthquake and Fire Proof BUILDINGS

Constructed on my patent system. Perfect protection guaranteed. For estimates and particulars see
E. HAWES,
Twelfth and B streets, Sacramento.

PUMPS

Our Factory is the

Largest and Best Equipped in Northern California.

Our Designs are New and Original and Calculated for Every Variety
of Service.

CAPITAL IRON WORKS,

904 K Street, Sacramento.

CANCERS,

Ulcers, Wens, Lumps, Exceresences, etc.,
Positively Cured or no Pay.
No Knife Used.

As to the success of my treatment, I give the names
of a few of the many cured. By addressing them
they will give any information required—and it pays
to investigate before being treated.

Mrs. O. C. Neilsen, Grass Valley, cancer.
John Service, Auburn, lupus.
Patrick Lynch, Sacramento, cancer.
Mrs. Jno. Shaw, Grass Val., birthmark removed.
N. S. Peck, S. P. R. R. Sacramento, cancer.
J. L. Woods, Washington. Yolo county, cancer.
John W. Douglas, Rocklin, cancer.
Miss Mamie Lynch, Yolo, tumor removed.
Chas. McLaughlin, Sacramento, cancer.
I might give many more. Those afflicted are invited to call and investigate for themselves. Consultation at office free. Send for circular.
Office, 426 K Street, Sacramento.
DR. J. H. SHIRLEY.

A. C. SWEETSER & CO.,

Real Estate & Insurance Brokers

Lands For Sale in all parts of the State.

Some Good Investments in School Lands.

Send for Catalogue.

Office, No. 1012 Fourth Street,

SACRAMENTO, CAL.

American Steam Laundry

NINETEENTH AND I STS.—WHITE LABOR
only. Linen polished in the neatest manner.
We guarantee satisfaction. All ordinary mending,
sewing on buttons, etc., free of charge. Washing
called for and delivered to any part of the city.
Main Office at Sawtelle's Book Store, 708 and 710 J
street. Branch offices at all the Hotels.

RHOADS & TOWNSEND HOUSE

On European Plan.

Cor. Second and J Streets, Sacramento.

ARTHUR MILLER, PROPRIETOR.

CAPITAL ALE VAULTS.

Established in 1870, and still maintains the same reputation for keeping the best WINES, LIQUORS and Cigars in the city. The finest Hot Lunch in the city from 11 to 2. Clam Chowder a specialty every night.

NAGELE & SVENSSON, Prop'rs.

Telephone 38.

302 J and 1005 Third st.

Wm. J. Hassett.

A. J. Johnston.

A. J. Johnston & Co.

PRINTERS,

410 J Street,

Sacramento

CHAS. MONTGOMERY, President. R. C. PELL, Vice-Pres. W. T. BRERETON, Sec. and Treas.

Bull and Grant Farm Implement Co.

DEALERS IN

AGRICULTURAL IMPLEMENTS,

Buggies, Carriages and Wagons.

T. A. LAUDER, MANAGER

211, 213 J STREET, SACRAMENTO.

FOR FRESH, CLEAN GROCERIES, GO TO

We invite a call at our new location, corner Eighth and K streets, where with our increased space we are enabled to give our large stock a fair display and our customers convenient room.

THE AMERICAN CASH STORE

Offers attractions to cash buyers of GROCERIES. A high quality of goods is carefully regarded.

O. F. WASHBURN,

801 K STREET.

PAUL GRAF,

Manufacturer of and
dealer in Saddles, Har-
ness, Robes, Collars,
Whips, Spurs, Brushes
Currycombs, etc.

1130 J Street, near Twelfth

Repairing Neatly Done.

Harness Made to Order.

GRAND OPENING

OF

NOLAN & SON'S

Boot and Shoe

STORE.

603 J STREET, SACRAMENTO,

One door above Sixth.

Barrett & Berkey

PACIFIC RESTAURANT,

OYSTER HOUSE AND

WINE PARLORS

701 J Street, cor. 7th.

B. Ruhl

Bookbinder, Paper Ruler and

Blank Book Manufacturer.

Periodicals, Magazines, Music, and all kinds of Binding neatly done at the lowest prices.

No. 409 J STREET,

SACRAMENTO.

A. L. HART,

ATTORNEY-AT-LAW

Sutter Building, cor. 5th and J.

W. A. ANDERSON,

ATTORNEY-AT-LAW,

No. 209 J Street,

Sacramento.

W. A. GETT, JR.,

Attorney at Law,

Southwest Corner of Seventh and J Streets,

SACRAMENTO, CAL.

F. F. TEBBETS, DENTIST.

No. 914 SIXTH STREET,

Bet. I and J, west side, opp. Congregational Church.

DR. J. A. WELDON,

Dentist,

Cor. Eighth and J Streets, over Drug Store,

Teeth extracted without pain.

DR. H. H. PIERSON,

SURGICAL & AND MECHANICAL & DENTIST

511 J Street, bet. 5th and 6th.

Gas administered for the painless extraction of teeth.

Bainbridge Business College

J. C. BAINBRIDGE, }
PRINCIPAL.

1017 J Street, Sacramento. Send for Circular.

Joseph Hahn & Co., PHARMACISTS,

S. W. cor. Fifth and J Streets, Sacramento.

CHOICE PERFUMERIES, ETC.

Prescriptions carefully compounded, at all hours.

FIRE! ACCIDENT! LIFE!
—Insurance a Specialty.—

COMBINED ASSETS, - 50 MILLIONS.
Best in the World!

Royal, Norwich-Union & Lancashire,
Of England.

See my list of policy-holders and my prices.
"TRAVELERS," of Hartford, Conn. Everybody
knows the name. I sell only first-class policies.
C. H. DENTON, 628 1/2 J Street.

BOOTS AND SHOES
made to order. Boots,
$6 to $11. Shoes, $4 to
$9. Ladies' Shoes, best quality French Kid, $5
to $7.

REPAIRING DONE
at lowest prices.

NONE BUT BEST
mechanics employed.

WE GUARANTEE
to make perfect fitting
to the worst of crooked
and crippled feet.

COMPETE WITH
any shoes on the market.

216 J Street

—AND—

208 K Street,

SACRAMENTO.

A. CASELLI

& COMPANY.

$500 REWARD.

PURSUANT TO A RESOLUTION OF THE BOARD
of Supervisors of Sacramento county, adopted May 7, 1889, said Board will pay the sum of Five Hundred Dollars ($500) for evidence leading to the arrest and conviction of any party illegally carrying on the business of hydraulic mining on the American river
or its tributaries, in any and all mines or claims
which have been heretofore enjoined by any Court of competent jurisdiction; provided, however, that said
Board will pay but one reward for the arrest and conviction of a person or persons operating the same mine or claim.

Attest

F. F. TEBBETS,

Chairman of the Board of Supervisors.

[SEAL]

W. B. HAMILTON, Clerk of Board.

NOTICE TO FRUITMEN!

Keep your trees free from scale and your apples
from being wormy by the use of

Warner's Scale & Insect Exterminator

FOR SALE BY

G. T. NOE, - - DRUGGIST,
AUBURN, CAL.

Put up in one-half gallon and quart cans.

Care of the Eyes.

In consequence of the increase of affections of the eye, a specialist has recently formulated the following rules to be observed in the care of the eyes for school work: A comfortable temperature, dry and warm feet, good ventilation; clothing at the neck and on other parts of the body loose; posture erect, and never read lying down or stooping; but little study before breakfast or directly after a hearty meal; none at all at twilight or late at night; use great caution about study after recovery from fever; have light abundant but not dazzling, not allowing the sun to shine on desks or objects in front of the scholars, and letting the light come from the left hand, or left and rear; hold book at right angles to the line of sight, or nearly so; give eyes frequent rest by looking up. The distance of the book from the eye should be about fifteen inches. The usual indication of a strain is redness of the rim of the eyelid, betokening a congested state of the inner surface, which may be accompanied with some pain. When the eye tires easily rest is not the proper remedy, but the use of glasses of sufficient power to aid in accommodating the eye to vision.—New York Commercial Advertiser.

Tombs of 1000 B. C.

While some repairs were lately being made under a house belonging to Baron di Donato, which is situated in the northern quarter of Naples, toward the slope of the hill of Cape di Monto, where already many ancient catacombs have been found, a doorway (over which there is a marble relief of the head of Medusa) was discovered leading into a subterranean chamber. Along the center of this chamber runs a mosaic pavement, and on each side there is a double row of sepulchers hewn in the rock, the fronts of which are stuccoed and painted and decorated with terra cotta and marble reliefs. Within the tombs were perfect skeletons, vases and other objects, the antique lamps being in such good condition that last April, when this new find was inspected by a party of German archaeologists the workmen made use of them to light up the vaults. The many well preserved inscriptions are chiefly in Greek, with some in Latin, and prove that the epoch of these tombs was about 1000 B. C. Other tombs in a second chamber have not yet been excavated. It is probable that this subterranean dwelling of the dead may extend some distance, and prove to be a portion of a large acropolis.

Superstitions about Locusts.

More or less superstition is attached to the advent of the 17-year locusts, and many put full confidence in the belief that the fate of the country for the next seventeen years is decided by whatever letter appears on the locust's wing. In proof of this, they cite the fact that in 1855, when they appeared in great abundance, the letter "W" could be plainly seen on their wings, which signified war. As war followed in a few years, the superstitious idea gained strength, and is very generally believed in throughout the country. In 1872, the next regular period for their appearance, it is claimed the letter "P" could be as distinctly seen on their wings as the "W" of seventeen years before. Peace and plenty followed their last appearance, which satisfies the credulous that the locust is a true prophet. What letter will appear on their wings this year has not yet been discovered, but the country folks are anxiously awaiting an investigation of the matter.—N. Y. Sun.

"Phawt is that anyhow that they've been puttin' on Dinney's tomb-shtoue?" said Mrs. Murphy, as she was visiting the resting-place of her deceased husband. "Requiescat in Pace" means 'let him sleep in peace,' said the sexton, who had accompanied her. "Shlape in pace, is it?" "Yes." "Well, that would be mighty foine if it wasn't for wan mistake in the grammar." "I don't nuderstand you." "He was blowed up in a gunpowder factory. It ought to be 'Shlape in paces.'"

There is one thing a woman can't do. When her husband gives her a letter to mail she can't place it in her inside coat pocket and forget it for six weeks. Come to think about it, a man never gives his wife a letter to mail. And besides, if a woman had forty-seven pockets in her garments, she would rummage through them all at least once every twenty-four hours.

"I don't say marriage is a failure," said Adam, candidly, as he sat down on a log just outside the Garden of Eden and looked hungrily at the fruit on the other side of the wall; "but if I had remained single this wouldn't have happened."

"I've just written a waltz. Got a piano? I'll try to run it over for you." "No, I haven't a piano; but I have a dog. You might try it on him."

William Dean Howells is writing some dialect in Harper's Magazine. It is a kind of succotash of Bostonese patois and Louisiana rice-field lingo.

How grateful we should be that during the next three months so many fresh young men will bathe in the surf at the seaside.

H. WACHHORST Leading Jeweler of Sacramento
SIGN OF THE TOWN CLOCK,
No. 315 J STREET, SACRAMENTO.

W. D. Comstock, 501 -- 507 K, cor. Fifth

On Exhibition, THE LARGEST AND BEST SELECTED STOCK.
FAIR DEALING! LOW PRICES!

GENSHLEA BROS. 624 J ST.
Strictly High Grade Goods in all Lines.
TRY THE LA ROSA ESPANOLA KEY WEST CIGAR.

FIREWORKS And FLAGS, Wholesale and Retail.
Country Orders Solicited.
NATHAN & DeYOUNG, 205 K St.

Just Received! Immense Assortment!
LATEST STYLES! LOWEST PRICES!
PERFECT FIT GUARANTEED.
420 J STREET, SACRAMENTO.
NICOLL, THE TAILOR,
LATEST PATTERNS OF
Foreign & Domestic Woolens

Trousers (to order), from $5.00. Suits (to order), from $20.00.

NICOLL, THE TAILOR, 420 J ST., SACRAMENTO.
Branch of 816 Market street, San Francisco. Coast Branches: Los Angeles, 86 North Main street
Portland, 126 First street.

CURTIS BROS. & CO.

Wholesale and Retail Dealers in and Shippers of all kinds of

Fruits, Vegetables

And GENERAL PRODUCE.

Careful attention paid to the selection and packing
of Choice Fruits and Vegetables for distant markets.
Goods delivered in city free.

308 and 310 K Street, - - Sacramento, Cal.

Klune & Floberg, WATCHMAKERS and JEWELERS
Agents for Rockford Watch Co.
NO. 428 J STREET, SACRAMENTO.

F. KUEHNE & CO.,

NO. 906 NINTH STREET,
Between I and J, SACRAMENTO.

Carpenters and Contractors

Store and office work a specialty.

ICE BOXES for Breweries and Saloons always on hand and made to order.

Jobbing and Repairing promptly attended to.

R. H. PETTIT,

Wholesale and Retail Dealer in

IMPORTED & DOMESTIC CIGARS

Smoke the "Lone Fisherman,"

The BEST FIVE-CENT CIGAR in the Market.

NO. 225 K STREET.

JESSE SLAUGHTER,

Office, No. 1217 Fifth Street.

Plastering, Whitewashing, Cleaning of Cesspools, Etc.

Also, CITY SCAVENGER.

Burying of dead animals attended to at short notice.

Don't forget the number—1217 Fifth street, the old stand, where I have been for 25 years.

WESTERN HOTEL

209 to 219 K Street.

The Leading Hotel of Sacramento, Cal.

FREE BUS TO AND FROM HOTEL.

Meals, 25 Cents. Rooms, according to Location.

WM. LAND, Proprietor.

BELL & CO.,

GENERAL AUCTIONEERS.

Salesroom, 927 K Street, Sacramento, Cal.

Regular Salesdays—Wednesdays and Saturdays at 10 o'clock A. M.

Assistants—W. T. Crowell, Real Estate; J. Pulvermacher, Bookkeeper; J. Lambert, Furniture and Stock.

Particular attention paid to sales of real estate,
house sales, and sales of farms, stock, etc.

Highest price paid for all kinds of household goods.

BAKER & HAMILTON,

San Francisco and Sacramento,
Importers and Jobbers of

Hardware, Iron, Steel, Coal, Powder,

MACHINERY

And Agricultural Implements.

Send for Catalogue.

RAILROAD TIME TABLE.
Southern Pacific Company
PACIFIC SYSTEM.
June 26, 1889.

Trains LEAVE and are due to ARRIVE at
SACRAMENTO.

Lv.	Trains Run Daily.	Arr.
7:00 A	Calistoga and Napa	11:40 A
4:05 P	Calistoga and Napa	8:30 P
11:00 P	Ashland and Portland	3:40 A
5:05 P	Denning, El Paso and East	7:05 P
7:30 P	Knight's Landing	7:55 A
4:30 A	Marysville (Mixed)	4:25 P
9:00 A	Los Angeles	9:55 A
9:00 P	Second Class, Ogden and East	6:30 A
10:30 P	Central Atlantic Express	3:40 P
3:00 P	Oroville	9:50 A
11:00 P	Oroville	3:40 A
3:00 P	Red Bluff via Marysville	9:50 A
10:40 A	Redding and Sisson via Willows	4:05 P
4:00 A	San Francisco via Benicia	10:40 P
7:00 A	San Francisco via Benicia	8:30 P
4:05 P	San Francisco via Benicia	10:10 P
*10:00 A	San Francisco via Steamer	$6.00 A
11:20 A	San Francisco via Livermore	2:25 P
3:05 P	San Francisco via Benicia	11:40 A
11:20 A	San Jose	2:25 P
9:00 A	Santa Barbara	9:55 A
5:05 P	Santa Barbara	7:05 P
7:00 A	Santa Rosa	11:40 A
4:05 P	Santa Rosa	8:30 P
9:00 A	Stockton and Galt	7:05 P
5:05 P	Stockton and Galt	9:55 A
9:00 P	Truckee and Reno	6:30 A
10:30 P	Truckee and Reno	3:40 P
8:30 A	Colfax	5:00 P
7:00 A	Vallejo	11:40 A
4:05 P	Vallejo	8:30 P
*12:15 P	Folsom and Placerville (Mixed)	*10:35 A
*7:15 A	Folsom and Placerville	*3:45 P
*5:20 P	Folsom	*6:50 A

*Sunday excepted. †Sunday only. ‡Monday excepted. A for morning, P for afternoon.
A. N. TOWNE, Gen'l Manager.
T. H. GOODMAN, Gen'l Pass. and Ticket Agent.

H. K. WALLACE & CO.

NO. 920 K STREET,

Sacramento Stove House.

Headquarters for Plumbing, Gas and Steam Fitting.
Galvanized Iron Tanks of all sizes made to order.

Edwin K. Alsip & Co.

ESTABLISHED 1860.

REAL ESTATE

AND INSURANCE AGENTS.

FARMING LANDS A SPECIALTY.

Catalogues issued monthly.

No. 1015 Fourth Street, Sacramento.

Gregory Bros. Co.

Established 1852.

COMMISSION MERCHANTS,

Packers and Shippers of California Fruit and Produce,

126 and 128 J STREET,

San Francisco Office, 313 Davis St. SACRAMENTO.

MISS A. E. VOTAW,

Dealer in

French Millinery

523 J STREET, SACRAMENTO.

Careful and prompt attention paid to country orders.

ANGLO-NEVADA ASSURANCE CORPORATION

OF SAN FRANCISCO.

FIRE.—Cash Capital, $2,000,000.—MARINE.

Sacramento Branch:

No. 1018 SECOND STREET.

JOSEPH STEFFENS, Manager. HOWARD KIMBROUGH, Local Agent. ad

Hotfilter & Grafmiller,

MANUFACTURING JEWELERS,

Jewelry made to order. Watches, Clocks and Jewelry
Repaired and Warranted.

No. 1026 Sixth Street, Sacramento.

R. DAVIS,

NOTARY PUBLIC,

Real Estate and Insurance Agent.

Representing the following companies:

Manchester of England; Caledonian of Edinburgh,
Scotland; London and Lancaster, England.

1002 J Street, Sacramento.

Restaurant de France,

FAURE & BECKER, PROPRIETORS.

(Successors to L. Payen.)

No. 427 K Street, Near Metropolitan Theater.

Family Entrance on Fifth Street.

Catering to Families, Banquets and Wedding Parties
a specialty.

THEMIS

Vol. I.

SACRAMENTO: SATURDAY, JULY 20, 1889.

No. 22.

THEMIS: published weekly, by A. J. Johnston & Co. Publication Office, 410 J Street. Subscription—One year, by mail, $3 00; six months, by mail, $1 50, in advance; per month, by carrier, 25 cents. (Entered at the Post Office at Sacramento as second-class matter.)

On the first day of July, 1888, according to the reports of the Wardens, there were 565 persons in the two State prisons of the age of twenty-five years or under. Of these there were 320 who had not passed their twenty-first year, while 183 were under twenty years of age. Of the whole number of prisoners of the age of twenty-five years and under, 264 have never learned a calling by which they might earn a living even if the opportunity were offered them. At the last session of the Legislature $705,000 was appropriated for the support and equipment of the Folsom and San Quentin prisons for the two years beginning on the first day of the present month. Of this a portion, $140,000 perhaps, will be restored to the State in the shape of the products of prison labor.

Two hundred thousand dollars was appropriated to establish an institution in Los Angeles county for the reformation of juvenile criminals, and $160,000 to institute the Preston School of Industry in Amador county. The two last named prisons are designed for the detention and discipline of persons between the ages of eight and eighteen years, who may have been convicted of offenses which do not involve a punishment as severe as imprisonment for life, or the execution of the death sentence; the object sought to be attained being the establishment of a mixed system of moral and penal discipline, with the view of reforming young offenders before criminal habits shall have become fixed. At both prisons physical labor is to be substituted for idleness, and, in the one to be established in Amador, a common school education is to be imparted. Thus, if we should assume that the State should be reimbursed by the work of the prisoners to the extent of $100,000 a year, the cost of the prisons exclusively under the management of the State during the next two years would be something over $860,000.

Quite recently the members of the Patternmakers' Union who were employed at the National Iron Works in San Francisco, quit work because the proprietors were employing more apprentices than was permissible under the code of the Union. Under the regulations of the Patternmakers' Union, it is allowable to employ one apprentice for every eight patternmakers. There were twelve patternmakers engaged at the National Iron Works and two apprentices, hence the strike. Forty-seven per cent. of all the prisoners under the age of twenty-six years in the penitentiaries of the State are ignorant of any occupation by the prosecution of which they might earn a living.

Not infidelity, not the drink curse, not spoils politics, nor all three of them put together, offer such a menace to the republic as the army of idle youth that is growing up in the land. But where is the matter to end if the labor unions, and brotherhoods, and federations of all kinds persist in a policy which renders it impossible for more than one boy in three to learn a bread-winning calling? There are more native-born boys in the country between the ages of ten and twenty-one years than there are native-born men between the ages of twenty-five and forty-five. This statement will surprise many people, no doubt, but it is fortified by the returns of the last census. As civilization is organized at present, the industrial condition controls the social, political and moral. This statement will be derided by many, as a matter of course, but all the same it is a demonstrable fact. We know that a certain class of occupations predispose people to drunkenness and physical disease which exercise a powerful influence over their modes of thought and color their moral and political ideas. We know, also, that another order of occupations lead to a directly opposite result.

A person without an occupation which he may prosecute with some degree of readiness is a dead factor in society, except for harmful purposes. In the East, where inquiry is more searching, and where statistics are more reliable than with us, there is an alarming increase of young criminals of good education. But not one in forty of them ever learned a hand trade. Penologists have abandoned all thought of reforming seasoned criminals. Even reformatory institutions, helpful as they are, have lost much of the virtue they were once thought to possess. The whole trend of thought respecting crime is in the direction of prevention.

The best minds have arrived at the conclusion that work—some employment of the hand—in which a young person may spend his time, and by which, in after life, he may earn a living, is the best means of displacing the criminal courts and depleting the population of the prisons. But how are trades to be acquired if the labor unions establish a policy by which boys are shut out of the workshops? Take the case of the National Iron Works as an illustration: Twelve skilled patternmakers drop their tools and quit work because the proprietors of the establishment employ two boys in their business. Most likely every one of these twelve workmen would vote against any proposition or candidate who savored in the least of free trade, and yet they deny their own children and the children of their own class the right to acquire a trade by which they could support themselves and supply the home market.

The professions are so overcrowded that many of their members are as poor as the average day laborer. If the upgrowing generation be not allowed to acquire a knowledge of how to earn a living, what is the country to come to fifty years hence? The fact of the business is that the labor organizations are wronging the youth of the country far more than capital is wronging the work-people. What greater oppression could be practiced than to deny to a boy the right to learn a trade which would fortify him against crime?

Three hundred and sixty-thousand dollars appropriated out of the public treasury to found refuges for young criminals, and twelve patternmakers, backed by a powerful labor organization, attempt to stop the operations of an important manufacturing industry because its proprietors assume the responsibility of teaching two boys trades by which they may keep themselves out of jail. Here is a phase of tyranny to which we invite the attention of all self-respecting people.

We have, on several occasions, referred to the matter of the election of the members of the City Board of Education, and have taken the position that their selection should be, as far as possible, removed from ward politics. During this week the annual selection of public school teachers for this city was made. It is a matter of publicity that apprehension was felt by those interested in the schools that there might be a displacement of one of the ablest teachers in the department—a lady to whom over 1,500 of those who have received educational benefits in the schools of Sacramento are indebted. Among those who have passed her instruction are young men who have and do occupy distinguished public offices; others have made their mark in the line of merchandizing; some have distinguished themselves in professional walks, while others have been successful in mechanical fields. The lady to whom we refer was elected principal of one of the grammar schools, some year and a half ago, on an endorsement perhaps as flattering as that which has been accorded to any teacher in this State. Opposition was then encountered in the Board of Education. Her administration in that important school has been beyond adverse criticism. Yet an effort was made to procure her removal to give place to a gentleman from the East—a man whose qualifications are entirely unknown here. We know that there was a disposition on the part of some of the members of the board to displace the lady referred to. It was apparent that the reason given was a subterfuge, and one which would not appeal to an intelligent mind.

One hundred years ago there were only thirteen stars in the field of blue on our flag. The increase of that number, as shown by the history of our nation, is typical of the growth and prosperity of our country. At the beginning of this century there had been added three new stars, Vermont, Kentucky and Tennessee. In 1802 Ohio was set in the galaxy. Ten years later Louisiana increased the number. Indiana in 1816, Mississippi in 1817, Illinois in 1818, Alabama in 1819, Maine in 1820, and Missouri, in 1821, added radiance to the grand lustre of our national emblem and strength to the nation. Arkansas was added in 1836, and Michigan in 1837. The Constitution was brightened in 1845-46 by Florida, Iowa and Texas' lone star; followed the next year by Wisconsin. California, the land of gold at the time, but now the cornucopia of the world, gave lustre in 1850. In 1858 and 1859 Minnesota and Oregon became prominent in the firmament. Amid the carnage of battle in 1861, 1862 and 1864, Kansas, West Virginia and Nevada were born. Nebraska made the thirty-seventh star after the storm of battle had passed. Colorado was added in the grand centennial year; and 1889 will witness the addition of four new stars, North and South Dakota, Montana and Washington, soon to be followed by at least three others. We now have forty-two stars in the blue field.

The contest over the estate of Thomas H. Blythe in San Francisco means considerable money for the attorneys. It seems strange that men, particularly those of wealth, do not arrange their affairs by will. It is a remarkable fact that those who are most careful in their business habits, and who are most successful in the acquisition of wealth, leave their affairs unsettled at their deaths. There have been many instances in this county where men of the strictest business habits have drawn wills that were unintelligible. We have no doubt that in some cases their property went in part into hands they did not design. The drawing of a will is a matter which every man who has property should attend to. It is a very simple proceeding. All there is to do is to take a blank sheet of paper, write upon it the date, express in plain English the wishes, and sign it. It must be recollected that a will of this character must be entirely written, dated and signed by the party making it. Such a will will be admitted to probate upon proof that it is in the handwriting of the deceased, and need not be witnessed.

The return to San Francisco of ex-State Senator Richard Creighton, after conviction for the crime of bribing a jury and an exile of two years, suggests two thoughts: First—That in the majority of cases of political felonies the dupes are punished, while those who are really guilty escape; second—That exile is a greater punishment than confinement in the penitentiary. Creighton's history is brief. He was picked up by the controlling political power of San Francisco and elected to the State Senate. The fact that he had no ability to properly fill the position was, of course, not considered. He was a tool; his elevation, if it can be so called, resulted in his ruin. In the jury bribing cases five men were connected, two of whom were backed by wealth and influence. Northey, a young man who was comparatively friendless, was convicted and is now serving a nine years' term in the San Quentin penitentiary. Creighton was convicted. The balance escaped punishment.

The matter of the administration of justice is a curiosity. It almost always happens, as we have said, that the parties who should have been convicted of offenses of a political nature escape while their tools are landed in prison. We had an instance of that in the case of Arthur January, who was convicted in this county for the embezzlement of money from the State treasury. He is now in San Quentin serving out a term of ten years. Those familiar with the facts of the case know that he was abetted to commit his crime by some of the gamblers of this city; that the money which he abstracted passed into their hands. They are the ones who should suffer. In his case the punishment has already been inhuman. His act resulted in the dragging of his father from a high State office; his young wife grieved herself to death. He was not permitted to be at her bedside when her eyes closed in eternal slumber; he saw not her countenance in the coffin. If any greater punishment can be inflicted upon a man we cannot conceive it. The case of January is one that appeals strongly for executive clemency. During the time that he was in the county jail the writer, whose office is immediately above the prison, could hear from the jail yard below the footfalls of this unfortunate young man as he paced the brick walk. At times it has happened that those mournful treads were interrupted by the congratulations in the corridor of the court house of a man acquitted of a charge of murder. Punishments for crime are not always just.

The city of San Francisco, like all large cities, is controlled by political leaders. They stop at nothing. They care not for a man who can be of no further use to them. The usefulness of Creighton to them has passed; it is doubtful if they will now assist him. It would seem, however, that those who incited him to commit his crime should suffer.

Perhaps the most noted instance of the punishment of a corrupt political chieftain was that of William M. Tweed, in the city of New York. The history of that case, and of the career of the man, is remarkable. There were traits in him to be admired; others to be condemned. He was born in that city in 1823. His father was a chairmaker. After receiving a common school education he learned that trade. He assisted in his young manhood in the organization of the "Americus" fire engine company—known commonly as "Big Six"—and became its foreman. That gave him a power in politics. He became an Alderman of the city, a member of Congress, a Supervisor, School Commissioner, Deputy School Commissioner, and State Senator. In 1870 he was appointed Commissioner of the Department of Public Works. He organized a ring; was the chief of it. It controlled the city and unlawfully appropriated large amounts of public money. It was formidable. Finally the New York Times attacked it. Under the attack weakness came; the other journals of that city lent their aid. The result was that in October, 1871, Tweed was arrested and his bail was fixed at $1,000,000. In November following he was elected State Senator, but never served, for in the following month he was again arrested on another charge. On the first trial there was a disagreement of the jury, but he was afterward convicted and sentenced by Judge Noah Davis to twelve years imprisonment in the penitentiary at Blackwell's Island, and fined $12,550. Afterward, in April, 1875, an action was instituted against him to recover $6,000,000, and judgment was obtained. He escaped from jail December 4, 1875, succeeded in reaching Cuba, and from there went to Spain. He was, however, re-arrested and brought back. He died in prison April 12, 1878.

That exile is a fearful punishment was exemplified in the case of Henry Meiggs, who, by the way, was a remarkable man, and who suffered undue punishment. He came to California in 1849 and brought out a ship load of lumber, which he sold at a clear profit of $50,000. In one venture in San Francisco he made $500,000. He became the foremost man in that city in business, political and social life, and was for a time believed to be the richest man on the western coast of America. When the financial pressure of 1854 seized California, bankruptcy came upon him. He could have saved himself, but he attempted to save his friends also. In the frenzy of that death struggle he succumbed to the tempter—committed forgeries; his debts reached some $800,000. In September he bought a bark named the "America," and in the following month sailed from the bay with his family. After visiting some of the South Sea Islands and Australia he landed in Chili. He engaged there in the business of contracting, but the story of his career in San Francisco followed him and he was for a time under a cloud. Governor Bigler, whose remains are interred in our city cemetery, was appointed Minister to Chili; he was a man of kind heart and looked on the better side of Meiggs' life. The fact that Bigler recognized him and was on friendly terms with him produced a favorable impression upon the people. He contracted with the Chilean government to build a railroad, and from the contract made a profit of over $1,300,000. He engaged in other railroad enterprises and enjoyed the confidence of the government. Yet this man, with all this wealth, and occupying a position of distinction in South America, ceased not to long to return to San Francisco. He sent up money and paid off his obligations. Through his friends he procured the passage of a bill by our Legislature removing his disabilities, that he might return to the State. The bill was vetoed by the Governor, and he was not permitted to return. He died at Lima, Peru, September 29, 1877.

It is proverbial with old experienced detectives that fugitive criminals not only long to return to the scene of their crime, but actually at some period return thereto. In the older countries this idea pervades the officers of the law, and all the details of crimes are carefully preserved with the view to the probable return of the perpetrators thereof to the scenes of their lawlessness. Notably is this the case with the Scotland Yard officers. Several prominent cases have occurred in one community which verify the truth of the proverb.

Forty-one years ago Company D, Stevenson's Regiment, under command of Captain (since General and deceased) Henry M. Naglee, was stationed at San Jose del Cabo, near Cape St. Lucas, Gulf of California, and was the last body of United States troops to evacuate the soil of Mexico, which they did on the 6th of September, 1848. The boats from the ship of the line "Ohio" (which vessel brought the command up to Monterey, Cal.) were under the command of midshipman Bancroft Gherardia, now Rear Admiral in command of the North Atlantic squadron. The embarkation of the troops was made in safety, although a heavy sea was running. The men, upon their discharge at Monterey, October 24, 1848, left for the mines and soon became engulfed in the heavy immigration which followed the discovery of gold at Sutter's sawmill. Of this command sixteen survive out of the one hundred who formed the company at that time, viz: John A. Chandler, Boston, Mass.; George A. Corgan, Chicago, Ill.; Francis D. Clark, New York; James M. Harron and James Newman, Fresno county, Cal.; Andrew Moore, Gilroy; George Myers, Mount Eden, Cal.; Carl Lipp, Vallejo; Joseph Sims, Sacramento county; Preston K. Woodside, San Bernardino, Cal.; Wm. S. Johnson, Salinas; John B. Phillips, San Francisco; Jacob W. Norris, Newark, N. J.; Alden W. James, Bozeman, Mont.; Dominic Mulholland, St. Louis; George W. Tombs, Modesto, Cal. John Wolfe, of this company, died recently at New York, leaving a large and valuable property. The "Society of the Survivors of Stevenson's Regiment" has its headquarters at New York City, and their annual dinner is held October 24th of each year. The total number of survivors of the regiment, at this date, is 152, two-thirds of whom reside in California.

The Society of California Pioneers located in the Atlantic States have in contemplation an excursion to the Pacific Coast in August, 1890. The matter will receive attention during the coming winter. It is to be hoped that the project will meet with success, and that a large body of those men who were here in the early days will pay us another visit. We can assure them a warm welcome by their brethren of Sacramento.

The eminent divine is right. When you hear something bad about somebody whom we always supposed good, just consider a little. Before accepting the story against anyone's character, take off twenty-five per cent. for the habit of exaggeration which belongs to the one who first told the yarn; then take off twenty-five per cent. more for the additions which the spirit of gossip in every community puts on every original story; then subtract twenty-five per cent. from the fact that the party may have been put into circumstances of overpowering temptation. This disposes of seventy-five per cent. of the accusation. But the side of the accused has not been told, and for that reason we take off the remaining twenty-five per cent., and say we don't believe a word of it.

The action of the Board of Trustees in granting the Central Street Railway Company a franchise on terms broader than those formerly held evidently meets with public approval. The use of horses as motors is only temporary, and will ultimately give place to improved motive power—electricity or cable—when the progress of the times justify such a step. It would have been unjust alike to the applicants for the franchise and the people who patronize this line of street railroad to force the use of any impracticable process for operating the road.

Girls' Birthdays.

An old astrological prediction gives the character of a girl according to the month she is born in, as follows: If a girl is born in January, she will be a prudent housewife, given to melancholy, but good-tempered, and fond of fine clothes.

If in February, an affectionate wife and tender mother, and devoted to dress.

If in March, a frivolous chatterbox, somewhat given to quarreling, and a connoisseur in gowns and bonnets.

If in April, inconstant, not very intelligent, but likely to be good-looking and studious of fashion plates.

If in May, handsome, amiable, and given to style in dress.

If in June, impetuous, will marry early, be frivolous, and like dressy clothes.

If in July, possibly handsome, but with a sulky temper and a penchant for gay attire.

If in August, amiable and practical, likely to marry rich and to dress strikingly.

If in September, discreet, affable, much liked and a fashionable dresser.

If in October, pretty and coquettish, and devoted to attractive garniture.

If in November, liberal, kind, of a mild disposition, and an admirer of stylish dress.

If in December, well-proportioned, fond of novelty, and extravagant, and a student of dressy effects.—Harpers Magazine.

Women in the north have trouble enough over the servant girl question, but their ways are paths of pleasantness compared with those of southern women—except that the southern woman is less disturbed over the more serious situation. When a Virginia woman wants to change girls she is compelled to go at least three days without any girl at all. The kitchen help is black, of course, and superstitious. No colored girl will go into a house, until three days after the retiring help has vanished, for fear of being "tricked"—in other words, hoodooed, placed under a spell by the dismissed help. Whatever the colored person doesn't understand he fears. He is full of superstition, believes in good luck from the rabbit foot when in his own possession and in bad luck when it was "put on him." Not long ago a large number of negroes were on a Virginia railroad platform waiting for a train to take them to a picnic ground. A Boston drummer with a face as serious as a parson's, took a piece of chalk and a rabbit foot and in the most business-like way began to make crosses on the backs of the negroes and touch them with the rabbit foot. The crowd broke for the woods in a panic and there was no picnic that day.

The Paying Teller's Dream.

I have had one or two remarkable experiences with dreams. You know I am the paying teller in our bank. Well, about three years ago, a man, who gave his name as Albertus, an Italian, called at the bank late in the afternoon, about ten minutes before we closed the doors. He had a check for $3,000, made payable to bearer by John A. Jones, one of our leading customers and stockholders. Mr. Albertus was an eminently respectable looking man, and appeared to be deeply annoyed when I told him that he would have to be identified and prove his business connection with Mr. Jones before I would give him the money. He said he would return in the morning. I went home to dinner without thinking again of the matter.

That night I had a dream. I dreamed that I went down early to the bank the next morning, contrary to my usual custom, and, happening to think of the check, I looked into the book where we kept the signatures of our customers and examined very closely the signature of Mr. Jones. Then I noticed what had escaped my attention before. The signature in the book and that on the check were slightly different. This made me suspicious, and as it was then nearly an hour before the hour that the bank opened, I sent the messenger up to Mr. Jones' house on Lexington avenue to ask him whether he had drawn such a check or not. The boy learned there that Mr. Jones was not in the city. He had gone to Boston a day or so before. Then I telegraphed him at his hotel in that city, and he wired me back that the check was a forgery. I must have dreamed this early in the morning, for when I woke up it was so clearly fixed in my mind that I could not efface it.

Of course I had no faith in the dream, but I thought, to make sure about the matter, I would go down to the bank early, and so I did. I looked immediately into the signature book, and, sure enough, there was the same difference in the signatures that I had noticed in my dream. I thought that this was rather more than a coincidence, and so I sent our boy up to Mr. Jones' house. There was another point of resemblance between my dream and the reality. He was in Boston.

The moment I heard this I made up my mind that my dream was a real presentiment, and I wired him at his hotel, asking him about the check. In the meantime the bank had been opened, and Mr. Albertus, accompanied by a friend, came in. He was prepared to draw the money. You have no idea how I wasted time waiting for my reply. Mind you, I had no real reason for refusing to pay the check. The identification was satisfactory. The friend was Mr. Jones' cashier, and he said there was no doubt that the check was genuine, and that Mr. Albertus had had considerable dealings with Mr. Jones. Still I hesitated.

Then Mr. Albertus began to get uneasy, and I got so nervous that I could hardly see straight. Just as I got the money out to pay it over a telegraph boy came in with a dispatch. While I opened it Mr. Albertus, who seemed to suspect something, ran away, leaving the cashier and myself together. The message was from Mr. Jones. He said the check was a forgery. The cashier was fooled, too. If it hadn't been for that I would have lost one year's salary.

Rough on the Souls.

An eccentric widow of Brooklyn, named Harding, who is a sincere believer in the doctrine of the transmigration of souls, goes farther than most of those people who share her belief. So practical is her method that she had until a few weeks ago a score of animals of various kinds sharing her house, each of these assorted pets being, according to her belief, the present receptacle of the soul of some departed celebrity. But unfortunately, about three weeks since a fine Persian cat, in which—according to the widow—the soul of the great Napoleon had taken up its abode, upset a paraffine lamp while the widow was out shopping, so that she returned home to find a big crowd collected, half a dozen fire engines at work, and her precious pets scattered to the four winds. It was only by force that the police prevented Mrs. Harding from rushing into the flames to save a poodle in which Garibaldi's soul was, she declared, located; and since the fire the inspector on duty at the nearest police station has had daily visits from the irrepressible widow, who is still in search of her missing animals, especially a green parrot containing the immortal part of Confucius, and the latest addition to her curious family—a bull terrier—into which, by metempsychosis, John Bright's soul is declared by Mrs. Harding to have passed. The details of the case are indeed of the most unusual description, and as one reads of the widow's craze one instinctively recalls the case of the Countess de la Torre and her cats, and wonders if there was any "metempsychosian" method in that lady's apparent mania for harboring strange felines.—London Figaro.

Little Girl—"If I should die and go to heaven, would I have wings?" Fond Mother—"Yes, my pet; and a crown and a harp." Little Girl—"And lots of candy?" Fond Mother—"No." Little Girl (after meditation)—"Well, I'm glad we've got a good doctor."

The Stage.

[Under this caption will appear a fair and impartial criticism of the drama, actors, music, and all noteworthy matters pertaining to the stage.]

Mrs. Scott-Siddons is giving "readings" in Yarrurouth, Nova Scotia.

Mr. John T. Malone has been engaged to play "Iago" to Salvini's "Othello," and corresponding parts in other plays, in the Italian tragedian's repertoire.

Mrs. Golightly (to eminent musical critic)—What do you think of the new opera, Mr. Crochet? Eminent Musical Critic—Well, it wouldn't be bad if someone would set it to music.

On Monday and Tuesday lovers of the drama will have a genuine treat. The Lyceum Company will present The Wife and Sweet Lavender. The artists are of the first order and the dramas exceptionally fine. Daniel Frohman can be truly styled the "Napoleon" of theatrical managers.

Edwin Booth has not given up smoking, as has been reported. He was observed recently at a small railway station on the Connecticut shore of Long Island Sound, dressed in gray and puffing a black, strong cigar with the air of an enthusiast. His face was pale, his eyes haggard and he walked like an old man. One shoulder was at least two inches above the other. Those who saw him were astonished at his feeble appearance.

What has got into the young actresses who play the ingénue rôles of the stage? There seems to be a disposition on the part of many of them to affect a baby style of speech and action. A little of that kind of thing goes a great way, and a young lady of seventeen or eighteen in real life who would speak "baby talk" would be very likely to be regarded in an uncomplimentary light. It is not necessary to play the child in talk, looks and actions to act the part of an interesting young lady in her teens.

It has become of late years a custom for managers to seize upon every repulsively notorious person who may have committed some gross outrage against decency and society, and place them either upon the stage or the rostrum actuated by the curiosity of the public to see and hear any such monstrosities that might have been advertised to the world by their pestilential acts. Several notorious women have recently been announced to lecture, or to make their appearance in the drama. Managers should get all these social outlaws and "bill" the lot as a "monster combination."

Lily Clay's variety company filled the Clunie Opera House on Wednesday night. With regard to talent this company is superior to the Twelve Temptations. The managers of the combination evidently intend to have the female form divine a feature, irrespective of any other considerations. The dress, or lack of dress, is suggestive of indecency; and is so intended. There is little excuse for the existence of this part of such combinations. The alleged wit indulged in by the members of the company in the first part was decidedly ancient. There were several artistic features presented, but the female contingent was in nowise responsible therefor.

An interesting history of an old and well-known comic tune was given by Prof. Ensel, a music teacher, in a speech in the Music Teachers' Association recently. He said that when the army of the first Napoleon was in Egypt, in 1799, the camp for a while was near the pyramids. One afternoon about sunset the band was playing. The inhabitants of the desert had collected near and were listening to the music. Nothing unusual happened until the band struck up a tune which we now know under the name of "We Won't Go Home Till Morning." Instantly there was the wildest demonstration of joy among the Bedouins. They embraced each other and shouted and danced in the delirium of their pleasure. The reason was that they were listening to the favorite and oldest tune of their people. Prof. Ensel then stated that the tune had been taken to Europe from Africa in the eleventh century, by the Crusaders, and had lived separately in both countries for over seven hundred years. This is certainly enough to make "We Won't Go Home Till Morning" a classic. Its origin is more of a mystery than the source of the Nile.

There are but two millionaires among all the rich actors—Lotta Crabtree and Edwin Booth. They have considerably over $1,000,000 each. Charles Barnard, the ex-minstrel, has $500,000, and "Jo" Murphy has as much. Joseph Jefferson had more, but he has spent a good deal on starting his sons in life. Maggie Mitchell has about $400,000, most of it invested in railroad bonds. Mary Anderson has earned $250,000 with her beautiful face, and has invested it in England. Minnie Palmer has about $275,000, while Stuart Robson and W. H. Crane divided $500,000 between them when they separated. Mrs. Langtry has her $150,000 invested in New York and California real estate. Fritz Emmett has made about $200,000, and Annie Pixley about the same, the most of which is solidly invested in city lots in Denver and Minneapolis. Denman Thompson has made $150,000 out of his play, and has part of it safely salted down in government bonds. James O'Neill has made a fortune out of one play, which he has invested in mortgages on western farms. Nat Goodwin has a fortune, but more than half of it was left to him by his wife. Francis Wilson has made $100,000. Emma Abbott has a fortune of $225,000, a large part of which is invested in diamonds, and Fanny Davenport has at least $20,000 worth of her $100,000 locked up in these shining stones, which are periodically being stolen and recovered. Hermann, the magician, has a fortune which is all safely stored in paying property in the upper portion of New York city.

Professional Chat.

There is no man living who enjoys a good joke more than Judge T. B. McFarland. A number of years ago, when the Judge used to take an active part in the first ward politics and primaries, some of the old-time boys conceived the idea of making a temporary financial raise out of the Judge by selling him a dog. One of the gang, being a member of No. 1 Engine Company, of which Frank Rhoads was foreman, was appointed as the negotiator to approach the Judge to sell the dog. He waited on the Judge and made known his important mission. The quick wit of Judge McFarland at once prompted his line of action, and he asked: "Well, my boy, is your dog fat?" The emissary concluded from the query that fatness must be an inducement for the sale, so he said: "Oh, yes; he is fine and fat." "Well," said the Judge, "I don't want a fat dog." The dog vendor was equal to the emergency by renewing the attack in saying: "Well, Judge, the dog ain't so damned fat." The Judge purchased the dog. It is needless to say that ever after, while a resident of the first ward, he never failed to represent that ward in the city, county and State conventions.

Dou Piatt is a great story teller, says the New York Graphic. I heard this tale of his experience as a lawyer in a country town of Ohio. He had gone down to the jail one day, hoping to get a stray case. A prisoner had just been brought in who asked Piatt to undertake his defense. "Got any money?" asked the lawyer. "Not a cent," was the reply, "but I am innocent and I am a man of honor, and if you get me off you will not regret it." His assertion that he was "a man of honor" was repeated over and over again. Piatt asked what the prisoner was charged with, and found that it was arson. There had recently been erected on the opposite side of the street from Piatt's office a church for colored people, from which nightly and three or four times a week during the day the most incessant noises of these noisy worshippers were sent forth, much to his annoyance and disturbance. Piatt laughingly said to the man: "I'll clear you if you burn down that nigger church." "Oh, but I can't do that, Mr. Piatt," was the reply; "I am not a man of that kind, and I am innocent of this charge. But, sir, I am a man of honor and you will be well repaid, sir, if you defend me." The result of the fellow's pleading was that Piatt undertook the case and made the plea of his youthful career as a lawyer. So well did he plead his case that the fellow was not only cleared, but a purse of $10 was made up in the court-room, and the man walked out as a perfect hero. That night, as Piatt relates it, the darkey church was destroyed by fire, and three days later he received a letter from his late client, dated St. Louis, inquiring if the colonel was now satisfied that he was "a man of honor."

Book Chat.

Eighty thousand copies of Sheridan's book have been sold.

The authorship of "An Author's Love" has been traced to Elizabeth Balch.

Robert Browning makes an income of $5,000 a year from his literary work.

Maurus Jókai, the famous Hungarian novelist, has published some two hundred volumes already, not counting his novelettes and short stories.

It is reported that Mrs. Croly (Jennie June) will shortly begin the publication of a new magazine for women, under the title, The Woman's Century.

William Black is finishing a new novel dealing with theatrical and literary life in London, and describing deer-shooting and salmon-fishing in the Highlands.

Julian Hawthorne has written twenty-nine books. In person he is about 5 feet 11 inches in height, slender, but a good deal of an athlete, and he has a very handsome face.

J. T. Trowbridge, who grew famous by writing clever stories for boys, is one of the prominent authors of Boston. Though past 60 and gray-haired, his fresh face and youthful bearing make him appear much younger.

Gail Hamilton is about 60; Miss Braddon 52, Blanche Willis Howard 42, Jennie June Croly, 57, Mrs. Frances Hodgson Burnett 39, Marion Harland 59, Lucy Larcom 63, Harriet Prescott Spofford 54, Julia Ward Howe 70, Celia Thaxter 53, Constance Fenimore Woolson 41, Susan Coolidge 44, and Mary Mapes Dodge 51, with a number of others ranging down to Aimée Rives at 26.

Rhoda Broughton, the well-known English novelist, is 48 and a highly intelligent looking woman, although her features are hard and rather masculine. She is a good talker and has a rich fund of humor of a very racy and piquant kind. Most of her literary work is done early in the morning. It is her custom to allow at least two years to elapse between the publication of her stories.

A bright little paper sailing under the name The Citrus Belt has been launched on the sea of literature at Loomis, Placer county. Paul Kemble is the editor. A few weeks ago we announced the contemplated venture, and suggested the name which the publishers have adopted. The paper is bright, spicy, clean, and a credit to the community at large. May success attend the enterprise.

The California Topical Talker, a literary journal, has entered for the literary race. It is published at San Jose by Calderwood & Herrett. As its name indicates, it is a topical talker, and in the briefest and tersest manner possible deals with the topics of the day in all branches of news and literature. The first number, now before us, is not arranged in departments, but it is announced this will occur in future numbers. From appearances this paper will make its influence felt. As it proclaims, it will graze wherever it finds food for intellect.

"Lace" is a Berlin romance written by Paul Lindan. Juliana Countess Wiking, an impecunious young lady of noble lineage, betrothes herself to the actual privy counselor and presiding justice Albrecht Count von Iseneck, who is thirty-five years her senior. Juliana has a passion for old lace, and her wedding present from Von Iseneck consists of the "Lamoral Lace," said to have belonged once to Philip II of Spain. Tradition ascribed to this lace a fatal influence on its possessor, whom it will force to interfere in the conjugal happiness of others, thereby to meet his death.

Among bulls of English parentage recently perpetrated are these: "After the door closed," writes a novelist who is widely read just now, "a dainty foot slipped into the room, and with her own hand extinguished the lamp." "The chariot of socialism," wrote an editorial writer, "is rolling and gnashing its teeth as it rolls." "The charity association," wrote a reporter, "has distributed twenty pairs of shoes among the poor, which will dry up many a tear." "I was sitting," writes another novelist, "at the table enjoying a cup of coffee, when a gentle voice tapped me on the shoulder. I looked around and saw my old friend again."

Concerning the use of tobacco, a French writer has thus gathered the opinions of various of his literary countrymen. M. Dumas found that tobacco after a while made him giddy, the giddiness disappearing six months after he ceased smoking. Of it, he says: "Tobacco, in my opinion, together with alcohol, is the most formidable enemy of intelligence." Augier and Feuillet, Dumas declares, have almost died of smoking. Taine smokes cigarettes and says it is a bad habit. Zola says he left off smoking some years ago on the advice of a physician, and adds: "Perfection is so dull a thing that I often regret having cured myself of smoking."

NOTES.

In the absence of anything to talk about, the newsmongers circulated the baseless report of Blaine's resignation.

Judge Cooley, the Chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission, is on his way to this Coast on business connected with the commission.

How is it that much of the telegraphic news that appears in the large San Francisco dailies is found in the Record-Union a day later? We always supposed that all the associated press had the same service. If this is so, then we cannot understand the fact above mentioned.

Senator Hearst is at Washington trying to straighten out the difficulties relating to the Los Angeles and Sacramento public buildings. The Senator waited upon Secretary Windom and explained the situation. The work will probably commence on our new postoffice at an early date.

A great cry has been raised in Louisiana and Mississippi for the vindication of the law, and to bring those parties connected with the recent pugilistic encounter to the bar of offended justice. Does not this solicitude strike the ordinary mind in rather a singular manner? Our recollection is that hundreds of cases of the most outrageous lawlessness have occurred in both these and adjoining States. Only recently unwonted political murders have taken place, the election laws ignored, wanton disregard of the election franchise has developed, and yet no apparent effort has been made to bring the perpetrators to justice. The trifling occurrence of the prize fight is magnified into great proportions, and sufficient to call forth the military arms of the respective States, but the murder of a Congressman, United States Marshal, Federal Judge, or the shooting of a couple of hundred of negroes raises not a ripple upon the waters of justice.

The end of that vile trial, which was redolent with vice, corruption, immorality and all that was bad and vicious, has come. The Supreme Court of this State has vindicated our law and the law of morality and decency by marking the dividing line between the wife and the mistress. The secret contract theory of marriage has been exploded, and the solemnity of the most sacred relation in a civilized world has been vindicated. It is now impossible, as it always was and should be, for an adventuress to successfully utilize her siren influences to entrap some foolish old millionaire, and also for the rich roué to ensnare the unsuspecting maiden into a secret marriage upon the contract system. When the Sharon-Hill controversy arose, it should have been promptly relegated to oblivion, where it belonged, but the greed of hungry attorneys, who had evidently personal objects in view, caused this scandalous proceeding to assume the prominence of a "celebrated case," and thereby contributed largely to their exchequer. The Supreme Court is entitled to the gratitude of all who love decency, and who have a proper regard for the sacred tie of marriage. Let all similar affairs receive the condemnation of society, and there will be fewer adventuresses and less old rakes.

Private Water.

From the Sutter Farmer we take the full text of Judge Keyser's opinion in the fish cases:

In the Superior Court, County of Sutter, The People, etc., vs. Edward Mahuka and Luke Knaflawa. The defendants are charged with a misdemeanor, to wit: catching fish contrary to the provisions of Section 636 of the Political Code. On this charge they were tried in Justice's Court and convicted. A motion for a new trial was made and denied, and the defendants have appealed to this Court. The appeal was argued and submitted on the 6th instant. It is conceded that the Legislature has the power to protect the game and fish of the State. Section 636 is directed to this object.

The expression in the section, "waters of this State," means the waters situated within the State. I think the fact that the slough, in the waters of which the defendants were found fishing, is on or runs through the land of a private individual cannot, I think, affect the question. The legislative power to protect the fish in such waters seems as clear as it is to protect them in navigable streams.

Judgment and order denying a new trial affirmed. PHIL. W. KEYSER, Judge.

A LITTLE TALK ON THE KEYSTONE STATE.

SEWICKLEY, PA., July 10, 1889.

EDITORS THEMIS:—The glorious Fourth is a thing of the past, and we have all settled down again and are now pursuing the even tenor of our various ways, just as though our nation had not celebrated her birthday. In this old historical State the small boy and the fire cracker held full sway, but beyond that there was little demonstration comparatively. Having spent some time in this State, and having become particularly impressed with certain portions, I will endeavor to give you the benefit of those impressions, such as they are. I want to tell so much, and yet I know I can't, all at one time, so will do my best as briefly as possible. One May morning I left Philadelphia, on the New York, Chicago and Fort Wayne limited express, bound for Pittsburg. The trip is rather a lengthy one across the Keystone State, but Pennsylvania is picturesquely beautiful, yet there is nothing gorgeous or astounding in its scenery. The nice rolling country, the pretty cities and towns, make the scenes pleasing ones to the traveler. Here, in this thickly settled eastern land, it is no easy matter to tell where one town begins and another ends. Hamlets, burroughs, villages and towns are in such close juxtaposition it is bewildering to distinguish between them; and next to impossible to tell "which is which." The Fort Wayne railroad goes through Lancaster, Harrisburg, Altoona and other important towns of the State. Johnstown and the unfortunate valley of the Conemaugh is traversed by this line of railroad. The stricken land is between here and Altoona, and that particular part of the country will rival the "Great Horseshoe Bend" from now on in point of interest to the passengers, as they go whirling by on the train. As the ruins of Herculaniun in the old, so will the history of the new world chronicle the scene of a remarkable calamity.

THE HORSESHOE BEND

Is a curve on the line of the railroad that takes the shape of a horseshoe, the train coming out but a little distance from where it starts around the bend. It is particularly aggravating to be gazing intently out of the car window, breathlessly taking in the sights, and have your view interrupted by an interminably long freight train, which does not disappear until the beautiful land is almost a thing of the past. I had (fortunately for me) been over the road before, but there were a number of tourists on board who loudly lamented their ill luck. They were pretty thoroughly disgusted at missing the principal attraction. The freight trains through the east are so long; it is by no means a rare sight to see a train of a hundred cars, and eighty odd cars at one time is a frequent sight. I often wonder what in the world they all contain, and where they are all bound. Speaking of trains, the "limited," which runs between New York and Chicago, is undoubtedly

THE FINEST TRAIN IN THE WORLD.

It is essentially a gentleman's train. There is a smoking car, gorgeously appointed; easy chairs, lounges, barber shop, bath-room, and all the accommodations of any first-class hotel. Here the Lords of Creation can revel in all the known comforts and luxuries. The dining car is provided with all the delicacies of the season; the waiters, as a rule, are polite, and there is no cause for complaint, either generally or particularly. The coaches are beautifully furnished in soft shades of plush. The effect is restful and harmonizing, and the high-backed, cushioned seats are so comfortable after a long ride in an ordinary car. The "limited" only stops twice between Philadelphia and Pittsburg. You pay for fast time, and tickets are higher priced than those on the regular express. The time saved is well worth the premium on the tickets. Going through Pennsylvania at night the eye is attracted by the great number of

NATURAL GAS WELLS.

The brilliantly burning jets rising apparently many feet in the air, coming up seemingly from nowhere, and blazing into huge flames, making the trees and posts appear like grotesque figures until you get near enough to distinguish what the objects really are. In the little streams and rivulets sometimes can be heard the funniest noises; queer gurgling sounds, that prove upon investigation to be gas escapes. In one place I saw a broken pipe, and the gas blowing into the water made a regular geyser about fifteen feet high, and it puffed and blew like a steam engine. Wherever these gas escapes are the water bubbles and sparkles so prettily. It seems wonderful to me the number of towns and cities that are supplied with natural gas. There are any number of houses where nothing is burned but gas, and last winter in this place the supply gave out, and people almost froze to death, for they hadn't a stick of wood or piece of coal within reaching distance. The first time I ever saw a natural gas fire-place lighted, I jumped as though I had been shot. The semi-explosion frightened me, as I was wholly unaccustomed to such performances.

I wonder that Max O'Reil in his work on "Jonathan and His Continent," did not remark upon the CHARACTERISTIC INTONATION OF THE WESTERN PENNSYLVANIAN.

The peculiarity lies in the use of the rising and falling inflections. I said to a neighbor the other day: "Do you notice that I talk so differently from you that my expressions, though practically the same, are yet totally unlike yours?" "Yes," said she, "you do not emphasize as we do." "Well," said I, "I have been wondering if our method of speaking struck you as yours did us," and upon being answered affirmatively, I decided we were quits on that point at any rate. There is a certain individuality about each and every section that gives a charm to the locality.

In writing of Pennsylvania, it occurs to me that the

INSPIRATION FOR "EVANGELINE"

Was conceived while Longfellow was visiting in Philadelphia. The idyl was not written until twenty-three years later. The story is founded on fact, and was suggested to the poet by hearing Hawthorne relate an episode. Old Christ Church in the Quaker City seeming to be the fittest place for the poet to find a resting place for Evangeline and Gabriel, the bard fixes the last act of his charming idyl in Philadelphia:

There from the troubled sea had Evangeline landed, an exile,
Finding among the children of Penn a home and a country.

Longfellow coined the name "Evangeline," presumably from the sturdy Evangelists who built the little church. The dinginess of the place, and the signs of busy and rushing life, almost hide this poetical spot from the casual observer; yet it is in the heart of the big city. Time has somewhat changed the manners and customs of the original Quaker, and materially changed their habiliments. Still, throughout eastern Pennsylvania there is that same quiet, abiding influence and sincerity that so attracted the poetical spirit of Longfellow. There is a sect in this State called "Dunkards," who somewhat resemble the Quakers in style of dress, but are a distinct class from the latter. The Quaker race seems gradually to be dying out, though there are still numbers of them through this State, New Jersey and Maryland.

THE COUNTRY

Round about here looks pretty, but I cannot seem to see that it is very productive. Strawberries have entirely disappeared, raspberries are in and a few blushing cherries appear occasionally; but in spite of their tempting looks they are sour, as if their advent were a little ill-timed; and yet it is late for them. The cold, rainy weather has no doubt seriously affected the gardens and orchards. Many were under water for days and days this spring. Even the "oldest inhabitant" cannot recall another such disagreeable season. Climate is no object here; they don't know what a good climate is, so don't miss anything. What they lack in atmospheric charms these eastern States make up in other attractions. Notwithstanding a few deficiencies there is much to see and thousands of things worth seeing. The wild flowers are beautiful, though it does not seem to me there are so many varieties as in California. The hills are now covered with daisies, rhododendron and mountain laurel; the daisy we cultivate at home and call the Marguerite. Fields of daisies grow here as the poppies do at home. The little yellow dandelion springs up on all sides, and is the only familiar wild flower I have seen. This little orange-colored flower has been mentioned as a fit emblematical flower of America. It grows all through the country, and its bright golden hue is typical of the wealth and prosperity of this great commonwealth.

THE RIVERS

Through the State are pretty streams, and it seems to me the railroads take delight in running beside the water, and the traveler is regaled with pleasant views instead of having to go through miles of uninteresting country. The Susquehanna is not navigable, but it is a beautiful stream; so also is the Schuylkill. The Ohio river runs through the State, and just now is quite a rushing stream. Steamers are still plying between Pittsburg and Cincinnati, and that is something unusual at this season. The towns throughout the State are all pretty and interesting. The mining towns are curiosities, and some of them very picturesque, notably Mauch Chunk, a mining town on the Delaware and Lackawanna railroad. I am thankful to be able to chronicle a pleasant day. This morning is balmy and delightful—as yet. There is never any telling what a few hours may bring forth—thunder, lightning and rain, in all probability. We have had atrocious weather; one day we shiver and shake and the next day we roast. However, we are grateful for a few rays of sunshine and will not borrow trouble. Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof. From north to south and from east to west Pennsylvania is an attractive State; it has numbers of large cities outside of Philadelphia and Pittsburg, notably Scranton and Alleghany City. The latter is Pittsburg's twin sister. In the former there are many things distinctly Pittsburgian, and the latter has her charms as well, but they deserve a chapter to themselves, so adieu for this time.

Very truly, LELLA J. LINDLEY.

Just from the Arctic.

Hon. A. P. Catlin has just returned from a trip to Alaska. When he left upon his visit he supposed that he was going to an intensely cold climate, and prepared himself with all manner of wool clothing and blankets. While his trip included that locality made famous by novel writers, as well as explorers—Fort Wrangle—he never once was compelled to don any exterior clothing, or undo his pack of blankets provided for the occasion. Notwithstanding that he had read of the fact, it seemed strange that he could read the newspapers at 12 o'clock at night without the aid of artificial light, and that day never ceased, or night never came, at least while he was a visitor to this clime. The climate was not unlike that of San Francisco. It has rarely occurred that the thermometer goes below zero. This particularly low degree of cold, and comparative warmth of climate, is attributable to the current from the coast of Japan which flows along the Sitka coast, and has about the same effect as that experienced by the Gulf stream in its course. Mr. Catlin thinks that this territory has been neglected by the general government for many years, and that the purchase of those alleged icebergs has heretofore been looked upon as an idle, visionary scheme of the late Wm. M. Seward. There never was a greater mistake. Mr. Catlin does not think any from our climate would enjoy a permanent residence in Alaska, but that for four or five months in the year it would be pleasant. What the keen and practical observations of our fellow townsman saw in this country, even upon his brief visit, would make a good-sized book, if reduced to ordinary manuscript. "A glance," says Mr. Catlin, "would convince the thoughtful reading man that the alleged natives of this country are not in any sense akin to the North American Indian. While there is nothing of the Mongolian caste, still it is evident this race sprang from Asia. There has been a great mistake somewhere in our governmental affairs with regard to Alaska." Said Mr. Catlin: "During the Polk administration, judging from one of the President's messages, it was the purpose to connect Alaska with the territory of Oregon, upon the degrees '54,' '40,' but various things distracted attention from this matter. If the proper consideration had been given to our 'Russian possessions,'" said Mr. Catlin, "the United States would have territory which would include more than one half the circumference of the globe." We would like to be able to reduce to writing all our talented and observing fellow citizen told us, but that would be impossible. Mr. Catlin, on his return, visited his large estate in Washington territory, consisting of about 3,000 acres and which he purchased a number of years ago, but had never seen. He was much pleased to find the land rich and fertile, and of course valuable, although he purchased the same on speculation solely. At some future day we may extend our account of Mr. Catlin's Arctic visit.

Attempt to Burn the New Pavilion.

Last night some miscreant attempted to set fire to the new pavilion. It was discovered in time to avert a dire calamity. It seems that there are "fire bugs" going the rounds of this State, wantonly destroying property. Fresno has been the worst sufferer from these scoundrels; no less than three disastrous fires have occurred there from incendiaries. Great caution should be used at this time by all night watchmen about public buildings, and other important localities which might be the object of attack by those lawless fiends who seem to delight in destruction.

The Weather.

The highest and lowest temperature during the week ending yesterday was 94° on Thursday and Friday, and 52° on Saturday. The highest and lowest temperature for the same time last year was 104° and 56°. The highest and lowest temperature during the 24 hours ending at 1 o'clock this morning was: Olympia, 99° and 54°; Portland, 96° and 58°; Roseburg, 95° and 56°; Eureka, 60° and 50°; Red Bluff, 100° and 70°; Sacramento, 94° and 54°. The lowest temperature at San Francisco this morning was 50°. The highest temperature in this city up to noon to-day was 84°, with fresh southeasterly winds, a steady barometer and a cloudless sky.

FLASHES.

Even the church organs go off on a toot Sundays.

A reputation is a poor thing to rely on for steady board.

Many families make great sacrifices just to be "fashionable."

It is a good rule to go without what you cannot afford to buy.

A busy lawyer should have a metallic voice. He is usually on his metal.

Society is like a pie—the upper crust, the lower crust, and the best part.

It is a little risky to affect to know about what you are really ignorant of.

There is large Dimond in the Branch Mint at San Francisco. The setting is gold and silver.

It is not surprising that cordial receptions cause the participants to be full of good spirits.

If some people were half as big as they think they are the world would have to be enlarged.

The tombstone is about the only thing that can stand upright and lie on its face at the same time.

If as much nonsense were spoken as is written the number of insane asylums would be increased at once.

LOCAL BREVITIES.

Governor Waterman is again at his post of official duty.

There will be an open air concert at Capitol Park to-morrow, commencing at 6:45 P. M.

A man named C. Gardner has been arrested for embezzlement from Graff & Rubenstein, barbers—the amount is alleged to be $5.

The advertisement of the sale by auctioneer W. H. Sherburn of lots of unclaimed baggage by order of Wm. Land of the Western hotel. Read it.

What will no doubt prove a very spirited and interesting game of baseball will be played at Snowflake Park this afternoon, commencing at 3:30 sharp, between the San Francisco and Sacramento clubs.

The closing exercises of St. Joseph's Academy, conducted by the Sisters of Mercy, occurred yesterday. Father Grace officiated in the absence of the Bishop. Miss Lizzie Halloran won the honors of the academy and a gold medal. A splendid programme of literary and musical exercises was presented.

The libel suit of Eli Mayo against the Bee proprietors was this morning dismissed by the plaintiff on his own motion. There is very little profit in instituting libel suits against newspapers. While they may cause the defendants some cost and annoyance, this affords the plaintiffs very little consolation from the fact that they too are always out for expenses.

Butch Vantine was shot in the arm by a man who resides at Fourteenth and S streets. Vantine and Ruggles went out to pay a visit to the party residing as above, who is said to be a "little off," when he shot through the door, wounding Vantine. No cause seems to have existed further than the attempt to enter the premises.

Graduating Exercises.

The Sacramento High School graduating exercises—class of '89—will take place on Thursday next at the Metropolitan Theater. An interesting and varied programme will be presented. It is understood that H. H. McClaughry will deliver the oration—subject, "John A. Sutter." The following young ladies and gentlemen comprise the graduating class:

Alsip, Effie J.	McClaghry, H. H.
Comstock, Sophie D.	Nixon, Alice F.
Davis, Jessie M.	O'Neil, Nellie S.
Desmond, Ida R.	Quinton, Maggie
Feeny, Mary L.	Reed, Georgia E.
Griffin, Frank A.	Schaw, Minnie
Hoitt, Ralph H.	Schaw, W. B.
Haggerty, Lizzie A.	Steinmann, Etta
Hilbert, Alice M.	Swanston, Lillie S.
Kaerth, Lulu E.	Weisel, Minnie M.
Knight, Lizzie	Wilcox, Florence
Magray, Lillis L.	Winn, Bessie A.
Meyer, Rose	Wolf, May E.

GENERAL NEWS ITEMS.

The Feather river bridge is being repaired. It needed it. Marysville and Yuba City will soon be united by a line of street railroad cars. A Carbon, W. T., butcher became enraged at the perpetrator of a stale joke, wherein he was accused of making canine sausages, and chopped the joker to pieces with a cleaver. Deer are said to be abundant in the vicinity of Bartlett Springs. A Davisville saloon-keeper has hit upon a shrewd method of drawing a crowd. When business grows slack he throws the chairs around and shouts at the top of his voice. Of course everybody runs to see the fight and a few imbibe. A negro shot an Indian at San Diego yesterday. The assessment roll of Sonoma shows nearly $700,000 increase over last year. It is rumored that "Jack, the Ripper," has been captured and has confessed.

A Disastrous Fire—Several Persons Injured.

This morning about 5 o'clock a fire broke out on Third street, between J and K. The fire is thought to have originated in a Chinese laundry, about the middle of the block. The flames spread so rapidly that the real origin of the fire is not certain. Almost without any appreciable time the flames were communicated with the surrounding property and an immense conflagration was, for a time, imminent. The Bee office was in great danger, and the timely direction by Chief Engineer O'Meara, of a stream on the adjoining building, averted a dire disaster—the destruction of the Bee and its magnificent press. Already had the north walls of the Bee building commenced to smoke, and a few seconds more and the building would have been in flames. It looked very much as though the entire block north of the alley, between J and K, Second and Third streets, was doomed, but the energy and ability of the fire department averted the calamity. The saloon on the corner of the alley, next to the Bee office, owned by Fred Wager, was badly injured; also the rear of the building, used as a storehouse, adjoining. Steinhart's news depot and cigar store was nearly a total loss; Haggerty's saloon a total loss. Henry Garbe lost his building, as well as shop and stock. The lodging house next to the Chinese laundry is a total wreck. Marco Mania's fine building was seriously injured by smoke and heat. The loss, however, is fully covered in Home Insurance Company and Phoenix of Hartford, James E. Mills, agent. Capt. Steven's saloon received a good smoking, as did the lodging house in Figg's building. John Jackson, who lodged in a house over the laundry, was very badly burned. He was found on the roof of the building in a dazed condition, by officer Snooks, who took him to comfortable quarters. Henry Garbe had a very narrow escape from death, being rescued by a friend. Mr. and Mrs. Steinhart were both slightly burned in gaining an exit from the burning buildings. Three Chinamen were rescued from the basement of the flaming structures just in time to save them from a horrible death. The deizens of Miss Dell Villarsen's lodging house, on the southwest corner of J and Third streets, were aroused just in time to save them from suffocation by smoke. M. B. Thorpe, a lodger in the Figg building, made an amusing spectacle in his efforts to escape from the building. Mr. Thorpe has a wooden leg, and, thinking haste was necessary, did not stop to put on the artificial appendage, but grabbed the same and hobbled on one leg down the stairs on the J street side, and made good his escape before adjusting the other limb. Billy Bryant, also a lodger in the same house, was not particular as to his attire, but promptly grabbed a few articles of clothing, and, when at a safe distance, donned them. At this writing we are not able to ascertain the actual loss. The real estate owners who are losers, so far as we can discover, are E. P. Figg, Marco Mania, H. Garbe, L. C. Chandler and W. P. Coleman.

Burglary Last Night.

The office of Nick Moon, contractor and builder, on Ninth street, between I and J, was entered last night and the safe opened. The burglars took away about $500; the money was intended to pay off his hands today.

J. P. Odbert sent to the exposition building a branch of a Siberian crabapple tree which is bearing a number of fine specimens of the fruit.

Sale of Unclaimed Baggage

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN THAT I, WM. Land, proprietor of the Western Hotel, Sacramento, will cause to be sold at public auction, at the salesroom of W. H. Sherburn, 323 K street, Sacramento, on TUESDAY, AUGUST THIRTEENTH, 1889, at 10 o'clock A. M., the following described baggage:

Lot 1, 1 Trunk, marked C. B. G.; Lot 2, 1 Trunk, marked Albert Schmidt; Lot 3, 1 Trunk, no mark; Lot 4, 1 Trunk, marked Walter Johnson; Lot 5, 1 Trunk, marked E. T. Naghel; Lot 6, 1 Trunk, marked Billy Myers; Lot 7, 1 Trunk, no mark; Lot 8, 1 Trunk, marked C. G. Meegan; Lot 9, 1 Basket, marked Mrs. G. W. Etto; Lot 10, 1 Valise, E. N. McBeath; Lot 11, 1 Valise, no mark; Lot 12, 1 Valise, no mark; Lot 13, 1 Valise, no mark; Lot 14, 1 Valise, C. J. Morgan; Lot 15, 1 Valise, C. J. Morgan; Lot 16, 1 Valise, 747 marked; Lot 17, 1 Valise, no mark; Lot 18, 1 Hand Satchel, Charles Saubach; Lot 19, 1 Valise, W. H. Schad; Lot 20, 1 Valise, no mark; Lot 21, 1 Valise, no mark; Lot 22, 1 Valise, no mark; Lot 23, 1 Valise, Sept. 5th, 1888; Lot 24, 1 Valise, F. A. McGuire, Aug. 28th, 1888; Lot 25, 1 Valise, no mark; Lot 26, 1 Hand Bag, no mark; Lot 27, 1 Carpet Bag, no mark; Lot 28, 1 Basket, M. S.; Lot 29, 1 Lunch Basket, no mark; Lot 30, 1 Basket, no mark; Lot 31, 1 Band Box, no mark; Lot 32, 1 Box, Chas. E. Burton; Lot 33, 2 Lots Umbrellas; Lot 34, 1 Lot Canes; Lot 35, 16 Bundles Bedding; Lot 36, 7 Packages and Bundles; Lot 37, 1 Lot Linen Coats; Lot 38, 1 Lot Clothing; Lot 39, 3 Valises, no marks; Lot 40, 1 Lot Shoes; etc.; Lot 41, 6 Coats, Hotel Checks No. 2475, 3817, 3652, 3399, 3733, 3742.

All the above described property having remained uncalled for for more than six months
WM. LAND,
Proprietor Western Hotel, Sacramento.
W. H. SHERBURN, Auctioneer.

PERSONAL.

Senator Caminetti is in the city.

E. E. Leake was in this city this week.

C. H. Cummings and wife are visiting Los Angeles.

E. K. Alsip and wife have gone to Upper Soda Springs.

Albert M. Johnson and E. J. Dwyer have gone to Santa Barbara.

Peter Flaherty and party will start in the morning for an outing at Silver Lake.

Mrs. C. W. Clarke and daughters, and A. A. Van Voorhies and wife will depart on Monday on a visit to Alaska.

John Platt had a family reunion last evening. The Hussar Band honored the host with sweet music. Songs, recitations and witty discourse was the order. Uncle John, as he is familiarly called, entertained his guests royally. It was indeed a happy family reunion.

EARL BROS.

COMMISSION MERCHANTS

IN CALIFORNIA PRODUCTS

122 J STREET, : : SACRAMENTO.

GEORGE DIETRICH, Manager.

Chicago House, 157 South Water St.

SNOWFLAKE PARK.

Twenty-eighth and R Streets.

BASEBALL—CALIFORNIA LEAGUE.

THIS DAY! THIS DAY!

Saturday, _____ July 20th
At 3:30 o'clock P. M., sharp.

San Francisco vs. Sacramento.

Men, _____ 25 cents | Ladies, _____ 25 cents
Boys, _____ 10 cents | Reserved, _____ 25 cents

Trains leave depot at 2:50 and 3:15. Fare, for the round trip, 15 cents.

TRADE WITH THE

OVERLAND

Tea Company,

421 J STREET,

BETWEEN FOURTH AND FIFTH.

The Best of Goods Procurable.

HANDSOME PRESENTS GIVEN TO CUSTOMERS.

For Particulars see the Daily Papers.

DELINQUENT SALE.—Treasure Box Mining Company—Location of principal place of business, Sacramento, Cal. Notice.—There is delinquent upon the following described stock, on account of assessment No. 2, levied on the twenty-seventh day of May, 1889, the several amounts set opposite the names of the respective shareholders, as follows:

	No. Cert.	No. Shs.	Amt.
Smith, F. A., Trustee, _____	41	8,400	$84 00
Smith, F. A., Trustee, _____	42	8,400	84 00
Smith, F. A., Trustee, _____	43	8,400	84 00
Smith, F. A., Trustee, _____	46	8,400	84 00
Smith, F. A., Trustee, _____	47	16,400	164 00

And in accordance with law and an order of the Board of Directors, made on the twenty-seventh day of May, 1889, so many shares of each parcel of such stock as may be necessary will be sold at public auction, at the office of the company, 325 J street, Sacramento, Cal., on FRIDAY, THE NINETEENTH DAY OF JULY, 1889, at the hour of eleven o'clock A. M. of said day, to pay said delinquent assessment thereon, together with costs of advertising and expenses of sale.
J. O. COLEMAN, Secretary.

Postponement.—July 1, 1889.—The sale of the above delinquent stock was postponed until TUESDAY, AUGUST THE SIXTH, 1889, at the hour and place above mentioned.
J. O. COLEMAN, Secretary.
No. 325 J street, Sacramento, Cal.

Cooper's Music Store.

Mathushek!

Principal Music House in Northern and Central California.

Largest and Best Selected Stock of Musical Instruments and Musical Merchandise.

Indorsement of Merit.

I take pleasure in certifying to the excellence of the Mathushek Piano. I can cheerfully and truthfully recommend it in any of its various styles as a first-class instrument, the equal of any and the superior of most in the qualities necessary to the accompaniment of the voice; and I believe it to be more than any other suited to withstand the effects of our California climate. We use it exclusively at our rehearsals and concerts.
W. H. KINROSS,
Musical Director McNeill Club.

NO. 631 J STREET,

Corner of Seventh, SACRAMENTO.

Fine Table Wines

From our Celebrated Orleans Vineyard.

Produce of the
ECLIPSE
CHAMPAGNE,
530 Washington St.
SAN FRANCISCO.

CHAMPAGNE

W. B. CHAPMAN,
123 California St. San Francisco.
SOLE AGENT FOR THE PACIFIC COAST

To be sold by all first-class Wine Merchants and Grocers.

Samples and Instructions for Self-measurement sent by mail on application.

L. RADLOFF,
LADIES' TAILOR,
218 POST STREET, SAN FRANCISCO.
Tailor Made Suits a Specialty.

A. AITKEN,

PREMIUM PIONEER MARBLE AND GRANITE WORKS

423 J Street, bet. 4th and 5th, Sacramento.

Costic Tile, etc. Cemetery lots enclosed with Granite. All kinds of work done in Italian and Vermont Marble. Direct importer of Scotch and Eastern Granite Monuments. Also, Marble, Slate, Wooden and Iron Mantels, direct from manufacturers, at Reduced Prices. Call and examine.

The Cry of the Dreamer.

I am tired of planning and toiling
In the crowded hives of men,
Heart-weary of spoiling and building
And spoiling and building again.
And I long for the dear old river
Where I dreamed my youth away;
For a dreamer lives forever,
And a toiler dies in a day.

I am sick of the showy seeming
Of a life that is half a lie;
Of the faces lined with scheming,
In the throng that hurries by.
From the sleepless thought's endeavor
I would go where the childre play;
For a dreamer lives forever,
And a toiler dies in a day.

I feel no pride, but pity
For the burdens the rich endure;
There is nothing sweet in the city
But the patient lives of the poor.
Oh, the little hands so skillful,
And the child mind choked with weeds,
The daughter's heart grow willful;
And the father's heart that bleeds.

No, no! from the street's rude bustle,
From trophies of meat and stage,
I would fly to the wood's low rustle
And the meadow's kindly page.
Let me dream as of old by the river,
And be loved for the dreamer's sake;
For a dreamer lives forever,
And a toiler dies in a day.

—John Boyle O'Reilly.

The Progressive Peanut Party.

The progressive peanut party is an offshoot of the progressive parties of one sort and another, and is capable of great development on the lines of fun and pleasure. The glory and honor of inventing the original "peanut party" is claimed by a wise editor from Boston, who now caps the climax by evolving the "progressive peanut party," and explaining it by means of a pleasant little story.

The dramatis personae introduced into the story are a Miss Thornton, Mrs. Alden, her daughter May and a 13-year old boy, her son, and the party is intended for a surprise to May.

The preparations might seem a good deal of work, but it was all so novel that it was really delightful planning, and the only difficulty was in keeping it all out of sight.

For the invitations, the material might excite surprise in the uninitiated. Some good-looking peanuts, carefully split in two; a surprisingly small quantity of smooth, white note paper; a roll of narrow pink ribbon; a sheet of cotton batting; one of wrapping paper and postage stamps, the last requisite.

It had been a pleasant task to make the list of friends to be invited, and now the note paper is cut into strips, hardly more than an inch in width, and inscribed in a small hand-writing:

Mrs. Alden requests the pleasure of your company at a Progressive Peanut Party, on Thursday evening, January 10, at 8 o'clock, to surprise her daughter, Miss May R. Alden.
74 Glendon St., —, 1889.

The strip of paper is then rolled tightly and inclosed in an empty peanut shell tied together with ribbon.

To send this unique invitation safely through the mail it is carefully wrapped in cotton and inclosed in a roll of paper long enough to give room for the postage stamp to be cancelled at the office without crushing the peanut.

When these queer little rolls are sealed at both ends and directed the "progression" has fairly begun.

Miss Thornton had a plan in mind for two games, one a "Cinderella" game, suggested by the resemblance of the split peanut shell to a slipper, and by the idea of having quotation cards cut in two and matched again.

The verses chosen were all from Tennyson, and were quite appropriate. Two of them, taken from the "Sleeping Palace," even made reference to "the fairy prince."

The lines were written on correspondence cards, leaving a wide margin at the top for the half shells, which were attached with thread and needle, after the cards were cut in two vertically.

The first or left hand halves were placed on one tray, intended for the "princes," and the other halves to match on another tray, to be passed to the ladies.

A game of "Princess" to follow this is quite original. Let it be reserved till we come to the party itself.

Very pretty Japanese napkins were bought for 60 cents a hundred; some of them were kept for the table and the rest made into bags, with peanuts for tassels.

Meanwhile people are wondering what a "progressive peanut party" is like, and it is sure to be a genuine surprise, to the guest at least.

As for May, a perverse little peanut slipped from Mrs. Alden's pocket to the floor and revealed itself to the very eyes it should have hidden from.

May was in high glee and announced at the tea-table that she was going to have a party, but no amount of quizzing on her part would let her further into the secret. Neddie had been commissioned to buy a peck of peanuts and all was ready.

The company arrived by twos and threes, and every pause in the light chat with which they stilled themselves showed expectant faces and glances about the room, but still no peanuts.

Soon, however, one of the young men was detailed for duty, and entered the room bearing an immense old-fashioned tray heaped with the Japanese bags, which were passed with the remark: "If we get any peanuts before the evening is over we will need something to keep them in."

Directly a maid came in with two trays of the long expected, the delectable nut, and set them down at the further end of the room; evidently the time was not yet.

The "Cinderella" game took but little time, but made everybody acquainted, as each "prince" started with a slipper and quotations, trying every lady's card, till he found the tiny shoe to match and the writing to finish his lines. The cards were kept as souvenirs.

Now for the "Princess" game.

"It will be necessary," said the leader, "to choose a princess. Hers will be the easiest part in the game, as she has only to preside and dispense the royal bounty."

"She must be popular, pretty and piquant, precise, prim and petite; one who will promulgate progressive principles and be particularly partial to punctual people who are promptly in their places."

Amid general merriment, Miss Gertrude Whitman, a petite young lady, was formally elected to this high rank.

"Now the princess must appoint a page." Choosing quickly, the princess responded, "I will appoint Mr. Pepperell."

This same Mr. Pepperell made a very good page, in which position he soon became the life of the company.

He was instructed to ask of each person in the room three questions, "Your appellation, place of abode, and what presents do you bring the princess?"

In the answer, the initial "P" must be duly respected, and no one will be presented who brings less than three presents.

Patty Pettengill, from Pimlico, provided pearls, pinks and plums; Pomona Patch, of Podunk, had pumpkins, pugs and pollywogs; Polly Peterkin, from Palmyra, brought prunes, palms and pistachio nuts, the only wonder being how Polly ever came to travel so far.

Quick wits were being tried to the utmost when Publius Pavinus declared himself from Palermo, and Paul Putnam modestly hailed from the Point of Pines, with pickles, peppercorns and peanuts.

The princess, well provided with peanuts, had generously bestowed the coin of her realm upon these devoted subjects as she made the rounds, following her page.

Then the Perkinses, Putnams, Proctors, Peterkins and all were pompously presented at court. An amusing mistake was made; the lady from Podunk was introduced as from Paris, with a decided French intonation.

Miss Whitman had consented to sing, and was not taken unawares when it was announced that the princess would preside at the piano. The evening was delightfully spent and "Lotto" was quite a success, when the series of surprises had passed.

An invitation to the dining-room, ostensibly to finish the peanuts, revealed a greater variety in confections, and surely a better-natured set of people never were gathered than those who re-entered the parlor, where a stream of conversation and more music made the moments fly till the good-nights were said, and "Mat's Bright Idea," so happily marked out, had certainly made a pleasant time for all.

Philosophy of the Day.

The degrees of luck are so various that they can be applied to all circumstances. Wisdom waits to be asked for advice.

Truths differ. Sometimes they are told to a man's face, and sometimes behind his back. The truth about some men is not told until after they are dead.

Vanity produces corns and vexations of spirit.

Trusts are combinations of men and corporations that cannot trust one another.

If every man could have his way, the world would be almost depopulated.

Some men discipline themselves to death. Experience gets there every time. Worry kills more men than wars.

A woman tired of hearing of love is tired of living.

Men would be less wicked if they would hunt for fewer opportunities.

Great men can outgrow nicknames.

Sometimes it is wiser to beg pardon than to fight. The other fellow may be bigger, and a black eye is a cloud.

The man that never knows the time of day is always too late or too early to wait.

The man that guesses at probabilities often overreaches the man that waits for the truth.

Many a man lives on the reputation others make for him.—New York Sun.

Once, while examining a class of little boys, the late Canon Evans asked, "What was the character of George IV? No response. He tried to simplify the question—still no reply. At length he came to one small boy nearly at the bottom of the class, who was all eagerness lest the answer he knew so well would be taken from him. "Well, my little man, what have you to say of George IV?" "Oh, please, sir, I know. Please, sir, he was given to immortality and vice." Right to a "t," said the examiner: "go up."

Free Trade and Pauperism.

The population of the city London is now, according to the most reliable estimates, 4,250,000. Of these 4,250,000 people fully 900,000, or something over 20 per cent., are at present in receipt of some form of pauper relief. Imagine for an instant a condition of the labor market in New York and Brooklyn, or any of the more populous cities of this country, which should make virtual paupers of more than one-fifth of their population. Yet precisely this condition now exists in the metropolis of England, the one great nation of the world that has developed and persistently maintained a policy of radical free trade.

FRIEND & TERRY

LUMBER CO.

Wholesale and Retail Lumber Dealers, Also Shakes, Bolts, Ties, Doors, Windows, Blinds and Screens. Main Yard and Office, No. 1310 Second Street. Branch Yard, corner Twelfth and J Sts. P. O. Box 233. E. J. Holt, Manager. Sacramento

Root, Neilson & Co.

UNION IRON WORKS, FRONT STREET, Between N and O, Steam Engines and Boilers Built to Order. Steamboat and Quartz Machinery Constructed, Fitted up or Repaired. Castings and Machinery of every description.

Dissolution of Copartnership.

Notice is hereby given to all concerned that the firm of SMITH & MUIR, Plumbers and Gas-fitters, at 412 J street, is this day dissolved by mutual consent. The business will be carried on at the old stand by A. M. SMITH, who is now the sole proprietor of said business. All accounts due said firm are payable to A. M. SMITH, who is authorized to receipt for the same, and all debts of said firm will be paid by him. Sacramento, June 26, 1889.

All claims against the firm to be presented at once, and all parties indebted to the firm will please call and settle. A. M. SMITH. A. J. MUIR.

O'BRIEN'S, 607 J.

SWEEPING REDUCTION IN LADIES' SHOES.

Best French Kid, hand turn, worth $7, reduced to $6. Ladies' French Kid Button, low heel, long vamp, worth $5, reduced to $4. Misses' and Children's Canvas Shoes reduced 25 per cent.

GEORGE T. BOYD,

Manufacturer of

Pure Candies and Ice Cream

Temple of Sweets,

907 K Street, next to Odd Fellows' Temple, SACRAMENTO, CAL.

A. J. MUIR,

PLUMBER,

—Gas and Steam Fitter.—

Being a practical plumber, I can guarantee all work.

810 K STREET,

Telephone 226.

SACRAMENTO, CAL.

ALBERT GRUBBS,

No. 1417 Fourth Street,

Will do all kinds of House Cleaning, Lay Carpets, Whitewashing, and everything in that line.

He also has the only wagon for the REMOVAL OF DEAD ANIMALS, and any orders left at his place of business will receive prompt attention.

Remember the address!

No. 1417 Fourth Street, Sacramento, Cal.

CHANGED HANDS.

SACRAMENTO EXCHANGE,

(Formerly Wm. Gamble's.)

1012 SEVENTH STREET.

Fine Wines. All the celebrated brands of Liquors and Cigars. ROBERT ALLEN, Formerly of Agricultural Park.

L. K. Hammer

THE LEADING

MUSIC DEALER.

AGENT FOR

Chickering
Pianos

Largest Stock of Musical Instruments in the City.

No. 820 I STREET.

REEVES & LONG, UNDERTAKERS.

609 J Street, bet. Sixth and Seventh.

WE KEEP ON HAND A COMPLETE Stock of Coffins and Caskets; also, Shrouds of every description. Orders from city or country receive prompt attention, day or night. EMBALMING done in the best manner; and at reasonable rates.

Patronize Home Industry!

CITY & BREWERY

FRANK RUHSTALLER, Proprietor.

GENUINE

Pilsener Felsen Beer.

Corner Twelfth and H Streets,

Telephone 201.

SACRAMENTO.

CELEBRATED

WEINER LAGER BEER

CAPITAL BREWERY

LOUIS NICOLAUS,

Corner Twelfth and I Streets

SACRAMENTO.

COLUMBUS BREWERY

CHRIS. WAHL, Proprietor

Corner of Sixteenth and K Streets,

SACRAMENTO, CAL.

Agent for the Celebrated W. J. LEMP'S ST. LOUIS LAGER BEER

WISSEMAN'S SALOON,

Klebetz & Green's Old Stand,

1020 Fourth St., bet. J and K, Sacramento.

GEO. WISSEMAN, PROPRIETOR.

Families and Saloons supplied by bottle or keg.

Butchers' Home,

1020 J Street,

Between 10th and 11th, : Sacramento, Cal.

Fine Wines, Liquors and Cigars. Also, a

GOOD GLASS OF BEER.

JACOB GRUHLER, Prop'r.

California State Bank

DOES A GENERAL BANKING BUSINESS.

Draws Exchange on all the Principal Cities of the World.

OFFICERS:

PRESIDENT.....N. D. RIDEOUT
VICE-PRESIDENT.....FRED'K COX
CASHIER.....A. ABBOTT
ASSISTANT CASHIER.....W. E. GERBER

DIRECTORS:

C. W. Clarke, Jos. Steffens, N. D. Rideout,
Geo. C. Perkins, J. R. Watson, Frederick Cox,
W. E. Gerber.

W. R. STRONG & CO.

Founded 1852.

Fruit Packers
and Shippers.

PROPRIETORS OF

CAPITAL NURSERIES,
SACRAMENTO, CAL.

King Bros.

State Capitol Cash Grocery, 131 J Street,
corner Second.

Goods sold on small margin, strictly for cash. Best
Brands of Wines, Liquors and Cigars.

JAS. LONGSHORE,

SACRAMENTO TRUNK FACTORY,
530 K STREET.

Trunks, Valises & Bags Wholesale and Retail.

OSBORN & FOLGER

DEALERS IN

ICE and COAL, HAY and GRAIN.
New 10-ton Fairbanks' Hay Scales.

N. E. cor. Fifth and I Streets.
Wood Yard, 806 I Street.

Pacific Manuf'g. Co.

213 AND 215 J STREET.

Manufacturer of the CYCLONE Pumping and Geared Mills, and dealers in all kinds of
Pumps, Tanks, etc.

Waterhouse & Lester

DEALERS IN

IRON, STEEL, CUMBERLAND COAL,
Wagon Lumber and Carriage Hardware,
SACRAMENTO.

Earthquake and Fire Proof BUILDINGS

Constructed on my patent system. Perfect protection guaranteed. For estimates and particulars see
E. HAWES,
Twelfth and B streets, Sacramento.

PUMPS

Our Factory is the

Largest and Best Equipped in Northern California.

Our Designs are New and Original and Calculated for Every Variety
of Service.

CAPITAL IRON WORKS,

904 K Street, Sacramento.

CANCERS,

Uleers, Wens, Lumps, Exerescences, etc.,
Positively Cured or no Pay.
No Knife Used.

As to the success of my treatment, I give the names
of a few of the many cured. By addressing them
they will give any information required—and it pays
to investigate before being treated.
Mrs. O. C. Neilsen. Grass Valley, cancer.
John Service. Auburn, lupus.
Patrick Lynch. Sacramento, cancer.
Mrs. Jno. Shaw. Grass Val., birthmark removed.
N. S. Peck, S. P. R. R. Sacramento, cancer.
J. L. Woods. Washington. Yolo county, cancer.
John W. Douglas. Rocklin, cancer.
Miss Mamie Lynch. Yolo, tumor removed.
Chas. McLaughlin. Sacramento, cancer.
I might give many more. Those afflicted are invited to call and investigate for themselves. Consultation at office free. Send for circular.
Office, 426 K Street, Sacramento.
DR. J. H. SHIRLEY.

A. C. SWEETSER & CO.,

Real Estate & Insurance Brokers

Lands For Sale in all parts of the State.

Some Good Investments in School Lands.
Send for Catalogue.

Office, No. 1012 Fourth Street,

SACRAMENTO, CAL.

American Steam Laundry

NINETEENTH AND I STS.—WHITE LABOR
only. Linen polished in the neatest manner.
We guarantee satisfaction. All ordinary mending,
sewing on buttons, etc., free of charge. Washing
called for and delivered to any part of the city.
Main Office at Sawtelle's Book Store, 708 and 710 J
street. Branch offices at all the Hotels.

RHOADS & TOWNSEND HOUSE

On European Plan.

Cor. Second and J Streets, Sacramento.

ARTHUR MILLER, PROPRIETOR.

CAPITAL ALE VAULTS.

Established in 1870, and still maintains the same reputation for keeping the best WINES, LIQUORS and Cigars in the city. The finest Hot Lunch in the city from 11 to 2. Clam Chowder a specialty every night.

NAGELE & SVENSSON, Prop'rs.

Telephone 38.

302 J and 1005 Third st.

Wm. J. Hassett.

A. J. Johnston & Co.

PRINTERS,

410 J Street,

Sacramento

CHAS. MONTGOMERY, President. R. C. PELL, Vice-Pres. W. T. BRERETON, Sec. and Treas.

Bull and Grant Farm Implement Co.

DEALERS IN

AGRICULTURAL IMPLEMENTS,

Buggies, Carriages and Wagons.

T. A. LAUDER, MANAGER

211, 213 J STREET, SACRAMENTO.

FOR FRESH, CLEAN GROCERIES, GO TO

We invite a call at our new location, corner Eighth and K streets, where with our increased space we are enabled to give our large stock a fair display and our customers convenient room.

THE AMERICAN CASH STORE

Offers attractions to cash buyers of GROCERIES. A high quality of goods is carefully regarded.

O. F. WASHBURN, 801 K STREET.

PAUL GRAF,

Manufacturer of and
dealer in Saddles, Har-
ness, Robes, Collars,
Whips, Spurs, Brushes
Chrycombs, etc.

1130 J Street, near Twelfth
Repairing Neatly Done.
Harness Made to Order.

GRAND OPENING

OF

NOLAN & SON'S

Boot and Shoe

STORE.

603 J STREET, SACRAMENTO,

One door above Sixth.

Barrett & Berkey

PACIFIC RESTAURANT,
OYSTER HOUSE AND
WINE PARLORS
701 J Street, cor. 7th.

B. Ruhl

Bookbinder, Paper Ruler and

Blank Book Manufacturer.

Periodicals, Magazines, Music, and all kinds of Binding neatly done at the lowest prices.

No. 409 J STREET,

SACRAMENTO.

A. L. HART,

ATTORNEY-AT-LAW

Sutter Building, cor. 5th and J.

W. A. ANDERSON,

ATTORNEY-AT-LAW,

No. 209 J Street,

Sacramento.

W. A. GETT, JR.,

Attorney at Law,

Southwest Corner of Seventh and J Streets,
SACRAMENTO, CAL.

F. F. TEBBETS, DENTIST.

No. 914 SIXTH STREET,

Bet. I and J, west side, opp. Congregational Church.

DR. J. A. WELDON,

Dentist,

Cor. Eighth and J Streets, over Drug Store,
Teeth extracted without pain.

DR. H. H. PIERSON,

SURGICAL & AND MECHANICAL & DENTIST

511 J Street, bet. 5th and 6th.

Gas administered for the painless extraction of teeth.

Bainbridge Business College

J. C. BAINBRIDGE, PRINCIPAL.

1017 J Street, Sacramento. Send for Circular.

Joseph Hahn & Co., PHARMACISTS,

S. W. cor. Fifth and J Streets, Sacramento.
CHOICE PERFUMERIES, Etc.

Prescriptions carefully compounded, at all hours.

FIRE! ACCIDENT! LIFE!

—Insurance a Specialty.—

COMBINED ASSETS, - 50 MILLIONS.

Best in the World!

Royal, Norwich-Union & Lancashire,
Of England.

See my list of policy-holders and my prices.

"TRAVELERS," of Hartford, Conn. Everybody
knows the name. I sell only first-class policies.

C. H. DENTON, 628½ J Street.

BOOTS AND SHOES
made to order. Boots,
$5 to $11. Shoes, $4 to
$9. Ladies' Shoes, best quality French Kid, $5
to $7.

REPAIRING DONE
at lowest prices.

NONE BUT BEST
mechanics employed.

WE GUARANTEE
to make perfect fitting
to the worst of crooked
and crippled feet.

COMPETE WITH
any shoes on the market.

216 J Street

—AND—

208 K Street,

SACRAMENTO.

A. CASELLI

& COMPANY.

$500 REWARD.

PURSUANT TO A RESOLUTION OF THE BOARD
of Supervisors of Sacramento county, adopted May 7, 1889, said Board will pay the sum of Five Hundred Dollars ($500) for evidence leading to the arrest and conviction of any party illegally carrying on the business of hydraulic mining on the American river
or its tributaries, in any and all mines or claims
which have been heretofore enjoined by any Court of competent jurisdiction; provided, however, that said
Board will pay but one reward for the arrest and conviction of a person or persons operating the same mine or claim.

Attest:

F. F. TEBBETS,
Chairman of the Board of Supervisors.
W. B. HAMILTON, Clerk of Board.

[SEAL]

NOTICE TO FRUITMEN!

Keep your trees free from scale and your apples
from being wormy by the use of

Warner's Scale & Insect Exterminator

FOR SALE BY

G. T. NOE, - - DRUGGIST,
AUBURN, CAL.

Put up in one-half gallon and quart cans.

A Flag of Truce.
Nay, you have frowned now,
Unkilt that threatening brow,
Put wrath away,
Now
While you may.
Life is too bare of bliss
That we our share should miss;
So make amends,
Kiss
And be friends. —Century.

Form in Literature.
It is easier business to disparage literature than to produce it; easier to undervalue style than to acquire it. However, that indefinable distinction which we call style is quite capable of taking care of itself. A page of prose or verse without this quality is like a man without good manners; he may be a person of excellent intentions, but he is not desirable company, and ultimately finds himself dropped. A notable thing in every work—poem, history or novel—that has survived its own period is perfection of form. It is that which has kept it. It is the amber that preserves the fly. I have no doubt that thousands of noble conceptions have been lost to us because of the inadequacy of their literary form. Certain it is that many thoughts and fancies, of no great value in themselves, have been made imperishable by the faultlessness of their setting. For example, if Richard Lovelace—whose felicities, by the way, were purely accidental—had said to Lucasta: "Lucasta, my girl, I couldn't think half so much of you as I do if I didn't feel it my duty to enlist for the war. Do you catch on?" If Richard Lovelace, I repeat, had put it in that fashion, his commendable sentiment would have been forgotten in fifteen minutes; but when he said—
I could not love thee, dear, so much Loved I not honor more—he gave to England a lyric that shall last longer than the Thames embankment. The difference in the styles of these two addresses to Lucasta illustrates just the difference there is between literature and that formless commonplace which certain of our critics suppose to be life.—July Atlantic.

The Human Breath a Poison.
The Paris correspondent of the Medical Press and Circular reports that at the last meeting of the Academie des Sciences Professor Brown Sequard referred to some experiments he had conducted with a view to determine what, if any, were the toxic effects of the human breath.
In condensing the watery vapor coming from the human lungs he obtained a poisonous liquid capable of producing almost immediate death. The poison is an alkaloid (organic), and not a microbe or a series of microbes, as might have been imagined.
He injected this liquid under the skin of a rabbit, and the effect was speedily mortal. The animal died without convulsions; the heart and large vessels were engorged with reddish blood, contrary to what is observed after ordinary death, when the quantity of blood is moderate and of a dark color.
In conclusion this eminent physiologist said that it was fully proved that respired air contained a volatile toxic principle far more dangerous than the carbonic acid, which was one of its constituents, and that the human breath, as well as that of animals, contains a highly poisonous agent.

A Fable.
One day an elephant saw, for the first time, a stork standing upon one leg.
"Well, well," mused the elephant, "that seems very sensible. What is the use of my using all four legs at once? Better use one at a time, and rest the other three. May my tusks turn into vegetable ivory," continued the apt old pachyderm, "if I don't try that."
So up he jumped on one of his hind legs, and enjoyed the sense of triumph for about the one-thousandth part of a second, at the expiration of which period he lost his balance and slid down a sand hill with such speed that you couldn't tell where the elephant commenced or the landslide ended. Having rubbed an acre of sand out of his eyes, he said:
"The moral of this fable should teach you that imitation is the sincerest flattery; yet you should ever try to be yourself and no one else. It also might teach you the nobility of acknowledging honest defeat, and of remaining in the background and allowing another to assume the role of a dog upon which a novelty is tried."

It has been discovered that the men monopolize nearly all of the stammering in this world, few women being afflicted that way. This accounts for the rarity of suicide among the gentler sex; life is sweet to a woman as long as she can talk.
The Queen of England seldom drinks more than one small glass of wine at dinner, and afterward takes a few drops of good Scotch whisky.
Human beings are still being sold in the famine-stricken districts in China. A child under 10 brings from a dollar to a dollar and a half.

H. WACHHORST Leading Jeweler of Sacramento
SIGN OF THE TOWN CLOCK,
No. 315 J STREET, SACRAMENTO.

W. D. Comstock, 501 -- 507 K, cor. Fifth

On Exhibition, THE LARGEST AND BEST SELECTED STOCK.
FAIR DEALING! LOW PRICES!

GENSHLEA BROS. 624 J ST.
Strictly High Grade Goods in all Lines.

TRY THE LA ROSA ESPANOLA KEY WEST CIGAR.
FIREWORKS And FLAGS, Wholesale and Retail.
Country Orders Solicited.
NATHAN & DeYOUNG, 205 K St.

Just Received! Immense Assortment!
LATEST STYLES! LOWEST PRICES!
PERFECT FIT GUARANTEED.
420 J STREET, SACRAMENTO.
NICOLL, THE TAILOR,
LATEST PATTERNS OF
Foreign & Domestic Woolens
For the season of 1889. Samples, with Instructions for Self-Measurement, sent free.
Trousers (to order), from $5.00. Suits (to order), from $20.00.
NICOLL, THE TAILOR, 420 J ST., SACRAMENTO.
Branch of 816 Market street, San Francisco. Coast Branches: Los Angeles, 86 North Main street
Portland, 126 First street.

CURTIS BROS. & CO.
Wholesale and Retail Dealers in and Shippers of
all kinds of
Fruits, Vegetables
And GENERAL PRODUCE.
Careful attention paid to the selection and packing
of Choice Fruits and Vegetables for distant markets.
Goods delivered in city free.
308 and 310 K Street. - - Sacramento, Cal.

Klune & Floberg, WATCHMAKERS and JEWELERS
Agents for Rockford Watch Co.
No. 428 J STREET, SACRAMENTO.

F. KUEHNE & CO.,
NO. 906 NINTH STREET,
Between I and J, SACRAMENTO,
Carpenters and Contractors
Store and office work a specialty.
ICE BOXES for Breweries and Saloons always on hand and made to order.
Jobbing and Repairing promptly attended to.

R. H. PETTIT,
Wholesale and Retail Dealer in
IMPORTED & DOMESTIC CIGARS
Smoke the "Lone Fisherman,"
The BEST FIVE-CENT CIGAR in the Market.
NO. 225 K STREET.

JESSE SLAUGHTER,
Office, No. 1217 Fifth Street.
Plastering, Whitewashing, Cleaning of Cesspools, Etc.
Also, CITY SCAVENGER.
Burying of dead animals attended to at short notice.
Don't forget the number—1217 Fifth street, the old stand, where I have been for 25 years.

WESTERN HOTEL
209 to 219 K Street.
The Leading Hotel of Sacramento, Cal.
FREE BUS TO AND FROM HOTEL.
Meals, 25 Cents. Rooms, according to Location.
WM. LAND, Proprietor.

BELL & CO.,
GENERAL AUCTIONEERS.
Salesroom, 927 K Street, Sacramento, Cal.
Regular Salesdays—Wednesdays and Saturdays at 10
o'clock A. M.
Assistants—W. T. Crowell, Real Estate; J. Pulvermacher, Bookkeeper; J. Lambert, Furniture and Stock.
Particular attention paid to sales of real estate,
house sales, and sales of farms, stock, etc.
Highest price paid for all kinds of household goods.

BAKER & HAMILTON,
San Francisco and Sacramento,
Importers and Jobbers of
Hardware, Iron, Steel, Coal, Powder,
MACHINERY
And Agricultural Implements.
Send for Catalogue.

RAILROAD TIME TABLE.
Southern Pacific Company
PACIFIC SYSTEM.
June 26, 1889.
Trains LEAVE and are due to ARRIVE at
SACRAMENTO.

Lv.	Trains Run Daily.	Arr.
7.00 A	Calistoga and Napa	11.40 A
4.05 P	Calistoga and Napa	8.30 P
11.00 P	Ashland and Portland	3.40 A
5.05 P	Deming, El Paso and East.	7.05 P
7.30 P	Knight's Landing	7.55 A
4.30 A	Marysville (Mixed)	4.25 P
9.00 A	Los Angeles	9.55 A
9.00 P	Second Class, Ogden and East.	6.30 A
10.30 P	Central Atlantic Express.	3.40 P
3.00 P	Ogden and East.	9.50 A
3.00 P	Oroville	3.40 A
11.00 P	Red Bluff via Marysville	9.50 A
10.40 A	Redding and Sisson via Willows.	4.05 P
4.00 A	San Francisco via Benicia.	10.40 P
7.00 A	San Francisco via Benicia.	8.30 P
4.05 P	San Francisco via Benicia.	10.10 P
10.00 A	San Francisco via Steamer	26.00 A
11.20 A	San Francisco via Livermore	2.25 P
3.05 P	San Francisco via Benicia.	11.40 A
11.20 A	San Jose	2.25 P
9.00 A	Santa Barbara	9.55 A
5.05 P	Santa Barbara	7.05 P
7.00 A	Santa Rosa	11.40 A
4.05 P	Santa Rosa	8.30 P
9.00 A	Stockton and Galt.	7.05 P
5.05 P	Stockton and Galt.	9.55 A
9.00 P	Truckee and Reno	6.30 A
10.30 P	Truckee and Reno.	3.40 P
8.30 A	Colfax	5.00 P
7.00 A	Vallejo	11.40 A
4.05 P	Vallejo	7.30 P
12.15 P	Folsom and Placerville (Mixed)	10.35 A
7.15 A	Folsom and Placerville	3.45 P
5.20 P	Folsom	6.50 A

*Sunday excepted. †Sunday only. ‡Monday ex-
cepted. A for morning. P for afternoon.
A. N. TOWNE, Gen'l Manager.
T. H. GOODMAN, Gen'l Pass. and Ticket Agent

H. K. WALLACE & CO.
NO. 920 K STREET,
Sacramento Stove House.
Headquarters for Plumbing, Gas and Steam Fitting.
Galvanized Iron Tanks of all sizes made to order.

Edwin K. Alsip & Co.
ESTABLISHED 1860.
REAL ESTATE
AND INSURANCE AGENTS.

FARMING LANDS A SPECIALTY.
Catalogues issued monthly.
No. 1015 Fourth Street, Sacramento.

Gregory Bros. Co.
Established 1852.
COMMISSION MERCHANTS,
Packers and Shippers of California Fruit and Produce,
126 and 128 J STREET,

San Francisco Office, 313 Davis St. SACRAMENTO.
MISS A. E. VOTAW,
Dealer in

French Millinery
523 J STREET, SACRAMENTO.
Careful and prompt attention paid to country orders.

ANGLO-NEVADA ASSURANCE CORPORATION
OF SAN FRANCISCO.
FIRE.—Cash Capital, $2,000,000—MARINE.
Sacramento Branch:
No. 1018 SECOND STREET.
JOSEPH STEFFENS, Manager. HOWARD KIMBROUGH, Local Agent.

Hotfilter & Grafmiller,
MANUFACTURING JEWELERS,
Jewelry made to order. Watches, Clocks and Jewelry
Repaired and Warranted.
No. 1026 Sixth Street, Sacramento.

R. DAVIS,
NOTARY PUBLIC,
Real Estate and Insurance Agent.
Representing the following companies:
Manchester of England; Caledonian of Edinburgh,
Scotland; London and Lancaster, England.
1002 J Street, Sacramento.

Restaurant de France,
FAURE & BECKER, PROPRIETORS.
(Successors to L. Payen.)
No. 427 K Street, Near Metropolitan Theater.
Family Entrance on Fifth Street.
Catering to Families, Banquets and Wedding Parties
a specialty.

THEMIS

Vol. I.

SACRAMENTO: SATURDAY, JULY 27, 1889.

No. 23.

THEMIS: published weekly, by A. J. Johnston & Co. Publication Office, 410 J Street. Subscription—One year, by mail, $3 00; six months, by mail, $1 50, in advance; per month, by carrier, 25 cents. (Entered at the Post Office at Sacramento as second-class matter.)

The admission of the four new States—North and South Dakota, Montana and Washington—recalls the interesting history of the Louisiana purchase in 1803. By this concession the United States acquired a territory of 1,171,931 square miles—the largest area received under any treaty. Under the treaty with Great Britain of September 3, 1783, we acquired 827,844 square miles; under that with Spain of February 22, 1819, 59,268 square miles; under that with Texas of March 2, 1845, 376,133 square miles; under that with Mexico of February 2, 1848, 545,783 square miles; under that with Mexico of December 30, 1853, 45,535 square miles; and under that with Russia of March 30, 1867, 577,390 square miles.

The territory embraced in the Louisiana purchase originally belonged to the French, but was lost under the weak rule of Louis XV, and passed into the hands of Spain. She continued in possession until 1800, when Napoleon Bonaparte concluded a treaty with Charles IV, by which the entire territory again became the property of France. In the United States this transfer was regarded with regret and apprehension. The settlers beyond the Alleghanies, who were compelled to export their products through the lower Mississippi or lose it, had been for many years hostile to the obstructive regulations of the Spaniards, who had possession of the outlet of that important stream. There was, at one time, a disposition quite strongly manifested in Congress to seize New Orleans, and a large army of volunteers could have been easily raised in the Mississippi valley to march against that city. However, the prudence of Mr. Jefferson restrained every movement that might involve us in a war with Spain. This far-sighted statesman foresaw the advantage which the astute and selfish Napoleon gained by the reacquiring by France of this important territory and the control of the most important artery of commerce on the American continent. Upon learning of the transfer he wrote, under date of April 18, 1802, to Mr. Livingston, our Minister at the French Court, as follows:

The cession of Louisiana and the Floridas by Spain to France, works most sorely on the United States. On this subject the Secretary of State has written to you fully, yet I cannot forbear recurring to it personally, so deep is the impression it makes on my mind. It completely reverses all the political relations of the United States, and will form a new epoch in our political course. * * * There is on the globe one single spot, the possessor of which is our natural and habitual enemy. It is New Orleans, through which the produce of three-eighths of our territory must pass to market; and, from its fertility, it will, ere long, yield more than half of our whole produce, and contain more than half of our inhabitants. France, placing herself in that door, assumes to us the attitude of defiance. Spain might have retained it quietly for years. Her pacific dispositions, her feeble state, would induce her to increase our facilities there, so that her possession of the place would be hardly felt by us, and it would not, perhaps, be very long before some circumstances might arise, which might make the cession of it to us the price of something of more worth to her. Not so can it ever be in the hands of France. * * * Circumstances will render it impossible that France and the United States can continue long friends, when they meet in so irritable a position. They, as well as we, must be blind if they do not see this; and we must be very imprudent if we do not begin to make arrangements on that hypothesis. The day that France takes possession of New Orleans fixes the sentence which is to restrain her forever within her low water mark.

Minister Livingston received instructions to, if possible, secure a treaty of cession, and James Monroe was sent to reinforce him by the President, in the spring of 1803. Before Monroe reached France another portentous war cloud was hanging over Europe. Bonaparte foresaw that in a conflict with England he would certainly lose his newly acquired territory, and determined to place it beyond the reach of British power. On April 10, 1803, he called in two of his trusted advisers and said to them: "The conquest of Louisiana would be easy. I have not a moment to lose in putting it out of their (meaning the British) reach." The discussion went far into the night; the two ministers differed in their views. At daybreak another conference was held. Dispatches were received from London, which clearly foreshadowed war. After reading the dispatches, Bonaparte said:

Irresolution and deliberation are no longer in season. I renounce Louisiana. It is not only New Orleans that I will cede; it is the whole colony, without any reservation. I know the value of what I abandon. I renounce it with the gravest regret. To attempt obstinately to retain it would be folly. I direct you to negotiate this affair with the envoy of the United States. Do not even await the arrival of Mr. Monroe. Have an interview this very day with Mr. Livingston. * * * But I require a great deal of money for this war. I will be moderate. I want $50,000,000 for Louisiana.

Bonaparte afterward added:

Perhaps it will be objected that the Americans will be found too powerful for Europe in two or three centuries; but my foresight does not embrace such remote fears. Besides, we may hereafter expect rivalries among the members of the Union. The confederations, which are called perpetual, only last till one of the contracting parties finds it to his interest to break them.

Monroe arrived two days after this conversation, and on April 30th the treaty of cession was formally concluded. The representatives of the United States had no authority to negotiate for so vast a territory, but they realized that hesitation would be fatal, and boldly assumed the responsibility. The cost to the United States was $15,000,000.

The country thus acquired forms to-day the States of Louisiana, Arkansas, Missouri, Iowa, Kansas, Nebraska, Minnesota west of the Mississippi, Colorado north of the Arkansas, besides the Indian Territory and the territories of Dakota, Wyoming and Montana. While not included in the purchase, it may be fairly said that through it we acquired Oregon and the territories of Washington and Idaho. Out of this domain are now about to be carved four new States. It would seem almost incredible, but it was a fact, that a strong party in the United States denounced President Jefferson most bitterly for having effected this purchase. This far-seeing and patriotic statesman, however, paid no attention to these denunciations. He immediately proclaimed the treaty, and gave to it the broadest possible construction. While in his public writings he based its importance on the fact that it would secure for our government the control of the gateway of the Mississippi river, yet it is very apparent that that was but one of the considerations that moved him. The territory now called Oregon was then but little known. Navigators had been unsuccessful in finding a harbor on its inhospitable shore. In May, 1792, Captain Gray, of Boston, entered the mouth of the river which he called "Columbia,"—the name of his vessel. The United States government then laid claim to the region drained by that river and its tributaries. In 1804 Jefferson sent out an expedition under the command of Lewis and Clarke. They carefully explored the sources of the Missouri, then crossed the Rocky Mountains, and went down the Columbia river to the Pacific ocean. The territory which they explored was claimed by our government by virtue of discovery. One of the important objects aimed at was to prevent, as far as possible, England from obtaining a foothold on the western side of the continent. That power always coveted the territory that now forms our Pacific States, and even as late as 1846 an understanding was had between the British and Mexican governments for the cession of California to the former at the first intimation of hostilities between the United States and Mexico. The scheme was thwarted by what may be termed the slightest accident.

It is impossible to conjecture what would have been the result to the United States, had it not been for these actions of President Jefferson. In the light of subsequent events, it is reasonable to conclude that the bulk of the territory west of the Mississippi would have long since passed into the hands of England. It is doubtful if we could have maintained ourselves with the British flag flying over the immense territory to the north and west of us—particularly after the discovery of gold in California—and Mexico menacing us from the south.

Lately, in New Jersey, a woman was indicted as a common scold. This was under one of the old blue laws. About a year ago another woman was tried for the violation of one of these exacting enactments which remained on the statute books, who was defended by Bob Ingersoll. A conviction, however, followed, and the illustrious anti-Christian was grandly eloquent in denouncing these puritanical and senseless laws, which were only the relics of by-gone days and illiberal minds. The punishment for a common scold was the ducking stool. It is not certain but that for a common scold and an uncommon scold, some means of repressing them should be devised, either for man or woman. We have the masculine common scold and the newspaper common scold, which need either the ducking stool or gags.

There are many queer laws yet remaining on the statute books of the older States, and the English enactments are prolific of the most absurd provisions which have never been repealed. Early in the present century a man was charged with murder in England, and escaped the penalty by challenging the King by champion to mortal combat. This was authorized by the old law of wager of battle, and the accused had a right to avail himself of its provisions. With regard to our intolerant blue laws, it was the idea of the people of those days that the church and the law should regulate and control the conduct of men and women, even to the style of clothing they should wear and what they should eat and drink. There is still an element of crankism in existence, and some people who insist upon the right to do the thinking for the people and to dictate their action. If the ducking stool is to be used at all, it should be on just such people, men and women.

Recently the government of Great Britain determined to introduce into the schools of Wales the study of the Welsh language. It seems that this action has been brought about by the demands of the people of that portion of the British Isles. Practically Wales is a lost nation, and its language is fast becoming extinct. It is a language which in this country is not spoken by children of Welsh parentage. It is true that it has a literature, but it will not be long before but very few will be able to read it. There may be some sufficient reason, however, that that language should be taught in the schools of that country, as a matter of respect for the Welsh people. From time to time there is an agitation in our country of the subject of the advisability of teaching modern foreign languages in our public schools. As we view it, the only result has been a useless outlay of money. It has been regarded as rather a fashionable matter to teach French here, upon the idea that it is a court language. In 1869 the study of German was introduced in the public schools of this city. The writer was a pupil in the first German class here. Twenty years have elapsed, and we do not believe that of the number of pupils who have been taught German since then, there are a dozen not of German parentage who can speak the language. Certainly the little good that has resulted practically from it does in no measure offset the thousands of dollars that have been expended for salaries of teachers, books, etc. In our judgment, we had better teach our children in the language of our country; it is much more creditable that, when they graduate, they are able to speak and write our language correctly, than that they emerge with a smattering of a foreign language that will never be of any particular value to them, and the acquisition of which but diverts their minds from studies which are really valuable in after life.

We believe that the education of our youth should be practical. We do not believe that education should be conducted on the principle of the bed of Procrustes and that all should be compelled to follow rigidly the same course of studies. We also believe that a liberal allowance should be made for the differences we all know to exist in the mentality of children. It has always struck us as cruel that a pupil who is a little dull in his studies should be required to suffer the terrible strain necessary to keep up with the brighter ones in the class. Our observation has been that in actual life some who were dull at school have made very marked successes, while others who were bright at school have made failures. There is such a thing again as over education.

We are not to be understood that a finished education is not a benefit, if bestowed upon one who has brains to use it; nor are we to be understood as deprecating the most thorough training of our youth. Of our Presidents, the early instruction of Washington was domestic and scanty. His father died when he was ten years of age, and he had no opportunity for acquiring a thorough literary and scientific education. Jackson was born a few days after the death of his father, and his education was extremely limited. Van Buren received only the advantages of the county school at Kinderhook. Polk had but a rudimentary education when he entered into the study of law. The education of Taylor was indifferent. Fillmore only enjoyed the meager advantages of the schools in a country county in New York. Lincoln had no schooling, and whatever he learned was the result of his own energy and indomitable perseverance, and was without the aid of a schoolmaster. Johnson never attended school until his 17th year. It has been stated of him that he could read but indifferently at the time of his marriage, and that he derived his education by instructions from his wife.

An eminent physician announces that whisky is the cause of many cases of incurable blindness. The steady drinking of this spirit causes a dangerous disease to the eyes, called Amblyopia Potatorum, and it is the moderate drinker who becomes the victim of this disease, the man who takes his three or four glasses a day. The fellow who gets on periodical sprees is not so likely to contract this disease, because he generally becomes ultimately sick, and is relieved from the effects by nature. It is the respectable, moderate drinker, who never takes too much nor oversteps the bounds of decency, who exposes himself to the dire effect of the disease, and an incurable blindness. The moderate and steady use of quinine is also a cause in a great many instances of blindness.

A fish with his nose pointed toward Liverpool, and with an American flag in his belly, was caught recently as he was escaping from New York harbor. Whether he was a Fenian in disguise or an ambitious cod with a notion that he could become a man-of-war when he grew up, will never be known, as he died before disclosing his intentions. The interesting fact remains however, that his was about the only craft carrying the Stars and Stripes that has been seen outside of Sandy Hook for some time.

Young Heiress—"I am afraid it is not for me, but for my money, that you come here so often." Ardent Wooer—"You are cruel to say so. How can I get your money without getting you?"

THE VEILED CLIENT.

It was the gloomiest of gloomy days. There was not a redeeming feature about it. If it had only rained there might have been music in the drops; if it had snowed we could have "lived over" the beautiful poem; but it did neither, and now late in the afternoon the air was a thick, damp vapor, and the street ankle-deep with slush and mud that an unpaved western town supplies so bountifully and readily.

Then, again, the life of a young attorney is not always one whirl of excitement and pleasurable results. Not a living soul except a bootblack—just as if we should ever need bootblacks again—had entered the door that day. In vain had I tried to give my mind over to the arbitrary statutes, and then in despair sought the more inviting stimulants of Regina vs. Reynolds. Even the gossip of a great leading case failed to inspire me, and wearily I turned from my books to my thoughts, and from my thoughts to my gloom.

It was just then, before I had ascended to the realms of suicidal purpose—for I walk that way slowly—that the door knob hesitatingly, cautiously turned, and I was again hard at work, pen in hand, with one eye on the paper and the other on the door.

I won't make a diagnosis of just how fast my heart was beating, if peradventure the door should open, and somebody that was somebody should come in. I could endure the suspense no longer, and looked squarely up. The door had opened, and, though the evening shadows were gathering thick and fast, I could see that my visitor was in dress and manners a lady—the most significant word in the greatest of languages. Her veil concealed her face, but old or young, ugly or pretty, her thoughts probably were:

"Here's a young man—very young—he hasn't had much experience—don't think he ever did such work before—it would help him, but that don't help me—I had better—"

But I interrupted my own forebodings by springing to my feet, saying:

"Good evening, madam; step in. I'm through with the matter in hand—a little pressed now with term time upon us, but have an hour to spare to-day—such a dull day. Sit down!"

My first triumph was won, for she was seated.

Then I swept my books from me with an air of relief, as if any problem she might agitate would be child's play compared to what I had just passed through.

I had not yet so much as caught the color of her eyes, and couldn't but wonder why she kept her veil drawn so closely—unless she was meditating a sudden flight to the office of the baldheaded wretch across the way, who had a few gray hairs and more experience, you know, but a bad attack of rheumatism, too, thank heaven! which I devoutly trusted was keeping him home on so bad a day as this.

"I won't you to write a will," she suddenly began, in a half halting voice.

"Certainly, madam," I answered, nobly resolving to strengthen the faith within her.

I pulled half a quire of legal cap toward me, and thought of the solemn opening and the weighty formalities of its publication.

"It is to be my husband's will," she added. "He dared not come out on such a day as this." And she shivered so prettily that I was reconciled with the weather for the first time that day.

"Haden't I better come to your house?" I ventured to suggest.

"Oh, no! not now," she answered with a little sigh; "it might excite him too much. But he may be better to-night, and I will send the carriage for you then. It will not make any difference, will it, about the will being binding?"

Something told me she was peering anxiously at me.

"Of course, madam, if he then fully and voluntarily adopts it as his, it is just the same as if I took it all down from his own lips."

"Well, we want—he wants—to leave all his real and personal property to me, with full powers as executrix, and I am to take charge of his only child and make for her such allowance as I shall think wise."

"What is your daughter's name?"

"She is not my daughter," she answered, with the slightest token of gathering animation in her voice.

"Ah, yes; just so," said I, nervously fumbling with the paper. "She is your stepdaughter?"

"Yes, sir."

"What is her name? You see I must mention it."

"Mabel Cecil," she hesitatingly spoke.

"A deuced pretty name!" I remarked to myself.

"I wonder why she wants to stumble so over pronouncing it?"

Then I tried to forget all about it as I took up my pen and began—

"I—I—Ah! pardon me, madam, but what's your husband's name?"

What fools men are when a little excited, especially young lawyers, sitting up with an early case!

"Robert E. Cecil."

"I, Robert E. Cecil, of the county of Herkimer and State of ———, do make and publish this my last will and testament:

"I give, bequeath and devise to my dearly beloved wife—"

"Ah! pardon me, madam, but what is your name?"

"Lucy L. Cecil."

"To my dearly beloved wife, Lucy L. Cecil, all my real and personal property of whatsoever kind and nature, after the payment of all my just debts; and I hereby commit to her guardianship my only child, Mabel Cecil, for whom there shall be made such allowance and maintenance as to my beloved wife may seem fit."

"And I hereby appoint Lucy L. Cecil my sole executrix of this my last will and testament, hereby revoking all former wills by me made."

"In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand this third day of November, A. D., 187—."

"I suppose you understand," I undertook to explain, "that this will vests all your husband's property in you, and to leave your daughter's allowance to your discretion is to leave at law nothing in her own right. The provision is, in short, meaningless, except that it shows the testator had her in his mind when he made his will, and so far makes it all the more binding."

"Exactly!" She spoke with animation. "It's his wish—and I shall see that you are well paid for your trouble and counsel—the carriage will be here very soon." And she had gone as quickly as she had come.

That remark about payment had entered a very threadbare coat, and had struck right home.

"But it's too mean, all the same, pay or no pay," I growled, "to cut that girl off that way without a cent! But it's the old story and I can't help it!" and I sank back with a philosophical smile on my face.

Then—just in sport, in a fit of malignant satisfaction—I took up a second sheet of legal cap, and scribbled thereupon, with a formal opening and close, that this same Robert E. Cecil gave all his property to his dearly beloved daughter, Mabel Cecil, and left the lady of the veil where the law found her.

"But such is the history of the world!" I concluded, solemnly, "ever such; and what a gulf, deep, impassable, between what ought to be and what is! How I would like to bridge it over!" And I buttoned up my coat, and walking to the window, imagined I could see through the darkness the coming of the carriage of Madame Cecil.

The time dragged slowly, very slowly, and I never felt more genuine relief than in hearing heavy wheels grinding through the mud and slush, and a knocking at the door to notify me the carriage was ready.

I sprang into the carriage, and away we dashed through such darkness that I could not for the life of me discover to what portion of the town we were being driven. But in a very short time we came to a sudden halt, and the carriage door opened. The coachman conducted me up the brownstone steps, where the open door was already awaiting me, and I stepped into the dimly-lighted hall.

As I did so a lady, whose figure and manner told me she was Madame Cecil, glided from a side room, and with a little plaintive smile bade me follow her at once. But in that instant I read her face and perhaps her character. She might have been 35, only she didn't look it, with those brilliant black eyes, pearly teeth, and elegant manners; but behind all these I read the positive force that turned to good may save a country, but given to evil would sacrifice everything to success.

Noiselessly she glided over the heavy carpets, and as silently I followed her. She passed into the library, and from thence—as I instinctively felt—into the chamber of death; even elegant furniture and costly paintings and embroidered coverlets are not to overawe our destiny.

"Mr. Cecil, the lawyer has come," she softly said, as she stooped over the emaciated face of a silver-haired man.

"What? who?" as he started from a seeming stupor and looked wonderingly at me from his sunken eyes.

"He will read it to you now, Mr. Cecil." Adding in a low tone, "He is sinking rapidly; I fear you must hasten."

I felt that I must. I seated myself at his bedside, and as I did so I saw his lips tremble, and I believed they were breathing a name; I imagined that it was "Mabel."

Our boldest moves are born upon the spur of the moment.

"Mrs. Cecil, may I trouble you for a glass of water?" I asked, as I took out the will she had drawn.

"Quick, sir, quick!" said I, as I noticed his sunken eyes watching her hastening footsteps. "Do you want your daughter to have all your property, save what the law gives your wife?"

He started back from me as if he could not trust his own senses, or was doubting whether to put confidence in me; but he seemed to feel the necessity of doing so, and suddenly the dull eyes brightened with a momentary gleam of relief and joy as he clearly answered—

"Yes, yes? And God bless you!"

And I, too, was thanking Heaven for the whim that had led me to write two wills so very like in strength and appearance, and it was only the work of a moment to make the exchange, and just in time.

With Mrs. Cecil came the housekeeper and a man servant, and in their presence the dying man signed his name to the second will, and they witnessed it.

They had gone, and I started to go, when the old man pressed my hand, and I saw the tears gathering in his eyes. As I turned to go I involuntarily felt that the black eyes of Madame Cecil had witnessed all and suspected everything.

"I should like to see that will," she said, firmly, in a low voice.

"Some other time. He's dying, Mrs. Cecil."

"So much the greater reason, sir! Show it to me." I looked her one instant calmly and suggestively in the face, and then started for the door.

"Stop!" she cried, and a tiny, silver-mounted revolver gleamed in her hand.

"My God! Mrs. Cecil, you have killed him! He has died at your hands!" I cried, as I heard a strange sound behind me, and would have turned if all the pistols in the universe had been pointed at me.

The old man's arms had been lifted as if in prayer, but now sank withered upon the pillow, whilst his eyes stared at us in the rigidity of death. He was dead.

Instinctively Madame Cecil seemed to recognize that it was all over, and lowering the weapon, hissed at me between her pearly teeth:

"You've played me false—go! go! or I will shoot you."

And I went, gladly enough, from the brownstone front, with its treachery, its wickedness and avarice, into the dark night and muddy streets. But I had carried out the wishes of the poor, dragonized husband, and Mabel received her own. As soon after as her share of the estate could be obtained, the wretched woman disappeared from the neighborhood, and it was understood had sailed for Australia.

Although a young and almost briefless lawyer, I was appointed Mabel's guardian, and I so faithfully fulfilled my trust that after six years, when she was a little more than eighteen, she gave herself as well as her estate into my keeping; and as I write this, after my cozy tea, and as Mabel leans on the back of my chair watching the rapid strokes of the pen, she declares that I did not praise myself at all in the grand act of justice I did, and the courage I showed at the revolver's mouth, to sustain her rights.

The old historic houses of Washington are rapidly passing away. The march of improvement requires that more modern dwellings with greater conveniences shall take their place. There still exists, on the corner of Eighteenth street and New York avenue, a house that in its day was one of the most famous in that city. It has, because of its peculiar build, always been known as the "octagon house." It was built by John Tayloe, a rich Virginian, and the father of Benjamin Ogle Tayloe, whose residence is now occupied by Senator Don Cameron, on Lafayette Square. When the British burned the White House, in 1814, the Tayloe property was rented by the government for an executive mansion, and here it was that Mistress "Dolly" Madison gave her dinners and receptions until the White House was made habitable again. The Right Honorable Charles Bagot, a diplomat of large experience, was the English Minister to this country for the most of the time that Mrs. Madison resided in this house, and he wrote to a friend in London that although he had been stationed in most of the capitals of Europe, and, of course, had been most handsomely entertained, he had never spent pleasanter evenings than in the comparatively plain dwelling place of Mrs. Madison. A high compliment to the wife of the fourth President.

The Germans have a story which that home-loving people like to repeat: A father, when his daughter became a bride, gave her a golden casket with the injunction not to pass it into other hands, for it held a charm which, in her keeping, would be of inestimable value to her as the mistress of a house. Not only was she to have the entire care of it, but she was to take it every morning to the cellar, the kitchen, the dining-room, the library, the parlor, the bed-rooms, and to remain with it in each place for five minutes, looking carefully about. After the lapse of three years the father was to send the key, that the secret talisman might be revealed. The directions were followed; the key was sent; the casket was opened. It was found to contain an old parchment, on which was written these words: "The eyes of the mistress are worth one hundred pairs of servants' hands." The wise father knew that a practice of inspection followed faithfully for three years would become a habit and be self-perpetuating—that the golden casket and the hidden charm would have accomplished their mission.

Dr. Pillsbury—"How de do, doctor? What's the news?" Dr. Squills—"Nothing new; only I had an interesting case a few days ago." Dr. P.—"Yes? What was it?" Dr. S.—"I performed a wonderful operation on Mr. Fresh's boy's eye—little Johnny Fresh. He had a fearful case of cataract, and I saved the poor little fellow's eye." Dr. P.—"That's good. How's the boy?" Dr. S.—"Oh, the boy died."

The Stage.

[Under this caption will appear a fair and impartial criticism of the drama, actors, music, and all noteworthy matters pertaining to the stage.]

Renah, the Gypsy's Daughter, is the title of Ullie Akerstrom's new play. It will be done in this city during the season.

Henry E. Dixey's new play, The Seven Ages, will be produced first at the Walnut Street Theater, Philadelphia, September 23d.

Willie Edouin opened the Comedy Theater, London, recently, in a new three-act comedy, called Our Flat. The piece is well spoken of, and said to be very funny.

Edward Michael and N. C. Goodwin, Jr., have disagreed about the time for the production of J. W. Piggott's play, The Bookmaker, and probably Mr. Goodwin may not do that piece after all.

Eben Plympton has been engaged by Manager Ariel Barney to play the leading business with Julia Marlowe next season. The selection is a good one, as Mr. Plympton is a sterling and conscientious actor.

Miss Frankie Kemble says it is a wicked lie, and that she did not go to drive with Mr. Peters at Long Branch. Meanwhile, Edward Clayburg, Miss Kemble's husband, thinks the advertising is worth $10,000 for The Shanty Queen.

Gertie Granville Hart has been engaged for the soubrette rôle in Edgar Selden's Irish play, Will o' the Wisp. It is announced that Tony Hart will travel with his wife during the coming season, and it is thought that change of scene and the opportunity to meet his friends and old admirers will have a beneficial effect on his health.

The following is related as an actual occurrence during the presentation of Virginius by the amateurs of Macon. Those who have seen the play will doubtless remember the scene where the ashes of "Virginia," who has been killed by her father, after which the body is cremated, are brought on the stage in an urn. A young lady in the audience turned to her escort with the remark: "That's a crematory." "No," said he, "you are mistaken; that is not a crematory." "Well, I say it is," she insisted. "I guess I know a crematory when I see one." The curtain drops.

At the present time there exists no necessity for the actor to consume the midnight taper in studying a new part for the morrow evening's performance. All that is changed. During the run of the piece he has not, at the utmost, more than three hours' work before him out of the twenty-four. In this respect he enjoys a happy lot far in excess of the journalist, the lawyer, the physician, and almost all the devotees of the liberal professions.

George Alfred Townsend has discovered at Nantes, France, a genuine American negro named Sam Anderson, who is the chief of a wine shop and café-chantant. Sam is a native of South Carolina. He went to Europe with Jarrett & Palmer's Uncle Tom combination, and while in France married a French widow, the proprietor of a drinking-shop in Rennes, and afterward removed to Nantes. Sam is disgusted with the Gallic nation and is anxious to get back to New York, despite the lack of prejudice there which recognizes his right to marry a white woman.

A contemporary, writing of "the servant girl on the stage," says: "All good servant girls on the stage are Irish. All male visitors are expected to kiss the servant girl when they come into the house, and say, 'Do you know, Jane, I think you are an uncommonly nice girl—click.' They always say this. And she likes it. Years ago, when we were young, we thought we would see if they were the same off the stage, and when we called at a friend's house, we tried it on. The girl ran behind a sofa, screamed for help, and afterward sued us for $250 damages. We borrowed the money and paid her. Since then we have lost faith in the drama as a guide to the conduct of life."

It is elevating to the mind to witness a good drama, in the hands of artists. The Lyceum company gave us a splendid play with that true dramatic excellence seldom presented on our boards. The moral lessons taught by The Wife through the art of the members of this company were worth a thousand sermons. If those orthodox ministers who condemn the drama, could have witnessed this lifelike presentation—we mean that high, chivalrous life known to the educated, polished and humane—they might have had the scales removed from their eyes, clouds of intolerance cleared from their brains. The Wife is a particularly good drama—good from a moral sense. The deep emotion evinced by Georgia Cayvan in the title rôle teaches a lesson for young women that if followed would make the world better. Herbert Kiley enacted the dignified and manly statesman, whose sense of honor and chivalry showed a model man. The various characters of the play were in the hands of finished actors and actresses. Little Louise Dillon, as the soubrette, was simply perfect and won the hearts of the audience. Sweet Lavender was a contrast. Each member of the company was placed in a directly opposite rôle from that portrayed in The Wife. This was the evident design of the management to show the versatility of the company. The "Dick Phenyl" of W. J. Le Moyne, was a splendid piece of character acting. Miss Cayvan, as "Minnie Gilfillan" was the extreme from "Helen Truman," and disclosed the wide range of her dramatic art. The same can be said of Louise Dillon, who, as "Sweet Lavender" developed great emotional powers, as a contrast with the lively and vivacious "Kitty Ives." Who will say that the drama is declining while we have such art work as this company presents?

Professional Chat.

A well-known New England minister has refused the degree of D. D. from a famous American college, and declines to give his reason for this unprecedented step. The truth is, in all probability, that the reckless and unreasonable distribution of college degrees has made such an honor so cheap that its rejection has become a matter of necessity to self-respecting men. It is hardly to be wondered at that the New Englander referred to exclaims in tones of disgust, "Fiddle D. D."

A great many people have laughed over Dr. Talmage's absent-mindedness in going to Baltimore to deliver a lecture recently and finding that he had no engagement there at all. It is told of a prominent lawyer that he became so absorbed in a case he was preparing that he forgot to go to dinner. About 4 o'clock in the afternoon he said to his partner: "Something I ate for dinner must have disagreed with me; I feel such a gnawing sensation at my stomach." In trying to think what it was, he was reminded of the fact that he had eaten nothing. A man came across an item in a newspaper stating that a gold watch of a certain make and numbered 13,516 had been taken from a thief arrested the night before. Throwing down the newspaper, he exclaimed: "I believe that's my watch that was taken from that fellow." And he took out his watch and began to examine the number on the case. It is told of a certain English bishop that he was playing backgammon with a lady. In one hand he held the dice-box and with the other he accepted a glass of wine. He held them daintily poised in each hand while he finished a story he was telling his fair partner, when he astonished her by emptying the wine glass into the backgammon board and the dice-box into his mouth.

A New York lawyer tells the following anecdote: "Did you ever hear of a man charged with a criminal offense being impaneled on the jury selected to try him?" "Well, I had an experience of that kind. I had been retained to defend a man named David, who was charged of obtaining money by false pretenses, and, not being in court when the case was called, I was sent for. On arriving I found the jury in the box, but my client had disappeared, and I had searched the court-room and lobby in vain, when my assistant pointed him out in the jury box. Appreciating the dilemma David had got himself into, I asked the District Attorney to agree to a postponement, but he said 'no.' I told him if he knew as much as I did about the jury he would agree, and then he asked me if I had a man on the jury, and I called his attention to David. We explained quietly to Judge Larremore, who was on the bench, and the case went over, the jury being dismissed. In answer to my inquiries, my client said his name was called in making up the jury, and he did not know what to do, so he was sworn in, and he explained that he saw no harm in it, as he knew more about the case than anybody else did. I asked him what he would have done had the case been tried and the other eleven jurymen decided against him, and he replied: 'I would have disagreed with them and held out.' I found his name had been on the jury list, and by mere chance had come out at the wrong time, and the man appeared really to think he had no recourse but to serve on the jury that was to try him."

Book Chat.

An important "find"—a copy of the original edition of "Donatus"—has been made by Dr. Hochegger, at Innsbruck. It is thought it may throw light on the controversy between Germany and Holland regarding the priority of the invention of printing.

Frauk Carpenter, the traveler and newspaper correspondent, just back from a trip around the world, is an odd-looking chap, as slim as a fence rail, with somewhat ungainly figure, startling red hair and mustache, and homely face. He is a persistent and voluminous writer and a rapid talker. He lives in Washington.

"So you be reading law now?" "Yes." "Like it?" "No, sir-ee!" "How is that?" "Well, I'd read about half through Blackstone." "Yes." "Had a bookmark to keep my place." "Yes." "Some one stole the bookmark. I couldn't find my place, and had to go clear back to the beginning and read the dratted book all over again."

Cheap pirated editions of American books are said to be among the best selling books offered at the railway stations in India. A correspondent says he has bought Lew Wallace's "Fair God" for 15 cents, and "Ben Hur" for the same. Anna Katharine Green's "Leavenworth Case" is offered for 12 cents and the works of Uncle Remus are for sale in paper covers. All of Bret Harte's books are pirated, and Mark Twain's books are sold for a soug. Longfellow's poems can be had for a dime, and Emerson's essays, in cloth, for 20 cents. Frances Hodgson Burnett's novels are sold for one-fifteenth the price they bring in America.

It is stated that an innovation has been introduced in the Austrian army which merits to be adopted also in other places. It consists in the introduction of barrack libraries, intended to supply the soldiers with a selection of sound and useful reading for their leisure hours. Of course, there have been all along books in plenty, but chiefly those of a frivolous and unwholesome nature. This is now to be remedied by the new barrack libraries. Their introduction is due, not to the War Office or the Ministry of Instruction, but to a private association, the object of which is the improvement of education among the lower classes and also in the army.

Remarkable play of words on the works of the Wizard of the North: He had summoned Ivanhoe to Castle Dangerous, because Nigel and Count Robert of Paris, on the road to the Monastery, near St. Roman's Well, had thrown down the Red Gauntlet to the Pirate, who had stolen the Talisman from the Abbot of Waverly, who, with Peveril of the Peak, had gone to Kenilworth to consult the Black Dwarf with the Bride of Lammermoor; and after listening to the Lay of the Last Minstrel, sung by the Lady of the Lake, they had stopped at Woodstock to tell Anne of Gierstein that Gny Mannering had given the Heart of Midlothian to the Betrothed of the Highland Widow, who had been the Surgeon's Daughter, and was called the Fair Maid of Perth. Then Rob Roy, feeling in the pockets of the Antiquary, exclaimed "Great Scott! there is the Talisman." So the Wizard sent them all to Montrose.

A writer in Macmillan's Magazine says: I was looking not long ago at the manuscript of "Kenilworth," in the British Museum, and examined the end with particular care, thinking that the wonderful scene of Amy Robsart's death must surely have cost Scott some labor. They were the cleanest pages in the volume. I do not think there was a sentence altered or added to the whole chapter. And what is still more wonderful, he could dictate with the same rapidity. Three of his novels, and they are among his best—"A Legend of Montrose," "Ivanhoe" and "The Bride of Lammermoor"—were in great part dictated, the last entirely so, owing to ill health; but his amanuenses declared that they could hardly keep pace with him. During the progress of "The Bride of Lammermoor" his pain was sometimes such that, strong man that he was, he fairly screamed aloud, but with the next breath he would continue the sentence as though nothing had happened. On one occasion his agony was so great that he was begged to give over till it had passed. "Nay," was the answer, "only see that the doors are fast. I would fain keep all the cry as well as the wool to ourselves; but as to giving over the work, that can only be done when I am dead."

Anniversary of a Great Achievement.

To-day is the anniversary of one of the most memorable events in the history of the world—the laying of the telegraph cable across the Atlantic ocean, which was successfully accomplished July 27, 1866. It had early been declared by Prof. Morse and other distinguished electricians that no insuperable obstacle existed to the laying of submerged oceanic lines from continent to continent. It was not, however, until 1857 that an attempt was made to stretch a telegraphic wire across the bed of the Atlantic. This cable was carried half by the United States steamer "Niagara," and half by the British steamer "Agamemnon." They met in mid-ocean on June 26th; the former proceeded toward the American coast and the latter toward Ireland. The cable broke three times, and the attempt was abandoned. The following August it was renewed on a different plan. The shore end was made fast at Valentia bay, and the "Niagara" began paying out on the 7th, the arrangement being that the "Agamemnon" should begin operations when the other vessel had exhausted her half of the cable. On the 11th, after 335 miles had been laid, the wire broke again. The third attempt was made with the same vessels in 1858. On July 29th the cable was joined in mid-ocean, and on August 6th the two vessels arrived simultaneously at their respective destinations. This cable worked for a time, but the electric current grew weak, and finally entirely failed. The promoter of these enterprises was Cyrus W. Field, a brother of David Dudley and Stephen J. Field. Discouraging as had been the experiments, he yielded not to defeat, but profited by experience. A new company was formed; the summer of 1866 was fixed upon for another effort, and the "leviathan of the deep," the steamer "Great Eastern," was brought into requisition. She was accompanied by several other vessels. On the 13th of July the fleet was ready to sail on its great errand, from the coast of Ireland. Previous to its departure a devotional meeting was held, at which the enterprise was solemnly commended to the favor of the Almighty. On the morning of Friday, at 8 o'clock, July 27th, the great ship arrived at Heart's Content, the American terminus—the distance run being 1,669 miles, and the length of cable paid out 1,804 miles. On the completion of the great work, Mr. Field telegraphed the following announcement to his friends in New York, and it was received throughout the whole country with unbounded delight: "We arrived here at 9 o'clock, this morning. All well. Thank God, the cable is laid, and is in perfect working order." The first European tidings flashed across the cable to the new world was that a treaty of peace had just been signed between Austria and Prussia, and that the war cloud which had gathered all over Europe was fast dissipating. The Queen of England sent her salutations to the President as follows: "The Queen congratulates the President on the successful completion of an undertaking which she hopes may serve as an additional bond of union between the United States and England." To this the President responded: "The President of the United States acknowledges with profound gratification the receipt of Her Majesty's dispatch, and cordially reciprocates the hope that the cable which now unites the Eastern and Western hemispheres may serve to strengthen and to perpetuate peace and amity between the government of England and the republic of the United States."

When the news reached California of the laying of the cable of 1858, imposing celebrations were held in the principal cities on September 27th. At San Francisco the oration was delivered by the lamented Colonel Edward D. Baker; it was one of the most masterly productions in modern English literature. In that month Donati's celebrated comet made its appearance, and was for weeks a wonder in the skies, at which the whole nation gazed with interest and awe. In the course of his oration Colonel Baker made this allusion to this wondrous celestial visitor:

We have accomplished a great work; we have diminished space to a point; we have traversed one-twelfth of the circumference of our globe with a chain of thought pulsating with intelligence and almost spiritualizing matter. But, even while we assemble to mark the deed and rejoice at its completion, the Almighty, as if to impress us with a becoming sense of our weakness, when compared with His power, has set a new signal of His reign in heaven. If, to-night, fellow-citizens, you will look out from the glare of your illuminated city into the northwestern heavens, you will perceive, low down on the edge of the horizon, a bright stranger, pursuing its path across the sky. Amid the starry hosts that keep their watch, it shines, attended by a brighter pomp and followed by a broader train. No living man has gazed upon its splendors before, no watchful votary of science has traced its course for nearly ten generations. It is more than three hundred years since its approach was visible from our planet. When last it came, it startled an Emperor on his throne, and while the superstition of his age taught him to perceive in its presence a herald and a doom, his pride saw in its flaming course and fiery train the announcement that his own light was about to be extinguished. In common with the lowest of his subjects, he read omens of destruction in the baleful heavens, and prepared himself for a fate which alike awaits the mightiest and the meanest. Thanks to the present condition of scientific knowledge, we read the heavens with a far clearer perception. We see, in the predicted return of the rushing, blazing comet through the sky, the march of a heavenly messenger along his appointed way and around his predestined orbit. For three hundred years he has traveled amid the regions of infinite space. "Lone wandering, but not lost," he has left behind him shining suns, blazing stars, and gleaming constellations, now nearer to the Eternal Throne, and again on the confines of the universe. He returns, with visage radiant and benign; he returns, with unimpeded march and unobstructed way; he returns, the majestic, swift electric telegraph of the Almighty, bearing upon his flaming front the tidings that, throughout the universe, there is still peace and order—that, amid the immeasurable dominions of the Great King, His rule is still perfect—that suns and stars and systems tread their endless circle and obey the eternal law.

Further on in the course of the oration the eloquent speaker said:

I have spoken of three hundred years past—dare I imagine three hundred years to come? It is a period very far beyond the life of the individual man; it is but a span in the history of a nation, throughout the changing generations of mental life. The men grow old and die, the community remains, the nation survives. As we transmit our institutions, so we shall transmit our blood and our names to future ages and populations. What multitudes shall throng these shores, what cities shall gem the borders of the sea? Here all people and all tongues shall meet. Here shall be a more perfect civilization, a more thorough intellectual development, a firmer faith, a more reverent worship.

Perhaps, as we look back to the struggles of an earlier age, and mark the steps of our ancestors in the career we have traced, so some thoughtful man of letters in ages yet to come, may bring to light the history of this shore or of this day. I am sure, fellow-citizens, that whoever shall hereafter read it, will perceive that our pride and joy is dimmed by no stain of selfishness. Our pride is for humanity; our joy is for the world; and amid all the wonders of past achievement and all the splendors of present success, we turn with swelling hearts to gaze into the boundless future, with the earnest conviction that it will yet develop a universal brotherhood of man.

Character in Whiskers.

"Did you ever see a man with side whiskers who wasn't cold-blooded and selfish?" said a wholesale dry goods man. "If that is a new idea to you just run over a list of your acquaintances who wear side whiskers and tell me if any of them are warm-hearted, or noble, or self-sacrificing. I'll bet you a dollar to a nickel that you won't find one. Not long ago I made known this theory of mine about side whiskers in a conversation at the store. It was hotly opposed at first by some of the boys, but when they began to count up their acquaintances with side whiskers they became my converts. Only a few days ago one of the boys went to write a business letter discussing another man, and ended with: 'In short, he is one of those cold-blooded, side-whiskered fellows.'"—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

It is a bad sign for a person, on leaving a house where he has been visiting, to replace his chair close against the wall; the probability is that he will never sit in that chair again. There are people who say that a bedstead must be set parallel to the cracks in the floor—if crosswise, the person occupying it will not sleep well. The belief that the head of the bed should be set to the north is something more than superstition—at least it is held by the uneducated men. "Getting out of bed with the wrong foot foremost" has passed into an adage. It originated in the belief that it was unlucky to place the left foot on the floor before the right on arising, and that things would surely go wrong during the day with the person who did so.

A Chance to Present an Attractive Front to Visitors.

The recent fire which destroyed the dilapidated structures on I street, between Third and Fourth, on the southern border of Sutter Lake, has caused a discussion among the people with regard to the future restrictions in rebuilding upon the burned district. While we regret any individual loss that might have resulted from this blaze, we feel justified in saying that the wiping out of one of Sacramento's eyesores must necessarily result in the public good. This particular locality was exceedingly prominent for its ugliness and most exceeding repulsive appearance to all tourists and visitors to our city, as well as to our own citizens. These remarks can also be applied to other localities in that particular neighborhood, as well as in the southwestern portion of the city, where tourists and visitors are certain to witness the lack of enterprise and the disregard of health and beauty.

The question is now frequently asked, Will the owners of the realty in the burnt district be permitted to erect cheap wooden buildings, to continue as an evidence of siliurism? In this connection we call attention to the fact that for ten years last past, the occupancy, living in, or doing or conducting any kind of business (except storage of grain and merchandise) in any wooden building, shed or platform erected over the waters of Sutter Lake, was and is declared to be a public nuisance; and it is and was unlawful for any person to lease or underlet, either as owner or agent, any building, shed or platform extending over the waters of said lake, for any of the things prohibited. Ever since the passage of Ordinance No. 156, October 9, 1879, prohibiting any of these things to be done, there has been a total disregard of its provisions, and owners and agents have rented these premises to be used contra to the ordinance.

The great difficulty in securing immunity from a continuance of this public nuisance, so declared by ordinance, has been removed by the "fire fiend." The premises so cleared of rubbish and flimsy shells, are now under the direct dominion of the Board of Trustees in so far as to the character of structures which may be placed thereon. These premises come within the fire limits described in Ordinance No. 244, passed May 27, 1889, amendatory of Ordinance No. 17, chapter 16. The starting point of the northern boundary of the fire limits is on the west front of the city at a point opposite the center of H street, and extending up the center of H street to Sixth street, thence southerly to the center of the alley between H and I; thence east to Seventh; thence south to the center of I street; thence east to Tenth; thence south to a point opposite the center of the alley between I and J; thence east to Twelfth; thence south to a point opposite the center of the alley between K and L; thence west to Tenth; thence south to L; thence to center of alley between First and Second streets; thence to M; thence to western boundary of the city; thence north to the place of beginning.

No building or structure of any other material than brick or stone shall be erected, built, constructed or placed within said fire limits. The roof thereof, and casings, and outside portions of any such building or structure shall be of slate, stone, concrete, tin, copper, iron or some other noncombustible material. Thus it will be seen that the construction of any wooden shanties, is inhibited, unless, however, the Trustees, under a proviso in section 5 of ordinance 17, chapter 16, grant permission, after notice published, and allow other material to be used. It is not likely there will be any such consent obtainable.

With regard to the construction of sidewalks of stone, concrete, artificial stone, or other similar material, as provided in Ordinance No. 233, passed August 21, 1888, we regret to say that the above mentioned premises are not included within the boundaries requiring such material for such work. The Board of Trustees can, however, amend the ordinance so as to include any other portions of the city not named in the ordinance.

The erection of brick or stone buildings on these premises, made vacant by the fire, will necessitate the filling in of Sutter lake, to secure a suitable foundation, unless piles are resorted to solely. This may be necessary to make a good base, but the filling in with stone or solid earth is an absolute necessity.

NOTES.

The Record-Union joins THEMIS in the protest against the wanton destruction of our forests. Some action should be taken by our national Congress, to avert the destruction of our forests. All State legislation thus far has been futile.

We have received the initial number of the Woodland Leader, published every Wednesday at the enterprising county seat of our prosperous adjoining county. Edward Prior is the business manager. It is well edited, full of news, and of unexceptional typographical appearance. We wish the new enterprise success. It is conducted by a company of young printers.

The sweet girl graduate and the bumptious boy graduate are with us again. We are glad to meet them and shake hands with them across the chasm of years. We are glad to hear once more their plans for giving down-trodden woman her proper sphere in life, and for solving within a few weeks' time all the social problems. We sympathize with them most heartily; for a happy experience has taught us what a blissful thing it is to know so much. Were they a whit less enthusiastic we should be ashamed of them, and predict for them failure in the coming struggle with the world. As it is, they are our hope, and they give us fresh courage.

John Swett, who for many years has been familiarly called "the Schoolmaster-General," and who lately for evident political reasons, was forced to resign his position as principal of the Girls' High School at San Francisco, has taken his ruthless treatment to heart, and like old Cardinal Wolsey, feels that his usefulness has gone forever. In a letter to a friend John Swett says: "I write to-day for fear some change for the worse will render it impossible. I have now had a fever for seven weeks and cannot break it. I fear it will end in a serious brain fever, and in which case I can hardly hope to pull through. My educational work is finished. I wish it could have been better. If I can survive this I think I can get a living by hard work on the farm. Like a wounded animal, I have crawled into my hole. What I have borne in silence no one can ever know."

GENERAL NEWS ITEMS.

The jilting of Raymond Bierce by Eva Atkins at Chico a few days ago, and the subsequent marriage of Neil Hubbs, has resulted in a sad tragedy. Bierce shot Mr. and Mrs. Hubbs, and then took his own life. Mr. Hubbs is thought to be fatally wounded. Mrs. Hubbs will survive. Bierce's love was evidently the love that kills. His mind must have been deranged by the disappointment and mortification of his intended bride's elopement on the eve of their proposed marriage. Sutter county saloons resist the high license of $200 per quarter. At Paris, Ky., a body of armed men went to the jail and took out James Kelly, a negro who was charged with an assault on a woman, and hanged him. Chico and Colusa guards will go into camp at Sissons on August 11th, and remain until the 20th. The taking of testimony in the case of H. L. Gorton, charged with robbing the express car on December 24, 1888, near Clipper Gap, began yesterday at Auburn. Gorton is defended by Robert Ferral of San Francisco. The messenger, Johnston, identified Gorton as one of the robbers. Forty-five hundred dollars in value was taken. A ten-thousand-dollar sack was overlooked. The prosecution have about fifteen witnesses, and the trial will not be concluded until next week. Much interest is manifested. Many ladies are present, and the animated crowds around the courthouse reminds one of the train-wrecking trials of 1881. Miss Kate Drexel, the wealthy lady of Philadelphia who recently entered a Pittsburg convent, has donated $250,000 to found a Catholic college there exclusively for colored students. She also promises to pay the salaries of the teachers and the pastor of the church in connection with the school. The Yellow river has again broken over its banks in Shantung, inundating an immense area of country. There is twelve feet of water throughout ten large government districts. The loss of life and property is incalculable. The government authorities at Pekin are dismayed, owing to the incapacity of the local authorities. Foreign engineering aid is in order to permanently repair the channel of the river, which is considered imperative. Mary Anderson has nearly recovered from the extreme nervous prostration from which she suffered on her return from America. This is on the authority of Canon Purcell, her confessor. The wedding presents of Princess Louise, displayed at Marlborough House to-day, are valued at £150,000.

FLASHES.

Some men are regarded as great men, because they are great liars.

When an office is seeking a man it is like a ghost—it startles everybody.

The kind of beau not popular with watering-place belles is a boatswain.

When you wish to bring up a child in the right way just travel that way yourself.

Many a beau who wears a sweet-smelling boulonniere is without a cent in his pocket.

The mosquito never waits to the first of the month—he sends in his bill at all hours.

There is something nice about balance of trade. For instance, a farmer comes to the city loaded with hay and returns home loaded with rye.

A married woman should not expect her husband to stay home every night in the week. She ought to remember that the lodge has its rites.

Seven young ladies have secured the degree of Bachelor of Arts this season. Several of them, it is surmised, will secure the bachelor later on.

Al.—“Hold on a second; I want to buy some chestnuts.” Win.—“Chestnuts at a news stand?” Al.—“Why not?” (Purchases a copy of the Leader.)

A young man who gets the opportunity to see his best girl only on the first evening of the first day of the week is strongly opposed to the prohibition of the Sunday press.

The man who makes boast that he never was boss'd,

That he never was driven or harried,
Confesses that much of life's pleasures he's lost,

For 'tis clear that he never was married.

Grammar School Graduates of 1870.

We have read with interest the remarks of P. E. Platt at the closing exercises of the Sacramento Grammar School on Thursday, which were published in the Record-Union of to-day. We regret that our space does not admit of their reproduction in our columns in extenso. Mr. Platt was a member of the class which graduated from the old Franklin Grammar School on April 22, 1870. His subsequent career as a successful merchant is familiar to the people, not only in this city, but largely throughout the State and the east. The class of which he was a member was for a while, in the first grade, under the principalship of H. H. Howe, and afterwards of A. H. McDonald; Miss Mary J. Watson, now principal of the Sacramento Grammar School, was then vice-principal.

The graduating class of that year consisted of the following: Juanita Smith (Mrs. Seth Babson); William J. Tingman, who was subsequently accidentally killed at the Mount Diablo coal mine some years ago, where he occupied a position of prominence; Alice Coffin (Mrs. Baily); Mary Wolfe, who removed east, studied medicine and has achieved a distinguished success; Annie Neary, now one of the teachers in our public schools; Cynthia Gibbs; Ella Haskell (now Mrs. Adley H. Cummins), the writer of popular juvenile literature; George Johnson, now of Elkus & Co.; Ella Perry (Mrs. P. K. Stockton); Winfield J. Davis, now Official Court Reporter, and of THEMIS; Flora Caldwell, who figured in the breach of promise case against Premier Gibson in the Sandwich Islands; Camilla Hoy; Jennie Anderson, now a teacher in our public schools; Mary Horl; P. E. Platt; Arthur Jelly, well known here, and now in the east; Sallie Fisher, Katie Polhemus, Mary Dickerson and Mary Allmond, all now deceased; Bertha Gruhler (Mrs. Walther); Amanda Salsig; W. H. M. Cobb, now of Nevada; W. W. Marvin, Jr., now of Booth & Co.; Col. C. F. Crocker, of the directory of the Southern Pacific Railroad company; E. B. Cushman, late Sheriff at Candelaria, Nevada; Edward Norris, now train dispatcher of the Southern Pacific railroad here; Valentine McClatchy, now of the Bee; Carrie Yost; H. J. Palmer, now a farmer in Yolo; Harry R. Snow, a prominent young lawyer, who was cut down in the spring of his life; William Rider, now superintendent of the mail carriers of this city; Margie Russell (Mrs. F. D. Griffith), and Mattie Folger (Mrs. Frank Hogeboom).

Barwick's Eloquence.

The highest and lowest temperature during the week ending yesterday was, highest, 92, on Saturday and Sunday; the lowest 50, Tuesday. The weather being delightful and pleasant during the entire week, while each and every night was cool enough to require heavy wraps for those outside the buildings, and blankets for those inside, when they sought, in the arms of Morpheus, nature's great restorer, balmy sleep, which gives rest and recuperates their wasted energies in the performance of the multiple duties entailed on civilized men and women, to keep themselves clothed and fed with other concomitants too numerous to mention. The highest and lowest for the same time last year was 97 and 54.

LOCAL BREVITIES.

R. H. Mackall has got himself into trouble by breaking the arm and otherwise injuring a man by the name of Joe Welch. Mackall claims that he caught Welch trying to rob a patron. Welch denies the charge. The court will have to determine the issue.

The examination of the charge against Ah Gong, for the alleged murder of Ly See Guey, is dragging its slow length along. Judge Armstrong's court-room is occupied by Judge Buckley for conducting the examination. Charles T. Jones is for the prosecution and W. A. Anderson for the defense. Several days will yet be occupied before the end is reached. To-day the case was continued to Monday at 1:30 P. M., at the Police Court-room, beneath that “awful tank.”

The case of Farrell vs. Board of Trustees, which is an action to compel the Trustees to pay the salary of the twenty-five policemen, was on argument before Judge Armstrong this forenoon, on demurrer. The points raised on behalf of the defense were the same that we discussed at length in THEMIS at the time the police force was increased. The importance of the questions involved will necessitate the case being taken under advisement by the court for a full determination.

The Minstrels.

The Clunie Opera House was packed last night to witness the performance of Thatcher, Primrose & West's Minstrels. The combination is a thoroughly good one. It is a misnomer to designate this line of variety amusement as the old-time negro minstrelsy. There was not a single element of the “way down South” negro character. It seems like a useless and pointless act to apply the “burnt cork.” The bare idea of a Shakespearian colored minstrel is the extreme of absurdity. Shakespeare utilized the Moors in his great tragedy, but the idea of embodying negro minstrelsy in his grand conceptions strikes us as not elevating to the artists. The company has been carefully selected, and abounds with finished artists. We thought we could detect some very shaky tones in our old favorite voice, as he reached the high notes of “Sally in our Alley.” Many supposed that George Thatcher would not be with the company, as it has been announced that a suit for the dissolution of the partnership existing between himself and Primrose and West had been instituted. The comedian was there, however, and took occasion in his monologue to refer to himself and his troubles. A painful, and we might add indecent, exhibition was made last night by the occupancy of the principal boxes by fallen women—painted Jezebels—thus being made as conspicuous as the performers on the stage. While they have the right to hire the use of these boxes, it would seem to be less immodest if they occupied a less conspicuous place. Their presence was made all the more noticeable because of some of the performers upon the stage “playing” almost exclusively to this objectionable minority. Matinee this afternoon and performance to-night.

Justice Should Be Equal.

There is this to be said concerning the fire that happened in the Chinese quarter in this city this week: The fact that the ruins were permitted to be ransacked by white vandals, in search for coin, and that they carried away money which belonged to those who had been burned out, is not a creditable reflection on our authorities, or of the justice in America that we so much extol. In this instance, the property stolen belonged to Chinese. Had a fire occurred in a block occupied by white merchants, and had it been known that valuables were among the ruins, there is no question but that the authorities would have placed an efficient guard to prevent depredation. The fact that the losers in this case were Chinese should not exempt them from the protection which the law of right and humanity accords to every one under this government. Within a week a fire occurred in the American quarters at Third and J streets. A miserable Chinese rag picker carried away a couple of flat irons from the ruins. They were valued at fifty cents; he is now on the road to State prison. Within a few blocks from where he got these irons the whites, in open daylight, dug and carried away coin; it was a find. It is not necessary that we should comment.

Dr. Laine Wins.

Judge Van Fleet yesterday decided the quo warranto proceedings instituted by Dr. J. R. Laine against Dr. G. G. Tyrrell, for the alleged unlawful usurping of the office of a member of the State Board of Health. The opinion is lengthy and reviews the law of the case critically. The court finds that the term of Dr. Tyrrell expired at the adjournment of the last legislature, and that the Governor had the power to appoint his successor. That Dr. Laine, as shown by the complaint, is entitled to the office. The demurrer was overruled. As the questions determined on the demurrer go directly to the merits of the case, it is probable an appeal will be taken on this decision.

The Emperor of Russia, when upon a tour of inspection in the provinces, passed the night in the simple hut of a toll-taker. Before retiring he was pleased, as head of the church, to see the old man take up his Bible and read a chapter. “Do you read often, my son?” he asked. “Yes, your majesty, every day.” “How much of the Bible have you read, my son?” “During the past year the Old Testament and part of Matthew, your majesty.” Thinking to reward him, the Czar placed 500 roubles between the leaves of the book of Mark on the following morning, unknown to the toll-keeper, whom he bade farewell. Several months passed away and the Emperor returned, upon a second tour, to the toll-taker's hut. Taking the Bible in his hands, he was surprised to find the 500 roubles intact. Again interrogating the toll-taker as to his diligence in reading, he received an affirmative answer and the statement that he had finished the chapters of Luke. “Lying, my son, is a great sin,” replied His Majesty; “give me the Bible till I see.” Opening the book, he pointed to the money, which the man had not seen. “Thou hast not sought the Kingdom of God, my son. As punishment, thou shalt also lose thy earthly reward.” And he placed the roubles in his pocket to distribute afterward among the neighboring poor.

EARL BROS.

COMMISSION MERCHANTS

IN CALIFORNIA PRODUCTS

122 J STREET, : : SACRAMENTO.

GEORGE DIETRICH, Manager.

Chicago House, 157 South Water St.

SNOWFLAKE PARK.

Twenty-eighth and R Streets.

BASEBALL—CALIFORNIA LEAGUE.

Sunday..... July 28, 1889
At 2 o'clock P. M., sharp,

San Francisco vs. Sacramento.

Prices of admission: Men, 50 cents; ladies, 25 cents; small boys, 10 cents; reserved seats, 25 cents—can be obtained any time at H. C. Megerle's News Depot, Fourth street, between J and K, or at Fair before the game.

Trains leave depot at 12:45, 1:05, 1:25 and 1:45—stopping at Third, Tenth and Eighteenth sts. Fare, for round trip, 15 cents.

Admission to Park (including fare both ways), 50 cents.

Something New

NEW STORE. NEW MEN.

BELL & FOUNTAIN

HAVE OPENED THE

Plaza Cash Grocery

STORE,

Corner Tenth and J Streets,

And have stocked the same with all New and Fresh Goods, which they will sell for CASH at the smallest living margin.

All Goods Warranted as Represented.

Goods delivered to any part of the city.

Our Motto: “The nimble sixpence against the slow shilling!”

BELL & FOUNTAIN,

Plaza Cash Grocery Store,

CALL AT 1118 J STREET,

—AT—

Fred Futterer's Saloon

And Get a Glass of Cool Beer.

The best Wines, Liquors and Cigars always on hand.

POOL AND BILLIARD TABLES.

FRED FUTTERER, 1118 J Street.

Cooper's Music Store.

Mathushek!

Principal Music House in Northern and Central California.

Largest and Best Selected Stock of Musical Instruments and Musical Merchandise.

Indorsement of Merit.

I take pleasure in certifying to the excellence of the Mathushek Piano. I can cheerfully and truthfully recommend it in any of its various styles as a first-class instrument, the equal of any and the superior of most in the qualities necessary to the accompaniment of the voice; and I believe it to be more than any other suited to withstand the effects of our California climate. We use it exclusively at our rehearsals and concerts.

W. H. KINROSS,
Musical Director McNeill Club.

NO. 631 J STREET,

Corner of Seventh, SACRAMENTO.

Fine Table Wines

From our Celebrated Orleans Vineyard.

Producers of the
ECLIPSE
CHAMPAGNE,
530 Washington St.
SAN FRANCISCO.

CHAMPAGNE

W. B. CHAPMAN,
123 California St. San Francisco.

SOLE AGENT FOR THE PACIFIC COAST

100. sale by all first-class Wine Merchants and Grocers.

Samples and Instructions for Self-measurement sent by mail on application.

L. RADLOFF,

LADIES' TAILOR.

218 POST STREET, SAN FRANCISCO.

Tailor Made Suits a Specialty.

A. AITKEN,

PREMIUM PIONEER MARBLE AND GRANITE WORKS

423 J Street, bet. 4th and 5th, Sacramento.

Costic Tile, etc. Cemetery lots enclosed with Granite. All kinds of work done in Italian and Vermont Marble. Direct importer of Scotch and Eastern Granite Monuments. Also, Marble, Slate, Wooden and Iron Mantels, direct from manufacturers, at Reduced Prices. Call and examine.

(Written for THEMIS.)

There Is a God.

The mountains capped with snow,
The valleys fair to see,
Proclaim that God is everywhere—
In everything we see.
The cloudless, sunny day,
The star-gemmed heavens of night,
Are all His handiwork,
And show how great His might.

The rivers and the trees,
The birds, the earth, the flowers,
The very air we breathe,
God gave them to be ours;
To use them at His will While life to us is given—
Our souls with rapture thrill
When we think of God and heaven.

Then why do skeptics say
There is no God to save
The good, the true, the just,
Who have life's troubles braved?
Ah! those who love Him well
Will surely feel His power
If they but place their trust in Him
In death's dark closing hour.

MRS. NELLIE BLOOM.

West Oakland, Cal.

The White Pigeon.

Tom Manning's hair needed cutting badly. It stuck up all over his head, and the ends were beginning to look yellow and curled up. Mr. Manning detested long hair, but Mrs. Manning was in favor of it; she said it made Tom look literary. But finally Mr. Manning put his foot down and cut the matter short by handing his hopeful son twenty-five cents and bidding him go at once and come home shorn.

Tom started for Pompey Smart's shop—a splendid ten-foot structure, painted in stripes of red, white and blue, and bristling in front with a number of striped poles, all of which signified that Mr. Smart was a barber, and would remove superfluous hair from the heads of all who desired. In the shop were two chairs, and it so happened that both of them were vacant when Tom arrived; so he immediately seated himself in one of them and called out:

"Come, Pompey, you must be smart and cut my hair as quick as you can, for I have no time to waste in a barber's shop."

"Scip, cut the young gentleman's hair," said Mr. Smart to a mulatto boy who was spelling out the jokes in an illustrated paper. "No, sir," said Tom. "I don't intend to have my head used for a primary lesson book for young barbers. I want you to cut my hair."

Tom's decided tone had the desired effect. The indolent barber arose and took charge of Tom's head.

At the same time a nicely dressed gentleman entered the shop, and, after hanging his overcoat on a peg near Tom Manning's, he took a seat in the remaining chair and told the boy, Scip, to shave him.

Now Scip, although youthful, was well versed in the arts of shaving and hair cutting, and could do both very satisfactorily. He took his place with alacrity, and very soon had the lower part of his customer's face enveloped in snowy lather.

Tom Manning's locks were severed. What remained on his head was saturated with a greasy compound strongly scented, his face and neck brushed off, the calico covering removed, and he was finished. Barber Smart added the quarter of a dollar to the pile in the drawer and went to the window to watch for another customer. He would have done better by watching the customer inside; for when Tom Manning went to the peg where his coat was hanging, he espied a pocket-book projecting from the breast pocket of the stranger's coat.

"What a chance to hook a pocket-book!" he said to himself. And, acting on the impulse of the moment, he transferred it from the stranger's pocket to his own.

The act startled him, and, perhaps, he would have returned it at once if Pompey Smart had not at that moment turned from his position at the window, so that Tom's motion could be seen by him. Thus the opportunity to retrace the fatal step was lost, and Tom left the shop a thief.

Where could he go with his ill-gotten riches? What would he do with it? These were the questions which harassed him as he walked nervously along the street. He was terribly frightened. Every moment he expected to see the stranger chasing after him down the road. He would know who the thief was, for no one else had left the shop. Detection seemed unavoidable, yet he hurried on until he reached home. Behind his father's house stood an old-fashioned barn, once redolent with the smell of hay and noisy with the tread of horses, but now used for storage, and haunted by strange cats and fat spiders.

Into the upper loft of this ancient barn Tom climbed, and, opening a shutter to admit the light, he sat down upon an old trunk and examined the pocket-book. It was very nicely gotten up with various compartments, in which were railroad tickets, postage stamps and a roll of money. Tom counted this eagerly, and was amazed to find that there were fifty-five dollars in bills and sixty cents in silver; but he was still more astonished, on opening an inner recess, to find a one hundred dollar bill hidden.

Tom was terrified. Such a sum of money would be missed and thoroughly searched for, and the bare thought made Tom tremble; for there was a great chance of its being traced to him, and he saw the stone walls and iron bars of a prison rise before his vision.

What should he do? It was too late to restore the stolen property. He did not dare to carry it in his pocket. If he bought anything with the money, how could he account to his father for the ability to purchase it. There was nothing to do but to hide the stolen property, and Tom proceeded to do so. Even this was a difficult job.

First he hid it among the old rubbish in a trunk, but that was a bad place, for some one was likely to want something in that very trunk. So he tried various places, until his eyes rested on a beam above his head. He decided to place it there, and after considerable difficulty he succeeded.

"No one will ever find it there," said he to himself, and he closed the shutter and descended the stairs.

That night at supper time Mr. Manning related to his wife how a stranger from Boston had been robbed of over one hundred and fifty dollars, supposed to have been taken by pick-pockets while he was getting out of the cars, as several persons had jostled against him very roughly; but he did not miss the money until he was going to pay for being shaved in Pompey Smart's shop. Twenty-five dollars reward had been offered by the owner for its recovery.

All this Tom heard in fear and trembling. He was afraid to lift his eyes, or hardly to breathe; the terrible secret he was keeping in his breast rose in his throat and nearly choked him. What would his dear father and mother say if they knew he was a thief? Why did he do such a foolish and wicked thing as to steal? How did he know that a constable was not at that moment on his track, and would ring the door-bell and ask for him? Thoughts like this kept coming like demons to torment him, and he would have given anything if he could tell his father the whole story and ask his advice and forgiveness.

Morning came, but brought no relief to poor Tom. His outraged conscience would not give him any rest. At breakfast time the subject of the robbery was again alluded to, renewing all the fears and apprehensions of the previous night. When Mr. Manning had finished his repast, he suddenly arose from the table and said—

"Tom, I want you to go to the barn-chamber with me. There is an old brass lock there in a trunk which I want to find, and you can help me. There is time before you go to school."

If Mr. Manning had looked at his boy just then he would have noticed the pallor and confusion which spread over his countenance at this proposition, but he was looking another way and did not see it. Tom had nothing to do but follow his father to that dreadful barn-chamber. But why need he fear? Was not the pocket-book far from any chance of discovery? Why, it might remain there for years and no one would ever know it. But conscience makes cowards of us all, and it was exemplified in Tom Manning, as he accompanied his father up the stairs to the old lumber-room, hanging his head like a culprit.

"Tom, open the shutters and let in some light," said Mr. Manning.

Tom opened the window, and hoped that it would satisfy his father, for somehow he did not like to have so much light, although he knew that it would not be likely to reveal the pocket-book, away up on that beam.

"That isn't enough, Tom. Open them all; it will do the old barn good to have some fresh air blowing through it," said Mr. Manning.

So the shutters were all opened, letting in such a flood of light, sunshine and air that it made the old chamber look cheerful.

To work they went, rummaging over old chests and boxes, bringing to light many curious old-fashioned things, which, at any other time, would have delighted Tom, and led him to ask many questions. Now he was anxious to find the lock and get away from that dreadful chamber.

At last it was found, and Mr. Manning put away the things, and was about to shut the trunk cover when a whirring noise was heard, and a white pigeon flew in at the open window, and lit on one of the beams above their heads. To poor Tom's dismay, it was the very beam upon which lay the pocket-book.

"What a beautiful pigeon!" said Mr. Manning. "Don't frighten it, Tom. Let us see what it will do."

Very soon they did see what it would do; for it strutted along on the beam and soon began to peck at something, and in a moment more, to Mr. Manning's wonder and astonishment, the pocket-book fell on his head.

"Hello! what's this?" he exclaimed, picking it up.

Tom saw that he must say something; and what better could he do than tell the truth? Why add lying to stealing? Was not one crime enough? Tommy thought it was, and without hesitation he confessed all, and begged his father's forgiveness.

"My poor boy! My dear Tom! How could you have done this wickedness?"

The sorrow-stricken father bowed his head on his son's shoulder and wept.

"Forgive me, father?" said poor Tom.

"Forgive you, Tommy! Yes, but it's God's commandment that you have broken, and it is His forgiveness that you must ask for," replied Mr. Manning. "Kneel down with me and pray."

And there, in that old barn-chamber, amid the trunks and boxes, the father and son knelt down and prayed for their heavenly Father's forgiveness, and that Tommy might have strength to resist temptation. Oh, what a load seemed lifted off the boy's heart! How glad he felt that the white pigeon had flown in and revealed the secret. How thankful he was for such a good father!

It was Tommy's first crime and it was his last. His days were long in the land, and no one led a more blameless life than did Tom. The stolen pocket-book was sent to its rightful owner, and no one but Tom and his father ever knew of that dreadful hour when Tom was in so much distress and was rescued by the mysterious agency of a white pigeon.

A superstitious fellow who consulted a "dream-book" for every dream he had for a period of fifteen years, says that if they had all been verified, according to the "book," he would have met with six violent deaths, married eleven blonde-haired and six dark-tressed girls, inherited nine fortunes, and made fourteen trips to foreign lands. He is still living, an old bachelor, has never been more than ten miles from the town in which he was born, and hasn't got a shilling laid up for inclement weather. But he has lost all faith in dream books.

FRIEND & TERRY LUMBER CO.

Wholesale and Retail Lumber Dealers, Also Shakes, Bolts, Ties, Doors, Windows, Blinds and Screens. Main Yard and Office, No. 1310 Second Street. Branch Yard, corner Twelfth and J Sts. P. O. Box 233. E. J. HOLT, Manager. Sacramento

O'BRIEN'S, 607 J.

SWEEPING REDUCTION IN LADIES' SHOES.

Best French Kid, hand turn, worth $7, reduced to $6. Ladies' French Kid Button, low heel, long vamp, worth $5, reduced to $4. Misses' and Children's Canvas Shoes reduced 25 per cent.

Sale of Unclaimed Baggage

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN THAT I, WM. LAND, proprietor of the Western Hotel, Sacramento, will cause to be sold at public auction, at the salesroom of W. H. Sherburn, 323 K street, Sacramento, on TUESDAY, AUGUST THIRTEENTH, 1889, at 10 o'clock A. M., the following described baggage:

Lot 1, 1 Trunk, marked C. B. G.; Lot 2, 1 Trunk, marked Albert Schmidt; Lot 3, 1 Trunk, no mark; Lot 4, 1 Trunk, marked Walter Johnson; Lot 5, 1 Trunk, marked E. T. Naghel; Lot 6, 1 Trunk, marked Billy Myers; Lot 7, 1 Trunk, no mark; Lot 8, 2 Trunks and 1 valise, marked C. G. Meegan; Lot 9, 1 Bundled and 1 valise, marked Mrs. G. W. Otto; Lot 10, 1 Valise, E. N. McBeath; Lot 11, 1 Valise, no mark; Lot 12, 1 Valise, no mark; Lot 13, 1 Valise, no mark; Lot 14, 1 Valise, C. J. Morgan; Lot 15, 1 Valise, C. J. Morgan; Lot 16, 1 Valise, 747 marked; Lot 17, 1 Valise, no mark; Lot 18, 1 Hand Satchel, Charles Saubach; Lot 19, 1 Valise, W. H. Schad; Lot 20, 1 Valise, no mark; Lot 21, 1 Valise, no mark; Lot 22, 1 Valise, no mark; Lot 23, 1 Valise, Sept. 5th, 1888; Lot 24, 1 Valise, F. A. McGuire, Aug. 28th, 1888; Lot 25, 1 Valise, no mark; Lot 26, 1 Hand Bag, no mark; Lot 27, 1 Carpet Bag, no mark; Lot 28, 1 Basket, M. S.; Lot 29, 1 Lunch Basket, no mark; Lot 30, 1 Basket, no mark; Lot 31, 1 Band Box, no mark; Lot 32, 1 Box, Chas. E. Burton; Lot 33, 2 Lots Umbrellas; Lot 34, 1 Lot Cane; Lot 35, 16 Bundles Bedding; Lot 36, 71 Packages and Bundles; Lot 37, Lot Linen Coats; Lot 38, Lot Clothing; Lot 39, 3 Valises, no marks; Lot 40, Lot Shoes, etc.; Lot 41, 6 Coats and Linen Coats, Hotel Checks Nos. 2475, 3517, 3652, 3399, 3733, 3742. All the above described property having remained unclaimed for more than six months.

WM. LAND, Proprietor Western Hotel, Sacramento. W. H. SHERBURN, Auctioneer.

DELINQUENT SALE.—Treasure Box Mining Company—Location of principal place of business, Sacramento, Cal. Notice.—There is delinquent upon the following described stock, on account of assessment No. 2, levied on the twenty-seventh day of May, 1889, the several amounts set opposite the names of the respective shareholders, as follows:

	No. Cert.	No. Shs.	Amt.
Smith, F. A., Trustee	41	8,400	$84 00
Smith, F. A., Trustee	42	8,400	84 00
Smith, F. A., Trustee	45	8,400	84 00
Smith, F. A., Trustee	46	8,400	84 00
Smith, F. A., Trustee	47	16,400	164 00

And in accordance with law and an order of the Board of Directors, made on the twenty-seventh day of May, 1889, so many shares of each parcel of such stock as may be necessary will be sold at public auction, at the office of the company, 325 J street, Sacramento, Cal., on FRIDAY, THE NINETEENTH DAY OF JULY, 1889, at the hour of eleven o'clock A. M. of said day, to pay said delinquent assessment thereon, together with costs of advertising and expenses of sale.

J. O. COLEMAN, Secretary. Postponement.—July 1, 1889.—The sale of the above delinquent stock was postponed until TUESDAY, AUGUST THE SIXTH, 1889, at the hour and place above mentioned. J. O. COLEMAN, Secretary. No. 325 J street, Sacramento, Cal.

L. K. Hammer

THE LEADING MUSIC DEALER.

AGENT FOR

Chickering Pianos.

Largest Stock of Musical Instruments in the City.

No. 820 J STREET.

GRAND OPENING

OF

NOLAN & SON'S

Boot and Shoe

STORE.

603 J STREET, SACRAMENTO,

One door above Sixth.

TRADE WITH THE

OVERLAND

Tea Company,

421 J STREET,

BETWEEN FOURTH AND FIFTH.

The Best of Goods Procurable.

HANDSOME PRESENTS GIVEN TO CUSTOMERS.

For Particulars see the Daily Papers.

GEORGE T. BOYD,

Manufacturer of

Pure Candies and Ice Cream

Temple of Sweets,

907 K Street, next to Odd Fellows' Temple, SACRAMENTO, CAL.

Dissolution of Copartnership.

Notice is hereby given to all concerned that the firm of SMITH & MUIR, Plumbers and Gas-fitters, at 412 J street, is this day dissolved by mutual consent. The business will be carried on at the old stand by A. M. SMITH, who is now the sole proprietor of said business. All accounts due said firm are payable to A. M. SMITH, who is authorized to receipt for the same, and all debts of said firm will be paid by him. Sacramento, June 26, 1889.

All claims against the firm to be presented at once, and all parties indebted to the firm will please call and settle. A. M. SMITH. A. J. MUIR.

California State Bank

DOES A GENERAL BANKING BUSINESS.

Draws Exchange on all the Principal Cities of the World.

OFFICERS:

PRESIDENT.....N. D. RIDEOUT
VICE-PRESIDENT.....FRED'K COX
CASHIER.....A. ABBOTT
ASSISTANT CASHIER.....W. E. GERBER

DIRECTORS:

C. W. Clarke, Jos. Steffens, N. D. Rideout,
Geo. C. Perkins, J. R. Watson, Frederick Cox,
W. E. Gerber.

W. R. STRONG & CO.

Founded 1852.

Fruit Packers

and Shippers.

PROPRIETORS OF

CAPITAL NURSERIES,

SACRAMENTO, CAL.

King Bros.

State Capitol Cash Grocery, 131 J Street,
corner Second.Goods sold on small margin, strictly for cash. Best
Brands of Wines, Liquors and Cigars.

JAS. LONGSHORE,

SACRAMENTO TRUNK FACTORY,

530 K STREET.

Trunks, Valises & Bags Wholesale and Retail.

OSBORN & FOLGER

DEALERS IN

ICE and COAL, HAY and GRAIN.

New 10-ton Fairbanks' Hay Scales.

N. E. cor. Fifth and I Streets.

Wood Yard, 806 I Street.

Pacific Manuf'g. Co.

213 AND 215 J STREET.

Manufacturer of the CYCLONE Pumping and Geared Mills, and dealers in all kinds of
Pumps, Tanks, etc.

Waterhouse & Lester

DEALERS IN

IRON, STEEL, CUMBERLAND COAL,

Wagon Lumber and Carriage Hardware,

SACRAMENTO.

Earthquake and Fire Proof BUILDINGS

Constructed on my patent system. Perfect protection guaranteed. For estimates and particulars see
E. HAWES,
Twelfth and B streets, Sacramento.

PUMPS

Our Factory is the Largest and Best Equipped in Northern California.Our Designs are New and Original and Calculated for Every Variety

of Service.

CAPITAL IRON WORKS,

904 K Street, Sacramento.

CANCERS,

Ulcers, Wens, Lumps, Exeresences, etc.,
Positively Cured or No Pay.
No Knife Used.As to the success of my treatment, I give the names
of a few of the many cured. By addressing them
they will give any information required—and it pays
to investigate before being treated.

Mrs. O. C. Neilsen, Grass Valley, cancer.
John Service, Auburn, lupus.
Patrick Lynch, Sacramento, cancer.
Mrs. Jno. Shaw, Grass Val., birthmark removed.
N. S. Peck, S. P. R. R. Sacramento, cancer.
J. L. Woods, Washington, Yolo county, cancer.
John W. Douglas, Rocklin, cancer.
Miss Mamie Lynch, Yolo, tumor removed.
Chas. McLaughlin, Sacramento, cancer.
I might give many more. Those afflicted are invited to call and investigate for themselves. Consultation at office free. Send for circular.
Office, 426 K Street, Sacramento.

DR. J. H. SHIRLEY.

A. C. SWEETSER & CO.,

Real Estate & Insurance Brokers

Lands For Sale in all parts of the State.

Some Good Investments in School Lands.

Send for Catalogue.

Office, No. 1012 Fourth Street,

SACRAMENTO, CAL.

FOR FRESH, CLEAN GROCERIES, GO TO

We invite a call at our new location, corner Eighth and K streets, where with our increased space we are enabled to give our large stock a fair display and our customers convenient room.

THE AMERICAN CASH STORE

Offers attractions to cash buyers of GROCERIES. A high quality of goods is carefully regarded.

O. F. WASHBURN, 801 K STREET.

A. J. MUIR,

PLUMBER,

—Gas and Steam Fitter.—

Being a practical plumber, I can guarantee all work.

810 K STREET,

Telephone 226.

SACRAMENTO, CAL.

ALBERT GRUBBS,

No. 1417 Fourth Street,

Will do all kinds of House Cleaning, Lay Carpets,
Whitewashing, and everything in that line.He also has the only wagon for the REMOVAL OF DEAD ANIMALS, and any orders left at his place of business will receive prompt attention.

[Remember the address!]

No. 1417 Fourth Street, Sacramento, Cal.

REEVES & LONG, UNDERTAKERS,

609 J Street, bet. Sixth and Seventh.

WE KEEP ON HAND A COMPLETE
Stock of Coffins and Caskets; also,
Shrouds of every description. Orders from city or country receive prompt attention, day or night.
EMBALMING done in the best manner; and at reasonable rates.

PAUL GRAF,

Manufacturer of and
dealer in Saddles, Har-
ness, Robes, Collars,
Whips, Spurs, Brushes
Currycombs, etc.

1130 J Street, near Twelfth

Repairing Neatly Done.

Harness Made to Order.

American Steam Laundry

NINETEENTH AND I STS.—WHITE LABOR
only. Linen polished in the neatest manner.
We guarantee satisfaction. All ordinary mending, sewing on buttons, etc., free of charge. Washing
called for and delivered to any part of the city.
Main Office at Sawtelle's Book Store, 708 and 710 J
street. Branch offices at all the Hotels.

Barrett & Berkey

PACIFIC RESTAURANT,

OYSTER HOUSE AND

WINE PARLORS

701 J Street, cor. 7th.

CHANGED HANDS.

SACRAMENTO EXCHANGE,

(Formerly Wm. Gamble's.)

1012 SEVENTH STREET.

Fine Wines. All the celebrated brands of Liquors
and Cigars.ROBERT ALLEN,
Formerly of Agricultural Park.

RHOADS & TOWNSEND HOUSE

On European Plan.

Cor. Second and J Streets, Sacramento.

ARTHUR MILLER, PROPRIETOR.

ANHEUSER & BUSCH

BEER

Can be found on draught only at

John Gruhler's Saloon

No. 522 J STREET.

The finest and best Wines, Liquors and Cigars constantly on hand.

Patronize Home Industry!

CITY & BREWERY

FRANK RUHSTALLER, Proprietor.

GENUINE

Pilsener Felsen Beer.

Corner Twelfth and H Streets,

Telephone 201.

SACRAMENTO.

CELEBRATED

WEINER LAGER BEER

CAPITAL BREWERY

LOUIS NICOLAUS,

Corner Twelfth and I Streets

SACRAMENTO.

COLUMBUS BREWERY

CHRIS. WAHL, Proprietor

Corner of Sixteenth and K Streets,

SACRAMENTO, CAL.

Agent for the Celebrated W. J. LEMP'S ST. LOUIS
LAGER BEER

WISSEMAN'S SALOON,

Klebetz & Green's Old Stand,

1020 Fourth St., bet. J and K, Sacramento.

GEO. WISSEMAN, PROPRIETOR.

Families and Saloons supplied by bottle or keg.

Butchers' Home,

1020 J Street,

Between 10th and 11th, : Sacramento, Cal.

Fine Wines, Liquors and Cigars. Also, a

GOOD GLASS OF BEER.

JACOB GRUHLER, Prop'r.

CAPITAL ALE VAULTS.

Established in 1870, and still maintains the same reputation for keeping the best WINES, LIQUORS and Cigars in the city. The finest Hot Lunch in the city from 11 to 2. Claim Chowder a specialty every night.

NAGELE & SVENSSON, Prop'rs.

Telephone 38.

302 J and 1005 Third st.

A. L. HART,

ATTORNEY-AT-LAW

Sutter Building, cor. 5th and J.

W. A. ANDERSON,

ATTORNEY-AT-LAW,

No. 209 J Street,

Sacramento.

W. A. GETT, JR.,

Attorney at Law,

Southwest Corner of Seventh and J Streets,

SACRAMENTO, CAL.

F. F. TEBBETS, DENTIST.

No. 914 SIXTH STREET,

Bet. I and J, west side, opp. Congregational Church.

DR. H. H. PIERSON,

SURGICAL & AND & MECHANICAL & DENTIST

511 J Street, bet. 5th and 6th.

Gas administered for the painless extraction of teeth.

Bainbridge Business College
J. C. BAINBRIDGE, }
PRINCIPAL.
1017 J Street, Sacramento. Send for Circular.

Joseph Hahn & Co.,
PHARMACISTS,

S. W. cor. Fifth and J Streets, Sacramento.

CHOICE PERFUMERIES, Etc.

Prescriptions carefully compounded, at all hours.

FIRE! ACCIDENT! LIFE!

—Insurance a Specialty.—

COMBINED ASSETS, - 50 MILLIONS.

Best in the World!

Royal, Norwich-Union & Lancashire,
Of England.See my list of policy-holders and my prices.
"TRAVELERS," of Hartford, Conn. Everybody
knows the name. I sell only first-class policies.
C. H. DENTON, 628½ J Street.

B. Ruhl Bookbinder, Paper Ruler and
Blank Book Manufacturer.

Periodicals, Magazines, Music, and all kinds of Binding neatly done at the lowest prices.

No. 409 J STREET,

SACRAMENTO.

BOOTS AND SHOES
made to order. Boots, $6 to $11. Shoes, $4 to $9. Ladies' Shoes, best quality French Kid, $5 to $7.REPAIRING DONE
at lowest prices.NONE BUT BEST mechanics employed.WE GUARANTEE
to make perfect fitting
to the worst of crooked and crippled feet.COMPETE WITH any shoes on the market.

216 J Street

—AND—

208 K Street,

SACRAMENTO.

A. CASELLI

& COMPANY.

$500 REWARD.

PURSUANT TO A RESOLUTION OF THE BOARD
of Supervisors of Sacramento county, adopted May 7, 1889, said Board will pay the sum of Five Hundred Dollars ($500) for evidence leading to the arrest and conviction of any party illegally carrying on the business of hydraulic mining on the American river
or its tributaries, in any and all mines or claims
which have been heretofore enjoined by any Court of competent jurisdiction, provided, however, that said
Board will pay but one reward for the arrest and conviction of a person or persons operating the same mine or claim.

Attest: F. F. TEBBETS,
Chairman of the Board of Supervisors.
[SEAL] W. B. HAMILTON, Clerk of Board.

The Spider Man.

"The meanest game that was ever worked on me," said the proprietor of an Ann-street chop house, "was the job of a blooming bloke that used to come in here for soup."

"The first time he came in," proceeded the chop man, "he motioned me over to the table where he was eating, and directing my attention to a spider that had dropped into his plate, said, in a very gentlemanly way: 'This cuss has taken possession of my dinner.'"

"I yanked the plate away, and of course brought him another with due apologies. As he laid down his nickel on going out he said I needn't worry about the little incident, as he used to keep a hotel himself, and fully appreciated how impossible it was to avoid such things. As for himself, he wouldn't give it a second thought. I was afraid I had lost him, but he was back in a day or two, and darn my ribs if the same thing didn't happen again! I was mortified half to death. I got him another nice plate of soup and added some cheese and crackers and a nice pickle or two by way of making amends."

"Well, sir, that blamed luck happened right along every time that man came in. He called me several times to change his soup, and then he called on all the waiters in succession day by day, until he got round the whole gang of us. At last we began to suspect something wrong and watched the cuss, and blast my eyes if we didn't catch him taking the spider out of a little paper box that he carried in his pocket and deliberately dropping it into his plate after he had eaten nearly all the soup. In this way he managed to get two plates of soup by paying for one."

"Maybe we didn't bounce the spider man, good and hard! Oh, I reckon not! Ask the boys!"

Somebody said "Rats!"

Every city has its haunted house and San Diego now joins the procession. A certain real estate firm rented a house to a darkey who paid the rent in advance. The first night, so he avers (with the whites of his eyes very prominent), some one came and tapped him on the shoulder, and there was one nigger less in that house that night. They then rented it to a Chinaman, who had the same experience, only more so. He felt the same tap, and the son of Confucius fled, as if a red dragon with green eyes was at his heels. Matters now had assumed a serious aspect, and some local spiritualists determined to solve the mystery. A company of ladies and gentlemen determined to materialize the spirit, if such it was. While the medium was getting en rapport, a big rat ran across the floor, and seventeen different patterns of hosiery immediately materialized, all of them making for the door. The house is still for rent.—San Diego Union.

Foothill land that would not bring ten dollars an acre three years ago, cannot be bought for double that sum to-day. We do not mean small and isolated spots well situated for irrigation and adapted to growing fruit, but large tracts of it—ranches that embrace hundreds of acres. This too in the face of the total absence of any boom in land. When the newly-planted orchards come into bearing, when the orange, olive, fig and lemon begin to return profits to their owners, the price of land will rapidly advance. We have now named only the minimum value of large tracts. For small tracts, or for choice fruit land the value is much higher at the present time.—Oroville Register.

Many people look upon the family clock with superstitious awe. In the country districts almost every family has its stories of the queer actions of timepieces preceding a death in the house. The belief is very strong with many that clocks convey warnings of the coming of the grim messenger. The counterpart of the clock that stopped, never to go again, when the old man died, can be found in many a farmer's house.

To return to the house for some forgotten article after starting on a journey is an omen of misfortune. I have seen a woman stop her husband, thus returning, before he crossed the threshold, and beg to be permitted to bring the missing article, that he might not enter the house for it. It is also unlucky to enter a house by one door and depart by another.

The Colusa Herald says: Nearly forty colored gentlemen have settled in Colusa during the past few weeks, nearly all of whom have families who will be here soon. They are all honest, hard-working people, and had no trouble in getting work. This makes quite an acquisition to the population of the city.

Mrs. Highfeather—"Has the Browning cult reached your town yet, Mr. Bascom?" Mr. Bascom—"No, he hasn't yet; but we've got a young hoss by the name of Fetlocks that'll beat him to shucks, I'll bet."

There is a great deal said in print about the overworked preacher, and the overworked novelist, and the overworked actress, but there is little or no attention paid to the overworked public.

H. WACHHORST

Leading Jeweler of Sacramento
SIGN OF THE TOWN CLOCK,
No. 315 J STREET, SACRAMENTO.

W. D. Comstock, 501 -- 507 K, cor. Fifth

On Exhibition, THE LARGEST AND BEST SELECTED STOCK.

FAIR DEALING! LOW PRICES!

GENSHLEA BROS. 624 J ST.

Strictly High Grade Goods in all Lines.

TRY THE LA ROSA ESPANOLA KEY WEST CIGAR.

Just Received! Immense Assortment!

LATEST STYLES! LOWEST PRICES!

PERFECT FIT GUARANTEED.

420 J STREET, SACRAMENTO.

NICOLL, THE TAILOR,

LATEST PATTERNS OF

Foreign & Domestic Woolens

Trousers (to order), from $5.00. Suits (to order), from $20.00.

NICOLL, THE TAILOR, 420 J ST., SACRAMENTO.

Branch of 816 Market street, San Francisco. Coast Branches: Los Angeles, 86 North Main street Portland, 126 First street.

CURTIS BROS. & CO.

Wholesale and Retail Dealers in and Shippers of all kinds of

Fruits, Vegetables

And GENERAL PRODUCE.

Careful attention paid to the selection and packing of Choice Fruits and Vegetables for distant markets. Goods delivered in city free.

308 and 310 K Street, - - Sacramento, Cal.

Wm. J. Hassett.

A. J. Johnston.

A. J. Johnston & Co.
PRINTERS,

410 J Street, Sacramento

Klune & Floberg, WATCHMAKERS and JEWELERS
Agents for Rockford Watch Co.
NO. 428 J STREET, SACRAMENTO.

F. KUEHNE & CO.,

NO. 906 NINTH STREET,

Between I and J, SACRAMENTO,

Carpenters and Contractors

Store and office work a specialty.

ICE BOXES for Breweries and Saloons always on hand and made to order.

Jobbing and Repairing promptly attended to.

R. H. PETTIT,

Wholesale and Retail Dealer in

IMPORTED & DOMESTIC CIGARS

Smoke the "Lone Fisherman,"

The BEST FIVE-CENT CIGAR in the Market.

NO. 225 K STREET.

JESSE SLAUGHTER,

Office, No. 1217 Fifth Street.

Plastering, Whitewashing, Cleaning of Cesspools, Etc.

Also, CITY SCAVENGER.

Burying of dead animals attended to at short notice.

Don't forget the number—1217 Fifth street, the old stand, where I have been for 25 years.

WESTERN HOTEL

209 to 219 K Street.

The Leading Hotel of Sacramento, Cal.

FREE BUS TO AND FROM HOTEL.

Meals, 25 Cents. Rooms, according to Location.

WM. LAND, Proprietor.

BELL & CO.,

GENERAL AUCTIONEERS.

Salesroom, 927 K Street, Sacramento, Cal.

Regular Salesdays—Wednesdays and Saturdays at 10 o'clock A. M.

Assistants—W. T. Crowell, Real Estate; J. Pulvermacher, Bookkeeper; J. Lambert, Furniture and Stock.

Particular attention paid to sales of real estate, house sales, and sales of farms, stock, etc.

Highest price paid for all kinds of household goods.

BAKER & HAMILTON,

San Francisco and Sacramento,

Importers and Jobbers of

Hardware, Iron, Steel, Coal, Powder,

MACHINERY

And Agricultural Implements.

Send for Catalogue.

RAILROAD TIME TABLE.

Southern Pacific Company

PACIFIC SYSTEM.

July 28, 1889.

Trains LEAVE and are due to ARRIVE at SACRAMENTO.

Lv.	Trains Run Daily.	Arr.
7-00 A	Calistoga and Napa	11-40 A
4-05 P	Calistoga and Napa	8-30 P
11-00 P	Ashland and Portland	3-40 A
5-05 P	Deming, El Paso and East	7-05 P
7-30 P	Deming, El Paso and East	7-55 A
4-30 A	Marysville (Mixed)	4-25 P
9-00 A	Los Angeles	9-55 A
9-00 P	Second Class, Ogden and East	6-30 A
10-30 P	Central Atlantic Express	3-40 P
3-00 P	Oroville	9-50 A
11-00 P	Oroville	3-40 A
3-00 P	Red Bluff via Marysville	9-50 A
10-40 A	Redding via Willows	4-05 P
4-00 A	San Francisco via Benicia	10-40 P
7-00 A	San Francisco via Benicia	8-30 P
4-05 P	San Francisco via Benicia	10-10 P
*10-00 A	San Francisco via Steamer	86-00 A
11-20 A	San Francisco via Livermore	2-25 P
3-05 P	San Francisco via Benicia	11-40 A
11-20 A	San Jose	2-25 P
9-00 A	Santa Barbara	9-55 A
5-05 P	Santa Barbara	7-05 P
7-00 A	Santa Rosa	11-40 A
4-05 P	Santa Rosa	8-30 P
9-00 A	Stockton and Galt	7-05 P
5-05 P	Stockton and Galt	9-55 A
9-00 P	Truckee and Reno	6-30 A
10-30 P	Truckee and Reno	3-40 P
8-30 A	Colfax	5-00 P
7-00 A	Vallejo	11-40 A
4-05 P	Vallejo	8-30 P
*12-15 P	Folsom and Placerville (Mixed)	*10-35 A
*7-15 A	Folsom and Placerville	*3-45 P
*5-20 P	Folsom	*6-50 A

*Sunday excepted. †Sunday only. ‡Monday excepted. A for morning. P for afternoon.
A. N. TOWNE, Gen'l Manager.
T. H. GOODMAN, Gen'l Pass. and Ticket Agent.

H. K. WALLACE & CO.

NO. 920 K STREET,

Sacramento Stove House.

Headquarters for Plumbing, Gas and Steam Fitting.
Galvanized Iron Tanks of all sizes made to order.

Edwin K. Alsip & Co.

ESTABLISHED 1860.

REAL ESTATE

AND INSURANCE AGENTS.

FARMING LANDS A SPECIALTY.

Catalogues issued monthly.

No. 1015 Fourth Street, Sacramento.

Gregory Bros. Co.

Established 1852.

COMMISSION MERCHANTS,

Packers and Shippers of California Fruit and Produce,

126 and 128 J STREET,

San Francisco Office, 313 Davis St. SACRAMENTO.

ANGLO-NEVADA ASSURANCE CORPORATION
OF SAN FRANCISCO.

FIRE.—Cash Capital, $2,000,000—MARINE.

Sacramento Branch:

No. 1018 SECOND STREET.

JOSEPH STEFFENS, Manager.

HOWARD KIMBROUGH, Local Agent.

Hotfilter & Grafmiller,

MANUFACTURING JEWELERS,

Jewelry made to order. Watches, Clocks and Jewelry

Repaired and Warranted.

No. 1026 Sixth Street, Sacramento.

R. DAVIS,

NOTARY PUBLIC,

Real Estate and Insurance Agent.

Representing the following companies:

Manchester of England; Caledonian of Edinburgh,

Scotland; London and Lancaster, England.

1002 J Street, Sacramento.

Restaurant de France,

FAURE & BECKER, PROPRIETORS.

(Successors to L. Payen.)

No. 427 K Street, Near Metropolitan Theater.

Family Entrance on Fifth Street.

Catering to Families, Banquets and Wedding Parties

a specialty.

NOTICE TO FRUITMEN!

Keep your trees free from scale and your apples

from being wormy by the use of

Warner's Scale & Insect Exterminator

FOR SALE BY

G. T. NOE, - - DRUGGIST,

AUBURN, CAL.

Put up in one-half gallon and quart cans.

THE LUMEN

Vol. I.

SACRAMENTO: SATURDAY, AUGUST 3, 1889.

No. 24.

THE LUMEN: published weekly, by A. J. Johnston & Co. Publication Office, 410 J Street. Subscription—One year, by mail, $3 00; six months, by mail, $1 50, in advance; per month, by carrier, 25 cents. (Entered at the Post Office at Sacramento as second-class matter.)

In the last number of the American Law Review is a reference to the decision of the Supreme Court of the State of Indiana, declaring the legislation appointing Supreme Court Commissioners to assist the Supreme Court, is unconstitutional and void. That there being no provision of the constitution authorizing such legislation, the acts are invalid. The constitution provides for only one Supreme Court, and unless there is authority in the organic law to create another, the legislature cannot do it. In Missouri there was such a commission, which the Supreme Court of that State sustained, but at the end of two years the scheme, we believe, was abandoned. The Indiana decision goes to great lengths in abrogating the legislative act creating the commission. Any institution created by this constitution cannot be tinkered by the legislature, because such a construction would place the legislature above the organic law. If the legislature can create a second Supreme Court, or a second chamber of the existing Court, under the name of a commission, it can create a second Governor, establish a third house of the legislature. How will the reasoning of the Indiana Court affect our Supreme Court Commission? There is, we think, a marked similarity between the constitution of California and Indiana in this and many other respects, including that of special legislation. The Supreme Court of California can, however, interpret the constitution in accordance with its own views, without regard to any other State Supreme Court's construction of constitutions containing identical provisions.

There are many obstacles of a superstitious nature which beset the Emperor of China in his great desire for the encouragement of internal improvement in his Empire, particularly that of railroad building. The soothsayers, priests and astrologers, whom the custom of the country requires the Emperor to consult, are opposed to western civilization ideas, and do all in their power to prevent the young ruler of the Celestial Kingdom from looking with favor on the introduction of railroads. The stars and heavenly bodies are never found in accord with such improvements, when the astrologer is consulted. Thus the Emperor is forced to accede to the ancient custom, and abide the decisions of the priests and astrologers.

The Hubbs-Bierce tragedy, which occurred at Chico on July 27th, has attracted considerable attention throughout the State. Young Bierce first met Miss Adkins, a young lady of seventeen, at Chico, on April 26th last. They became engaged. Mr. Barney, the stepfather of the young lady, conceived a dislike for Bierce, and it resulted in trouble between them. Bierce procured a marriage license, and, in his trouble, made a confidant of young Hubbs, who, however, paid court to Bierce's intended wife, won her affections, eloped with and married her. In the meantime the matter of the elopement had been telegraphed over the State and printed sensationally in the newspapers. The young married couple returned to Chico and took apartments at a hotel. They were visited by the bride's mother and invited to call at her house. Bierce reached the house first, said he was sick and wanted to lie down. The mother of the bride showed him a bedroom and told him there to rest. The details of the tragedy are confused; the result, however, was that both Hubbs and Bierce were fatally shot, while Mrs.

Hubbs received a dangerous pistol wound. That Bierce shot Mr. and Mrs. Hubbs is admitted; whether or not he committed suicide is questionable.

There are but two explanations for the conduct of Bierce: That he was insanely infatuated with the young lady, or that he was a man of deep sensitiveness and could not withstand the humiliation of the position in which he had been placed. It has been stated that he was driven to desperation by the sensational reports of the elopement of his prospective bride with Hubbs that were published in the newspapers. It would hardly seem that any man could entertain any feeling of affection for a young woman so trifling as Miss Adkins seems to have been. One who could have transferred her affections in so solemn a base matter as that of marriage, and indulged in the treachery she did, could hardly be entitled to anything but contempt from the young man we understand Bierce to have been. While it has been denied that this deplorable tragedy was the result of aggravating personal newspaper accounts of a matter which did not concern the public, we are inclined to believe that these publications were the direct cause of sending these two young men into eternity.

The flippant and irresponsible newspaper reporter writes that which he thinks will be read; he considers not the wounds he may inflict; he regards only that what he writes will add to the circulation of the journal on which he is employed. The fact, as in this case, that the lives of two young men have been destroyed is a matter of inconsequence to the "enterprising" journalist of to-day; to-morrow he seeks new sensations. Newspaper enterprise of to-day largely means the publication of that which appeals to the morbid tastes; the question of the infliction of a wound, which may result seriously, is not considered. It is to be regretted that some of the leading journals in San Francisco have deemed it necessary to publish this class of sensational matter to build themselves up. Experience has proved that public opinion does not endorse calumny. In the city of San Francisco this style of journalism was rebuked by the killing of the managing editor of one of the leading dailies; his brother was severely wounded. The paper is now clean.

We have always believed in strict personal journalism; that the individual writer shall be held personally responsible for that which he writes. We do not understand that because a man is the editor of a newspaper he is commissioned to drag before the community the private matters of his fellow-men. The elopement of young Hubbs and Miss Adkins, and the desertion of young Bierce, was a matter which should have concerned none except themselves. The publication of the affair may have resulted in the sale of a few newspapers; the stroke of journalistic enterprise will, however, be commemorated by two small teneaments in the cemetery.

The city of Buffalo has just completed an enumeration of its population, and announces that 255,000 persons reside within her limits. That is a population to be proud of. In 1885 her population was estimated at 165,000. We are not aware how that estimate was made, but the increase in the last four years has been pronounced. In 1885 the populations of the leading cities of the Empire State were estimated as follows: Albany, 97,000; Auburn, 23,300; Binghamton, 18,500; Brookhaven, 12,300; Brooklyn, 604,000; Castleton, 13,500; Cohoes, 20,750; Cortland, 13,500; Elmira, 22,000; Flushing, 17,000; Hempstead, 19,500; Johnstown, 18,000; Kingston, 19,500; Long Island City, 18,250; Newburgh, 19,250; New York, 1,300,000; Oswego, 22,500; Poughkeepsie, 21,000; Rochester, 95,000; Rome, 12,750; Schenectady, 14,500; Syracuse, 55,000; Troy, 60,000; Utica, 37,000; Watervleit, 22,500; Yonkers, 19,500.

There should be more frequent enumerations of the populations of the cities of California. In 1885 it was estimated that Sacramento city contained 26,000 inhabitants. We have had our increase. The taking of the school census in June showed a falling off from the enumerations previously taken. It is a fact that our population has increased, and the returns of the school census marshals should show a greater number of children than were returned at the former enumerations. In the case of the city of Buffalo, there has been a marked increase to its general population. In the cities in California, were a comparison made as they stand to-day with the census of 1880, the increase would be more marked in proportion than in the eastern cities. The people of Sacramento have little idea of the changes that have occurred here in the last few years. Our population has been largely augmented; our city has been builded out; what were commons have, within the last few years, been transformed into city lots, and upon them have been erected residences. We are not behind the cities in the east; we have greater advantages.

We have been rather astonished that a journal of the standing for accuracy claimed by the Record-Union should permit the publication in its columns of a burlesque report of the examination of a human being charged with the crime of murder. The writer of this was a local editor on the Sacramento Union at the same time when the present managing editor of the Record-Union had charge of the local department of the Sacramento Record. In the bitter warfare waged between those papers there was never an overstepping beyond the bounds of facts, and in criminal cases the news reports were not colored by the opinions of the reporter. The reports, as for instance, of the case of Charles Mortimer, contained but a straightforward and truthful history of the trial. The reports of the examination of Ah Gong, for the alleged murder of a fellow-countryman at Third and I streets, in the early part of last month, as published in the Record-Union, are grossly incorrect. We make this statement from the fact that, as official shorthand reporter, we were constantly in the court-room, heard every word that was uttered, and witnessed all the proceedings and the acts of all the parties. We personally know that no representative of the paper was present in the court-room during the progress of the examination for a sufficient length of time on any day to enable him to form an intelligent opinion of the testimony. That the reporter drew largely upon his imagination will not be seriously controverted. We understand that the excuse made for this is that the reading public demand an embellishment in the reports of proceedings of criminal cases, and that a reporter has license to interpolate into his report matters which did not occur "to make it readable." We are willing to admit that in such publications as the Police Gazette--publications that cater to the tastes of the depraved--there is a financial justification for exaggeration and misrepresentation; with a paper, however, that claims a circulation in families of respectability, we say that it should speak the truth, particularly when the flippant and borrowed opinions of its reporter may affect the life of a human being—be it even a Chinaman. Were a white man on trial, and a citizen of wealth and responsibility had testified, the Record-Union would not have permitted the publication of a distorted report of his testimony. In that case it would not have been stated that "the witness began to exhibit premonitions of apoplexy, but was revived with a glass of water." We quote that from the report simply as an illustration. The Record-Union can find no one who was in the court-room who knows anything of the premonitory apoplexy, or of the glass of water episode. It has been stated to us that the report was justified, in that it contained some elements of truth. It would be hardly possible to write the report of anything except there would be an occasional glimmering of the truth. If our contemporary is to report for the people important criminal cases in the absence of its representatives, we suggest that it can equip its staff with cheap dime novel writers, and the whole work can be done in the office, without the wear of shoe leather or of brains.

We have no love for England. She has always been the enemy of the United States. She is a nation of commerce; selfish. We were forced to war against her to secure our independence; we fought her successfully in 1812; we encountered her in a measure in the Mexican war of 1846. When the crisis came in the civil war we found England again our enemy. Just credit has not been given to the men who composed Lincoln's first cabinet. We have before us a report of Secretary Welles of the naval department. Speaking of the aspect of European nations toward us, and he meant England, he said:

The great maritime powers of Europe, as soon as they were aware of our domestic difficulty, hastened to recognize the rebels as belligerents, and proclaimed themselves neutral between the contending parties. The operations of this assumed neutrality were to deprive our national ships of the privileges which they had, by national courtesy, enjoyed, and while thus restricting and inflicting injury on our government, the professed and proclaimed neutrality gave encouragement and strength to the rebels, who were in insurrection and waging war upon the Union.

Secretary Welles dwelt extensively on the British ship "Sea King," which became the confederate pirate "Shenandoah." This vessel was under the command of one Waddell, a renegade American naval officer. She cleared under the English flag, but changed her name. Although notified by some of his victims that the rebel armies had surrendered, and that the rebellion had been suppressed, Waddell heeded not the intelligence, but continued his work of the destruction of American commerce until four months after the fall of Richmond, when he was advised by an English vessel that Lee was on parole and Davis a prisoner. Speaking of this particular vessel, Secretary Welles said:

The English government, in the exercise of all that neutral tenderness and care which it had manifested for the rebels from the beginning of the insurrection, when finally compelled to admit the extinguishment of the rebellion, made special reservation to protect the rebel piratical cruisers, and particularly the "Shenandoah," which was an outlaw, without country or home other than England, after the prostration of the rebel organization. Warned by neutral England, whose subjects constituted almost her entire crew, that the organized insurrection was annihilated, the "Shenandoah" had no alternative but to seek again the shelter and protection of that neutral power, where she was built, and from which she was armed and manned. Under the name of "Sea King" she had cleared and sailed as an English vessel, with an English flag and an English crew, and as late as February she stood on the books at the register's office of British shipping in her original name, and in the name of her original owners. Such may have been the case when the pirate was warned that he had not the pretext of a rebel organization to soften his crime, and that he was an outlaw. Of all her captures not one was ever sent in for adjudication, and I am not aware that she ever entered the port of any country but England. It was fitting, therefore, that she should return for refuge to the country of her origin. The "Sea King," alias the "Shenandoah," entered the Mersey on the 6th of November, and her pirate captain, in a formal letter to the English Minister, surrendered the vessel to the English government.

As we have said, we have no love for England. There has been no time when occasion offered that she could stab us in the back that she has not availed herself of it.

We are now confronted with the question whether the British government shall monopolize the transcontinental trade of this hemisphere. That the Canadian Pacific road has a great advantage from governmental subsidy, immunity from opposition and connecting steamship lines is not to be questioned; that in opposition to it the American transcontinental lines are placed in a position of disadvantage will not be seriously denied. England is reaching out to control the commerce of the world; the government assists in the matter of internal improvements and sea carriage. In the United States, government has not fostered important improvements as it should have. In the case of the first transcontinental railway the political conventions of all parties, State and national, at first urged on the federal government liberal donations of land and money to encourage the enterprise. In 1867 the matter became a political issue in this State; it was followed in 1879 by the Kearney movement; in 1883 it was seriously proposed in the legislature to pass bills which would effectually check internal improvements. It was then proposed that the land grant for the California and Oregon road should be declared void by Congress.

The recent seizure of vessels for violating our seal-fishery negotiations, and for which the Canadian newspapers are urging the mother country to resent the alleged insult to the British nation, is not likely to enlist the lion in the cause; and, in the event of England's non-interference, her course will furnish about the first instance where she has not availed herself of an opportunity to injure the American government. It is probable, however, that she is very decidedly interested in the seizure of all our avenues of commerce and appropriating the same to her interests.

The desk that Horace Greeley used in the Tribune office, and which had, perhaps, more to do with the great events of the early sixties than any other piece of furniture, is now preserved by Mr. Meehan, of the Baltimore Sun. The Brooklyn Eagle speaks of it as follows:

It is a very ordinary, clumsy affair, made of ordinary pine boards painted, and it is a little over four feet high and a little less than the same number long. It was built so that the great editor could stand to it while writing, and if it could speak it would not doubt tell some curious bits of history. With the desk is an odd looking strap that Mr. Greeley used to hitch to his scissors so that implement could not get lost among the exchanges, and several other mementoes of the Tribune's founder. They were rescued from the debris of the old Spruce-street building when it was torn down by the late Patrick O'Rourke, one of the founders, who died in this city about two years ago, and are reverently kept by his family as relics of Greeley and the Tribune. Mr. O'Rourke's stock, signed by Horace Greeley, is yet in the possession of his family also. He died in the service of the paper after nearly forty-five years' continuous work for its good fortune.

Sweet-Briers.

Wear I my lady's picture? Nay, not so.
When I anew her gracious face would know,
Down through the rain-washed meadow lands I go
To where the wild sweet-briers bud and blow.
There, waiting silent in half-wakened morns,
Lo, my dear lady stands revealed to me.
Amid the dewy blooms herself I trace,
Both bend and waver with the same sweet grace.
The same shy flushes burn on each fair face,
And both do blossom in a sheltered place.
What say you, that "the brier rose hath thorns?"
Still holds the semblance, so in truth hath she.

HE RODE TO WIN.

"I did not know you had so much poetry in your composition," remarked Mrs. Anstruder, languidly.

Leila Marsden arranged the delicate lace at her wrist with an air of abstraction. "He is very good looking, and he rides splendidly," she said, "and he—er—he does love me to distraction, you know."

"As many others probably will do before your time is over, my dear; but that has nothing to do with the case. You must get married, and Temple is just the man for you. As for the other one, he'll get over it in time; they always do. You are surely not going to trouble your silly little head about him?"

Miss Marsden rose and walked across the room to the veranda. "I'll think about it," she said, half turning in the doorway to glance back at her sister. "I'll think about it, and I'll make up my mind this evening. There! I can't promise more than that, can I, Rose? You are satisfied, aren't you?"

"Yes, I am satisfied," replied Mrs. Anstruder; and, as she dozed through the long afternoon that followed she allowed her sister to figure very prominently as the wife of Major Temple Arburton, of the —th hussars, and future baronet.

Sizirabad is famous for its pretty girls; but prettiest and most striking of all was Leila Marsden at the race ball that night. "Race ball" is, perhaps, too big a term to be properly applied to it; but the arrival of a couple of regiments on their way to the frontier had up stirred Sizirabad to sports on three days of the week, the race ball intervening.

"You'll come down to see the finish to-morrow, Miss Marsden?" asked Tommy Campbell, the wit of Sizirabad, as he strolled up to Leila that evening and asked her for a dance. "There's the cup race coming off, you know, and the ladies' handicap, and the race Willoughby rides to win—the one with the lady as prize."

"What do you mean," asked Leila, laughing. "He means the ladies' prize race," said Maj. Arburton, standing close behind her, and glowering at Campbell over her shoulder.

"And is Mr. Willoughby quite likely to win it?" asked Leila, somewhat indifferently.

"The betting is all on him, but he's got a ticklish mount, and I don't like that left hand corner of the course. With a pulling horse, and a vicious brute into the bargain, you stand a rare chance of jumping the hedge and disappearing down the precipice. Can't imagine why they don't arrange things better in this outlandish land; but then I never have seen the advantages of India. Beg your pardon, Miss Marsden, didn't mean a pun." And he disappeared among the dancers with a comical look on his face, while Leila laughed forcedly and turned to her partner.

"How odd he is!" she said. "By the way, what horse is Mr. Willoughby going to ride to-morrow in the ladies' race?"

"One of mine—Mazeppa. You seem to take a great interest in that fellow Willoughby." [Jealously.]

"Not at all. He is rather a friend of my sister's," replied Leila, carelessly. "Are not you going to ride in that interesting race, Major Arburton?"

"If you wish it [very tenderly], and if my weight will allow of it." [Doubtfully.]

The mixed sentiment jarred on Leila; but he was rich, in a good regiment, with excellent prospects. What mattered it that he was far beyond 30, and no longer as slim as he had been? It was a good match for a penniless girl, and she had no choice; and so, long before the evening was over, people were whispering together concerning Miss Marsden and Major Arburton, and a report flew about that he had proposed and been accepted.

The truth and otherwise of such statements was not to be read on Leila's face. To all outward observance she was as calm and haughty and beautiful as ever. None knew that she looked at her programme over and over again to make sure that there was no mistake, and that the initials "C. C. W." scrawled against the fifteenth valse made her await that dance with a sickening heart.

It came at last. The band struck up the strains of a well known valse, the room began to fill, and presently Leila Marsden, with paler cheeks than usual and a strange beating of the heart, was floating round with Charlie Willoughby as partner.

"Shall we sit the rest out?" he asked, when they paused at length.

Leila bent her head in assent, and they passed out of the room on to the long low veranda, somewhat to the dismay of her sister, who had watched them eagerly while together. The moonlight threw the girl's pale face and tall slight figure into strong relief against the dark veranda background. Charlie Willoughby leant against a pillar overrun with creeper, and looked at her fixedly. He made no excuse for himself, nor did he break the silence between them. His eyes searched her face as though he would read there what he dared not trust himself to hear.

Presently Leila spoke. Her voice sounded faint and far away, even to herself. "I hear," she said pleadingly "that you are going to ride a very vicious horse to-morrow in the ladies' prize race. Please don't ride it; please do not?"

"And I hear that you are engaged to marry Maj. Arburton" (without the slightest reference to her appeal). "Is that true, Leila, or is it not?"

She looked down and traced a little pattern on the stone floor with her foot.

"Is it true, or is it not?" he repeated fiercely.

She lifted her eyes to his, and saw there the passion which trembled in his voice.

"Don't be angry; oh, do not!" she cried, putting up her hand with a deprecating gesture; "they have made me do it. I am a burden to my sister, you know; and I couldn't stand it any longer; and he is not so bad; but I love you the best—oh, so much the best! You know it; only I—I am so miserable."

"Doubtless," he said, gravely, never for an instant removing his eyes from the fair piteous face; "so am I—very miserable; so have I been for the past month; but my misery doesn't seem to touch you much. So you are going to marry this Cræsus, this elderly future baronet, and throw me over quite, are you, Leila?"

She twisted and untwisted her hands nervously, but made no reply.

"And you are good enough to take sufficient interest in me to wish me not to break my neck to-morrow?"

She was still silent.

"Very good. Then listen to me. I ride to-morrow, and I ride to win, and you are to be the prize. Yes, you—do not look so startled—you. I ride to win, or I ride to— Never mind that part of the business. If I win I shall consider you mine in spite of all the Maj. Arburtons in the world. If not—do you understand the alternative, Leila?"

She bent her head. Could she avoid understanding it?

"It lies with you," he went on steadily. "You know my horse, you know the race-course, you know me. If to-morrow before starting you bid me ride to win, very good; if not— The music has begun again. Shall I take you back to your elderly future baronet?"

"My dear Leila, what nonsense!" cried Mrs. Anstruder. "Rub your cheeks, child, and drink this wine. You look as white as a ghost, and about as unhappy. Not go to the races! You will have everyone saying it is all off again just as it is all on. It is too aggravating of you, really."

It was the day following the ball. Leila, in her sister's room, was utterly refusing to accompany her to the race-course, and equally positive in her refusal to see Maj. Arburton.

"I know what it is," Mrs. Anstruder went on angrily; "that boy has been talking nonsense to you. It was too foolish of you to give him a dance last night. If I had known of it I should have taken you home, most certainly."

"He did not talk nonsense, and he is not foolish, nor is he a boy," cried Leila, vehemently; and then she gave way and relapsed into copious weeping.

"At any rate he is only a sub-lieutenant, and cannot possibly have more than five hundred a year. And what is more, he doesn't mean it seriously with you. If you throw over Major Arburton now you will be throwing him over for a mere shadow. Everybody knows what a flirt Charley Willoughby is. He makes love to every girl he meets."

"That isn't true!" exclaimed Leila, with an effort at drying her tears.

"H'm! How about Fanny Hope, and one or two others I could mention?" Silence. "And how about his debts?" Silence. "And his gambling—and that actress, and?"

Leila sprang to her feet. "I won't listen any more!" she cried. "I do care for him, and I hate Major Arburton, and I won't marry him, and I will not go to the races to-day."

Mrs. Anstruder grew pale. She felt her last chance was going. "Then I shall have to remind you," she said firmly, "that I cannot support all my brothers and sisters all their lives. I did my best for Nell, and I am doing my best for you. You seem to forget that I have children of my own to be brought up. I counted on your marrying as soon as possible. I did not count on your throwing up a reasonable chance."

It was cruel, but it had its effect. Leila turned very white, then she moved to the door. "I will go with you," she said, scarcely above a whisper.

The ladies' prize race was the next on the programme. Considerable excitement prevailed among the fair sex as to who would win it. Leila alone sat calm and unmoved among the spectators. She did not seem to hear or see anything, till suddenly there was a little stir and a bustle, and murmurs of "Of course he will win," "he's sure of the race." "I feel inclined to congratulate you already, Mr. Willoughby, you look so like winning," etc.

The hero of the race took little notice of such like remarks. He made his way to Leila and bent low over her. "Which is it to be?" he asked.

For an instant earth and sky reeled round her, then her brain cleared, and she saw his face—resolute, handsome, desperate. She hesitated for one instant, and then she spoke: "Ride to win."

The words were so low he could scarcely hear them, but when he turned away there was a smile in his eyes.

The horses and their riders were drawn up in a line. Leila strained her eyes to watch every movement of black and white, Mr. Willoughby's colors. Mazeppa fidgeted and caught at the bit. There was one little delay, then the flag was dropped; they were off. At first breathless silence, then growing excitement. The course was a small one, and the race was to be run twice around.

Major Arburton, who had not taken part in it, uttered a "Thank God!" as Mazeppa passed the dangerous corner in safety for the first time. "Blue's to the front; no, yellow's pushing up; no, that's Meldon. Stick to it, Meldon. Willoughby's passed him. By Jove! he's got his work cut out for him with that horse. Now they're neck and neck. Good race. No, Willoughby's gaining; no, Meldon; no—by heaven!"

A scream from one of the ladies, a general consternation in the grand stand, a sudden cessation of interest in the race. Charlie Willoughby rode to win, but the providence he had dared revenged itself on him. Mazeppa had forced the bit between his teeth, shied away from the course, and, leaping the frail protection of a hedge, which separated it from the side of the hill, had disappeared with his rider.

"It was a narrow shave, and no mistake," said Charley Willoughby, going over the story for the hundredth time with his wife the second month of their marriage.

"But the best part of it all was when I knelt down beside you and would not leave you," laughed Leila. "I shall never forget Major Arburton's face, nor his words next day, when he told me all was over between us, and that the best thing I could do, after having made such an exhibition of myself, was to marry 'that young puppy.'"

"No," said her husband tenderly, "the best part of it all was that I rode to win, and that I did win what I most wanted—my wife."

The Stage.

[Under this caption will appear a fair and impartial criticism of the drama, actors, music, and all noteworthy matters pertaining to the stage.]

Mrs. Scott-Siddons will give a series of dramatic recitals on the Pacific coast this fall.

Robert Buchanan has arranged "Scott's Marmion" for the stage. The metrical form of the original is preserved.

Miss Frankie Kemble, the shapely "Gabriel" in Evangeline, will wear skirts next season, and be the heroine of A Shanty Queen.

It is proposed to open a museum in Berlin in which shall be exhibited all the German costumes from earliest days, with interior arrangements and decoration of houses.

There will be thirty-three new theaters dedicated in this country this fall. Not one of them cost less than $50,000, while the highest priced cost $250,000. This is a study as to where a great deal of capital is invested.

Henry Arthur Jones has finished the new play he has been writing for Mr. E. S. Willard for production at the Shaftesbury theater in the autumn. It has a setting similar to the same author's Saints and Sinners, in a small English country town. Its story will illustrate a phase of modern English life, and the title will most probably be The Middleman.

Christine Nilsson has been here, too, on a social visit, very lame from rheumatism, and bothered a bit with defective memory. Henry E. Abbey made her an offer to go to America for another farewell concert tour, but she wouldn't listen to it. She went back to Paris in time to buy some pictures at the Secretan sale. Abbey announces that he has arranged with Albani for a tour in America, probably in concert and opera.

Emma Abbott still mourns her husband's death very much. She looked rather pale and used-up when she was in London last week. "I am working very hard," she said, "scarcely allowing myself an hour of rest. Since I have been left alone I find it necessary to be constantly employed. Toward the last of this month I go to Bayreuth to hear Parsifal, Tristan and The Meistersinger. After a short stay in Berlin, I shall sail for home August 3d on the 'Champagne.' Since I have been in Europe I have attended the opera almost every night, getting points on stage business. I am going to do Ernani, Aida and Crown Diamonds in America next season. I have ordered thirty elaborate costumes from Work and Felix, to say nothing of those furnished me by the costumer of the Grand Opera."

Maud Miller was in a dime museum at Minneapolis recently. She was only an ordinary actress, but she deserved better treatment than she received. She played in Jo, Joaquin Miller's drama, an old California play that really has no merit. Capt. Peabody, who manages the museum, saw that she possessed artistic qualities and gave her a chance to develop them. She is a daughter of Joaquin Miller, "the poet of the Sierras," and has a history. Maud Miller is a woman of slight build, dark complexion and charming manners. She is pretty, but her husband does not seem to be a financial success. She is a good actress, but the average theatergoer did not find it out in time. She left the museum to play at Excelsior Springs, and from there her movement is a mystery. It is rumored that she will go out on the road. Her story is a peculiar one. Thomas Brower Peacock, the celebrated Kansas poet, found her in Topeka. The daughter of the great poet was in distress, and he put her on her feet. She had just given birth to a child and was taken from a shanty and surrounded with comfort. She has worked hard, and with fair dramatic talent deserved success.

Lillian Russell is the victim of her own beauty, and the dread of getting fat keeps her as miserable as the humblest chorus-girl in the Casino company. She can't eat any sort of sweetmeats, cake or pastry. Every vegetable is forbidden that grows under ground; no wine is allowed to pass her lips, meat is limited to one meal a day, and between the foods that she dare not eat and does not care to eat her bill of fare is confined to bread and butter, lemons and lettuce. Every day she is compelled to walk ten miles, and in this hot weather the exercise is far from agreeable. She dresses in blue flannel, wears cork-soled shoes, a straw hat with a moist sponge basted in the crown, and carries a double-lined sun umbrella. As the object of this exercise is to keep her flesh down, she never fails to weigh herself before starting out, so that she knows exactly what reduction is necessary. A part of her outfit consists of long strips of white flannel which are coiled about her body spirally, and laid double where the flesh is too abundant. In this snug woolen suit the only Lillian walks until she is a rich rose color and dripping with perspiration, when she is rubbed down with alcohol, refreshed with cold bouillon and put to bed. On her toilet as much care and money are spent as if she were a princess. Every day she receives the visits of a hair-dresser, manicure and pedicure, and a bathing mistress prepares her vapor bath.

Edwin Forrest, one of the most famous actors of the generation now passing away, had the notion that he could not be frightened, and one day he said as much in the presence of a lion tamer named Driesbach. This lion tamer, now dead, was then as famous in his line as Mr. Forrest was in the theatrical line. Mr. Driesbach invited Mr. Forrest to visit him one evening, says the Philadelphia Press. The latter accepted the invitation, and at the house, after passing through a long, dark hallway, he was asked by Mr. Driesbach into a dark room. Meanwhile Mr. Forrest had not thought that his courage was being put to the test. Suddenly, however, he felt something touch his leg in the darkness, and, reaching down his hand, touched what he thought was a cat's back, which he gently stroked. A rasping growl greeted the motion, and he saw two fiery eyeballs glaring at him. "Are you afraid, Mr. Forrest?" asked the lion tamer, who was invisible in the darkness. Forrest replied, "Not a bit," when the lion tamer said something and the growl deepened and the back began to arch. Mr. Forrest held out a few minutes, when he exclaimed: "Now let me out, you rascal, or I'll break every bone in your body!" The "lion king" kept him there, and he did not dare to move a finger, while the lion kept rubbing against his leg. Mr. Forrest finally gave in and promised Driesbach a complimentary supper if he would let him out.

Names selected from Cooper's works, Indian and local names, will be given to 180 State islands in Lake George. The Forestry Commission has decided that the present names are not euphonious.

Book Chat.

The new novel of George Meredith, said to have for its theme "The Romance of Journalism," will soon be before the public.

Colonel Ingersoll has written an introduction to Edgar Fawcett's forthcoming collection of essays, one of which will treat of agnosticism.

"Yes," said the literary man, with a sigh, "style is a fine thing for a writer to have, but when his wife's got it too it takes all the profit away."

Maine seems to prefer young men for college Presidents. President Hyde, of Bowdoin, is only 33 years of age, and Dr. Albion W. Small, who has just been elected President of Colby University, is 36. Dr. Small is an alumnus of Colby. He was also educated at Newton, and at Leipsic and Berlin. He received his degree of Ph. D. from John Hopkins' University.

So long as biographers persist in printing letters never meant for print, so long will unnecessary and cruel wounds be given to the living, and so long will the dead suffer in reputation. Edward Fitzgerald—the Omar Kayzani man—being dead, his biographer, William Aldis Wright, has included in a memoir of him at least one letter that common decency should have prompted him to withhold, because it reveals the brutal bigotry of Fitzgerald's nature, and still more because it was certain to wound Robert Browning in the cruellest possible way. It was a letter written immediately after the death of Mrs. Browning, and in it Fitzgerald said: "Mrs. Browning's death is rather a relief to me, I must say. No more 'Aurora Leighs,' thank God! A woman of real genius, I know, but what is the upshot of it all? She and her sex had better mind the kitchen and their children, and, perhaps, the poor. Except in such things as little novels, they only devote themselves to what men do much better, leaving that which men do worse or not at all." The publication of such a letter must have been cruelly distressing to Browning, and it is no wonder that he has made reply in what is, perhaps, the bitterest sonnet in the language. It reads as follows:

TO EDWARD FITZGERALD.

I chanced upon a new book yesterday,
I opened it, and where my finger lay
'Twix page and uncut page these words I read—
Some six or seven at most—and learned thereby
That you, Fitzgerald, whom by ear and eye
She never knew, thanked God my wife was dead.
Ay, dead, and were yourself alive, good Fitz,
How to return you thanks would task my wits.
Kicking you seems the common lot of curs,
While more appropriate greeting lends you grace;
Surely to spit there glorifies your face—
Spitting—from lips once sanctified by hers.

Professional Chat.

An old time Nevadan furnishes another of Uncle Zeke Dougherty's decisions, when, as Justice of the Peace, he issued a writ of habeas corpus. Not many years ago, a family agreed to disagree, but the bone of contention to a final agreement was the custody of a beautiful girl baby. The father, being the more muscular, took forcible possession of the stock on hand (the baby). The mother, nearly wild with grief at parting with her baby, hid herself to the ranch of Uncle Ezekiel, where the Honorable Judge usually held Court. She poured out her sorrow in the sympathetic ear of the model justice. It did not take him long to think of a means to accomplish the end. One of his men, Charley, was ordered to drive up the old brown mare. It was not long before Charley was en route for the Constable. On the appearance of that officer, Uncle Zeke handed him a writ of habeas corpus, commanding him to bring the father and child into Court immediately, dead or alive, etc. Not many hours elapsed before the Constable made his return and ushered the parties into Court. As they appeared, Uncle Zeke arose from his hide-bottom chair, adjusted his specks, and without further ado took the child from the arms of its father, gave it to its mother, opened the door, and very politely ordered the daddy to get out of the room P. D. Q. The determined look of the Judge stimulated the father not to hesitate in obeying the command, and "he got." From that day to this the decision of the Court has not been reversed.

About the year 1858, the great North American tragedian, McKean Buchanan, was running the Metropolitan Theater, in this city. Buck had some trouble with one of his actors named Forbes, and from words they came to blows, Buck throwing out his "bunch of fives" and thereby blacking Forbes' eye. The latter swore out a warrant for Buck, and he was duly arrested. Hon. J. W. Coffroth was employed to defend the case. A jury of Buck's peers was demanded to try the cause. Now be it known that juries in Police Courts are an abomination to every one except to those who call for them—but in those days every citizen was liable to jury duty. Two waggish constables (Len. Harris and Fred. Chamberlain) were sent out to drum up a jury to sit in judgment on the great tragedian. One went down the levee, the other Front street. Old "bums" were summoned from the hay and lumber piles; they were awakened from chairs in rum mills, stirred out of empty dry goods boxes and aroused from their peaceful slumbers on the sidewalks and in the freight sheds. In the course of a half hour twenty-four citizens appeared in court to respond to their names and duties as jurymen. The first twelve names were called, and as they occupied their seats in the box Coffroth began to wonder, Buck looked aghast, the audience tittered and the Judge (Coggins) thought "What's next?" The jury were requested to stand up and be sworn to answer questions touching their qualifications to serve as jurors, and there stood twelve of Sacramento's most noted "bums," "Old Hans" at the head and "Happy Jack" at the foot—the "rag-tag and bob-tail" of the levee; blacked eyes, bunged noses and mouths, hair uncombed and full of hay and straw, bleared faces and rags were the rule and not the exception. Old Buck was wild. Coffroth tried to hold him down, but it was no go; he arose from his seat, his mouth full of "soap," and with the majesty of Richelieu, threw himself on the mercy of the court, as follows: "May I p-l-e-a-s-e your honor, the law says a man may be tried by a jury of his p-e-e-r-s. If those (pointing to the jury) are my p-e-e-r-s, then I will plead guilty." Amid roars of laughter the court was adjourned, Buck declaring that it was the best foundation for a farce he ever found, and he would certainly bring it out on the stage, although he thought that jury would have hung him had they had a chance to try him for assault and battery.

A Chapter on the House-Fly.

We noticed a few days ago in an exchange a demand for more flies in a certain locality. The idea that anything good could result from the ordinary house-fly seemed absurd. The house-flies, as they are called, are never found except where there are human beings. The general opinion about flies is that, despite the limitless ingenuity expended on patent appliances and poisoned paper, they form one of those ills of life that must be endured. While they ruin our picture frames, soil our mirrors and windows, insinuate themselves in our milk, soup and coffee, or insist on a front seat on our nose, and annoy us in our slumbers, still it is found that they are in fact a blessing in disguise—they are scavengers of the impure air.

Watch a fly, which has been soaring about the room, after he has alighted. You will observe him going through a series of operations similar to a cat licking himself after a meal, or a bird pluming its feathers; he rubs his legs together and carries his proboscis about his body. This operation has its purpose, and Mr. Fly is cleaning himself from thousands of minute insects that have gathered upon him in his flight through the air, and which formed his food. After this cleansing process, he again takes his flight to gather a fresh supply. Now, from scientific investigations, it appears that the air of our houses is literally filled with these invisible insects, and we breathe and inhale them, thus in many instances absorbing the germs of disease. The house-fly assumes the position of an important friend of humanity, in place of a pest.

Anyone with a powerful microscope can verify this matter by going into the kitchen, taking a piece of white paper, wave it around a few times, then place it under the microscope, and thousands of animalculæ, the same that are found on the flies, will be discovered. This demonstrates that these animalculæ are floating in the air, and the quick motions of the flies gather them on their bodies. In dirty or bad-smelling localities, where there are myriads of flies, you will find them constantly covered with animalculæ. In bedrooms, well ventilated, the flies are lean and comparatively free from them. It therefore seems that nature has a purpose for all things. These infinitesimal animalculæ form food for the flies; the flies for the spiders; the spiders for the birds; the birds for quadrupeds, and so on, up to serving man.

Medical science has also developed that flies and other insects are often the means of communicating disease and contagions. Thus the fly, mosquito or flea may come from the body of a disease or contagion afflicted body and carry with it the contagion, and by its bite or contact inoculate another person at a great distance from the place where the original subject exists. A learned physician, writing some months ago from Europe to the Occidental Medical Times, of this city, mentions cases where the Egyptian fleas were known to have communicated contagions.

We complain often of the presence of the myriads of bugs, big and little, that gather around the electric lights of warm evenings, but it develops that the larger ones are the means of destroying the abominable little mosquito pests and knats. It is a demonstrable fact that there are fewer mosquitos since the advent of the electric lights and bugs. Again are we admonished that nature does nothing in vain.

Adley H. Cummins.

It is with sincere regret that we announce the death of Adley H. Cummins. His life career was brief, yet he accomplished much. Unassuming, a student, his own educator, he earned deservedly honors that are accorded to but few. We first knew Mr. Cummins as a stenographer in the offices of the Central Pacific Railroad in this city. Here it was that he married Miss Haskell, a lady who has made her mark in the literary world. When the railroad offices were removed to San Francisco, Mr. Cummins went with them. He pursued studies in fields comparatively unbeaten, and became one of the most accomplished linguists of his day. He could read in forty-one languages and converse in twenty. His published works have been received with high commendation by the reviews of this country and Europe. We regard the death of such a man at so early an age as a calamity; it is doubtful if his place will be filled.

NOTES.

The latest fashion with dudes is to carry their umbrellas so as to trail on the ground. So few of this genus know enough to go in when it rains that this idea is not surprising.

It is stated in religious circles that the Roman Pontiff intends soon to publish an encyclical on the spread of atheism throughout Europe, and the semi-official protection given to the non-believers by certain governments.

An inventor claims that he has an invention in electric motors that can propel trains 200 miles an hour, with certainty and safety. Our Central Street Railway Company should investigate this new process, and secure a motor that will run safely and cheaply ten miles an hour.

A strange custom has prevailed for centuries in parts of Dorset, England. Land is put up at auction, and they who want to rent it bid for it while an inch of candle is burning. He who makes the last bid before the candle expires becomes the tenant of the land at the rent he offers.

It has developed that the firm of eminent lawyers who took Grover Cleveland into partnership as an advertisement to their business, have not found it a paying investment. They agreed to divide the income, but the increase, on account of the new member of the firm, has not justified the outlay.

The contest for Speaker of the next House of Representatives seems to lie between McKinley and Tom Reed. The New York Tribune has evidently espoused the cause of the Maine statesman. Reed will probably secure the honorable position, which is more important than that of United States Senator.

Judge Armstrong sustains the constitutionality of the amendment to the act creating the Board of Police Commissioners, and holds that charters in force prior to the adoption of the present constitution can be amended without violating any provision of that instrument. The Judge sustains defendant's demurrer on technical grounds. The main issue will probably be taken to the Supreme Court for final adjudication.

Now comes a rumor that Sewall, the late consul to Samoa, who raised particular mischief with our State Department under the Cleveland administration about Samoan affairs, claims that all is not right concerning the action of our recent commissioners at Berlin. He claims he was snubbed, etc. It is altogether likely that Mr. Sewall will turn out as a windy, fault-finding crank. We look for this ultimate development.

Judge Van Fleet has decided that the withholding of commitments by inferior courts, in order to allow the convicted parties to depart from the city, while not authorized by any direct provision of the law, still the act of staying the process of the court is in the interest of defendant, and granted as a privilege, therefore he is placed in the position of being a voluntary escape or fugitive from justice. If he returns after the immunity granted he is subject to the judgment of the law.

Excavating the ship-canal at Manchester, England, is a formidable undertaking. Though the canal is only 35 miles long, there are about 200 miles of railway line laid down on or near its banks, and 150 locomotives are at work upon them to remove the soil dug out by 15,000 human and 80 steam navvies. One of the latter has been known to fill 650 railway cars, holding four cubic yards apiece, in the course of a day. The soil to be excavated comprises 50,000,000 cubic yards.

Claus Spreckles, whose fortune of $12,000,000 grows larger every hour, is one of many notable men who drop in at the Bellevue for lunch. He is socially inclined, and nearly always has somebody with him. He has no dyspepsia and his fancy roams freely. An average lunch would include, say, some nice teal duck, with jelly, and French asparagus, with champagne, of course. After lunch he smokes cigars that cost a dollar each. His bright son Adolph is also a good liver, with a partiality for French dishes. He is fond of a sirloin à la Russe, that is to say, of a sirloin with horseradish and a sauce of plain cream and butter and salt cooked together. He likes chickens à la Creole, too; that is, say, chicken stewed with fresh mushrooms, green peppers, tomatoes, a little onion and butter and salt. This is a pure French dish, and there never was a French chef that couldn't make it. The editors of THEMIS are not worth quite twelve millions, but one of them, at least, is with Claus Spreckles upon the question of good living, and believes that the two great objects of life are to be amused and to live well. In other words, not to die indebted to his stomach, and have plenty of fun.

A Scientific View of Physical Training.

J. H. Stallard, M. D., of San Francisco, writes the following interesting article in the Occidental Medical Times for August:

The Sullivan and Kilrain prize fight, brutal and disgusting as it was in many of its aspects, nevertheless will not have taken place in vain if the medical profession and the public should regard it seriously as a gigantic physiological experiment, calculated to throw light upon some of the most important problems of our daily life, by the solution of which we may hope more effectually to resist disease and elevate the standard of the general health. In Sullivan, especially, we have a good-natured, self-indulgent brute, endowed with a wonderful constitution, a perfect physique, indomitable courage, gigantic strength, and persistent endurance. In these days of intellect-worship, the corpus sanum occupies a second and neglected place. Little or no attention is paid to the conditions which secure a good appetite, perfect digestion, good nutrition of every part of the body, and particularly of the nervous and muscular systems, whereby volitional movements are prompt, forcible, exact, and well sustained.

For the most part we are simply the creatures of surrounding circumstances. We drift with our neighbors and become total abstainers, drunkards, vegetarians, or milk-sops, as the crowd directs. We eat and drink according to the habits of our associates, and without any regard to our immediate bodily requirements, and without any reference to our future state of health; and perhaps there are few who will expect or obtain advantage from the study of a prize fight. Yet, note the history of the victorious athlete: Born of a neglected, oppressed and starving race, Sullivan was, nevertheless, endowed with latent physical and nervous energies, which sprang into perfection under the stimulation of liberty and abundant food. Naturally the physical came before the intellectual development. This noble inheritance he did his best to ruin. For months together he has indulged in the grossest orgies of drunken debauchery, beating women and assaulting his best friends in his ungovernable fury. Only a few months ago he was dangerously sick and utterly broken down by his wild and reckless mode of life. His trainer states that his stomach was so weak that it could retain only the lightest kind of food; there was a hole in his neck big enough to hold your fist; his flesh was soft and flabby as a baby's; he looked like a man who would not live three months. And now, after a few weeks of really scientific treatment, and without the aid of drugs, his stomach was restored so that three chickens, half a loaf of bread, besides wine and other things, were taken at a meal. The household butcher's bills amounted to one hundred dollars a week. His muscles became as hard as iron; every morsel of superfluous fat was made to disappear; the force of his blow equalled half a ton; a spin of a dozen miles was regarded as a gentle exercise; his volitional nervous power was apparently inexhaustible; and he has proved himself to be, without the possibility of question, the very paragon of activity, strength and endurance, the realization of perfect physical health.

Surely this result is worthy of study from a professional point of view. How many patients come to all of us with weak stomachs, poor appetites, flabby muscles, weak nerves, and broken down constitutions. Not a few of these were born of healthy parents, were reared on wholesome food, and yet, like Sullivan, have not conformed to the conditions of personal hygiene. They want the care of Dr. Muldoon to restore them. Let it be conceded that alcohol was the cause of Sullivan's bad condition at the beginning of the year, yet his condition at St. Louis affords irrefragable proof that the effects were not permanent; there had been no disease produced from which recovery was impossible. Alcohol certainly is not the sure and deadly poison the total abstainers wish us to believe. This recovery of Sullivan should encourage many a drunkard to pursue a similar plan of cure. Sullivan had his bottle of wine or porter every day, and a bottle of champagne at his meals, before the fight. In this form and quantity alcohol is no more poisonous than bread.

As regards food, the athlete under training adheres to a restricted dietary. He does not drink milk like a baby, for he does not want to make baby muscle or baby nerves; he does not confine himself to vegetable diet, because he has neither the stomach of a pig nor a cow, whose province it is to collect the nutriment from the mass of grass and raise it to the standard of man's requirements. In the training of the athlete fat is rightly regarded as the enemy of perfect health and perfect action. It weakens the nervous system and impairs the action of the muscles and of the heart especially; therefore all fat-producing foods are greatly restricted as to quantity, particularly sugar, starch, fruits, mush, milk and water. A thousand articles are tabooed which are suitable for weak stomachs and for making flabby flesh. To attain the highest standard of health the athlete confines himself to three staple articles of food: Meat stands first; dissolved by the gastric juices, it is potentially both nerves and muscle; it requires for its assimilation no expenditure of force; it passes directly into the circulation by the thoracic duct. The necessary hydro-carbons are taken in the shape of bread, and never in excess. The gastrointestinal tract is filled up by green vegetables, which also maintain the liver in a normal state.

Here, then, we have the principles of a wholesome dietary for adults, and the quantity is determined by the power of the stomach to digest, and that power is raised to its highest point by the carefully regulated stimulus of exercise and the repose of sleep. The balance of supply and demand is thus maintained; no effete matter remaining in the blood, no unnecessary deposits in the tissues, no waste being made.

Such a dietary is a power in the hands of those who will use it. It is more powerful than drugs, and is capable of restoring thousands who are now in miserable health. Its general adoption would fortify the human powers and prevent disease. It would augment the physical endurance of the race and increase the intellectual energy. It would surely add largely to the average duration of human life.

A Canadian Ship Railway.

The Chignecto marine railway, now under construction, to connect the Gulf of St. Lawrence with the Bay of Fundy, is apparently destined to become an important engineering work. The object is to afford a direct transit for ships between St. Lawrence ports and ports in the direction of St. Johns, N. B., Portland, Boston and New York, thus saving a detour of about 600 miles around the dangerous coast of Nova Scotia. It will also add to the value of the St. Lawrence route by enabling vessels from the west to reach the Atlantic by a short cut through the Bay of Fundy without breaking bulk. The cost of the work is estimated at $5,000,000. The shares were readily taken in the London market, and the company are bound to complete the railway by July 1, 1892, receiving a subsidy from the Dominion Government of $170,602 per annum for twenty years. The line of railway is perfectly straight, and the gradients will be virtually level, none exceeding the ratio of 1 in 2000. Its length is 17 miles. There is to be a dock at each end of the line, where vessels will be received in quiet water. In each of these docks there will be erected a hydraulic ship-lift, somewhat similar in construction to those in operation at Malta and at the Victoria docks on the Thames, where, according to a letter from the English engineer, Sir James Brunless, sea-going vessels are daily economically lifted and lowered. The proposed hydraulic lift in the docks at the termini of this railway are specially designed to raise loaded vessels with tonnage of 1000 tons. A ship carriage or cradle, resting on wheels and provided with keel-blocks and bilge-guards, will be first placed on the rails. This gridiron, which is actually a portion of the railway, will be lowered with the cradle upon it and immersed in the water to the bottom of the dock. The vessel which it is proposed to transport will then be floated exactly over the cradle, the keel and bottom of the vessel corresponding with the line of blocks and cushions previously arranged to receive her. The arrangement of the blocks and cushions will vary according to the lines of the various craft to be transported. Once in the proper position, the gridiron will be raised to level of the keel, and then the blocks will be hauled in while under water close to the vessel's bilges and sides. A rack with pawls at the back of the block will prevent any movement. The operation of raising the whole mass will then begin by means of the hydraulic presses arranged on both sides of the gridiron. The length of stroke in each lift is 42 feet. The engines and presses are calculated to raise the maximum-sized vessel, with cargo, to the level of the railway in the space of ten minutes. When the lifting process is finished, the rails on the gridirons will connect with the railway track on terra firma. The gridiron will then be locked securely, so that by means of an accumulator and another hydraulic apparatus the cradle and ship together may be hauled off the lift and thus transferred to the railway, where they will be ready for transportation by means of locomotives. The principle of the project is, therefore, a combination of the hydraulic ship-lift, as employed at Malta, at New York by the New York Balance Dock Company, and at Bombay by the Peninsular and Oriental Steam Navigation Company, with a marine ship or railway extended. Two locomotives will haul the largest vessel to be transported at the rate of ten miles an hour. There will be four lines of steel rails, ninety pounds weight per lineal yard. The construction thus far is of a thorough and substantial character. In the opinion of the leading merchants, no public work now proceeding in the Dominion of Canada will be so far-reaching as this marine railway in its beneficial consequences, not only to Canada, but to the whole of the North Atlantic coast of North America.—Ex.

FLASHES.

Bakers are the laziest of men—they are always loafing.

Politicians who have a "pull" usually end in pulling down their party.

Marriage may not be a failure, but there lots of Mrs. made in matrimony.

It is not unusual for our hardware merchants to have an English axe sent.

Missouri is the only State in the union in which a price is put on the head of a rat.

And now they say Washington could not spell correctly. He was the great author of this country just the same.

A member of the fair sex has obtained a decree of divorce because her husband threw a dictionary at her head. Words passed between them, and they parted.

The sweetest song is the song unsung;
The finest viol is the viol unstrung;
The toughest man is the man unhung;
And the best hock beer is the beer unung.

That queerest, drollest, soundest and most admirable Scottish philosopher, Prof. Blackie, must have been thinking of the crushed correspondence editor when he wrote: "It is easier to prune a redundancy than to force a barrenness."

A young lady tried to break her lover of the habit of chewing tobacco by putting a big red pepper in a piece of "plug." He bit the pepper right in two, and was so mad that he stayed away for a whole week. There has been a reconciliation, but the young man still chews.

"Sue," said Tom, "did you hear this?"
(Could it be he meant to trick her?)
"The concussion of a kiss Always makes the gas-flame flicker."
Then experiments they tried,
In the interests of science,
And their lips as she complied
Soon had formed a close alliance.
After trials two or three,
Happy as a man in liquor,
"See it flicker, Sue!" said he.
Quoth the maiden, "Let it flicker!"

Seabright, Santa Cruz.

Foster N. Mott, the well known pioneer of Sacramento, returned this week from Santa Cruz. Some five years ago Mr. Mott purchased a tract of suburban property near Santa Cruz, which he christened "Seabright," and it is now a pleasant seaside resort. The Santa Cruz Surf of recent date published a two column article on "Seabright," from which we extract the following: "The tract comprises a clean, sandy beach, admirable for bathing, a sheltered and sunny cove where children love to play, and a large upland space of breezy country which was laid out in streets and building lots by Mr. Mott, and has now assumed the proportions of quite a village. Every day the butcher, baker, grocer, fisherman, butter man, gardener and fruit seller appear at the cottage doors as regularly as the flowing tide comes in, take their orders and return laden with the delicacies and substantial of the excellent markets of Santa Cruz. Although so retired and secluded is this spot that the world outside seems far enough away, yet communication with the business center of Santa Cruz is easy and the distance not great. Seabright boasts of a railway station, all its own, where all trains stop. The cottages in Seabright form the most pleasant grouping of small houses in this county; they are of all styles and fashions, to suit the tastes of the various owners. Seabright Hall, the central gathering place for the whole settlement, is a cozy but commodious hall, tasteful, both exterior and interior, with a generous fireplace, a piano and numerous other comforts. This was presented to Seabright by Mr. Mott, and is by him kept in order for the social evening gatherings of the residents." The list of owners of cottages published in the Surf includes several Sacramentans.

The Weather.

The highest and lowest Signal Service temperature during the week ending yesterday was 104° on Tuesday and 54° on Friday. The highest and lowest for the same time last year was 90° and 51°. The highest and lowest temperature for the twenty-four hours ending at 5 o'clock this (Saturday) morning was as follows for the places named: Olympia, 74° and 46°; Port Canby, 62° and 54°; Portland, 82° and 56°; Roseburg, 84° and 52°; Eureka, 56° and 50°; Red Bluff, 106° and 74°; Sacramento, 95° and 60°. The temperature (east) at 5 o'clock, Pacific standard time, was: For Salt Lake, 74°; Cheyenne, 54°; Denver, 62°; North Platte, 58°; Omaha, 64°; Des Moines, 62°; Davenport, 60°; and Chicago, 66°.

Must Hang.

The remittitur in the cases of Drager and Olsen, convicted of the murder of John Lowell, was issued from the Supreme Court today. The judgment of the appellate court is an affirmation of that of the lower court, and nothing now stands in the way of the execution of these men but the exercise of executive clemency, which it is not probable can be invoked.

The Welsh Language.

EDITORS THEMIS:—Having read the short article in your last issue, on the introduction of the Welsh language into the elementary schools of Wales, you will, I am sure, grant me space in your columns to make a few remarks upon the same.

1. You say "that practically Wales is a lost nation." This, sir, I deny in toto; and, in order to prove my case, I beg to refer you to the great speech delivered by the Rt. Hon. W. E. Gladstone on the "church question" in Wales, at Cornwall, in June last, when he publicly stated that "Wales was herself a nation." The following English statesmen have also stated that she is a nation, viz.: Lord Hartington, Sir G. Trevelyan, Rt. Hon. Joseph Chamberlain, Rt. Hon. J. Morley, the late Rt. Hon. John Bright and many others; and to further prove that you are in error, I beg to remind you of the fact that Parliament of Great Britain passed a special act for Wales, viz.: the Sunday Closing Act, which practically made that little country a nation.

2. You also say "that its language is fast becoming extinct." As a Welshman, and one who has recently emigrated from Wales into this State, I am in a position to state that you are again entirely in error. The Welsh language to-day is spoken by over a million and a quarter souls, and instead of it becoming extinct, as you say it will, the contrary will be the case, for it is spoken to-day by more people than ever it has been, and in future it will be spoken by more. Our large towns in England are full of Welsh-speaking people. Liverpool alone has 80,000; Manchester, 60,000; London, 50,000. The smaller towns of Lancashire, between them, have over 40,000, without naming the other large towns of England. There are also scattered throughout the United States and Canada over 60,000 who can speak fluently the old Welsh language, besides the thousands in the Welsh colony of Patagonia, South America. Mr. John Ruskin, in reply to a query from a friend of his in Wales, dated Brantwood, June 26, 1889, as to whether he thought it would be better for Wales that the Welsh language should gradually die out and English be used instead of it, said: "God forbid; the Welsh language is the language of music." So it is; it is full of music, and has the finest literature in existence. May I ask you, sir, to point out to me a nation besides "brave little Wales" on the face of the globe, who hold festivals—the Eisteddfod—where contests are indulged in and prizes awarded for literary and musical ability? These "Eisteddfodan," which last for days, are influential in developing the literary, musical and scientific talents of the people, as they are open to all, and rewards are distributed impartially and with strict regard to merit. The Welsh preserve their ancient language by means of these "Eisteddfodan," and so long as these festivals be kept up by the Welsh people so long will the Gymraig be spoken in the principality.

Every race has its peculiarities of character, and the Welsh have theirs. They are hot-tempered, easily provoked, and law-abiding, but they dislike greatly to be interfered with. They are patient enough under ordinary conditions, but they rebel against coercion of any kind. They are peculiarly a working people, and though the population of Wales is only a little more than 1,400,000 they supply England's 38,000,000 with more than one-third of the coal they use. For this estimable benefit they receive no return but taxation. The public education that England affords to her sons is denied to theirs, and they are forced to acquire learning as best they can. And it is an eloquent commentary on their intelligence that in spite of such discouragements the Welsh have conquered every difficulty and are competent to lead the world in science, art and literature. "Oes y byd ir iaith Gymraig."

Yours truly,

DAVID PARRY RICHARDS.

Lincoln, Placer county, July 30, 1889.

[The article referred to was written by an editor of THEMIS whose parents were natives of Wales, and who spoke the language of that country. We have no pride in perpetuating the language and customs here of a people of another country, if even we did spring from them, or they can claim a relationship with us. In our childhood we heard the Welsh language spoken by our parents and friends. If it is musical, we must confess that we do not duly appreciate music. The point of our article was that there was no necessity of teaching modern foreign languages in the public schools of this country. We recede not; it is an absurdity. Let us have an education in the language of our own country.—ED.]

At Snowflake Park this afternoon, beginning at 3 o'clock, the Sacramento and Oakland teams will play ball. The battery for the home club will be Ziegler and McLaughlin. A train leaves the depot at 2:45, and the cars of the Central Street Railway will make their usual trips.

PERSONAL.

Mrs. Fred. Biewener and children are rustivating at Monterey.

Miss Alice Hassett leaves this afternoon for Menlo Park, San Mateo county, where she will spend her school vacation.

The young gentlemen comprising the Stag Club leave for Soda Springs to-morrow night, for an "outing" of two or three weeks.

Dr. W. R. Chunn and Dr. J. H. Parkinson leave by the San Francisco train this afternoon to join their families in their vacation.

E. T. Duden, stenographic reporter, is engaged in reporting the examination of Jack Murphy and Billy Gillen, charged with the murder of Jim Clooney, at Cacheville.

The young classmates of Julius Gregory, the son of Mayor Gregory, gave the youngster a surprise party last night. Music and youthful games were the order, after which a fine repast was served.

Charles K. McClatchy, the young managing editor of the Bee, is taking a much needed respite from his arduous labors, by an ocean trip across the Atlantic and Pacific. There is no more brilliant and forcible journalist on this Coast than our young friend. He simply worked himself down to such an extent that artificial means were absolutely necessary to meet the strain upon his mental as well as his physical strength. It was a case of "hot axle," and the whole machinery of his organization needed rest and lubricating. We trust that his shattered health may be fully restored by this timely rest. Anything that emanated from the pen of Charles McClatchy had a ring that could not be mistaken—there was no mincing matters, no cringing hypocrisy. When he wrote, he called things by their proper names. If ever there was a fault about his writing, it was that of being too emphatic and a lack of policy. We will gladly hail the hour of his return, and hope it may be with recuperated health and renewed energy.

EARL BROS.

COMMISSION MERCHANTS

IN CALIFORNIA PRODUCTS

122 J STREET, : : SACRAMENTO.

GEORGE DIETRICH, Manager.

Chicago House, 157 South Water St.

SNOWFLAKE PARK.

Twenty-eighth and R Streets.

BASEBALL—CALIFORNIA LEAGUE.

THIS DAY! THIS DAY!

Saturday,.....August 2d

At 3 o'clock P. M., sharp.

Sacramento vs. Oakland.

Men,.....25 cents | Ladies,.....25 cents
Boys,.....10 cents | Reserved,.....25 cents

Train leaves depot at 2:45 P. M. Fare, for the round trip, 15 cents.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

THE CARS OF THE CENTRAL STREET RAILWAY COMPANY will only stop at the further crossings.

There will Always be Cars Waiting at the Close of Both Theaters.

THE NEW PAVILION

At South Sacramento will be open on SUNDAY, the 4th of August, and at all times thereafter.

Refreshments of all kinds always on hand.

Take a Ride on the Riverside Road

AND BE SURE AND STOP AT

BILLY GROENVELDT'S

Sutterville House

And get a glass of COOL BEER. Or if you want a bottle of CHAMPAGNE Billy has it on hand, or anything else you may wish for in his line.

Always a FINE LUNCH on the Counter.

M. T. GROENVELDT, Proprietor.

Cooper's Music Store.

The Mathushek Pianos

Are fast taking the lead in musical circles on account of their very superior tone and splendid action. Mr. Cooper, the agent, has a large number of testimonials from purchasers of this particular style (the Grand), among them being Mrs. Stoneman, wife of ex-Governor Stoneman, who speaks in very favorable terms of these pianos, as follows: "I must speak to you in regard to my piano. Some of our finest musicians have spoken particularly of its very fine tone and action. It improves continually, which is the reverse of any other make of pianos, as my experience goes."

Largest and Best Selected Stock of Musical Instruments and Musical Merchandise.

NO. 631 J STREET,

Corner of Seventh, SACRAMENTO.

Fine Table Wines

From our Celebrated Orleans Vineyard.

Charles Handbury & Co.
Producers of the
ECLIPSE
CHAMPAGNE,
530 Washington St.
SAN FRANCISCO.

CHAMPAGNE

PERRIER-JOUËT

W. B. CHAPMAN,
123 California St. San Francisco.
SOLE AGENT FOR THE PACIFIC COAST

For sale by all first-class Wine Merchants and Grocers.

Samples and Instructions for Self-measurement sent by mail on application.

L. RADLOFF,

LADIES' TAILOR.

218 POST STREET, SAN FRANCISCO.
Tailor Made Suits a Specialty.

A. AITKEN,

PREMIUM PIONEER MARBLE AND GRANITE WORKS

423 J Street, bet. 4th and 5th, Sacramento.

Costic Tile, etc. Cemetery lots enclosed with Granite. All kinds of work done in Italian and Vermont Marble. Direct importer of Scotch and Eastern Granite Monuments. Also, Marble, Slate, Wooden and Iron Mantels, direct from manufacturers, at Reduced Prices. Call and examine.

The Angel of Patience.

To weary hearts, to mourning homes,
God's meekest angel gently comes;
No power has he to banish pain
Or give us back our lost again;
And yet in tenderest love our dear
And heavenly Father sends him here.

There's quiet in that angel's glance,
There's rest in his still countenance;
He mocks no grief with idle cheer,
Nor wounds with words the mourner's ear;
But ill and woes he may not cure
He kindly trains us to endure.

Angel of Patience! sent to calm
Our feverish brows with cooling palm;
To lay the storm of hope and fear,
And reconcile life's smile and tear;
The throbs of wounded pride to still,
And make us own our Father's will.

O thou who mournest on thy way,
With longings for the close of day,
He walks with those, that angel kind,
And gently whispers: "Be resigned;
Bear up, bear on, the end shall tell
The dear Lord ordereth all things well!"

—J. G. Whittier.

Flowers as Symbols.

In all ages and among almost every people, flowers have been adopted as symbols, types and emblems of human combinations, affection and loyalty. The reader need scarcely be reminded of the red and white roses which were the badges of the Lancastrian and York rivals to the English throne.

But the symbolism of flowers dates back to periods far older than the time of the war of the roses. The ancient nations had their emblematic flowers. The special flower of the Hindoos, for instance, has always been the marigold. The Chinese display as their national flower the gorgeous chrysanthemum.

The Assyrians for ages proudly wore the water lily. Egyptians delight most of all in the heliotrope; though the papyrus leaf, used by the ancient Egyptians in place of paper, may also be regarded in a high sense as the symbolical plant of the land of the Nile.

The Greeks and Romans were in the habit of distributing the flowers in their luxurious gardens among their gods and demigods, just as in yet remoter times the sweet basil and the moon flower were sacred to Asiatic deities.

In the Roman custom to Juno was devoted the lily, to Venus the myrtle and rose, to Minerva the olive and the violet, Diana had the dittany, Ceres the poppy, Mars the ash, Bacchus the grape leaf, Hercules the poplar, and Jupiter, naturally, the monarch of trees, the oak.

So, we may infer that among the Romans, the lily and the oak were the emblems of power; the myrtle and the rose, of love; the olive and the violet, of learning; the ash, of war, and the grape leaf of festivity.

Even the days of the week, as we use them now, are named from the deities who had each his special flower. The sun (Sunday), the sunflower; the moon (Monday), the daisy; Tuesday (the god Tui's day), the violet; Wednesday (the god Woden's day), the blue monkshood; Thursday (the god Thor's day), the burdock; Friday (the goddess Freia's day), the orchis, and Saturday (Saturn's day), the horse tail.

We also find that in our time the sacred days in the calendar of the English Church have all their flower or plant emblems, the principal of which are the holly for Christmas, the palm for Palm Sunday, and the amaranth for All Saints' day.

Monarchs and nations have often had their symbolic flowers. The thistle is the emblem of Scotland, and the shamrock of Ireland. The fleur de lis is the badge of the royal house of France, and the amaranth of that of Sweden. The rose blooms forever on the royal coat of arms of England.

Josh Billings' Philosophy.

There iz lots of people who think it iz a grate deal better for io ov the party to wait than it iz for 2 ov them to be in a hurry.

The best bill ov fare i know ov iz a good appetight.

I konsider forms and cerimonys the mere tricks ov civilzashun, but to observe them iz the only way i kno ov to protekt onrselves against the common herd.

Sun folks never git redly; they are alwuss behind hand; they will sum ov them be too late to tend their own phmmeral.

Whenever yu cum akrost a man who iz telling evry boddie he meets how long he haz wore the pair ov boots he haz got on, yu kan safely konklude that man iz filling his destiny, and ain't good for ennything else much.

Kultivate a taste for walking; it iz not only the original wa ov gitting thru this world, but thare iz helth and independance in it, which makes it one ov the luxurys ov living.

Thare be people so konfoundedly stupid that they kait se a post even after they hav run their heds aginst it.

I hav herd lies so well told that it wnz no disgrace to beleave them.

Thare is a proper ekonomy in all things; if yu hav got a friend and want to keep him, don't lay him under too grate obligashuns to yu.

All the vices are az eazy to ketch az the small-pox.

One ov the most diffikult things for a man to learn iz that he iz a bore.

The more sekrets yu divulge, even to yur best friend, the less he will think ov yu, and the more he will think ov himself.

Nirvana.

"It is an unusually severe case of hypo," said the doctor, gravely. He was young and much interested in the patient's daughter, a young and pretty girl.

"Is it a dangerous disease?" asked the young lady.

"No," said the doctor, suppressing a tendency to laugh. "Keep him cheerful and happy. In other words, take him where 'Nirvana is, and rest.'" The doctor had dabbled a little in esoteric philosophy. Buddhism was his hobby at that moment. He was much interested in this father and daughter, who had been spending the season at the little town where he had just hung out his professional card.

"Oh, thank you, doctor!" and the blue eyes were lifted with glad confidence to the young doctor's rugged face. "If papa gets well we will owe it all to you."

"I shall not be here again for a week, as I am going out of town, but the moment I return I will call and see how your father is doing," said the doctor, ignoring with becoming modesty the young lady's allusion to himself.

"But we may both be in Nirvana by that time," she responded.

"So much the better," laughed the doctor; "I often go there myself."

When the physician was gone, Effie Harkins hurried into her father's room. At the sight of the pale, morose face of her beloved parent, her heart smote her for neglecting him, and the doctor's diagnosis of the disease returned to her with alarming force. "Papa, dear," she said, in her gentlest tones, "did he tell you what it was?"

"No!" ejaculated the invalid, with considerable force for a sick man. "What is it? Consumption? Apoplexy? Heart disease? Out with it—I can stand anything better than suspense. What is it, girl?"

His tragic manner really frightened poor Effie out of her senses, but she managed to gasp: "The doctor says it's h—hypo!"

"Hypo! The d—!" retorted her father; "that's as much as to say I'm making believe sick and paying out my money for nothing. He must be a fool!"

"Then it won't kill you, dear," said his affectionate daughter, sitting down by him, and taking his hand in her's; "and he said, papa, that we must go to Nirvana."

"Where the dickens is Nirvana?" asked the sick man, with energy.

"Why, I thought you would know, dear."

"Well, I don't. Sounds like a mining town. It's probably away up in the northern peninsula in the lumber region. Get a railroad guide, or an almanac, or something, and find out."

Effie flew around after the fugitive literature of travelers, but she could not find any such place. Her father fretted and fumed, and sent her to all the depots in town, to the postoffice, and every other place, but no such name as Nirvana appeared upon any chart of travel or business. Then, at Effie's suggestion, a note was sent to the doctor, her father dictating it, and she writing in his name with a distractingly pretty feminine hand. The last thing in it was the question, "Where is Nirvana?" and it appeared in a postscript as an unimportant after-thought.

The doctor answered the note, although he received it on the very day he was returning home, and he said, carelessly, after replying to the main question involved, that Nirvana was not a place, but a State.

This was a surprise. Mr. Harkins flew into a rage. "As if I didn't know the names of the States!" he said; "if it's anything it's a territory—State, indeed," and the sick man ran over the entire list of thirty-eight States, to satisfy Effie, who could not have told, for her life, whether Nirvana was a State or not.

When the doctor returned he waited a day or two before calling on his patient. He did this as a salutatory measure, denying himself the most urgent desire of his life. When he did call he found the sick man up, a wholesome flush of health and energy in his face, and seated at a table on which railway guides, geographies and tourist books were piled in a promiscuous heap.

"Glad to see you, doctor," he said, brusquely, as Effie ushered in the man of science. "I'd have been off before this if I could have found that infer—I mean that place you told us about."

The doctor looked conscious. "It isn't a place; I thought I wrote you that. It's a state—a—"

"But I tell you it isn't a State," retorted the invalid. "I've got every State and territory on the list right here before me. Now, find me that Nirvana if you can."

"It is an imaginary state." The doctor vowed inwardly that he would never air his learning again. "A state of annihilation to which the Buddhists consign souls. I—I only used it figuratively when I told Miss Effie to take you there. It is a common thing for a—a—physician to say 'go to Nirvana!'"

But Mr. Harkins was furious. "Go to Halifax!" he snarled. "Send in your bill. I want no trifling treatment like that."

But here Effie, who had been laughing soundlessly in the next room, came to the rescue. "It is a capital joke, papa, and it all happened through our ignorance. I am going right to work to study the doctor's geography. Why, it has cured you already, by giving you something to think about."

The doctor is married now, and his home is one of the pleasantest places in life. There, when the day is over, a sweet, blue-eyed woman sits at the piano and sings softly to two listeners, a song that sometimes moves them to laughter, and sometimes to tears: "Heart, oh! wild heart; why in the storm-world raging, Flitting thou thus midway passion's slave and jest, When all so near, above, below, unchanging, Nirvana is and rest?"

Some Very Rare Stamps.

The green 3-cent stamp which was adopted in 1870 continued longer in use than any of its predecessors. It was used until October 1, 1883, and it might have continued in vogue much longer had not Congress reduced the rate of letter postage to 2 cents. Under the new law a brown 2-cent stamp was issued. It continued in use until 1887, when its color was changed to the objectionable green. Among the rarest American stamps are some which were not issued by the government. When Congress, in 1845, authorized the use of stamps, it neglected to make such provision as warranted the postal authorities in their estimation in the issue of stamps. During the period of two years preceding the issue of government stamps the principal cities of the United States issued what were known as postmasters' stamps. They were intended for the convenience of business men who desired to mail letters after the closing of the postoffice, for the postoffice did not remain in operation all night in the primitive days of the postal service. These stamps were issued by postmasters at New York, Philadelphia, Washington, Baltimore, St. Louis, Providence, Alexandria and a great many other places. Some of these stamps were merely slips of paper bearing the signatures of the postmasters. Collectors value the Baltimore stamp which is of this character at $200. A stamp which was issued by the postmaster of New Haven is worth on an original used envelope $300 or more. A postage stamp issued by the Millbury postmaster, which was of elaborate design for those days, and bore the head of Washington, brings easily $300 to $500.

The court of Spain, under the reign of its baby King, is obliged to maintain a Lord of the Bottle, a Purveyor-General of One Cow's Milk, a Lady in Waiting with Rocking Chair Obligations, two pages to carry certain unmentionables, and an Overseer of Toys and Picture Books. Socialists in Madrid are beginning to grumble at all this.

A new source of intoxication has been discovered. It is simply dry tea, eaten, of course, before it is steeped. It produces an agreeable effect at first, but indulgence finally causes sleeplessness, disorderly impulses and delirium. Not a few persons have already been found to have contracted this deadly form of the tea habit.

"Judge a man by his eyes, but a woman always by her lips," said Benjamin Franklin. Now we understand how Ben. happened to get so deeply interested in the study of electrical phenomena.

FRIEND & TERRY LUMBER CO.

Wholesale and Retail Lumber Dealers. Also Shakes, Bolts, Ties, Doors, Windows, Blinds and Screens. Main Yard and Office, No. 1310 Second Street. Branch Yard, corner Twelfth and J Sts. P. O. Box 233. E. J. HOLT, Manager. Sacramento

OSBORN & FOLGER

DEALERS IN ICE and COAL, HAY and GRAIN. New 10-ton Fairbanks' Hay Scales. N. E. cor. Fifth and I Streets. Wood Yard, 806 I Street.

A. C. SWEETSER & CO., Real Estate & Insurance Brokers

Lands For Sale in all parts of the State. Some Good Investments in School Lands. Send for Catalogue. Office, No. 1012 Fourth Street, SACRAMENTO, CAL.

WESTERN HOTEL

209 to 219 K Street. The Leading Hotel of Sacramento, Cal. FREE BUS TO AND FROM HOTEL. Meals, 25 Cents. Rooms, according to Location. WM. LAND, Proprietor.

L. K. Hammer

THE LEADING MUSIC DEALER.

AGENT FOR

Chickering Pianos.

Largest Stock of Musical Instruments in the City.

No. 820 J STREET.

GRAND OPENING

OF

NOLAN & SON'S Boot and Shoe STORE.

603 J STREET, SACRAMENTO,

One door above Sixth.

GEORGE T. BOYD,

Manufacturer of

Pure Candies and Ice Cream Temple of Sweets,

907 K Street, next to Odd Fellows' Temple, SACRAMENTO, CAL.

BELL & CO., GENERAL AUCTIONEERS.

Salesroom, 927 K Street, Sacramento, Cal. Regular Salesdays—Wednesdays and Saturdays at 10 o'clock A. M.

Assistants—W. T. Crowell, Real Estate; J. Pulvermacher, Bookkeeper; J. Lambert, Furniture and Stock.

Particular attention paid to sales of real estate, house sales, and sales of farms, stock, etc.

Highest price paid for all kinds of household goods.

Dissolution of Copartnership.

Notice is hereby given to all concerned that the firm of SMITH & MUIR, Plumbers and Gas-fitters, at 412 J street, is this day dissolved by mutual consent. The business will be carried on at the old stand by A. M. SMITH, who is now the sole proprietor of said business. All accounts due said firm are payable to A. M. SMITH, who is authorized to receipt for the same, and all debts of said firm will be paid by him. Sacramento, June 26, 1889.

All claims against the firm to be presented at once, and all parties indebted to the firm will please call and settle. A. M. SMITH. A. J. MUIR.

Sale of Unclaimed Baggage

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN THAT I, WM. LAND, proprietor of the Western Hotel, Sacramento, will cause to be sold at public auction, at the salesroom of W. H. Sherburn, 323 K street, Sacramento, on TUESDAY, AUGUST THIRTEENTH, 1889, at 10 o'clock A. M., the following described baggage:

Lot 1, 1 Trunk, marked C. B. G.; Lot 2, 1 Trunk, marked Albert Schmidt; Lot 3, 1 Trunk, no mark; Lot 4, 1 Trunk, marked Walter Johnson; Lot 5, 1 Trunk, marked E. T. Naghel; Lot 6, 1 Trunk, marked Billy Myers; Lot 7, 1 Trunk, no mark; Lot 8, 2 Trunks and 1 valise, marked C. G. Meegan; Lot 9, 1 Bundled and 1 valise, marked Mrs. G. W. Otto; Lot 10, 1 Valise, E. N. McBeath; Lot 11, 1 Valise, no mark; Lot 12, 1 Valise, no mark; Lot 13, 1 Valise, no mark; Lot 14, 1 Valise, C. J. Morgan; Lot 15, 1 Valise, C. J. Morgan; Lot 16, 1 Valise, 747 marked; Lot 17, 1 Valise, no mark; Lot 18, 1 Hand Satchel, Charles Saubach; Lot 19, 1 Valise, W. H. Schad; Lot 20, 1 Valise, no mark; Lot 21, 1 Valise, no mark; Lot 22, 1 Valise, no mark; Lot 23, 1 Valise, Sept. 5th, 1888; Lot 24, 1 Valise, F. A. McGuire, Aug. 28th, 1888; Lot 25, 1 Valise, no mark; Lot 26, 1 Hand Bag, no mark; Lot 27, 1 Carpet Bag, no mark; Lot 28, 1 Basket, M. S.; Lot 29, 1 Lunch Basket, no mark; Lot 30, 1 Basket, no mark; Lot 31, 1 Band Box, no mark; Lot 32, 1 Box, Chas. E. Burton; Lot 33, 2 Lots Umbrellas; Lot 34, 1 Lot Cans; Lot 35, 16 Bundles Bedding; Lot 36, 17 Packages and Bundles; Lot 37, 1 Lot Linen Coats; Lot 38, 1 Lot Clothing; Lot 39, 3 Valises, no marks; Lot 40, 1 Lot Shoes, etc.; Lot 41, 6 Coats and Linen Coats, Hotel Checks Nos. 2475, 3817, 3552, 3399, 3733, 3742. All the above described property having remained uncalled for for more than six months.

WM. LAND, Proprietor Western Hotel, Sacramento. W. H. SHERBURN, Auctioneer.

California State Bank

DOES A GENERAL BANKING BUSINESS.

Draws Exchange on all the Principal Cities of the World.

OFFICERS:

PRESIDENT.....N. D. RIDEOUT
VICE-PRESIDENT.....FRED K. COX
CASHIER.....A. ABBOTT
ASSISTANT CASHIER.....W. E. GERBER

DIRECTORS:

C. W. Clarke, N. D. Rideout,
Geo. C. Perkins, J. R. Watson, Frederick Cox,
W. E. Gerber.

W. R. STRONG & CO.

Founded 1852.

Fruit Packers

and Shippers.

PROPRIETORS OF

CAPITAL NURSERIES,

SACRAMENTO, CAL.

CURTIS BROS. & CO.

Wholesale and Retail Dealers in and Shippers of all kinds of

Fruits, Vegetables

And GENERAL PRODUCE.

Careful attention paid to the selection and packing of Choice Fruits and Vegetables for distant markets. Goods delivered in city free.

308 and 310 K Street, - - Sacramento, Cal.

King Bros.

State Capitol Cash Grocery, 131 J Street, corner Second.

Goods sold on small margin, strictly for cash. Best Brands of Wines, Liquors and Cigars.

JAS. LONGSHORE,

SACRAMENTO TRUNK FACTORY,

530 K STREET.

Trunks, Valises & Bags Wholesale and Retail.

Waterhouse & Lester

DEALERS IN

IRON, STEEL, CUMBERLAND COAL,

Wagon Lumber and Carriage Hardware, SACRAMENTO.

Earthquake and Fire Proof

BUILDINGS

Constructed on my patent system. Perfect protection guaranteed. For estimates and particulars see E. HAWES, Twelfth and B streets, Sacramento.

PUMPS

Our Factory is the Largest and Best Equipped in Northern California.

Our Designs are New and Original and Calculated for Every Variety of Service.

CAPITAL IRON WORKS,

904 K Street, Sacramento.

CANCERS,

Ulcers, Wens, Lumps, Exceresences, etc., Positively Cured or no Pay. No Knife Used.

As to the success of my treatment, I give the names of a few of the many cured. By addressing them they will give any information required—and it pays to investigate before being treated.

Mrs. O. C. Neilsen, Grass Valley, cancer.
John Service, Auburn, lupus.
Patrick Lynch, Sacramento, cancer.
Mrs. Jno. Shaw, Grass Val., birthmark removed.
N. S. Peck, S. P. R. R. Sacramento, cancer.
J. L. Woods, Washington, Yolo county, cancer.
John W. Douglas, Rocklin, cancer.
Miss Mamie Lynch, Yolo, tumor removed.
Chas. McLaughlin, Sacramento, cancer.
I might give many more. Those afflicted are invited to call and investigate for themselves. Consultation at office free. Send for circular.
Office, 426 K Street, Sacramento.
DR. J. H. SHIRLEY.

FOR FRESH, CLEAN GROCERIES, GO TO

We invite a call at our new location, corner Eighth and K streets, where with our increased space we are enabled to give our large stock a fair display and our customers convenient room.

THE AMERICAN CASH STORE

Offers attractions to cash buyers of GROCERIES. A high quality of goods is carefully regarded.

O. F. WASHBURN, 801 K STREET.

O'BRIEN'S, 607 J.

SWEEPING REDUCTION IN LADIES' SHOES.

Best French Kid, hand turn, worth $7, reduced to $6. Ladies' French Kid Button, low heel, long vamp, worth $5, reduced to $4. Misses' and Children's Canvas Shoes reduced 25 per cent.

A. J. MUIR,

PLUMBER,

- Gas and Steam Fitter. -

Being a practical plumber, I can guarantee all work.

810 K STREET, Telephone 226.

SACRAMENTO, CAL.

ALBERT GRUBBS,

No. 1417 Fourth Street,

Will do all kinds of House Cleaning, Lay Carpets, Whitewashing, and everything in that line.

He also has has the only wagon for the REMOVAL OF DEAD ANIMALS, and any orders left at his place of business will receive prompt attention.

Remember the address!

No. 1417 Fourth Street, Sacramento, Cal.

PAUL GRAF,

Manufacturer of and dealer in Saddles, Harness, Robes, Collars, Whips, Spurs, Brushes, Currycombs, etc.

1130 J Street, near Twelfth

Repairing Neatly Done.

Harness Made to Order.

Barrett & Berkey

PACIFIC RESTAURANT,

OYSTER HOUSE AND

WINE PARLORS

701 J Street, cor. 7th.

CALL AT 1118 J STREET,

- AT -

Fred Futterer's Saloon

And Get a Glass of Cool Beer.

The best Wines, Liquors and Cigars always on hand.

POOL AND BILLIARD TABLES.

FRED FUTTERER, 1118 J Street.

CHANGED HANDS.

SACRAMENTO EXCHANGE,

(Formerly Wm. Gamble's.)

1012 SEVENTH STREET.

Fine Wines. All the celebrated brands of Liquors and Cigars.

ROBERT ALLEN, Formerly of Agricultural Park.

RHOADS & TOWNSEND HOUSE

On European Plan.

Cor. Second and J Streets, Sacramento.

ARTHUR MILLER, PROPRIETOR.

ANHEUSER & BUSCH

BEER

Can be found on draught only at

John Gruhler's Saloon

No. 522 J STREET.

The finest and best Wines, Liquors and Cigars constantly on hand.

Patronize Home Industry!

CITY & BREWERY

FRANK RUHSTALLER, Proprietor.

GENUINE

Pilsener Felsen Beer.

Corner Twelfth and H Streets,

Telephone 201.

SACRAMENTO.

CELEBRATED

WEINER LAGER BEER

CAPITAL BREWERY

LOUIS NICOLAUS,

Corner Twelfth and I Streets

SACRAMENTO.

COLUMBUS BREWERY

CHRIS. WAHL, Proprietor

Corner of Sixteenth and K Streets,

SACRAMENTO, CAL.

Agent for the Celebrated W. J. LEMP'S ST. LOUIS LAGER BEER

WISSEMAN'S SALOON,

Klebetz & Green's Old Stand,

1020 Fourth St., bet. J and K, Sacramento.

GEO. WISSEMAN, PROPRIETOR.

Families and Saloons supplied by bottle or keg.

Butchers' Home,

1020 J Street,

Between 10th and 11th, : Sacramento, Cal.

Fine Wines, Liquors and Cigars. Also, a

GOOD GLASS OF BEER.

JACOB GRUHLE, Prop'r.

CAPITAL ALE VAULTS.

Established in 1870, and still maintains the same reputation for keeping the best WINES, LIQUORS and Cigars in the city. The finest Hot Lunch in the city from 11 to 2. Clam Chowder a specialty every night.

NAGELE & SVENSSON, Prop'rs.

Telephone 38.

302 J and 1005 Third st.

A. L. HART,

ATTORNEY-AT-LAW

Sutter Building, cor. 5th and J.

W. A. ANDERSON,

ATTORNEY-AT-LAW,

No. 209 J Street, Sacramento.

W. A. GETT, JR.,

Attorney at Law,

Southwest Corner of Seventh and J Streets,

SACRAMENTO, CAL.

F. F. TEBBETS, DENTIST.

No. 914 SIXTH STREET,

Bet. I and J, west side, opp. Congregational Church.

DR. H. H. PIERSON,

SURGICAL & AND & MECHANICAL & DENTIST

511 J Street, bet. 5th and 6th.

Gas administered for the painless extraction of teeth.

Bainbridge Business College

J. C. BAINBRIDGE, } PRINCIPAL.

1017 J Street, Sacramento. Send for Circular.

Joseph Hahn & Co., PHARMACISTS,

S. W. cor. Fifth and J Streets, Sacramento.

CHOICE PERFUMERIES, Etc.

Prescriptions carefully compounded, at all hours.

FIRE! ACCIDENT! LIFE!

Insurance a Specialty.

COMBINED ASSETS, - 50 MILLIONS.

Best in the World!

Royal, Norwich-Union & Lancashire, Of England.

See my list of policy-holders and my prices.

"TRAVELERS," of Hartford, Conn. Everybody knows the name. I sell only first-class policies.

C. H. DENTON, 623 1/2 J Street.

B. Ruhl Bookbinder, Paper Ruler and Blauk Book Manufacturer.

Periodicals, Magazines, Music, and all kinds of Binding neatly done at the lowest prices.

No. 409 J STREET,

SACRAMENTO.

BOOTS AND SHOES made to order. Boots, $6 to $11. Shoes, $4 to $9. Ladies' Shoes, best quality French Kid, $5 to $7.

REPAIRING DONE at lowest prices.

NONE BUT BEST mechanics employed.

WE GUARANTEE to make perfect fitting to the worst of crooked and crippled feet.

COMPETE WITH any shoes on the market.

216 J Street

- AND -

208 K Street,

SACRAMENTO.

A. CASELLI

& COMPANY.

$500 REWARD.

PURSUANT TO A RESOLUTION OF THE BOARD of Supervisors of Sacramento county, adopted May 7, 1889, said Board will pay the sum of Five Hundred Dollars ($500) for evidence leading to the arrest and conviction of any party illegally carrying on the business of hydraulic mining on the American river or its tributaries, in any and all mines or claims which have been heretofore enjoined by any Court of competent jurisdiction; provided, however, that said Board will pay but one reward for the arrest and conviction of a person or persons operating the same mine or claim.

Attest:

F. F. TEBBETS,
Chairman of the Board of Supervisors.
W. B. HAMILTON, Clerk of Board.

[SEAL]

Shall We Meet Again?

The following is one of the most brilliant articles written by the lamented George D. Prentice: "The fiat of nature is inexorable. There is no appeal for relief from the great law which dooms us to the dust. We flourish and fade as the leaves of the forest, and the flowers that bloom and wither in a day have no firmer hold upon life than the mightiest monarch that ever shook the earth with his footsteps. Generations of men will appear and disappear as the grass, and the multitude that throng the world to-day will disappear as the footsteps on the shore. Men seldom think of the great event of death until the shadows fall across their own pathway, hiding from their eyes the faces of loved ones, whose living smile was the sunlight of their existence. Death is the antagonist of life, and the cold thought of the tomb is the skeleton of all feasts. We do not want to go through the dark valley, although its dark passages may lead to paradise; we do not want to lay down in the damp grave, even with princes as bedfellows; in the beautiful drama of Ion, the hope of immortality, so eloquently uttered by the death-devoted Greek, finds a deep response in every thoughtful soul. When about to yield his young existence as a sacrifice to fate, his Clemantha asks if they should meet again, to which he replies: 'I have asked that dreadful question of the hills that look eternal; of the clear streams that flow forever; of the stars among whose fields of azure my raised spirit has walked in glory. All were dumb; but as I gazed up on thy living face, I feel that there is something in the love that mantles through its beauty that cannot wholly perish. We shall meet again, Clemantha.'"

Superstitions of the Sea.

Mariners do not like to have a corpse on board.

It is unlucky to point with the finger at a ship when at sea.

Rats are supposed to leave a vessel only when it is going to sink.

The nails and hair must not be cut at sea except during a storm.

It is unlucky to sneeze on the left side at the moment of embarking.

A knife stuck in the mast, the killing of a pig, or whistling, is each supposed to bring wind.

The stormy petrel is supposed to herald bad weather, and the great auk to tell when land is near.

The cat is generally disliked by sailors, but a cat will not be thrown overboard, as this would bring on a storm.

Cornwall (England) sailors will not walk at night along portions of the shore where there have been wrecks, as they believe the souls of the drowned inhabit those localities.

He Was Guilty.

"Were you ever engaged in a train robbery?" asked the prosecuting attorney, looking at him keenly.

"I was never indicted for train-robbing," answered the witness, evasively.

"That is not the question," said the lawyer. "I will ask you again: Were you ever a train-robb?"

"Judge," said the witness, turning imploringly to the dignitary on the bench, "must I answer that question?"

"You must," answered the Judge. "And remember you are under oath."

The witness turned pale and his knees knocked together.

"I suppose it's got to come out. When I was a young fellow I sold books and bananas on the cars for a whole year," answered the miserable man.

There is nothing that so drives the girl with a lover to desperation as the effort to find something to give him on his birthday and all anniversaries, and they are constantly beseeching the jewelers for something new and pretty—for the round of watch-charms, gold pencils, key-rings and chains, cuff buttons and scarf pins is very soon exhausted. The latest efforts of the jewelers in this direction is a useless but pretty little trifle in the shape of a mustache brush, with gold back, in which is sunk a diagonal row of jewels, or else the initials of the recipient in diamonds. Nothing could be more perfectly useless, but it is a cunning little trifle, and the jewelers say they are selling very well.

"Is this the place where you get licenses?" asked a long-haired, seedy-looking man, as he entered one of the offices of the city government. "Yes, sir." "Well, I want a poetic license." "A what?" "A poetic license. You see the editors have been finding fault with my poetry; they say that my rhymes are too awkward and far-fetched. I told one of them that that was poetic license." "What did he say?" "He said I ought to get my license renewed. That's what I'm here for."—Merchant Traveler.

A lady called at a bank and presented a check which she wished cashed. As she was a perfect stranger to the paying teller, he said, very politely, "Madam, you will have to bring some one to introduce you before you can cash this check." Drawing herself up quite haughtily, she said, freezingly, "But I do not wish to know you, sir!"

H. WACHHORST

Leading Jeweler of Sacramento

SIGN OF THE TOWN CLOCK,

No. 315 J STREET, SACRAMENTO.

W. D. Comstock, 501 -- 507 K, cor. Fifth

Furniture

Bedding

On Exhibition, THE LARGEST AND BEST SELECTED STOCK.

FAIR DEALING!

LOW PRICES!

GENSHLEA BROS.

Strictly High Grade Goods in all Lines. 624 J ST.

TRY THE LA ROSA ESPANOLA KEY WEST CIGAR.

Wm. J. Hassett.

A. J. Johnston.

A. J. Johnston & Co.

PRINTERS,

410 J Street,

Sacramento

Klune & Floberg,

WATCHMAKERS and JEWELERS

Agents for Rockford Watch Co.

No. 428 J STREET, SACRAMENTO.

Something New

NEW STORE. NEW MEN.

BELL & FOUNTAIN

HAVE OPENED THE

Plaza Cash Grocery

STORE,

Corner Tenth and J Streets,

And have stocked the same with all New and Fresh Goods, which they will sell for CASH at the smallest living margin.

All Goods Warranted as Represented.

Goods delivered to any part of the city.

Our Motto: "The nimble sixpence against the slow shilling!"

BELL & FOUNTAIN.

Plaza Cash Grocery Store,

R. H. PETTIT,

Wholesale and Retail Dealer in

IMPORTED & DOMESTIC CIGARS

Smoke the "Lone Fisherman,"

The BEST FIVE-CENT CIGAR in the Market.

NO. 225 K STREET.

JESSE SLAUGHTER,

Office, No. 1217 Fifth Street.

Plastering, Whitewashing, Cleaning of Cesspools, Etc.

Also, CITY SCAVENGER.

Burying of dead animals attended to at short notice.

Don't forget the number—1217 Fifth street, the old stand, where I have been for 25 years.

REEVES & LONG, UNDERTAKERS,

609 J Street, bet. Sixth and Seventh.

WE KEEP ON HAND A COMPLETE Stock of Coffins and Caskets; also, Shrouds of every description. Orders from city or country receive prompt attention, day or night.

EMBALMING done in the best manner; and at reasonable rates.

TRADE WITH THE

OVERLAND

Tea Company,

421 J STREET,

BETWEEN FOURTH AND FIFTH.

The Best of Goods Procurable.

HANDSOME PRESENTS GIVEN

TO CUSTOMERS.

For Particulars see the Daily Papers.

F. KUEHNE & CO.,

NO. 906 NINTH STREET,

Between I and J, SACRAMENTO,

Carpenters and Contractors

Store and office work a specialty.

ICE BOXES for Breweries and Saloons always on hand and made to order.

Jobbing and Repairing promptly attended to.

BAKER & HAMILTON,

San Francisco and Sacramento,

Importers and Jobbers of

Hardware, Iron, Steel, Coal, Powder,

MACHINERY

And Agricultural Implements.

Send for Catalogue.

American Steam Laundry

NINETEENTH AND I STS.—WHITE LABOR only. Linen polished in the neatest manner. We guarantee satisfaction. All ordinary mending, sewing on buttons, etc., free of charge. Washing called for and delivered to any part of the city.

Main Office at Sawtelle's Book Store, 708 and 710 J street. Branch offices at all the Hotels.

RAILROAD TIME TABLE.

Southern Pacific Company

PACIFIC SYSTEM.

July 28, 1889.

Trains LEAVE and are due to ARRIVE at SACRAMENTO.

Lv.	Trains Run Daily.	Arr.
7-00 A	Calistoga and Napa	11-40 A
4-05 P	Calistoga and Napa	8-30 P
11-00 P	Ashland and Portland	3-40 A
5-05 P	Denning, El Paso and East	7-05 P
7-30 P	Knight's Landing	7-55 A
4-30 A	Marysville (Mixed)	4-25 P
9-00 A	Los Angeles	9-55 A
9-00 P	Second Class, Ogden and East	6-30 A
10-30 P	Central Atlantic Express	3-40 P
3-00 P	Oroville	9-50 A
11-00 P	Oroville	3-40 A
3-00 P	Red Bluff via Marysville	9-50 A
10-40 A	Redding via Willows	4-05 P
4-00 A	San Francisco via Benicia	10-40 P
7-00 A	San Francisco via Benicia	8-30 P
4-05 P	San Francisco via Benicia	10-10 P
*10-00 A	San Francisco via Steamer	26-00 A
11-20 A	San Francisco via Livermore	2-25 P
3-05 P	San Francisco via Benicia	11-40 A
11-20 A	San Jose	2-25 P
9-00 A	Santa Barbara	9-55 A
5-05 P	Santa Barbara	7-05 P
7-00 A	Santa Rosa	11-40 A
4-05 P	Santa Rosa	8-30 P
9-00 A	Stockton and Galt	7-05 P
5-05 P	Stockton and Galt	9-55 A
9-00 P	Truckee and Reno	6-30 A
10-30 P	Truckee and Reno	3-40 P
8-30 A	Colfax	5-00 P
7-00 A	Vallejo	11-40 A
4-05 P	Vallejo	8-30 P
*12-15 P	Folsom and Placerville (Mixed)	*10-35 A
*7-15 A	Folsom and Placerville	*3-45 P
*5-20 P	Folsom	*6-50 A

*Sunday excepted. †Sunday only. ‡Monday excepted. A for morning, P for afternoon.

A. N. TOWNE, Gen'l Manager.
T. H. GOODMAN, Gen'l Pass. and Ticket Agent.

H. K. WALLACE & CO.

NO. 920 K STREET,

Sacramento Stove House.

Headquarters for Plumbing, Gas and Steam Fitting.
Galvanized Iron Tanks of all sizes made to order.

Edwin K. Alsip & Co.

ESTABLISHED 1860.

REAL ESTATE

AND INSURANCE AGENTS.

FARMING LANDS A SPECIALTY.

Catalogues issued monthly.

No. 1015 Fourth Street, Sacramento.

Gregory Bros. Co.

Established 1852.

COMMISSION MERCHANTS,

Packers and Shippers of California Fruit and Produce,

126 and 128 J STREET,

San Francisco Office, 313 Davis St. SACRAMENTO:

ANGLO-NEVADA ASSURANCE CORPORATION

OF SAN FRANCISCO.

FIRE.—Cash Capital, $2,000,000—MARINE.

Sacramento Branch:

No. 1018 SECOND STREET.

JOSEPH STEFFENS, Manager.

HOWARD KIMBROUGH, Local Agent.

Hotfilter & Grafmiller,

MANUFACTURING JEWELERS,

Jewelry made to order. Watches, Clocks and Jewelry Repaired and Warranted.

No. 1026 Sixth Street, Sacramento.

R. DAVIS,

NOTARY PUBLIC,

Real Estate and Insurance Agent.

Representing the following companies:

Manchester of England; Caledonian of Edinburgh, Scotland; London and Lancaster, England.

1002 J Street, Sacramento.

Restaurant de France,

FAURE & BECKER, PROPRIETORS.

(Successors to L. Payen.)

No. 427 K Street, Near Metropolitan Theater.

Family Entrance on Fifth Street.
Catering to Families, Banquets and Wedding Parties a specialty.

NOTICE TO FRUITMEN!

Keep your trees free from scale and your apples from being wormy by the use of

Warner's Scale & Insect Exterminator

FOR SALE BY

G. T. NOE, — DRUGGIST,

AUBURN, CAL.

Put up in one-half gallon and quart cans.

THEMIS

Vol. I.

SACRAMENTO: SATURDAY, AUGUST 10, 1889.

No. 25.

THEMIS: published weekly, by A. J. Johnston & Co. Publication Office, 410 J Street. Subscription—One year, by mail, $3 00; six months, by mail, $1 50, in advance; per month, by carrier, 25 cents. (Entered at the Post Office at Sacramento as second-class matter.)

Because a sickly little amateur weekly paper may stagger along through a few weeks of "existence without the wear of shoe leather or of brains," is no reason why a great daily should be asked to try to run on the same basis.

The above we clip from a publication styled the "Sunday Union," which purports to be issued by the "Sacramento Publishing Company." It is not a matter of news—and we claim it not as such—when we premise our remarks with the statement that not a type in the establishment, a brick in the walls, nor an inch of reality in which this concern is located is owned by any person who lives in the city of Sacramento. Toward legitimate journalism that institution occupies the same relation that the Canadian Pacific Railroad does toward the American transcontinental lines. The big red building on Third street is furnished rent free; the taxes upon the real and personal property are paid from abroad; the persons who write a reflection of the opinion of its owners can only measure the interest they have in the paper by the amounts they receive each Saturday as the price for their mental subservience. Like the Canadian Pacific, they are relieved from all financial responsibility; the monthly shortages of the concern are paid from San Francisco. That the owners of that paper have demonstrated it to be a success, in that it has proved the avenue for throwing into circulation a very respectable portion of their surplus, is a matter of congratulation; that they have seen fit to maintain so expensive a toy is a matter of inconsequence to us; that in the opinion of many it would be in better taste to put in motion the wheels of industry, to furnish employment to deserving mechanics and foster legitimate enterprises is a matter of their business, not ours. There has been a disposition shown by the Record-Union to attack every newspaper that has been established in this community. With the knowledge we have of the internal history of the concern, and of the entire irresponsibility of those who have been salaried to run it locally, it is almost a matter of humiliation for a journal such as is THEMIS, whose editors have no collars about their necks, to be compelled to resent the insults of the petty. We have sought no controversy with the owners of the Record-Union. The attacks that have been made upon us by their employés in Sacramento have been gratuitous. The styling of the Record-Union by its resident employés as "a great daily" is refreshing, particularly when addressed to a man who was called into its office not long since to advise as to an editorial course that would extricate it from an embarrassing political position into which the stupidity of its local management had placed it. If "a great daily" means a journalistic burlesque, we are willing to admit that the Record-Union is the greatest daily published on the continent. We have, however, little respect for men who accept employment as journalists to express opinions which may be telephoned to them from headquarters in another city. In the case of the Record-Union we personally know that its local management has, on several occasions, been compelled to change the policy of the paper in the matter of small municipal politics within a day, and under circumstances of the most abject humiliation. The gentlemen who are employed in Sacramento on this "great daily" are not to be censured. They have a right to make their talents matters of merchandise if they so desire. We, however, prefer an independent life, and to occupy a position that enables us to write and print our own opinions.

A writer in the North American Review has an amusing article on the advantages of debt. The old theme of poverty-stricken moralists is countered in an humorous, philosophical manner. The idea that a man in debt is necessarily a slave to his creditors is pictured as absurd. After quoting Douglas Jerrold: "Though you have a patch on your knee, a hole in your hat, a crack in your shoe leather, you are still the son of liberty, free as the singing lark above you. Out of debt, and what a nourishing sweetness may be found in cold water; what toothsome in a dry crust; what ambrosial nourishment in a hard egg! * * * The debtor, what is he but a serf out upon a holiday; a slave, to be reclaimed any instant by his owner, the creditor?" There is another side to the question. The fact of being in debt did not have much effect on Lord Bacon, William Pitt, Sheridan, Webster and hundreds of others of the brightest lights the world ever knew. We have said before that genius and poverty are kindred spirits. The Review writer claims that a man in debt becomes "an object of interest" to his fellow-men. The debtors health is a matter of solicitude, his movements are watched, and his death is mourned with poignant sorrow. "There is no man who does not love to hold some place in the memories of his fellow-men, who does not cling to the pleasing hope that he will not become entirely 'to dumb forgetfulness a prey' when he shall have shuffled off this mortal coil; and how can one more effectually guard against so painful a result than by leaving in the hands of his friends and neighbors, not a worthless lock of hair, but a more precious memorial in the shape of an unsettled bill, or note of hand, the interest of which will be forever increasing. The memory of such a man will be cherished with the keenest interest, while he who is scrupulous to 'pay as he goes' is doomed to hopeless obscurity while he lives, and, when he dies, is forgotten or thought of without a pang of regret." The man who is in debt has something to spur him to action; he is never without an incentive to work. He is never troubled with investments, yet his time is full of excitement. There is a philosophy which the debtor can invoke to his aid, and our Review writer has furnished it.

With transcontinental railroads what are termed differential rates are causing trouble. The experience, it is said, of railroad managers is against the allowance of differentials. They are incentives to rate cutting. Roads which are at a disadvantage, in a competitive sense, claim them. The Canadian Pacific seems to be conciliatory on this subject, but other roads claim such privileges.

The investment of foreign millions in American enterprises and American securities has been looked upon by some as a cause for alarm. This is a mistaken idea; these heavy investments are evidences of our prosperity, and the large capital brought here only increases our wealth. It shows to the rest of the world that America is the safest country for enterprises. We have been taught to call all these foreign instruments "British gold," but as a matter of fact the money brought here comes from all parts of the world, and is the representative of the German, Italian, French, Russian, as well as the English people. There is no danger of any absolute monopoly of any branch of business enterprise in this country. There is room enough for all the foreign capital that can be brought here. No matter how great may be the investment, the direction will be American. The introduction of foreign capital can never control our industries, manufactories or railroads.

When some great enterprise is suggested by English or other foreign capital, there are those who raise a cry of alarm and seek to prevent or obstruct the consummation thereof, because, from some narrow view, this would work injury to American institutions. The enterprise of our foreign brothers will only stimulate the industries of this country and wake up American capital. If Sacramento could be visited by some foreign enterprise and establish woolen mills, tanneries and other manufacturing enterprises, there certainly would not be any cause for any outcry against foreign capital. Our own people do not seem to take sufficient interest to develop our sleeping resources. Indeed, our greatest enterprise is now cutting down its force of employés to such an extent that a severe shock has already occurred to the ordinary business of this community. By all means let all the foreign capital that we can secure come to build up enterprises which will enrich the country.

Speaking about the influx of foreign capital, however, reminds us of the only great danger that may arise. With that, however, it would not be attributable to foreign capital alone. The danger lies in the trust system, and the massing of wealth in certain directions so as to exercise political control. A recent article, from the pen of a political economist, contains this clause, which is expressive of the situation:

The inherited predatory tendency to seize upon the fruits of other people's labor is still very strong, and while we have nothing more to fear from kings we may yet have trouble enough from commercial monopolies and favored industries marching to the polls their hordes of bribed retainers.

From what can be learned of the action of the Canadian Pacific and its management, through the investigations of the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee, it seems that our foreign competitor is on its good behavior, and has no desire to offend or injure the American managers.

One of the correspondents of the Daily Telegraph showed well how the union of May and December was one of the most fertile sources of the failure of marriage. While May was full of pleasures to come, December was chewing the end of past ones. The one had lived, the other wanted to live, and here they parted company on the threshold of their married life. A young woman marrying a man of like age may have to exercise self-denial—the very quintessence of true marriage; but she inspires and encourages him; she is the key to unlock the treasures and stores of his manhood; she is the right person in the right place. On the contrary, for many obvious reasons, in marrying a man at the end of his manhood, she often drags him down. Gross disparity was forbidden by Jewish law-givers, and also by the most enlightened of pagan legislators. Is it wise or prudent to permit the vigor of manhood to be dissipated or wasted, and to allow posterity to owe its origin to the waning strength of old men? It is certainly contrary to the warning voice of the most intelligent and disinterested of the medical profession, who are unquestionably the best counselors on this subject.

Marriage, in its essence, is the duty of one sex towards the other, and may be approximately expressed as the complimenting and supplementing development and utilization, respectively, of manhood and womanhood; and we are not aware, apart from this, that it differs from any other union between man and woman, so far as morality is concerned. The key is not more necessary to the lock, nor the cord to the bow, than are man and woman to each other in respect to the perfection of human life; they are, indeed, as the poet Longfellow says: "Useless each without the other." This widow-making vice of marital disparity is but one feature in the hymeneal profanation which is the curse and disgrace of our age, as it was that of the decline of Rome. Looking on our society of to-day the reader will realize the truth conveyed in the words of Mr. Hepworth Dixon, in the "White Conquest": "Nature puts the sexes on earth in pairs, and man destroys that balance at the cost of his moral death." The "social evil" is but the reflection or shadow of an unsocial evil, and we must not, therefore, wonder if all the agencies of the philanthropist and the missionary efforts of the evangelist fail when we know how impossible it is to remove a shadow while that which causes the shadow remains.

Tired Mothers.

A little elbow rests upon your knee,
Your tired knee, that has so much to bear;
A child's dear eyes are looking lovingly
From underneath a thatch of shining hair.
Perhaps you do not heed the velvet touch
Of warm, moist fingers, holding yours so tight;
You do not prize this blessing overmuch—
You almost are too tired to pray to-night!

But it is blessedness! A year ago
I did not see it as I do to-day,
We are so dull and thankless, and too slow
To catch the sunshine as it slips away.
And now it seems surpassing strange to me
That while I wore the badge of motherhood
I did not kiss more oft and tenderly
The little child that brought me only good!

And if some night when you sit down to rest,
You miss this elbow from your tired knee;
This restless, curling head from off your breast,
This lisping tongue that chatters constantly;
If from your own this dimpled hand had slipped,
And ne'er would nestle in your palm again;
If the white feet into the grave had tripped,
I could not blame you for your heartache then.

I wonder so that mothers ever fret
At little children clinging to their gown;
Or that the footsteps, when the days are wet,
Are ever black enough to make them frown.
If I could find a little mouldy boot,
Or cap, or jacket, on my chamber floor;
If I could kiss a rosy, restless foot,
And hear its music in my home once more;

If I could mend a broken cart to-day,
To-morrow make a kite to reach the sky,
There is no woman in God's world could say
She was more blissfully content than I.
But, ah! the dainty pillow next my own
Is never rumpled by a shining head;
My singing birdling from its nest has flown—
The little boy I used to kiss is dead.
—May Riley Smith.

When Marriage is a Failure.

When there is too much latchkey.
When dinner is not ready at dinner time.
When the watchword is, "Each for himself."
When either of the parties marry for money.
When neither husband nor wife takes a vacation.
When children are obliged to clamor for their rights.
When "he" snores the loudest while "she" kindles the fire.
When the vacations are taken by one side of the house only.
When the children are given the neck and back of the chicken.
When a man attempts to tell his wife what style of a bonnet she must wear.
When one of the parties engages in a business that is not approved by the other.
When a man's Christmas presents to his wife consist of bootjacks, shirts and gloves for himself.
When politeness, fine manners and kindly attentions are reserved for company or visits abroad.
When the money that should go for a book goes for what only one side of the house knows anything about.
When both parties persist in arguing over a subject upon which they never have and never can think alike.
When the lord of creation pays more for cigars than does his better half for hosiery, boots and bonnets.
When "father" takes half of the pie and leaves the other half for the one that made it and her eight children.

W. T. Anderson, of Warwick, N. Y., has in his possession an old flintlock musket with a curious history. It was the gift of William IV, King of England, to Kamehameha II, King of the Sandwich Islands. The latter presented it to one of his governors, and upon his death it was purchased by Dr. Judd, Minister of Finance. He sold it to a Captain Cheever, who took it to San Francisco, and the latter sold it to Colonel H. O. Ryerson. The Colonel presented it to Mr. Anderson's father. It is a valuable piece of workmanship as well as an ancient relic.

A DEADLY ENCOUNTER.

I have often met old hunters who have heard of battles between the grizzly bear and the immense, tawny panther of the Rocky Mountains; but I have only once known a man who had such a combat.

Sergeant Roseman, of the —th United States cavalry, whom I met in Wyoming while on a hunting expedition in '86, told me of a fierce fight between "Old Eph" and two mountain lions which he had "umpired"—as he put it—near Caspar Mountain, several years before.

At that time he was stationed at Fort Fetterman. A party of citizens had come out from St. Paul, Minn., to hunt the big game, then so plentiful in Eastern Wyoming, and the sergeant, one of the best hunters in his regiment, was allowed to go with them, taking a small detachment of soldiers to look after the camp, and take care of the game. The party had been hunting elk among the foot-hills of the Casper range, and near the great ragged mountain which is their chief feature, when the adventure befell him.

"I killed an elk," said he, "early one morning, and as I often did in a region where there were grizzly or silvea-tip bears, I left it where it fell for bear bait. There is nothing the big bears of this region are more fond of than a freshly killed elk or a black tail. I had already, at one time and another, shot seven bears by baiting in this way, and watching by the bodies of the dead elk.

"Perched comfortably in the branches of an evergreen, or lying upon the top of some high rock within a few rods of your bait, it isn't such a desperate adventure, the killing of a grizzly. A good gun, using heavy ammunition, decent marksmanship, and a steady nerve are all that is required. If you are fresh at the business, though, you probably won't fret a great deal if the bear fails to come.

"This time I had killed an elk in just such a spot and with just such surroundings as I would have selected could I have had full choice. I shot it in the act of drinking at a small basin of water in the bed of a cañon which cut back into the foot of old Caspar Mountain. The side of the mountain on either hand was ritted with deep gorges leading into the cañon. Quaking asp thickets clustered around the heads of these ravines, while the bottoms, wherever vegetation could take hold, were grown to willows, currant and blackberry bushes. It was just the place for bears, and their sign was as plentiful as I had ever seen it anywhere.

"The spot was only a mile from our camp, and when I came in from my hunt—for we hunted singly or in twos or threes, as the notion took us—I found three of the St. Paul men taking a late dinner. I told them of my success, and invited them to go with me, and lie in wait for bears that evening.

They declined, declaring that they hadn't lost any bears, and, therefore, didn't feel called upon to hunt for 'em. I was welcome, they said, to gather all the stray grizzlies in the region, and put my particular brand on 'em.

"So about three o'clock I went up to my bait alone. I found it undisturbed, perched myself in the crevice of a ledge of rock some thirty yards distant, which position I reached by making a ladder of my poles that lay among some drift of a recent 'washout.' My hiding place was perfectly safe from the attack of a bear, should I be lucky enough to lure one within shot, as it was fully fifteen feet from the base of the ledge, at a perpendicular height.

"I found the crack, in which I could stretch myself at full length, such a comfortable place that I concluded to watch all night, provided no bear came to my bait sooner. I had not long to wait, however, before I was treated to the most thorough and thrilling surprise of all my hunting experience.

"I had lain, perhaps, an hour, and the sun had just sunk behind the mountains back of me, so that their shadows had crawled over the tops of the lower ones in front, when I heard the sound of soft footfalls just on the other side of a fringe of blackberry bushes, which skirted the stream above the spring where my elk lay. I pricked my ears and looked sharply for the game, which from the muffled sound I took to be two or three bears running down the cañon.

I had no time to speculate as to the nature of the animals before there bounded in sight two big tawny mountain lions! They were racing down the cañon, jumping sideways and running against each other in a way that was, no doubt, intended to be playful, and I was just about to stop one of them with a shot from my rifle when in the same breath each of them caught a scent of the elk's carcass and came to a sudden halt.

"They stood for a moment with heads erect, and ears pricked forward, and tails switching eagerly, their yellow eyes gleaming and scintillating, the white spots on their breasts offering a splendid target if I had cared to shoot at once. They were fine, sleek animals with glossy coats, far more imposing and much larger than the panther to the east and south, and I was anxious to bag both of them, which I thought I could make sure of doing if they attacked my bait, as I might easily bore them both with a single shot from my Winchester express if they got in range.

"They hesitated but an instant—a few seconds rather—then leaped the channel of the stream with cat-like jumps, and approached the elk, which they cautiously sniffed with pointed noses. I rejoiced at the prospect of securing two such magnificent cats.

"One of them, the larger and a male, came up to the bait first, sniffed it over, licked the fresh blood about the neck, then with a sudden proprietary air he mounted the carcass with his forefeet, gave a satisfactory purr, that sounded like the muffled drumming of a partridge's wings, and switching his tail about with a snapping motion at the end, just as a cat with a fresh caught mouse in her paws might have done.

"The female took her turn at licking the bloody neck, and snarled her cat pleasure at the prospect of a gratuitous feast. They did not seem to be in the least hungry, for they made no move toward devouring, but after snuffing and examining the game for a bit they sat about scratching leaves and dirt over it, with the evident intention of preserving or hiding it for future use.

"Thinking my time had now come, I shifted my position carefully, waiting only for an opportunity to make one bullet kill or cripple them both, as I feared the unhurt one would get out of sight before I could get a fair shot at it.

"Suddenly the big one threw himself upon the elk with a harsh snarl, his hair rising on end, his tail switching viciously as he lay at full length, his head turned away from me, evidently watching some object down the cañon. The female, too, advanced nearly beside him, her hair sticking out like bristles, and her angry snarling was deeper and more threatening than his.

"At first I could see nothing of the intruder against which this fierce threatening was launched; but I more than suspected its nature, and my excitement rose. Either another lion or a bear was approaching, I felt certain, and so it proved: it was a grizzly, and one of the largest I have ever seen!

"He reared himself suddenly out of the bed of the little stream, only a few yards from the lions and elk. He had been traveling up the bed of the creek—as bears often do in a shallow stream—and attracted by the snarls of the lions, who had heard him coming, had emerged to see what the fuss was about.

"To my delight he took in the situation at a glance, and without a minute's hesitation he shambled toward the belligerent cats, mingling his hoarse growls with their savage snarlings.

"I had heard that the mountain lion would not run from a grizzly, but did not believe it, and despite the fearful threatening of the two before me, I expected to see them give way as the monstrous bear came up. Imagine my astonishment when, as the grizzly charged within leaping distance, both of the panthers sprang upon him instantly.

"I could not properly describe the scene which followed. Both brutes pounced upon the grizzly tooth and nail, and closed with him in such a fury of savage outcries as made my hair rise and my whole body prick with intense excitement.

"The grizzly reared as the two animals struck him; as he came up into a sitting position upon his haunches he shook the female lion from his shoulder. But the male lion held him by the throat, his tawny body lay along the bear's body, and his hind legs were working with lightning-like speed and strength.

"The bear opened his mouth wide, and roared as he turned his head sideways and downward, and strove to catch his antagonist's neck with his teeth. He failed in his attempt, but at the same moment he caught the lion's body just below the shoulder in a clutch of his terrible claws, which seemed literally to flatten the animal between them.

"The lion relaxed his hold of the bear's neck, threw back his head and sought to writhe loose from the bear. It would have gone hard with him had not the female lion, by a desperate spring fastened herself so strongly upon the back of the bear's neck that he was forced to drop the male and turn to her. Over and over they rolled about the elk carcass. They clawed, bit and tore at each other with deep, muffled snarls and growls. Sometimes the bear was on top of a lion, and again both lions were on top of him.

"The grizzly would gather one of them suddenly in his huge forearms, bear it down upon the ground in the effort to crush and bite the life out of it, then feeling the teeth of the other, which would invariably seize upon the back of his neck, the infuriated monster would loose his hold and whirl upon that one.

"Soon, in one of these whirls, he caught the smaller lion and gave her such a terrible bite before the male's attack—which was from behind as usual—could induce him to release her, that she lost 'sand' completely, and slunk limping away, evidently badly hurt.

"The male lion immediately took the defensive, dodged about the grizzly, and leaped easily out of reach of his furious charges. I saw that bruin had the best of the fight and was likely to maintain his advantage; and as I was far more anxious to secure the tremendous beast than I was to get the lions, I opened fire upon him with my Winchester, and gave him a ball behind the shoulder as he turned broadside in one of his rushes at the lion. Luckily the first shot killed him.

"The lion, more frightened at the report of the gun than he had been at the bear, bounded across the creek, and though I fired two shots at him before he got out of sight I missed him. The male got off scott free, as I do not think the bear had given him more than a few scratches, but I followed the female and overtook her in a crippled condition, some half mile up the cañon. A single bullet killed her."

Want of Close Observation.

There is probably nothing which men look at more frequently than the face of a watch, and yet if you ask the next man you meet to name the figures which mark the hours, the chances are that he will make a mistake. This was tried recently on a gentleman in the presence of the writer, and he said laughingly: "Why, of course I can name correctly the figures on the face of my watch."

"Well, go ahead then."

"I one."

"Yes."

"Two I's two, three I's three, IV four."

"Hold on."

"What's the matter?"

"Are you sure its IV, four?"

"Certainly."

"Then look at your watch," and the gentleman addressed pulled out his watch, to find that the fourth hour is marked not IV, four, as ninety-nine out of every hundred suppose, but thus: IIII. Many bottles of champagne, pairs of kid gloves, sets of cologne, hair brushes, penknives, pocket-books, etc., have been wagered and lost on this question, and the good work of education is still going on.

Don't Be Afraid of Air.

An extraordinary fallacy is the dread of night air. What air can we breathe at night but night air? The choice is between pure night air from without and foul air from within. Most people prefer the latter—an unaccountable choice. What will they say if it is proved to be true that fully one-half of all the diseases we suffer from are occasioned by people sleeping with their windows shut? An open window most nights in the year can never hurt any one. In great cities night air is often the best and purest to be had in twenty-four hours. One could better understand shutting the windows in town during the day than during the night for the sake of the sick. The absence of smoke, the quiet, all tend to make the night the best time for airing the patient. One of our highest medical authorities on consumption and climate has told me that the air of London is never so good as after 10 o'clock at night. Always air your room, then, from the outside air if possible. Windows are made to open, doors are made to shut—a truth which seems difficult of apprehension. Every room must be aired from without, every passage from within.

On a first visit to New Orleans one is impressed by the peculiar appearance of the women. One can see in New Orleans more delicious-looking young girls and more prematurely old-looking women than in any city in the country. The girls, up to the age of eighteen or twenty, are lovely. They have rich complexions, bright eyes, the mingled languor and vivacity that render the Southern girl so fascinating. Then, too, in summer time, most of them wear white dresses, with lace or open-work sleeves and yoke, through which a creamy, satiny skin glints with aggravating attractiveness. There is but one word that fully describes them to the masculine mind. They are delicious-looking. But they fade very quickly, and this accounts for the number of old-looking women of twenty-five years, or thereabouts, one sees on the streets, in the cars or in their carriages. And when they get old-looking they lose all their attractiveness; they are anything but delicious-looking.

A generation ago—some thirty-odd years—when I was a Freshman in Burlington college, I used to hear, on my visits to Trenton, a grist of queer stories about Prince Murat, who once drove a milk wagon in that town, and was refused in marriage by a score of Trenton bells. None of the latter dreamed that the seedy young farmer-milkman would ever be restored as a Prince of the Empire, and the people from whom he had borrowed money never dreamed of being repaid. Times are changed, and, perhaps, some impoverished old women still survive at Trenton who now wish they had married the milkman, whose son, Prince Murat, is now thought to be a brilliant catch for Miss Gwendoline Caldwell. The Murat legions in Trenton might be worth a Bohemian hunt.

Mr. Cleveland is said to be the most superstitious man who ever occupied the White House. He never began an important letter or document on Friday, and when fishing never places his left hand before his right in holding the rod; if he does, he says he might as well go home, as no fish will bite that day.

The Stage.

[Under this caption will appear a fair and impartial criticism of the drama, actors, music, and all noteworthy matters pertaining to the stage.]

Mme. Etelka Gerster is devoting herself largely to the musical education of her little daughter, who already tries to warble operatic airs.

Col. J. Armoyn Knox, of the Texas Siftings, has written a comedy called Kicks and Kisses. It will be presented the coming season in the eastern cities.

Prof. J. C. Schmidt, leader of Young Germania Orchestra, has signed a forty weeks' engagement with Francesca Redding; he has composed several new numbers for this favorite actress and singer, and is now busily engaged on the music of The Fool's Daughter.

Mr. Thomas H. Davis, the very mild-mannered manager of The Stowaway, which comes presently to the National Theater, had himself written up in the Chicago newspapers "a brute" because he declined to give a society belle a leading place in his company.

Robert Mantell was announced by the daily press with a flourish. The fact that he personated a part in Fedora some years ago in an acceptable manner impressed this young man with the idea that he was a great actor; in other words, added greatly to the size of his head—called swelled head. He does not possess a single element of a great actor. His manner is rough. There is no music nor magnetism in his voice, which is harsh and grates upon the ear; there is nothing artistic about him. This is only another illustration of the starring system. A fair stock actor makes something of a success of a particular part, and at once he is seized with the inspiration of being a star. The bare idea of Mantell essaying "Iago," or "Othello," with that coarse, harsh expression of speech, is absurd. With the exception of Charlotte Behrens the support is extremely weak. Monbars was given last night to a fair sized audience. It is certain that those who witnessed the stiff and stinky performance would not again desire to sit out another rendition of the play. At times the most pathetic parts bordered closely upon the ridiculous. Miss Behrens, who was with Modjeska, during her last visit to this city, is an artist of real merit, but strangely out of place in her present company. Monbars for matinee this afternoon; Othello to-night.

Steve Massett appears to have made another hit, for which no one one who knows him will, surely, be sorry. A couple of weeks ago I listened to a really exquisite rendition of a charming new song of his at Chickering Hall. The words and music were his own, and he called it "My Darling's Face." From the touching nature of the melody and words it should certainly become popular, and if it does not some day yield a fortune to the composer, if he keeps the copyright—which I sincerely hope he will—it will be because there is no longer profit in song writing. That I do not stake my judgment alone in the matter is shown by the following letter, which the composer received from Miss Pauline Hall, of the Casino, who is a judge of the popularity of songs, as her own popularity from singing them attests:

MARLBOROUGH HOTEL, N. Y., July 17, 1889.

MR. STEPHEN MASSETT:
Dear Sir:—Miss Helen Dudley Campbell, one of Mr. Patrick S. Gilmore's contraltos, heard your song this morning at my hotel, and she was so carried away with it, she says, she will sing it this winter, through her tour. Will you please mail me a copy of it. Her judgment is excellent, and she is a beautiful singer. With best wishes, PAULINE HALL.

Even without the music the words and the construction of Mr. Massett's song are worth printing. Here they are:

I.

When day is done and night comes on,
And stars shine forth on land and sea;
There comes an hour—the only hour
More than all others dear to me
The hour I wait thy coming, love;
For then!
My darling's face—I see!

II.

When night is o'er and the bright sun
Sheds its soft beams, dear one, on thee;
If by its light it leads me, love,
To hear thy voice, so sweet to me;
That is the hour—the only hour;
For then!
My darling's face—I see!

III.

No other face in all the world
Can with this lovely one compare;
My eyes, I strain, and look in vain
For one that is to me—so fair!
I see it now! it looks at me!—
It is!—
My darling's face—I see!

To-Day.

Book Chat.

It was Mrs. Ellen Olney Kirk who wrote "The Story of Margaret Kent."

Zola is the best paid novelist in France. He has been able to realize on his realism, as it were.

A new poem by Lord Tennyson will bloom in September. Those who love his best work will regret this.

Mrs. Emily Crawford, the most famous of women journalists, has lived in Paris for more than thirty years.

Mr. Andrew Lang and Mr. Rider Haggard are said to be writing a book of imagination together. This may, it is to be hoped, prove a happy marriage of plot and style, but who will there be to review Mr. Haggard?

Mrs. Humphrey Ward has just been offered $5,000 for a story of 30,000 words, and John Strange Winter refused an offer of $2,500 for her next novelette. Now let us have another essay on the poor rewards of literature.

The late Theodore Dwight Woolsey, ex-President of Yale, provided in his will that such books from his library in Latin, Greek and German as the Committee of the Yale University Library may select be given to that institution.

It is claimed for Leander Richardson's new novel "Lord Dunmersey," that it is a most intensely dramatic tale, and is absolutely original. Mr. Richardson has long been a dramatic reviewer, and must, per force of habit, be dramatic in his literary work.

Professor H. H. Boyson, of Columbia College, is remarkable among literary men, by reason of the fact that he writes with conspicuous elegance in at least three languages. He is fortunate, too, on being on terms of intimacy with distinguished men in America, England and the Continent.

One of the oddest typographical errors ever made in Boston, was in a book published by the firm of Crocker &

Brewster, which has just been brought to public attention by the death of Mr. Brewster. It was in one of the sermons of Dr. Nathaniel Emmons, the great orthodox divine. The doctor quoted the scripture text: "Cut him down. Why cumbereth him the ground?" The intelligent compositor put it in type: "Cut him down, like a cucumber, to the ground."

Mr. Aubrey de Vere, one of whose poems will be reprinted in Cassell's National Library, comes of a poetical family. His father, Sir Aubrey, a contemporary of Byron at Harrow, and, in later years, a friend of Wordsworth, was said by that poet, who, no doubt, excluded his own poems from the comparison, to have written some of the most perfect sonnets of the age. He published also a fine drama of "Mary Tudor," which, though widely different in treatment from Tennyson's "Queen Mary," is by no means an unworthy rival. The present Baronet, too, Sir Stephen de Vere, has earned the praise of scholars by his metrical translation from Horace.

One of the college boys writes in his college paper that he believes that he cannot afford to read Roe, Haggard, etc., while Hawthorne and Eliot are unmastered. He adds that he cannot afford to read Swinburne, Harte, Morris and Rossetti, while Homer, Virgil, Dante, Goethe, Hugo and Shakespeare are unmastered. He also proposes in philosophy to confine himself to Plato, Kant, Bacon and Spencer. Very well, young man, when you have mastered the last four let the public know. But don't become a specialist and spend your life bumping your head against the knotty points of Kant, or the unknowables of Spencer. On the whole, you had as well start in easy and take a sandwich of Swinburne and Morris, or even of Bret Harte. The really good point is not to spend time on Roe, Haggard, Wallace and James.

There is a defense for reading the light literature of the day. The New York Tribune thus speaks: "People may say what they like about trashy novels," said a nervous little bright-eyed woman the other day, 'but I must say they are better than medicine for me at times. I am, as plenty of other women are, a natural worrier; that is, I am given to borrowing trouble and looking ahead with apprehension of disaster to come. I should have been born a man, I sometimes think, and tussled with the world myself, but sitting at home, as I do, the mother of a family, and having to wait and watch my husband try to lay up something for our old age in his own way, I easily fall into a habit of useless worrying about the future, which tends to stimulate regret for the past, and often, I am sure, make the present unnecessarily unpleasant for those around me. When I used to fall into such a mood a spirit of restless energy would take possession of me, and I would work away at my household duties far beyond what my strength warranted. My weary body would then react on my worried brain, and the result would be a total collapse, from which it took time and nursing to recover. But I found remedy at last in silly novels. When I feel a worrying mood coming upon me now, I fall to reading them. They keep me from thinking, they soothe me into unexpected naps, they require no mental effort for their comprehension; they stir no strong emotion within me. In fact, a short course of them induces a sweet torpor of the brain, which, while not to be desired in the young, or in one as a permanent feature, has often proved of incalculable benefit to me.' "

Professional Chat.

There is a good story about Gen. Black when he was Commissioner of Pensions. The General met Col. James H. Rice, of Indiana, a robust gentleman, weighing 230 pounds. During the war the Colonel was a noted fighter. He went into the army as thin as a razor-back hog, and came out as large as the late lamented Jumbo. But he was wounded by a spent ball, and the bruise on his flesh remained some two weeks. However, the General did not know the nature of the Colonel's wound, so one day he asked him why he did not apply for a pension. The Colonel is not only wealthy, but a born joker, so he put on a serious look and said in a whisper to the Commissioner: "I do not wish this to get out. I went into the army with a bad case of bronchitis and came out well. If the government hears this I am afraid I will have to pay it a pension."

Hon. John J. Crittenden, of Kentucky, was at one time engaged in defending a man who was indicted for a capital offense. After an elaborate and powerful defense, he closed his effort with the following striking and beautiful allegory: "When God in his eternal counsel conceived the thought of man's creation, he called to him the three ministers who wait constantly upon the throne—Justice, Truth and Mercy—and thus addressed them: 'Shall we make man?' Then said Justice: 'O, God, make him not, for he will trample upon thy laws.' Truth made answer also: 'O, God, make him not, for he will pollute thy sanctuaries.' But Mercy, dropping on her knees, looking up through her tears, exclaimed: 'O, God, make him—I will watch over him with my care through all the dark paths which he may have to tread.' Then God made man and said to him: 'O, man, thou art the child of Mercy; go and deal with thy brother.' " The jury, when he had finished, was drowned in tears, and against evidence, and what must have been their own convictions, brought in a verdict of not guilty.

One who was a candidate for his party's nomination for an important office a few years ago, appealed to a political opponent to prepare a speech for him to use in his canvass. More from admiration for the fellow's cheek than any other reason, the speech was prepared, and the writer had the chagrin of seeing the man nominated and elected on the strength of the reputation for eloquence acquired by his delivery. A curious thing about it was that the writer had introduced into the speech a few lines from an unpublished poem of his own which occasioned the nominal author a deal of trouble. He was constantly being importuned to know who wrote them, and in constant tribulation lest he should cite the wrong authority. He finally addressed the author a note, making the inquiry in these terms: "Please inform me, if you happen to know, who is the author of the lines quoted in my speech, beginning?" etc. To this the author replied: "I am absolutely certain that the lines you refer to were never printed until 'your' speech was published." After that, when questioned as to their authorship, the orator would say: "I have never found anyone that knew. I suppose I must have run across them somewhere, or thrown them off myself on the spur of the moment." He knew his secret was safe and that he was himself far more likely to reveal the facts than the man to whose literary skill he was indebted for a reputation for eloquence that any one might envy.

Prosperous Placer.

We have spent two days in the town of Lincoln, in the county of Placer. Things have changed; an era of prosperity has come. When we first knew the town, in the early sixties, it had little hope for permanent prosperity. Speaking historically, Lincoln was established by Col. Chas. L. Wilson, one of earliest railroad builders on the western side of the continent. He projected the California Central Railroad, from Folsom to the north and east. Under his administration its terminus was at Lincoln. The place was named from his middle name, which we understand to have been the family name of his maternal ancestry. For many years after the projection of Colonel Wilson's road to Lincoln, that point had its stage line ramifications to the mountain districts of the State. In 1867 John Zeigenbein, who was conducting the principal merchandizing house at Lincoln, constructed a flouring mill a short distance to the north of the town. He employed men to bore a well to obtain water; the result was that the water was not found, but for several years afterward the material from the borings was regarded with curiosity. It developed that the auger had passed through a stratum of lignite coal and one of potter's clay. The flouring mills were burned. The coal mines were opened; they proved unsuccessful. Afterward the value of the clay became known. A pottery was established by Gladding, McBean & Co. They have developed a business which to-day employs some 200 men; their manufactured products compete successfully in the markets of the world. An enterprise of this character, which has grown to the proportions it has is of great importance, and the gentlemen who have made it a success are deservedly entitled to credit. It is to-day the most extensive pottery on this side of the continent. The matter of the quarrying of granite has also developed an important industry.

We understand that about fifty men are employed in the quarries in the neighborhood of Lincoln. The finished stone is shipped mainly to the larger cities, for use in street work. The supply of granite in the vicinity is inexhaustible, and it cannot be doubted that the opening of these quarries is but the beginning of the development of an industry that will furnish employment to a large number of men. We regret that the brief time we visited Lincoln, after years of absence, did not enable us to inform ourselves as we would like as to the matters of which we now speak. We will, hereafter, dwell more extensively upon them. It is a matter of State pride that the towns in this State have developed as they have.

Instancing the county of Placer, Auburn, which formerly depended on mining, is now coming into prominence as a producer of fruit. The foothill lands, which a few years ago were regarded as of comparatively no value for agriculture, have proved a capacity for production that is astonishing. This same remark applies to about all the lands along the line of the Central Pacific Railroad in Placer county. The plains land, which had been regarded suitable for the production of cereals only, is now producing fruits, nuts and grapes.

The morning dispatches convey the intelligence of the serious illness of Elam Brown. He is one of the few men who sat in the first Constitutional Convention of California who now survive, yet strangely was among the oldest in years at the time the convention was held, forty years ago. He is noted in the report of the debates as having been at that time fifty-two years of age. Judge E. O. Crosby, of Alameda, ex-Governor Rodman M. Price, of New Jersey, and General M. G. Vallejo, of Sonoma, are perhaps the only survivors of that distinguished body.

We desire to call the attention of our patrons to the advertisement of Bell & Fountain's Plaza Grocery Store. Both of these gentlemen are well known in this city, and they are selling goods very cheap for cash. Call and see them.

Remember the sale of unclaimed baggage at 10 A. M. on Tuesday next, at W. H. Sherburne's auction house, 323 K street. If you do not desire to invest in "old horse," as the knowing ones call it, go anyway, and see the fun.

NOTES.

It is said that Secretary Noble will be elevated to a place on the Supreme bench.

That is a "great daily" with its freight-car tint on the outside and the crumbs from a palace car inside.

The Democratic national campaign has commenced for the year 1892. Wanamaker and Tamm are the chief targets just now.

C. P. Huntington's estimate of the Record-Union as a "great daily" can be found in the San Francisco Chronicle of December 23, 1883.

It is said fourteen thousand girls in London are attending cooking schools. We need some of them after they graduate, in this country.

The Record-Union says it is a "great daily." It should be spelled "grate;" it is only great in that sense. It is a grate on the sensibilities of the public.

The recent prosecution of an officer for an alleged hasty arrest will serve a good purpose by calling the attention of peace officers to their strict duty and power in matters of arrest.

It is suggested by some of the western papers that Henry George's single tax experiment be tried in North Dakota, as the people of that country are ambitious of trying almost any experiment.

It is now one of the accepted theories that the Whitechapel murderer is a woman, and has eluded detection on that account. Insane jealousy is given as her reason for the perpetration of the fiendish acts.

England has laid the keels of fifty-two new warships within the past year. This looks like there might be some cause for expecting war alarms. Uncle Sam might get a few warships in order for an emergency.

That must be a "great daily" which, with its boasted resources of two telegraph lines, only succeeds in obtaining the news one day after the Chronicle, Call and Examiner have published the same to the world. It is always daily behind.

The Record-Union is indeed a "great daily" when it clips from an exchange a patent medicine ad. and sends it to the compositor as "miscellany." O, yes, it is a great, brainy daily, when it copies a dollar-a-line advertisement from a contemporary and runs it as "news."

Cards and whisky have been the cause of a large proportion of the murders on this coast. Another sad affair of this origin occurred yesterday at Tombstone, Arizona, where Dr. G. E. Goodfellow stabbed Frank Wright to death. Cards, wine and woman make a wonderful triumvirate for evil.

One of the reasons given why foreign capital is seeking investment in America is the fact that it is only a question of time when the continent would be involved in war. This would necessarily benefit America, and make investment profitable. Capital on the continent in such an event might suffer.

That was a senseless act in London to order the destruction of copies of Boccaccio and Rabelais and other early classics. When the world gets too good for Swift, Byron, Shakespeare, Fielding, Sterne, Boccaccio, and other medieval classics, it is time for that great world-destroying comet to whisk his fiery tail over us and wipe us out.

People of Pond Creek, in West Virginia, are excited over the predictions of a man down there, who, some weeks ago, predicted the coming of the flood and its date. He was so emphatic that he asked bystanders to note down his prediction and watch its fulfillment. They now say that he guessed the time of the flood's coming and the extent of the disaster.

It develops as our nation grows older that patronage and distribution is a weakness rather than a strength to any political party. The wrangles and bitterness created within the ranks of the successful party are of great danger to a future success. Those who are not successful in securing official recognition are usually embittered against the leaders, and a large percentage turn upon the party at succeeding elections.

The State of New York still enforces a cruel enactment providing for imprisonment for debt. For the crime of debt a man might be subject to a life imprisonment; in other words, a permanent punishment for poverty. This law should be abolished. Under Section 479 of the Code of Civil Procedure of this State, debtors can be imprisoned where they contracted the debt by fraud, or where they contemplate departing from the State with intent to defraud their creditors, and for other causes named in that section.

Reducing Taxes.

The Oroville Register some weeks ago advocated a reduction of land assessments in order to reduce the farmers' burdens. It said: "Farmers are generally feeling the high assessments that are levied upon their land."

* * * The continued high assessments upon their farms is a heavy burden. They feel that it ought to cease to some extent, etc. Now, if there is any point in the quoted lines, it means that the farmer's want to shift their burdens upon the shoulders of other property. Since land cannot escape taxation, it renders it the groundwork of all taxation; and since all other industries cast their burdens, or so much as possible, on the immovable, it might as well bear the whole load, with such aid as might be enforced through a license tax. Our Oroville neighbor does well to call for a reduction of revenue burdens, but the call should be seconded by the entire taxpaying public as well as the farmers, for, without a general demand, the cry will not be heard. The whole blame resides in the Legislature, and the responsibility of having extravagant legislators rests with the people. They have the whip in their own hands; let them use it. Could a property qualification be enforced on candidates for the Legislature, the burdens complained of by the Register would be reduced the first session.—Sutter County Farmer.

The editor of the Farmer could with propriety have added that an educational qualification should be required in the case of men who aspire to legislative positions.

I was going down town on one of the Fourth-avenue electric motors yesterday when a woman got in who made quite a sensation. She was very tall, and dressed in a two-inch pink and blue striped tulle flannel gown, made tight behind and loose like a house wrapper in front. Her face was as odd and ugly as her Mother Hubbard costume. After she had paid her fare and settled herself in a corner, the passengers noticed that the car went slower and slower, until it stopped altogether. The conductor, after holding a consultation with the electrician, who was much perturbed at the strange conduct of the machine, finally stepped up to the penitentiary dress and politely requested the owner to take the next car. She did so, and we went on our way rejoicing. I have often heard of the proverbial ugly woman who stopped an eight-day clock, but never before of one who would stop an electric motor.—N. Y. Star.

[Wonder if the fact that so many ugly women insisted on riding in our local electric cars was the cause of their failure?—Ed.]

Pedro Sardina, the proprietor of a plantation near Havana, has been kidnapped by bandits.

The Southern Pacific Railroad Company is about to build a short branch road from Anderson to Roberts, in order to reach a lumber section. This new road will run a few miles east of Redding.

The Marysville Appeal says that a special effort should be made to have Yuba and Sutter counties well represented at the State Fair this year, particularly in horticultural products. This annual exhibition has a high advertising value.

In Southern California subsidies and the new road, on which nearly $2,000,000 was spent in 1888, came into direct competition with the Southern, and both together now compete and share less business than it had previous to the collapse.

Some 800 acres of land has been purchased near Fultou, Sonoma county, at $80 an acre, by a colony of Welsh people represented by Richard Jones, of Oakland. The land is to be subdivided and occupied by a colony of Welshmen who are on their way from the old country.

The very latest news which the "Australia" brought was to the effect that the "Nipsic," rescued from the general wreck at Sonoma, with her consort, the "Alert," had just arrived on Friday, the 2d instant, at Honolulu from Fanning Islands. The disabled vessels stood the trip well.

The Congressional delegation has recommended William H. Sears to the President for appointment as Collector of Internal Revenue for the San Francisco district. Mr. Sears is a lawyer who has been known in California politics for many years. He preceded Hager as Collector of the Port, and also served in the State Senate in 1880-81 from Marin and Contra Costa. Previous to that he had represented Nevada county in the Assembly.

About fifteen Chinese were brought ashore yesterday from the steamers "Arabic" and "City of Pekin," by the means of writs of habeas corpus. Their claims for the right to land are based principally on their statements that they are merchants or students. One claimed to be a doctor. One had the frankness to admit that he is a cook, and wishes to come back to California because he is a prior resident. Many of the Chinese now on these vessels are in transit.

Revised Anecdotes.

CHARLES XII AND THE BOMB.

As Charles XII of Sweden was dictating a letter to his secretary during the siege of Stralsund, a bomb fell through the roof into the next room in the house where they were sitting. The terrified secretary let the pen drop from his hand.

"What is the matter?" quoth the king. "The bomb, sire!" cried the secretary. "Ah! never mind the bomb; it will go off presently."

And it did.

SPENSER'S ILL LUCK.

When Spenser had finished his famous poem of the "Faerie Queen" he carried it to the Earl of Southampton, the great patron of the poets of that day. The manuscript being sent up to the earl, he read a few pages, and then ordered his servant to give the writer twenty pounds. Reading on, he cried in rapture: "Carry that man another twenty pounds." Proceeding further, he exclaimed, "Give him twenty pound more." But finally, rolling the MS. up in a frenzied manner, he cried: "Here; take him back his poem. I am too poor to buy it of him."

It was for this reason that Spenser never wrote anything else so good as the "Faerie Queen."

ANECDOTE OF GOLDSMITH AND JOHNSON.

"Boswell," quoth Johnson one day, over a chop and mug of ale, "could never write a complete dictionary."

"And why not?" queried Goldsmith. "Because he'd be sure to leave out his h's" returned the great philosopher, with a merry burst of laughter.

SIR WALTER RALEIGH'S REPARTEE.

"And what, my dear Sir Walter," qucried Elizabeth of her courier—"what didst thou think of thy sovereign's speech in Parliament this morn?"

"A grand oration, please your highness," replied Sir Walter. "So fine was it that neither Shakespeare nor myself could say who wrote it for thee."

JOHNSON'S REMARK ABOUT SHAKESPEARE.

"Have you seen, Ben, that Shakespeare's Hamlet is said to have been writ by Bacon?" asked Raleigh.

"Ha! ha!" laughed Jonson. "But Will of Stratford's shrewd."

"Shrewd?"

"Ay, shrewd. He started this himself, to advertise his play."—Harper's Magazine.

Eyelids That Have Strange Power.

I saw two women jugglers at Jeppore. They were bright, intelligent-looking girls, one of whom appeared almost old enough to be the mother of the other. They did many wonderful things, one of which was mixing up sand and water, and then putting the hand into the discolored fluid they brought a handful of sand which they filtered through their fingers as dry as before it went in. The youngest of these girls was, perhaps, 15. She was tall, well-formed and fine looking. She had bracelets on arms and on feet, and her eyes were as beautiful as those of a gazelle. One of her tricks was the lifting of a heavy chair by her eyelids, the thought of which almost makes my eyes sore. The chair was a heavy mahogany one, which belonged to the room in which I was staying. She tied two strong strings to the top of this and affixed the ends of these strings to her eyes by little round metal cups, each about the size of a nickel. These fitted over the eyeballs and under the lids, and she bent over while they were so fastened. Raising herself she pulled up the chair with these strings with the muscles of her eyelids, and carried it from one side of the room to the other. It was a horrible sight, and as she took the metal cups from her eyes they filled with water, and she almost sank to the floor.

The Engineers Don't Like Them.

Said an old railway engineer the other day: "There are three kinds of trains that I do not want to have anything to do with. One is the pay train. You never know when you will overtake the section hands. You will be going at the rate of forty miles an hour, away you go around a curve, and you will dash by the boss and hands, and have to go back to them. There is always a good deal of talk over the wages, and much time is taken up. The next unpleasant train to handle is an excursion train. Every one living along the line of road knows you from seeing you come by every day, and they think you know them as well. When on an excursion they presume upon their friendship to ride upon the engine. No other place will do for them. The engineer has to refuse them, as it would amount to docking his wages from thirty to sixty days if he complied, as it is positively against the rules of the road. The persons denied the privilege always feel hard about it, and look upon the engineer as unaccommodating. The last and worst of all, however, is the officers' train. If you run slow they say you are scared and fear to run fast. If you make good time they say you are careless and reckless, and want to kill somebody. You can't suit them."

The picture of Meissonier, at seventy-eight, marrying his housekeeper, is one of this great artist's most striking works.

FLASHES.

When the heart is full the lips are silent.

Man is creation's masterpiece. But who says so? Man.

Friendship between two women is always a plot against another.

To blame a young man for being in love is like chiding one for being ill.

The most completely lost of all days is the one on which we have not laughed.

Give the country free sugar, say many of the eastern papers. Well, who is going to furnish the whisky?

Let us laugh! Our father's laughed at their miseries, let us laugh, too! Our fate is not cruel, nor is our flagon broken.

With the floating population on the seashore undressed kids are quite common. Pretty white calves are also frequently seen.

The conversation of women in society resembles straw used in packing china: It is nothing, yet, without it everything would be broken.

A school teacher instructs his pupils that "politics" is a plural noun. Politics may be plural, but some of its results are decidedly singular.

The Knight of La Mancha was in fancy great Salmonius imitated Jove's thunder with brass—

The Record-Union is a "great daily" with a similar fate,

Thus writing itself down a consummate ass. The remnant of a lion skin won't hide A donkey's ears and tail beside.

Baseball.

The interest in baseball, which had been declining rapidly—at least so far as this community is concerned—received a new impetus with the recent change in proprietorship and the engagement of a managing head for the local club whose duty it is to devote himself exclusively to such office. As they say in the parlance of the diamond field, the players have "gingered up" to a degree that bids fair, if the supply of the aromatic herb holds out, to place them safely in first place in the league contest at no very distant day. There can be no effective work done by single-handed effort—all must pull together; and this is not likely to be brought about when cliques are allowed to exist in a club, or personal animosities allowed to come to surface in the course of play. The system of fines imposed by managements for every dereliction on the part of a player is not only taking a mean advantage of the latter's helplessness under his "jug-handle" contract, but in nine cases out of ten only makes the subject of the mulching worse. The average baseball player, while humane and big hearted, has just enough of "mulishness" in his temperament to make any attempt at coercion worse than futile. If we have a balky horse we sell him; if you have a shirking player dismiss him, but pay him up to the last cent, as you would any other employé. The present manager of the Sacramento club is evidently well fitted to deal with just the class of men who comprise the personnel of the professional baseball players. He is a first-class judge of human nature, a hard worker, too conscientious to allow of any partiality in his treatment of his men, and has just enough of friskiness about him to make his associates feel perfectly at home with him, but nothing more. Better still, he and the team captain are very popular with the men. So, as they are all ball players—and probably the best aggregation in the league—and the "family relations" appear to be perfectly serene, why shouldn't they put up just the kind of ball they have been doing. To-morrow afternoon's game will be played according to the following batting order:

San Francisco. Left field. Goodenough. Center field. Veach. First base. McGorley. Third base. McGorley. Right field. Roberts. Shortstop. Roberts. Left field. O'Day. Second base. McLaughlin. Catcher. Ziegler. Pitcher. Barry. Extra. Thompson.

Sacramento. Left field. Goodenough. Center field. Veach. First base. McGorley. Third base. McGorley. Right field. Roberts. Shortstop. Roberts. Left field. O'Day. Second base. McLaughlin. Catcher. Ziegler. Pitcher. Barry. Extra. Thompson.

The Weather.

The highest and lowest signal service temperature during the past week was 98°, on Saturday and Sunday, and 51° on Wednesday. The highest and lowest for the same time last year was 104° and 53°. The highest and lowest temperature for the twenty-four hours ending at 5 o'clock this morning was: Olympia, 70° and 58°; Portland, 74° and 56°; Red Bluff, 92° and 62°; Sacramento, 86° and 54°. The temperature east at 5 o'clock this morning, Pacific standard time, was: For Salt Lake, 64°; Cheyenne, 58°; Denver, 60°; North Platte, 58°; Omaha, 64°; Des Moines, 60°; Davenport, 62°; Chicago, 64°. The weather in this city for the past week has been, during the day, "delightfully pleasant," and the nights have been "pleasantly delightful."

LOCAL BREVITIES.

The Improvement Association intends to wage unrelenting war against the old wooden awnings.

The First Artillery Regiment, Col. J. W. Guthrie commanding, will go into camp at Santa Cruz next Saturday.

Judge Hunt has decided the case of P. A. Finigan v. Dana Perkins, and holds that Finigan is the lawful Director of the State Agricultural Society.

There were extensive fires on the railroad near Cascade. A large amount of snow sheds, with telegraph stations, was destroyed. Repairs are being rapidly made.

The branch shipping house of W. R. Strong & Co., at Penryn, are shipping at the rate of 800 boxes of fruit per day. The Penryn Company are also doing a large business.

The court-house presented a lonely appearance yesterday and to-day. Both Superior Judges are taking a brief vacation. Only a couple of disconsolate looking lawyers stalked through the corridors.

It is said that Sacramento is filling up with thieves and vile characters. Our brave twenty-five ought to be able to suppress this contingent at the State Fair, if they have any desire to do so. The police force, however, like other branches of the city government, is in a very demoralized condition.

At 10 o'clock this morning a thief was discovered in the house of P. Kelly at Sixth and I streets. He had secured a watch and chain. Officers were called and he was taken to the city prison. We understand that early last night an attempt was made to enter the residence of E. F. Aiken, at Eighteenth and G. It is evident that we have among us a number of gentlemen who will very soon find that while the thermometer does not register very hot the locality is warm. Where guilt is established in a criminal case our Courts punctuate it with a sentence that affords the offender ample time for reflection.

GENERAL NEWS ITEMS.

There is said to be great distress in Samoa from a lack of food.

Stanley is on his way down the coast with 9000 men and enormous quantities of ivory.

The Placer County Agricultural Fair will be held at Auburn, commencing on September 3d.

Russia and Japan have signed treaties similar to those between the United States and Japan and Germany.

The ice cream terror is reported to have given place to a new and even more formidable obstacle to the happiness of young men at the summer resorts. It is all the style now for young gallants to buy little balloons to match their young ladies' dresses.

There has been a decrease in immigration during the last year. The total arrivals in June were only 46,059, as compared with 68,475 a year ago. The total for twelve months ending July 1 was 438,619, which is 101,201 less than for the preceding twelve months.

There appears to have been a serious revolt in Honolulu. The rebels were finally captured. The Hawaiian government will not recognize the appointment of W. H. Severance our Counsel General, because he was dismissed by his Majesty prior to his appointment by the United States.

The Marysville Appeal of to-day says: During Thursday night some very dark clouds overcast the skies in this vicinity, and hung until yesterday morning. Before they disappeared a slight shower or rain-drops fell, but not in sufficient quantity to make a perceptible measurement in the rain gauge.

Charles M. Kopp died at Dutch Flat recently. Major Kopp was one of Placer's pioneers, and mined at Dutch Flat as early as 1854. He was a relative of Hon. J. H. Neff, and was deputy sheriff under his administration as Sheriff from 1868 to 1870, and was a candidate for nomination as his successor.

Daniel McGanney of Smartsville, who has long figured as one of the wealthiest men in Yuba county, having, so it was generally understood, great interests in other localities, filed an assignment Friday. His liabilities amount to $120,825, and it is said that it is the largest assignment by one man ever made in Yuba county.

At San Francisco the Republican club held a large meeting in Saratoga Hall last evening and adopted resolutions protesting against the recent ruling on the subject of Chinese in transit; requesting the representatives in Congress to use every effort to amend the Exclusion Act so as to preclude the possibility of such a construction as has been placed upon it by Windom and Miller.

Mrs. C. A. Hubbs, the leading actor in the recent Chico tragedy, now makes some damaging statements against Bierce and her mother. That she never intended to marry Bierce and so told him. That her mother wanted to force a marriage in order to save her own reputation. The whole affair is full of the lowest order of meanness, and the sooner the memory of all concerned is suuk into oblivion the better.

PERSONAL.

Ex-Congressman C. P. Berry is in the city. F. D. Ryan and wife went to San Francisco yesterday.

Miss Clara E. Simmous is visiting friends in San Francisco.

Wyman McMitchell has gone to the mountains for his health.

W. A. Anderson, an editor of THEMIS, left to-day on a visit to the coast.

A. J. Bruner, brother of District Attorney Bruner, intends to locate in this city.

Thos. L. Enright has departed for the mountains for his summer outing.

Mrs. Thomas Goldin, of Sacramento, is visiting her sister, Mrs. B. C. Ward, at Georgetown, El Dorado county.

Phil. and Joe., sons of D. J. Simmons, will leave to-morrow evening to spend several weeks at Blue Cañon.

SNOWFLAKE PARK.

Twenty-eighth and R Streets.

BASEBALL—CALIFORNIA LEAGUE.

Sunday August 11, 1889

At 2 o'clock P. M., sharp,

San Francisco vs. Sacramento.

Prices of admission: Men, 50 cents; ladies, 25 cents; small boys, 10 cents; reserved seats, 25 cents—can be obtained any time at H. C. Megerle's News Depot, Fourth street, between J and K, or at Park before the game.

Trains leave depot at 12:45, 1:05, 1:25 and 1:45—stopping at Third, Tenth and Eighteenth sts. Fare, for round trip, 15 cents.

Admission to Park (including fare both ways), 50 cents.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

THE CARS OF THE CENTRAL STREET RAILWAY COMPANY will only stop at the further crossings.

There will Always be Cars Waiting at the Close of Both Theaters.

THE NEW PAVILION

At South Sacramento will be open on SUNDAY, the 4th of August, and at all times thereafter.

Refreshments of all kinds always on hand.

SCHOOL.

PUPILS of the Public Schools who wish to review during their vacation will find BAINBRIDGE COLLEGE the place. We make a specialty of Grammar School and High School Studies. No extra charge for Penmanship or Elocution drill. You can attend in the cool part of the day; hours, 8 A. M. to 1 P. M.

J. C. BAINBRIDGE, Principal.

No. 1017 J Street, Sacramento.

SECOND HAND

"REMINGTON" TYPE WRITERS

FOR RENT AND FOR SALE.

Type Writers' Supplies of All Kinds.

AT THE

YOST AGENCY, 1007 FOURTH STREET.

R. W. PARKER,

Dealer in Choice Family

GROCERIES and PROVISIONS

Sold at the Lowest Cash Price.

Give him a call and be convinced.

Corner of Seventeenth and M Streets.

Also, Office of the Superintendent of the City Cemetery.

J. S. ROSS

Fourth-Street Restaurant

1023 FOURTH STREET,

Opposite Postoffice, SACRAMENTO.

OYSTERS in EVERY STYLE.

Meals Cooked to Order,

And served in first-class manner.

NEW ORLEANS GUMBO SOUP THURSDAYS AND SUNDAYS.

I have had years of experience as a restaurateur, and feel confident that I can cater satisfactorily to the tastes of all who may favor me with their patronage. J. S. ROSS, Proprietor.

Cooper's Music Store.

The Mathushek Pianos

Are fast taking the lead in musical circles on account of their very superior tone and splendid action. Mr. Cooper, the agent, has a large number of testimonials from purchasers of this particular style (the Grand), among them being Mrs. Stoneman, wife of ex-Governor Stoneman, who speaks in very favorable terms of these pianos, as follows: "I must speak to you in regard to my piano. Some of our finest musicians have spoken particularly of its very fine tone and action. It improves continually, which is the reverse of any other make of pianos, as my experience goes."

Largest and Best Selected Stock of Musical Instruments and Musical Merchandise

NO. 631 J STREET,

Corner of Seventh,

SACRAMENTO.

Fine Table Wines

From our Celebrated Orleans Vineyard.

And Humphrey & Co. Producers of the ECLIPSE CHAMPAGNE, 530 Washington St. SAN FRANCISCO.

CHAMPAGNE

W. B. CHAPMAN, 123 California St. San Francisco.

SOLE AGENT FOR THE PACIFIC COAST

To be sold by all first-class Wine Merchants and Grocers.

Samples and Instructions for Self-measurement sent by mail on application.

L. RADLOFF, LADIES' TAILOR, 218 POST STREET, SAN FRANCISCO. Tailor Made Suits a Specialty.

A. AITKEN,

PREMIUM PIONEER MARBLE AND GRANITE WORKS

423 J Street, bet. 4th and 5th, Sacramento.

Costic Tile, etc. Cemetery lots enclosed with Granite. All kinds of work done in Italian and Vermont Marble. Direct importer of Scotch and Eastern Granite Monuments. Also, Marble, Slate, Wooden and Iron Mantels, direct from manufacturers, at Reduced Prices. Call and examine.

Obadiah's Mistake.

On a certain April day, over a hundred years ago, the British being in possession of Staten Island, the banner of St. George waved above the Richmond Inn in all its crimsoned glory, and flapped and flaunted in the wind as gayly as though it expected to remain in that position for some time to come. From the window of a house near by, Lieut. Wilde of the Queen's rangers looked out upon the village street, and apparently gave great attention to a flock of geese that waddled Indian-file down to the salt creek just back of the old church. The peaceful array was broken by an obstreperous yellow dog who jumped at them and then occupied the ground of observation and lay down in the dust and the sun and enjoyed a nap. But the gaze of the lieutenant never wandered and it was evident that he had paid no attention this rural panorama. There was a rapt expression in his face, such as a man has who fosters some great scheme, and he rapped his foot once twice on the floor in order to emphasize approval of his ideas. He nodded his head, and then going to a table where lay paper and quills, he was again lost in thought.

It was fully twenty minutes before he put a quill to a sheet of note paper, and then he wrote carefully. From the care with which he folded and sealed it, it was evidently some great and important paper that he had written. The red wax received the impression of a shield crossed and quartered, and the lieutenant again went to the window. A small boy of about twelve years was shuffling along the dusty road, throwing up clouds of dust which covered his bare feet and legs.

"Obadiah," called the officer, "I have an errand for you."

The small boy came up to the window. "You know where Capt. Howard's quarters are, I believe."

The boy respectfully nodded and mumbled assent.

"Well," continued the officer speaking slowly, "I want you to deliver this note into his hands—mind you, to him alone, and bring me back an answer. Tell him to write it, and if you are back by three o'clock there will be a gold piece of the King's waiting for you. Mind—be very careful."

The boy took the letter and nodded assent. The lieutenant watched him as he started on a run, saw him disappear behind the trees of the hill by the side of the church, and then turned with a sigh. It was evident that some important business was on hand, and the Englishman hoped that the boy was sufficiently impressed with the weight of his mission.

Obadiah Green climbed the hill, at the top of which, and out of the lieutenant's sight, he sat down and gazed earnestly at paper in his hands. The seal and the officer's words made it very precious, and he looked at the superscription and tried to imagine what it was, for Obadiah was not learned. His eye caught sight of the red flag above the inn and caused his heart to beat quickly.

Obadiah was a patriot, or, as some called him, "a rebel." He lived with his parents, who had no particular leaning to either side, but the boy was possessed of sufficient patriotism for the family. He had often wished in secret, that the war might last long enough for him to reach the proper age to enter the army and fight—and wouldn't he fight! He had seen a party of Americans come over from Jersey and rout a larger party of British soldiers, and retreat only when a re-inforcement came running up the Richmond road. So Obadiah wondered whether he was conveying news to the British captain that would be hurtful to the Americans. Then he would be a traitor—at least to himself—and—might not the news contained in that precious letter be of service to the Americans? He jumped up quickly and looked about. He expected to see the red coat of a soldier behind each tree, or to hear a volley of musketry about his head. But the wood was quiet and the red flag was the only thing that told of King George and his army.

The sight of the flag gave him courage as he started off in the other direction than that which he would have taken to deliver the note into the hands of the proper party. He thought himself a hero as he sped on—he pictured himself in a blue coat and cocked hat leading an assault on the headquarters of the British commander—but he would spare his own home and win his father to the American side. This was one of his ambitions. The waters of the Achter Kill came in sight, and on the other side was Jersey! Jersey—where the Americans were. He stopped at the marsh and made a detour to its most narrow part, through which he waded until he came to an old bateau tied to a stake. The British had carelessly left their boats along the river edge, fearing to destroy them, and watching them only when they expected a raid of the Americans from Jersey.

Obadiah clambered into the flat-bottomed, leaky boat, and pushed off into the current, where, with a small board, he directed the course of the boat as best he might. The tide was running in and the flat boat was carried up the stream towards the opposite shore. It seemed hours to the boy as he crouched low, and slowly, slowly left the shores of Staten Island, but Jersey came nearer, and at last the bottom of the boat grated on a rock and the land was but a few feet away. Obadiah plunged into the water, which came up to his knees, and in a few minutes was standing on the shores of Jersey, wondering which way he was to go. He deemed it best to put as much distance as possible between himself and the British, so he started directly inland. He was tired, so tired that he stopped to rest, and then seeing a house, or several of them, in the distance, he started off again. The first dwelling was a public house on the outskirts of Elizabethport, and there, to his delight, stood a soldier in blue at the door.

"Be an officer inside?" quoth Obadiah, gasping for breath.

"Aye, youngster," said the soldier.

Obadiah entered. There were several men sitting around a table talking and smoking, and to one of them Obadiah handed his note and nervously awaited his doom.

"Why, I am not Capt. Howard!" said the officer, and then he saw the address in full, "The King's Own—On the East Shore."

"Where did you get this?" cried the American, starting. "Who are you?"

"Lieut. Wilde gave it to me, and I—I—thought it would be wrong, so I brought it to you—from Staten Island."

"You did—a young patriot from the nest of Tories," said the officer, opening the note.

Obadiah's heart beat wildly as the man read the note—he was almost sorry that he had run away. Would they send him back?

"Ha, ha, ha," laughed the American, "ha, ha, ha." The other officers crowded about and the note was handed around.

"Young man," said one of them, a beardless youth, sternly, "do you know what you have done. Listen:

"HEADQUARTERS OF THE QUEEN'S RANGERS.

"DEAR TOM—Is there no way that you can devise to coax that adorable Miss Mason to come over? I have arranged a dance for to night, and will you beg her to accompany you? Bring her sister, if you wish, as well, and by moonlight we can all ride home together. Keep my secret, but I am near distracted."

"Aff'ly, CYRIL."

Another laugh rang out as the boy's face fell. He scarcely realized the meaning of the note or the lieutenant's affliction, but he knew that there was nothing damaging to the American cause in inviting a girl to dance, and then Lieut. Wilde was very nice, after all, and he had abused his trust.

"Never mind, all's fair in love and war," said the officer to whom Obadiah had addressed himself, "Cyril has lost his dance, but the colonies have won a brave soldier—unless"—and the officer's eyes twinkled—"unless you care to go back to Staten Island."

"No, no," cried the boy, starting at the very idea.

"John," called the officer to the man at the door, "see this young fellow is enrolled as a drummer, and my boy, be sure that the General will learn of your bravery."

The laughter of the other men broke out again as Obadiah, with a light heart, trotted off with the soldier.

The geese returned from their swim, unmolested by the yellow dog, and the lieutenant sat at the window watching for the messenger until a roll of drums aroused him, and he went to attend to his evening duties. And at that moment Obadiah was seated in the American camp, eating his supper from a drum head and wondering what the lieutenant would say when the patriots marched into Richmond village with him in front.

Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like the young man of fashion this summer. From his russet-colored shoes to his striped cap the dude of the moment is a polychromatic apparition. It is his sash, however, which causes him the keenest pleasure and makes the most striking impression upon an admiring world. Not since the days when bedizened courtiers gloried in silks, satins and laces has the sterner sex indulged in any garment so dazzling as the brilliant sash now wrapped about the waist of many a spoiled darling of the day.

FRIEND & TERRY LUMBER CO.

Wholesale and Retail Lumber Dealers, Also Shakes, Bolts, Ties, Doors, Windows, Blinds and Screens. Main Yard and Office, No. 1310 Second Street. Branch Yard, corner Twelfth and J Sts. P. O. Box 233. E. J. Holt, Manager. Sacramento

OSBORN & FOLGER

DEALERS IN ICE and COAL, HAY and GRAIN. New 10-ton Fairbanks' Hay Scales.

N. E. cor. Fifth and I Streets.

Wood Yard, 806 I Street.

WESTERN HOTEL

209 to 219 K Street.

The Leading Hotel of Sacramento, Cal.

FREE BUS TO AND FROM HOTEL.

Meals, 25 Cents. Rooms, according to Location.

WM. LAND, Proprietor.

A. L. HART,

ATTORNEY-AT-LAW
Sutler Building, cor. 5th and J.

W. A. ANDERSON,

ATTORNEY-AT-LAW,
No. 209 J Street, Sacramento.

W. A. GETT, JR.,

Attorney at Law,
Southwest Corner of Seventh and J Streets,
SACRAMENTO, CAL.

F. F. TEBBETS, DENTIST.

No. 914 SIXTH STREET,
Bet. I and J, west side, opp. Congregational Church.

DR. H. H. PIERSON,
SURGICAL & MECHANICAL DENTIST

511 J Street, bet. 5th and 6th.
Gas administered for the painless extraction of teeth.

Joseph Hahn & Co.,
PHARMACISTS,

S. W. cor. Fifth and J Streets, Sacramento.
CHOICE PERFUMERIES, Etc.
Prescriptions carefully compounded, at all hours.

FIRE! ACCIDENT! LIFE!
—Insurance a Specialty.—

COMBINED ASSETS, - 50 MILLIONS.
Best in the World!

Royal, Norwich-Union & Lancashire,
Of England.

See my list of policy-holders and my prices.
"TRAVELERS," of Hartford, Conn. Everybody knows the name. I sell only first-class policies.
C. H. DENTON, 628½ J Street.

BOOTS AND SHOES made to order. Boots, $6 to $11. Shoes, $4 to $9. Ladies' Shoes, best quality French Kid, $5 to $7.

REPAIRING DONE at lowest prices.

NONE BUT BEST mechanics employed.

WE GUARANTEE to make perfect fitting to the worst of crooked and crippled feet.

COMPETE WITH any shoes on the market.

216 J Street

—AND—
208 K Street,

SACRAMENTO.

A. CASELLI & COMPANY.

Take a Ride on the Riverside Road

AND BE SURE AND STOP AT
BILLY GROENVELD'S

Sutterville House

And get a glass of COOL BEER. Or if you want a bottle of CHAMPAGNE Billy has it on hand, or anything else you may wish for in his line.

Always a FINE LUNCH on the Counter.

M. T. GROENVELD, Proprietor.

A. C. SWEETSER & CO.,

Real Estate & Insurance Brokers

Lands For Sale in all parts of the State.

Some Good Investments in School Lands.

Send for Catalogue.

Office, No. 1012 Fourth Street,

SACRAMENTO, CAL.

L. K. Hammer

THE LEADING

MUSIC DEALER.

AGENT FOR

Chickering
Pianos.

Largest Stock of Musical Instruments in the City.

No. 820 I STREET.

GRAND OPENING

OF

NOLAN & SON'S

Boot and Shoe

STORE.

603 J STREET, SACRAMENTO,

One door above Sixth.

GEORGE T. BOYD,

Manufacturer of

Pure Candies and Ice Cream

Temple of Sweets,

907 K Street, next to Odd Fellows' Temple,
SACRAMENTO, CAL.

BELL & CO.,
GENERAL AUCTIONEERS.

Salesroom, 927 K Street, Sacramento, Cal.

Regular Salesdays—Wednesdays and Saturdays at 10 o'clock A. M.

Assistants—W. T. Crowell, Real Estate; J. Pulvermacher, Bookkeeper; J. Lambert, Furniture and Stock.

Particular attention paid to sales of real estate, house sales, and sales of farms, stock, etc.

Highest price paid for all kinds of household goods.

Sale of Unclaimed Baggage

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN THAT I, WM. LAND, proprietor of the Western Hotel, Sacramento, will cause to be sold at public auction, at the salesroom of W. H. Sherburn, 325 K street, Sacramento, on TUESDAY, AUGUST THIRTEENTH, 1889, at 10 o'clock A. M., the following described baggage:

Lot 1, 1 Trunk, marked C. B. G.; Lot 2, 1 Trunk, marked Albert Schmidt; Lot 3, 1 Trunk, no mark; Lot 4, 1 Trunk, marked Walter Johnson; Lot 5, 1 Trunk, marked E. T. Naghel; Lot 6, 1 Trunk, marked Billy Myers; Lot 7, 1 Trunk, no mark; Lot 8, 2 Trunks and 1 valise, marked C. G. Meegan; Lot 9, 1 Bundled and 1 valise, marked Mrs. C. W. Otto; Lot 10, 1 Valise, E. N. McBeath; Lot 11, 1 Valise, no mark; Lot 12, 1 Valise, no mark; Lot 13, 1 Valise, no mark; Lot 14, 1 Valise, C. J. Morgan; Lot 15, 1 Valise, C. J. Morgan; Lot 16, 1 Valise, 747 marked; Lot 17, 1 Valise, no mark; Lot 18, 1 Hand Satchel, Charles Sanbach; Lot 19, 1 Valise, W. H. Schad; Lot 20, 1 Valise, no mark; Lot 21, 1 Valise, no mark; Lot 22, 1 Valise, no mark; Lot 23, 1 Valise, Sept. 5th, 1888; Lot 24, 1 Valise, F. A. McGuire, Aug. 28th, 1888; Lot 25, 1 Valise, no mark; Lot 26, 1 Hand Bag, no mark; Lot 27, 1 Carpet Bag, no mark; Lot 28, 1 Basket, M. S.; Lot 29, 1 Lunch Basket, no mark; Lot 30, 1 Basket, no mark; Lot 31, 1 Band Box, no mark; Lot 32, 1 Box, Chas. E. Burton; Lot 33, 2 Lots Umbrellas; Lot 34, 1 Lot Cans; Lot 35, 16 Bundles Bedding; Lot 36, 71 Packages and Bundles; Lot 37, 1 Lot Linen Coats; Lot 38, 1 Lot Clothing; Lot 39, 3 Valises, no marks; Lot 40, 1 Lot Shoes, etc.; Lot 41, 6 Coats and Linen Coats, Hotel Checks Nos. 2475, 2817, 3552, 3399, 3733, 3742. All the above described property having remained unclaimed for more than six months.

WM. LAND, Proprietor Western Hotel, Sacramento.

W. H. SHERBURN, Auctioneer.

$500 REWARD.

PURSUANT TO A RESOLUTION OF THE BOARD of Supervisors of Sacramento county, adopted May 7, 1889, said Board will pay the sum of Five Hundred Dollars ($500) for evidence leading to the arrest and conviction of any party illegally carrying on the business of hydraulic mining on the American river or its tributaries, in any and all mines or claims which have been heretofore enjoined by any Court of competent jurisdiction; provided, however, that said Board will pay but one reward for the arrest and conviction of a person or persons operating the same mine or claim.

Attest: F. F. TEBBETS, Chairman of the Board of Supervisors. W. B. HAMILTON, Clerk of Board.

FOR FRESH, CLEAN GROCERIES, GO TO

We invite a call at our new location, corner Eighth and K streets, where with our increased space we are enabled to give our large stock a fair display and our customers convenient room.

THE AMERICAN CASH STORE

Offers attractions to cash buyers of GROCERIES. A high quality of goods is carefully regarded.

O. F. WASHBURN, 801 K STREET.

O'BRIEN'S, 607 J.

SWEEPING REDUCTION IN LADIES' SHOES.

Best French Kid, hand turn, worth $7, reduced to $6. Ladies' French Kid Button, low heel, long vamp, worth $5, reduced to $4. Misses' and Children's Canvas Shoes reduced 25 per cent.

A. J. MUIR,
PLUMBER,

Gas and Steam Fitter.

Being a practical plumber, I can guarantee all work.

810 K STREET, Telephone 226.
SACRAMENTO, CAL.

ALBERT GRUBBS,

No. 1417 Fourth Street,

Will do all kinds of House Cleaning, Lay Carpets, Whitewashing, and everything in that line.

He also has the only wagon for the REMOVAL OF DEAD ANIMALS, and any orders left at his place of business will receive prompt attention.

'Remember the address!

No. 1417 Fourth Street, Sacramento, Cal.

PAUL GRAF,

Manufacturer of and dealer in Saddles, Harness, Robes, Collars, Whips, Spurs, Brushes, Currycombs, etc.

1130 J Street, near Twelfth

Repairing Neatly Done. Harness Made to Order.

Barrett & Berkey

PACIFIC RESTAURANT,
OYSTER HOUSE AND
WINE PARLORS
701 J Street, cor. 7th.

CALL AT 1118 J STREET,
—AT—

Fred Futterer's Saloon

And Get a Glass of Cool Beer.

The best Wines, Liquors and Cigars always on hand.

POOL AND BILLIARD TABLES.

FRED FUTTERER, 1118 J Street.

CHANGED HANDS.

SACRAMENTO EXCHANGE,
(Formerly Wm. Gamble's.)

1012 SEVENTH STREET.

Fine Wines. All the celebrated brands of Liquors and Cigars.
ROBERT ALLEN,
Formerly of Agricultural Park.

RHOADS & TOWNSEND HOUSE

On European Plan.

Cor. Second and J Streets, Sacramento.

ARTHUR MILLER, PROPRIETOR.

A Stranger in Town.

IT is safe to wager that this is a truthful portrait of the wonder and astonishment usually aroused by a stranger on entering a small country village. All stand with their mouths wide open, reminding the traveler of the Mammoth Cave, and they gaze on him as though beholding an apparition from another world. And, by the way, this is a forcible reminder of the fact that

Arcadian, the Ideal,

is creating just about as much commotion among the proprietors of competing brands as the appearance of the stranger does among the unsophisticated inhabitants of the rural village. Imagine the stranger in the above illustration to be

"Arcadian and Ideal,"

and the gawky, paralyzed spectators, competing drinks, and you have a very correct idea of the position occupied by Arcadian Sarsaparilla and Iron. A glass of IDEAL is, indeed, delightful. It is a great blood purifier, possesses valuable medicinal properties, and is warmly indorsed by eminent physicians in every part of England and America. It has long been a favorite drink among the English people, and is acquiring universal favor and popularity wherever introduced.

Ideal is prepared with pure Arcadian Mineral Water, and is bottled at Waukesha, Wis. It is a mild laxative, acts favorably in promoting the secretions of the kidneys, enriches the blood, and is of decided value in malarial diseases of every type. It imparts an invigorating tone to the entire system.

It is essentially a ladies' drink, and possesses rare merit.

ARCADIAN, THE IDEAL,

IS KEPT FOR SALE BY ALL FIRST-CLASS

Druggists, Grocers and Saloon Keepers.

ANHEUSER & BUSCH BEER

Can be found on draught only at

John Gruhler's Saloon

No. 522 J STREET.

The finest and best Wines, Liquors and Cigars constantly on hand.

Patronize Home Industry!

CITY BREWERY

FRANK RUHSTALLER, Proprietor.

GENUINE

Pilsener Felsen Beer.

Corner Twelfth and H Streets,

Telephone 201.

SACRAMENTO.

CELEBRATED

WEINER LAGER BEER

CAPITAL BREWERY

LOUIS NICOLAUS,

Corner Twelfth and I Streets

SACRAMENTO.

COLUMBUS BREWERY

CHRIS. WAHL, Proprietor

Corner of Sixteenth and K Streets,

SACRAMENTO, CAL.

Agent for the Celebrated W. J. LEMP'S ST. LOUIS LAGER BEER

WISSEMANN'S SALOON,

Klebetz & Green's Old Stand,

1020 Fourth St., bet. J and K, Sacramento.

GEO. WISSEMANN, PROPRIETOR.

Families and Saloons supplied by bottle or keg.

Butchers' Home,

1020 J Street,

Between 10th and 11th, Sacramento, Cal.

Fine Wines, Liquors and Cigars. Also, a

GOOD GLASS OF BEER.

JACOB GRUHLER, Prop'r.

CAPITAL ALE VAULTS.

Established in 1870, and still maintains the same reputation for keeping the best WINES, LIQUORS and Cigars in the city. The finest Hot Lunch in the city from 11 to 2. Clam Chowder a specialty every night.

NAGELE & SVENSSON, Prop'rs.

Telephone 38.

302 J and 1005 Third st.

California State Bank

DOES A GENERAL BANKING BUSINESS.

Draws Exchange on all the Principal Cities of the World.

OFFICERS:
 PRESIDENT N. D. RIDEOUT
 VICE-PRESIDENT FRED K. COX
 CASHIER A. ABBOTT
 ASSISTANT CASHIER W. E. GERBER

DIRECTORS:
 C. W. Clarke, J. S. Steffens, N. D. Rideout,
 Geo. C. Perkins, J. R. Watson, Frederick Cox,
 W. E. Gerber.

W. R. STRONG & CO.

Founded 1852.

Fruit Packers
 and Shippers.

PROPRIETORS OF

CAPITAL NURSERIES,
 SACRAMENTO, CAL.

CURTIS BROS. & CO.

Wholesale and Retail Dealers in and Shippers of all kinds of

Fruits, Vegetables

And GENERAL PRODUCE.

Careful attention paid to the selection and packing of Choice Fruits and Vegetables for distant markets. Goods delivered in city free.

308 and 310 K Street, - - Sacramento, Cal.

King Bros.

State Capitol Cash Grocery, 131 J Street, corner Second.

Goods sold on small margin, strictly for cash. Best Brands of Wines, Liquors and Cigars.

JAS. LONGSHORE,

SACRAMENTO TRUNK FACTORY,
 530 K STREET.

Trunks, Valises & Bags Wholesale and Retail.

Waterhouse & Lester

DEALERS IN

IRON, STEEL, CUMBERLAND COAL,
 Wagon Lumber and Carriage Hardware,
 SACRAMENTO.

Earthquake and Fire Proof BUILDINGS

Constructed on my patent system. Perfect protection guaranteed. For estimates and particulars see
 E. HAWES,
 Twelfth and B streets, Sacramento.

PUMPS

Our Factory is the Largest and Best Equipped in Northern California.

Our Designs are New and Original and Calculated for Every Variety of Service.

CAPITAL IRON WORKS,

904 K Street, Sacramento.

CANCERS,

Ulcers, Wens, Lumps, Exerescences, etc.,
 Positively Cured or no Pay.
 No Knife Used.

As to the success of my treatment, I give the names of a few of the many cured. By addressing them they will give any information required—and it pays to investigate before being treated.
 Mrs. O. C. Nelson Grass Valley, cancer.
 John Service, Auburn, lupus.
 Patrick Lynch, Sacramento, cancer.
 Mrs. Jno. Shaw, Grass Val., birthmark removed.
 N. S. Peck S. P. R. R. Sacramento, cancer.
 J. L. Woods, Washington, Yolo county, cancer.
 John W. Douglas, Rocklin, cancer.
 Miss Mamie Lynch, Yolo, tumor removed.
 Chas. McLaughlin, Sacramento, cancer.
 I might give many more. Those afflicted are invited to call and investigate for themselves. Consultation at office free. Send for circular.
 Office, 426 K Street, Sacramento.

DR. J. H. SHIRLEY.

H. WACHHORST

Leading Jeweler of Sacramento

SIGN OF THE TOWN CLOCK,

No. 315 J STREET, SACRAMENTO.

W. D. Comstock, 501--507 K, cor. Fifth

Furniture

Bedding

On Exhibition, THE LARGEST AND BEST SELECTED STOCK.

FAIR DEALING! LOW PRICES!

GENSHLEA BROS.

Strictly High Grade Goods in all Lines. 624 J ST.

TRY THE LA ROSA ESPANOLA KEY WEST CIGAR.

JAS. G. DAVIS

Furniture, Carpets and Wall Paper

411 AND 413 K STREET,

Branch, 315 K St. Send for Catalogue. Prices Lowest.

Klune & Floberg,

WATCHMAKERS and JEWELERS

Agents for Rockford Watch Co.

NO. 428 J STREET, SACRAMENTO.

Something New

NEW STORE. NEW MEN.

BELL & FOUNTAIN

HAVE OPENED THE

Plaza Cash Grocery

STORE,

Corner Tenth and J Streets,

And have stocked the same with all New and Fresh Goods, which they will sell for CASH at the smallest living margin.

All Goods Warranted as Represented.

Goods delivered to any part of the city.

Our Motto: "The nimble sixpence against the slow shilling!"

BELL & FOUNTAIN,

Plaza Cash Grocery Store,

R. H. PETTIT,

Wholesale and Retail Dealer in

IMPORTED & DOMESTIC CIGARS

Smoke the "Lone Fisherman,"

The BEST FIVE-CENT CIGAR in the Market.

NO. 225 K STREET.

JESSE SLAUGHTER,

Office, No. 1217 Fifth Street.

Plastering, Whitewashing, Cleaning of Cesspools, Etc.

Also, CITY SCAVENGER.

Burying of dead animals attended to at short notice.

Don't forget the number—1217 Fifth street, the old stand, where I have been for 25 years.

REEVES & LONG, UNDERTAKERS,

609 J Street, bet. Sixth and Seventh.

WE KEEP ON HAND A COMPLETE Stock of Coffins and Caskets; also, Shrouds of every description. Orders from city or country receive prompt attention, day or night. EMBALMING done in the best manner; and at reasonable rates.

TRADE WITH THE

OVERLAND

Tea Company,

421 J STREET,

BETWEEN FOURTH AND FIFTH.

The Best of Goods Procurable.

HANDSOME PRESENTS GIVEN
 TO CUSTOMERS.

For Particulars see the Daily Papers.

F. KUEHNE & CO.,

NO. 906 NINTH STREET,

Between I and J, SACRAMENTO,

Carpenters and Contractors

Store and office work a specialty.

ICE BOXES for Breweries and Saloons always on hand and made to order.

Jobbing and Repairing promptly attended to.

BAKER & HAMILTON,

San Francisco and Sacramento,

Importers and Jobbers of

Hardware, Iron, Steel, Coal, Powder,

MACHINERY

And Agricultural Implements.

Send for Catalogue.

American Steam Laundry

NINETEENTH AND I STS.—WHITE LABOR only. Linen polished in the neatest manner. We guarantee satisfaction. All ordinary mending, sewing on buttons, etc., free of charge. Washing called for and delivered to any part of the city. Main Office at Sawtelle's Book Store, 708 and 710 J street. Branch offices at all the Hotels.

RAILROAD TIME TABLE.

Southern Pacific Company

PACIFIC SYSTEM.

July 28, 1889.

Trains LEAVE and are due to ARRIVE at SACRAMENTO.

Lv.	Trains Run Daily.	Arr.
7 00 A	Calistoga and Napa	11 40 A
4 05 P	Calistoga and Napa	8 30 P
11 00 P	Ashland and Portland	3 40 A
5 05 P	Denning, El Paso and East	7 05 P
7 30 P	Knights Landing	7 55 A
4 30 A	Marysville (Mixed)	4 25 P
9 00 A	Los Angeles	9 55 A
9 00 P	Second Class, Ogden and East	6 30 A
10 30 P	Central Atlantic Express	3 40 P
3 00 P	Oroville	9 50 A
11 00 P	Oroville	3 40 A
3 00 P	Red Bluff via Marysville	9 50 A
10 40 A	Redding via Willows	4 05 P
4 00 A	San Francisco via Benicia	10 40 P
7 00 A	San Francisco via Benicia	8 30 P
4 05 P	San Francisco via Benicia	10 10 P
*10 00 A	San Francisco via Steamer	26 00 A
11 20 A	San Francisco via Livermore	2 25 P
3 05 P	San Francisco via Benicia	11 40 A
9 00 A	Santa Barbara	2 25 P
5 05 P	Santa Barbara	9 55 A
7 00 A	Santa Barbara	7 05 P
4 05 P	Santa Rosa	8 30 P
9 00 A	Stockton and Galt	7 05 P
5 05 P	Stockton and Galt	9 55 A
9 00 P	Truckee and Reno	6 30 A
10 30 P	Truckee and Reno	3 40 P
8 30 A	Colfax	5 00 P
4 05 P	Vallejo	11 40 A
7 00 A	Vallejo	11 40 A
*12 15 P	Folsom and Placerville (Mixed)	*10 35 A
*7 15 A	Folsom and Placerville	*3 45 P
*5 20 P	Folsom	*6 50 A

*Sunday excepted. †Sunday only. ‡Monday excepted. A for morning, P for afternoon.
 A. N. TOWNE, Gen'l Manager.
 T. H. GOODMAN, Gen'l Pass. and Ticket Agent.

Edwin K. Alsip & Co.

ESTABLISHED 1860.

REAL ESTATE

AND INSURANCE AGENTS.

FARMING LANDS A SPECIALTY.

Catalogues issued monthly.

No. 1015 Fourth Street, Sacramento.

Gregory Bros. Co.

Established 1852.

COMMISSION MERCHANTS,

Packers and Shippers of California Fruit and Produce,

126 and 128 J STREET,

San Francisco Office, 313 Davis St. SACRAMENTO.

ANGLO-NEVADA ASSURANCE CORPORATION

OF SAN FRANCISCO.

FIRE.—Cash Capital, $2,000,000.—MARINE.

Sacramento Branch:

No. 1018 SECOND STREET.

JOSEPH STEFFENS, Manager. HOWARD KIMBROUGH, Local Agent.

Hotfilter & Grafmiller,

MANUFACTURING JEWELERS,

Jewelry made to order. Watches, Clocks and Jewelry Repaired and Warranted.

No. 1026 Sixth Street, Sacramento.

B. Ruhl

Bookbinder, Paper Ruler and

Blank Book Manufacturer.

Periodicals, Magazines, Music, and all kinds of Binding neatly done at the lowest prices.

No. 409 J STREET, SACRAMENTO.

R. DAVIS,

NOTARY PUBLIC,

Real Estate and Insurance Agent.

Representing the following companies:

Manchester of England; Caledonian of Edinburgh, Scotland; London and Lancaster, England.

1002 J Street, Sacramento.

Restaurant de France,

FAURE & BECKER, PROPRIETORS.

(Successors to L. Payen.)

No. 427 K Street, Near Metropolitan Theater

Family Entrance on Fifth Street.

Catering to Families, Banquets and Wedding Parties a specialty.

NOTICE TO FRUITMEN!

Keep your trees free from scale and your apples from being wormy by the use of

Warner's Scale & Insect Exterminator

FOR SALE BY

G. T. NOE, - - DRUGGIST,

AUBURN, CAL.

Put up in one-half gallon and quart cans

THEMIS

Vol. I.

SACRAMENTO: SATURDAY, AUGUST 17, 1889.

No. 26.

THEMIS: published weekly, by A. J. Johnston & Co. Publication Office, 410 J Street. Subscription—One year, by mail, $3 00; six months, by mail, $1 50, in advance; per month, by carrier, 25 cents. (Entered at the Post Office at Sacramento as second-class matter.)

The tragedy at Lathrop was not unexpected. It was an event that will become important in the history of the country. It is unnecessary, in that so much has been published concerning him, to recount the eventful life of Judge Terry. That he was entirely unjustified in the assault he made upon Mr. Justice Field is not questioned but by few. Terry had always been an aggressive man, but it would seem that he should have been the last one in the State to resort to physical force to intimidate or attempt to humiliate a Judge. In 1856, when Terry was Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of California, an officer of the Vigilance Committee attempted to serve process upon one Meloney, to procure his attendance as a witness before the Committee. Terry and others armed themselves in the interest of law and order. In a melee that occurred he plunged a Bowie-knife into the neck of Hopkins, the agent of the Vigilance Committee. Of late years, however, it seems that he had not the respect due from a citizen to the Courts of the country. Whatever may have been his opinion of the integrity of Justice Field and Judge Sawyer, the actions of himself and his wife within the last year cannot be justified.

An expression of contempt for our judiciary is not directed so much at the individual who presides as Judge as against the department of government regarded by the people as the most sacred. It is hardly possible that men who are corrupt can sit upon the Bench in this country for any considerable length of time without being impeached and removed. The case that occurred in San Diego a few days since, where a Superior Judge was shot down by a man comparatively unknown and possibly incapable of intelligently judging the action of Courts, may be paliated perhaps on the ground of ignorance; but with a man as Terry, who had occupied the highest judicial position in a State, and whose standing as a jurist was of the first, there can be no excuse for his action. There seems to be no doubt that he intended to draw Field into a personal controversy; the blow in the face, which he gave the Justice, could have brought about no other result. It is the opinion of a few that Neagle was not justified in shooting Terry, but that Field would have been, in that the assault was directed against him. Neagle could not have acted otherwise than he did. With the knowledge he had, and that the public generally had, of the character for combatativeness of Terry, and of his habit of carrying and effectively using deadly weapons, had he permitted an encounter to be brought on by Terry against Field, and had the latter been killed, he would have been execrated throughout the country. He was an officer of the federal government, traveling with a Justice of the United States Supreme Court, against whose life threats had openly been made by the individual who made the assault. He was charged with protecting the person of the Justice; that he did so promptly and effectually is to be commended.

The domestic life of Judge Terry is saddening. In 1852 he married Miss Cornelia Runnels, a niece of Hiram G. Runnels, who served as Governor of Mississippi from 1833 to 1835. She was a lady of unusual intelligence and culture, and to whom Terry was devotedly attached. When, in 1856, he was incarcerated by the Vigilance Committee for the stabbing of Hopkins, and when the question of his life or death depended upon the result of Hopkins' wound; when popular opinion was against him, his wife proved her devotion by defending him in letters which were printed in the public press. She made a gallant fight, and those most bitter against him accorded her respect. The letters which Terry wrote to her while in confinement exhibited a tender feeling for her devotion to him. She since died. His oldest son, to whom he gave a ranch in Fresno county, committed suicide without leaving any note of explanation. His youngest son, Samuel, and perhaps his favorite, became a lawyer of distinction. He filled several local offices with credit, and was elected to the State Assembly in 1882. He died at Stockton April 1, 1885. Only one of Terry's children survives. There is no doubt but that these sad events had much to do in changing the bend of Terry's life, coming as they did at the age which he had reached. His marriage on January 7, 1886, to Miss Hill was unfortunate; it threw him into a sea of troubles; it cost him his life.

The career of Justice Field has been eventful. He was born November 4, 1816. He came from a distinguished family, and selected the profession of the law. He heard of the discovery of gold in California while in Paris in December, 1848, and resolved to come to this country. He arrived in San Francisco December 28, 1849, almost penniless. Locating at ~~San Francisco~~ he was elected first Alcalde and Justice of the Peace, in January, 1850, and for a time held his court in the street, as was not unusual in those primitive days. Leaving that office he engaged in the practice of law, but soon incurred the displeasure of Wm. R. Turner, the Judge of that judicial district. This rupture has, perhaps, had no parallel in controversy between the Bench and Bar. He was elected to the Legislature of 1851 as an independent candidate; succeeded in legislating Turner into another judicial district, and almost secured his impeachment and removal from office. Judge Field's personal and political relations with David C. Broderick were close from the time they met in the Legislature. Their intimacy and friendship arose from the matter of the impeachment of Turner. The address of Field on that question called forth a vindictive reply from B. F. Moore, of Tuolumne. When arising to speak, Moore took from his drawer two revolvers, cocked them and laid them upon his desk. During his remarks he repeatedly declared that he was responsible for what he said, there or at any other place. Field addressed Moore a note demanding an apology or satisfaction. Several of his friends declined to deliver the note. One night he met Broderick in the Senate chamber. They were then barely acquainted. Broderick was writing at his desk, and, looking up, said: "Why, Judge, you don't look well; what is the matter?" Field answered that he had not a friend in the world. Broderick inquired what it was that worried him, and Field related the particulars of the insult from Moore. Upon hearing the particulars Broderick said: "My dear Field, I will be your friend in this matter; go at once and write a note to Moore, and I will deliver it myself." The note was prepared and presented to Moore by Broderick. Moore replied that as he expected to be a candidate for Congress he could not on that account fight a duel, but would meet Field at any time and place. Broderick replied that a street fight did not become gentlemen, but that if that was the only alternative, Moore would be accommodated. An hour later, Moore concluded to fight a duel; seconds were chosen, but Moore afterward determined to do nothing further in the matter. "Then," said Broderick, speaking to Moore's second, "as soon as the House meets, Judge Field will rise in his seat and reply to the attack on him and to the language of Moore that he held himself responsible for what he said, and state that respect for the dignity of the House had prevented him from replying to the attack at the time in the terms it deserved; that he had since demanded satisfaction from Moore for his language, and that Moore had refused to respond, and will thereupon denounce him as a liar and a coward. Drury P. Baldwin, who acted as second for Moore, replied, "Then Judge Field will get shot in his seat." Broderick answered, "In that case there will be others shot too." When Broderick communicated this interview to Field and asked him, "Will you act as I said you would?" his reply was "Most certainly; never fear for me." When the House met next day it was anticipated there would be trouble. After the roll call Field and Moore addressed the Speaker, but the latter was recognized first, and he sent a written apology to the clerk's desk, which was read, and the affair ended. Returning from the Legislature, Judge Field resumed the practice of law at Marysville, but soon afterward incurred the enmity of William T. Barbour, the Judge of the District Court, who made some very bitter vituperative remarks concerning him, and for which an explanation was demanded. Barbour refused to make any explanation, but verbally challenged Field to settle the matter. The challenge was accepted. Judge Field selected as his second for Field, and Charles S. Fairfax acted for Barbour. The proposition made by Barbour was that the time for the meeting should be that evening, the place a room twenty feet square, the weapons, Colt's revolvers and Bowie knives. The principals so armed were to be placed at opposite sides of the room, with their faces to the walls; they were to turn and fire at the word, then advance and finish the conflict with their knives. The terms were characterized by Judge Mott as unusual, unprecedented and barbarous. Barbour, however, insisted on the terms and Field denounced him as a coward who would not fight. He, however, directed his second to accept the terms. Upon that being reported to Barbour, he sent a message that he would waive the Bowie knives, and shortly afterward sent another message that it would not do to fight in the room designated as the firing would be heard outside and would attract a crowd. Field accepted all of the modifications.

Finally it was agreed that the meeting should take place the following morning in Sutter county. At the time specified the parties appeared on the ground, but Barbour declared that he was a judicial officer, and as such could not engage in a duel, but said he would protect himself, and if assaulted would kill the assailant. He left his second on the field, walked to the first stage and rode to Sacramento. Barbour's conduct on the ground, after his savage terms at the outset, created a great deal of merriment, and several sharp articles appeared in the newspapers. One of them annoyed him, and he demanded the name of its author from the editor of the paper. Field authorized the editor to give his name as the writer. The following morning, when Field was in front of his office gathering kindling wood for a fire, Barbour came up suddenly and placed a cocked navy revolver near his head. He cried out: "Draw and defend yourself!" Field was taken by surprise, but he turned upon him and said: "You infernal scoundrel, you cowardly assassin, you come behind my back and put your revolver to my head, and tell me to draw; you haven't the courage to shoot; shoot and be dam'd." Barbour did not shoot.

We have spoken of the friendship between Justice Field and Senator Broderick, and that recalls a matter somewhat of interest, in that Justice Field was serving upon the Supreme Bench of the State with Judge Terry at the time when the latter resigned to participate in the duel with Broderick. He had associated with Terry two years on the Bench. At the time of the duel Field was visiting eastern friends. Speaking of the matter, he said: "I was absent from the State at the time, or I should have exerted all the power I possessed by virtue of my office to put a stop to the duel. I would have held both the combatants to keep the peace under bonds of so large an amount as to have made them hesitate about taking further steps; and, in the meantime, I should have set all my energies to work, and called others to my aid, to bring about a reconciliation. I believe I should have adjusted the difficulty." It is strange that it should happen thirty years after the killing of Broderick, that his slayer should fall dead from a pistol wound in his heart at the feet of Justice Field.

The killing of Judge Terry calls to mind the various duels that have been fought in this State in its early days. The list, so far as we are now able to compile it—and it is not complete—is as follows: Jan. 12, 1851, at the Mission in San Francisco, between William Walker and Will Hicks Graham; November 1, 1851, in Nevada county, between E. B. Lundy and George M. Dibble, the latter being killed; January 11, 1852, in Santa Clara county, between John McDougal and A. C. Russell, no one hurt; March 17, 1852, in Contra Costa county, between David C. Broderick and J. Caleb Smith, no one hurt; August 2, 1852, at Oak Grove, near Sacramento, between Edward Gilbert and James W. Denver, in which Gilbert was killed; March 8, 1853, at Marysville, between William Woodcock and William Blackburn; June, 1853, in Sutter county, between Richard Rust and O. P. Stidger; March 9, 1854, at Oak Grove, near Sacramento, between P. W. Thomas and Dr. Dickson, the latter being killed; May 21, 1854, near San Francisco, between George T. Hunt and N. Hubert, the former being killed; May 23, 1854, near San Francisco, between J. M. Benson, the latter being killed; May 25, 1854, at the Presidio, between C. Dowdigan and James Harkins; June 6, 1854, between two men named Dube and Ellseler, in which the former was killed; November 8, 1854, in Alameda county, between Col. Woodlief and A. Kewen, in which the former was killed; March 14, 1855, near San Francisco, between William Walker and one Carter; July 14, 1855, in Shasta county, between C. E. Lippincott and Robert Tevis, the latter being killed; October 19, 1855, between Henry B. Truett and Austin E. Smith; February 25, 1857, at Stockton, between two men named Ryer and Langdon; September 15, 1857, at Stockton, between Colonel Casey and C. M. Blair, the latter being killed; June 10, 1858, in Sutter county, between Albert Turner and William Hauser; August 21, 1858, at San Francisco, between George Pen Johnston and William I. Ferguson, the latter being killed; September 13, 1859, near San Francisco, between David C. Broderick and David S. Terry, the former being killed; September 16, 1859, at San Andreas, between P. Goodwin and W. J. Gatewood, the former being killed; September 19, 1859, at Sonora, between Sylvester Knight and J. E. Esterbrook, the former being killed; November 21, 1859, at Shasta, between R. T. Miller and James Gallagher; September, 1860, at Visalia, between John Shannon and W. G. Morris; May 25, 1861, in Marin county, between D. Showalter and C. W. Piercy, in which the latter was killed; June 1, 1862, at Oakland, between Frank Turk and O. C. Hall; December 30, 1862, in Tuolumne county, between N. P. Turner and John McCune; March 25, 1870, at Los Angeles, between John B. Wilson and Charles E. Beane; January 8, 1871, in Sutter county, between John Davis and Thomas Burns.

The Rev. Dr. Barrows, of San Francisco, is a bright and learned man. Being a deep thinker, it must be a very great stretch of his conscience to advance such an argument as he made last Sunday on his return from an extended Eastern trip, wherein he declares that Divine grace must control matters of the secular world, and that missionary work elsewhere is a necessity. Dr. Barrows knows that Divine grace has little to do with our governmental affairs, and knows that narrow views of the religionist would, if exercised in matters of State, result in injury and the retrograde of all progressive ideas. About the only reason that can be offered for a brainy man like Rev. Barrows, to advocate such fallacies, is the fact that he has around him a large flock of parishioners who love to dote upon him, and who are blind to other reasons than those emanating from him, thus making him a little deity in his domain. This parade of the alleged Divine precepts is not in accord with the advanced American idea. Mr. Barrows should be given an English call, where his ideas might be more acceptable.

It is said that the Chinese servants propose to raise their rate of wages in the future. This is prompted by the closing of the avenues of admission for Chinese laborers. Chinese servants for household duties have heretofore been employed in the main, because no other domestics could be secured for the same rates who were as faithful in the discharge of their duties at such low rates. The further reason existed that the Mongolian could always be depended upon to perform just what was expected of him, while other domestics were given to whims and caprices that often exasperated the employers and left them in unfortunate situations. In most instances white servants are most desirable, but they often become arrogant and offensive, as well as exacting. Many of our white girls who do housework think that the mistress should not interfere with the household duties, and has no right to direct the management of the kitchen or household duties. Often they think they are ladies, and above receiving orders. In other words, that idea of American freedom is so prominent in their minds that they care not, and will not bring themselves to the proposition that they are servants. On the other hand, we have the overbearing and autocratic employer, who expects the most abject servitude from servants. Many people who have servants are those who, by some chance, have arisen to affluence, and forget the fact that they at some time of life were but servants themselves. These are the most exacting, and who abuse and mistreat their servants. There is cause of complaint, then, often on both sides of the question. As matters now stand with the limitation on Coolie help, and their advanced prices, it certainly is a good time for white labor to come to the front and make a firm and decided stand. It would be much more honorable for our white girls to "work out" than to follow the avocation many of them have adopted. Thirty or forty dollars per month as house servants, with board and lodging, is certainly better than five or six dollars per week as workers in factories, where they are subjected to the most trying ordeals, both from a sanitary point of view and a virtuous existence. It may sound a little better to be called a clerk, or time-keeper, or some such title, but a plain, ordinary house servant is more honorable and far more remunerative, if these young girls could be brought to realize the fact. Now is the time to crush out Chinese house servants, and all good housewives will undoubtedly assist if the girls will lend their generous aid.

Never in the history of the world has there been such a perfect cyclone of light literature and novels and other fiction. Occasionally some author strikes a chord which gains a public response. A few, like Haggard, Mrs. Ward, Amelie Rives, Mrs. Atherton and a limited number of other modern writers have made the work remunerative. The average modern novel does not pay for the time occupied in writing it, much less the expense of presenting it before the public. Take even some of the novels that have received loud praise from the press—the authors have rarely become very rich. It is safe to say that 90 per cent. of all the fiction of to-day rarely ever brings in sufficient returns to pay the publisher, much less any recompense to the author. In the face of these stubborn facts, however, the novel writer persists in writing and flooding the news stands with this class of literature. It is a very difficult matter for the brain to advance anything new in literature. The few novels of recent date that gained public favor were not, in fact, new in idea, but the manner of presenting the various characters was something of an innovation, hence novel in the public eyes and in the public taste. The authors who saw fame in the success of these favored stories, soon learned that all is not gold that glitters.

The semi-annual report of County Treasurer Huntton, covering the first six months of 1889, is a very creditable showing of the management of the finances of this county. It appears that during that period the receipts into the various funds were $169,982.39, which, added to the cash on hand on January 1st, made $478,251.66. The total disbursements during the six months—$402,484.86—contain some items which in no way form a part of expenditures for the current support of the county government. Into the State fund were paid $158,750.15; that, of course, went into the State treasury. The amounts disbursed for liquidating the principal and interest of the various issues of bonds have no relation to any indebtedness incurred in recent years. For general purposes $24,993.84 were expended, and for support of the hospital $20,048.68. For roads and bridges, comprehending all road work and large payments for the construction of the bridges across the American river and at Benson's ferry, $55,530.62 were paid. Salaries of our officers consumed $23,380.70. That, however, does not include the amounts paid to the employes at the hospital, to some who receive from the general fund compensation for special services, or to those who are paid in fees from that fund. For the support of the common schools $80,879.87 were expended.

CALIFORNIAN NOMENCLATURE.

How the Various Localities in This State Received Their Names.

In our issue of May 5th we published an account of the derivation of the word California, and on May 12th gave the derivation and definition of the names of the various counties. It is rather a curious study to trace the origin of the names that figure on our State map, and it is impossible to fully explain them in the limited scope that can be afforded in a single newspaper article. In the present article we will deal only with some of those whose derivation is from other than Spanish sources.

The American river was named from the fact that a company of Western trappers lived on its banks for several years between 1822 and 1830.

When the town of Arcata was located on April 21, 1850, it was called Union. In 1860 the name was changed to Arcata—an Indian word.

The name Arizona was first applied to a mountain near the southern boundary of the territory. The territory was first called Pimeria. Authorities differ as to the origin of the present name. Some say it is a corruption of "Arizuma," first given to the country by the early Spanish explorers. Some claim that it is a Mohave Indian word signifying, "Blessed Sun," from "Ara," meaning "blessed," and "Zuna," "sun," others that it is of Pima origin and means "Little Creek," while there is authority that its derivation is from two Pima words, "Ari," a maiden, and "Zon," a valley. Other authorities hold that it is a compound of the two Latin words "Aridus," and "Zona." Aridus, dry, from "areo," to be dry; zona simply means a girdle or belt. This derivation would produce a word meaning, "a dry or parched belt of country."

Auburn was originally called "Wood's Dry Diggings." Late in 1849 a public meeting was held for the purpose of selecting a more suitable name for the town. The name Auburn was adopted at the suggestion of H. M. House, who had come from the New York Auburn.

Bakersfield was named in honor of Senator Thomas Baker, who died in that town on Nov. 24, 1872; Bantas from Henry Bantas, an early settler. Belmont signifies "beautiful mountain," and was named from the grand eminences near the town; Bernal Heights from Augustin Bernal; and Black's Station from J. J. Black, who located the town in 1865. Bodie was named in honor of Wm. S. Bodey, a pioneer who lost his life in November, 1859, near his cabin four miles from the site of the town, having become exhausted in a heavy snow storm. Brooklyn, Alameda county, was christened by Thomas Eggar, after the ship Brooklyn, in which he came in 1846 as a passenger to California.

Calistoga is a word that was formed by the late Samuel Brannan from the words "California" and "Saratoga." Camptonville was named after J. Campton. Capay is from the Indian word, "capi," meaning "creek." Carquinez is an Indian word meaning "serpent." According to a legend of the aborigines, from a hill that now exists in the city of Vallejo (Capitol Hill), there would come forth a huge serpent, with eyes of fire; it would straighten itself upon its tail almost perpendicularly, and look toward the Straits, then cautiously upon Mare Island (Taxpeyar was its Indian name), and lastly in the direction of Yulupa, or the Sunset hills towards Sonoma, looking for the Blazing Turkey, which was wont to arise from the air of the mountains, and if the gaze of these two monsters ever met it was a sign or omen of some terrible disaster or calamity—such as war or pestilence. Cherokee, Nevada county, was so called from the fact that the first prospecting there was done by some Cherokee Indians in 1850. Clayton was named after its founder, Joel Clayton; and Colfax in honor of Vice-President Schuyler Colfax. Coloma is an Indian word, meaning "Beautiful Valley." Crockett was named in honor of Judge J. B. Crockett, who died January 15, 1884; Davisville was called after Jerome C. Davis, who settled there in 1846, and who died in Sacramento, October 5, 1881, while holding the office of Second Trustee of the city; Decoto was named after Ezra Decoto, the owner of the land on which it is located; Dixon after Thomas Dixon who died in that town in June, 1885; and Donahue after Col. James M. Donahue. Donner Lake gets its name from the leader of the Donner party of 1846, the members of which suffered privation and death on its shores. Downieville was named after William Downie, who located there in the early mining days; Dunnigan gets its name from A. W. Dunnigan, who settled there in 1853; Dutch Flat was so named from the fact that its pioneer settler was a German named Joseph Dohrenbeck.

Elk Grove was so called from the circumstances that elk horns were found in a grove of timber near which in 1850 James Hall established a hotel, on the sign of which was painted an elk.

The name Florin was given to that locality about 1864 by the late Judge E. B. Crocker, owing to the great number of wild flowers which grew there, and when the town was started in 1875 it received that name. Folsom was called after J. L. Folsom, who died July 19, 1855. There is some romance about the naming of Forest City, Sierra county. The first store at the Forks of Oregon creek was built by Samuel Hammond and was called the Yomana store, from the bluff above the town being called by that name—meaning "Sacred Hill." In 1853 a meeting of the citizens was held to select a name for the town and there was a tie vote for "Forks of Oregon," and "Yomana." The matter was compromised by agreeing to call the place after the first woman who should reside there. The first lady inhabitant was Mary Davis, the wife of a baker, and after her advent the town was indiscriminately called "Forks of Oregon" and "Marion." Dodge soon sold out to Captain Mooney, whose wife's name was Forest. She was a lady of education and wrote several articles which were sent to the Marysville papers. They were dated at Forest City, and as the editor did not know where that might be, they were so published. Mrs. Mooney afterwards called together some of the leading citizens and succeeded in having the place formally named after her.

During the summer of 1848 travelers stopped at a spring at the site of Jackson, Amador county, and the number of bottles left about gave it the name of Bottilleas. It was changed to Jackson in honor of Colonel Jackson who afterwards settled there.

Fort Ross is the site of a Russian settlement which was made in 1811 and a fort was erected there. What the Russians called it is not known, but it was called by the Spaniards, "Fuerte de los Rusos," (Fort of the Russians). The Americans shortened it to Fuerte Rusos, and that was afterward curtailed to its present name. French Corral was named from the circumstance that in 1849 a Frenchman built a corral for the enclosure of his mules on the site of the present village. At one time the inhabitants adopted the name of Carrolton, but for no great length of time. Fulton was laid out in 1871 by Thomas and James Fulton—hence its name. The name Galt was suggested for that town when it was laid out, by John McFarland, to the late Judge E. B. Crocker. McFarland, when quite a young man, located in the town of Galt, in Upper Canada, and there served his apprenticeship as a joiner. The Canadian Galt was named after a man of that name. Gilroy was named in honor of John Gilroy, one of the earliest American settlers, who died in that town on July 29, 1869. Goat Island was called by the Spaniards Yerba Buena and was originally occupied as a fishing station by a very numerous tribe of Indians called Tuchayunes. On the founding of the city of San Francisco in 1835, the name of the Island (Yerba Buena) was given to the municipality. In 1835 Nathaniel Spear brought some goats from the Sandwich Islands, and presented a pair of them to John Fuller, who was located in the town. They became so destructive to his flowers and garden truck that he removed them to the Island, where they were turned loose and rapidly increased in numbers. Hence the name of Goat Island. It is stated that in 1849 there were nearly a thousand goats on the island, but they were soon destroyed by the immigrants. The name Golden Gate first appears in the "Geographical Memoir of California," and relative map, published by Col. John C. Fremont in the spring of 1848. The name was probably suggested by the Golden Horn of Constantinople. Grayson was located in 1849 by J. Grayson & Co.; and Guerneville was named after A. L. Guerne.

Martinez was named after Ignacio Martinez, who settled in the country in 1823.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

The Stage.

[Under this caption will appear a fair and impartial criticism of the drama, actors, music, and all noteworthy matters pertaining to the stage.]

Frank Daniels is about to read a comedy called Boker's Bitters. It is written by Harry Humlin and Paul Potter.

Della Fox, a young star, will make her debut in As Pretty as a Picture in Trenton, N. J., September 9th, and then start for California.

It is asserted that English capital has formed a Ballet-Girl Trust in this country. We hope this is true. It is well for monopoly to get hold of something once in a while which can do its own kicking. Dudes of this city are anxiously inquiring where stock in the ballet girls trust can be obtained.

Mark Twain's Prince and Pauper will bring out little Elsie Leslie in a dual role. The piece will require about sixty people in its representation. The period is that of Henry VIII. This era affords opportunity for pictorial effects. Little Elsie enacts the parts of "Edward, Prince of Wales," and "Tom Cauty, the pauper."

Visitor—"You say this ruined castle is haunted?" Guide—"Undoubtedly. The spectre can be seen almost every night." "It is probably the ghost of some robber?" "No, it is the ghost of an actor, who neglected while living to have himself photographed in his favorite role, and who consequently cannot rest in his grave."

"Yes, sir," said the old actor, "I have had many triumphs on the stage. I remember way back in the forties, there was a crowded house in Syracuse to see my Hamlet. At the end of the first act the audience got up and left the theatre." "That was hardly a triumph, was it?" "Certainly it was; they couldn't stand any more. Ah! I was a powerful actor in the forties."

The idea of Modjeska playing the leading female characters with Booth arose from her performance of "Ophelia" when he played Hamlet at the benefit given to Lester Wallack in New York a year or two ago. Her "Ophelia" was alike a revelation to actors and to old theater-goers. With both in the ripe maturity of their genius, their presentations will be memorable in the annals of the stage.

A gentleman of fine dramatic perception, in a strange city many years ago, strolled into a performance of Othello, not knowing who was the star. It was in a scene where the "Iago" was lounging against the wall with very little to say. But the "Iago" lounged so well that he fixed the gentleman's eye to the exclusion of the rest of the stage, until with an intense whisper to his neighbors, the gentleman said: "That young man lounging there is going to make an actor, if he keeps on." "Well, rather," was the reply; "that's Booth!"

India Marlowe, who threatened Mary Anderson's laurels this past season, is enjoying an evening at the Grand Palace ingersoll's family along the Connecticut shores, and studying Cymbeline. Miss Marlowe and Colonel Ingersoll's blonde daughter, Eva, are close friends. A luncheon was given in Miss Marlowe's honor recently, which she attended in a simple gingham gown that was very becoming. The shade was that of old blue china, with hair lines of white running through it. The full gathered skirt was set with medallions of china blue velvet, buttonholed on, and diminishing in size toward the waistline. A Louis Quinze jacket of the gingham, with big velvet pockets and a black lace hat, trimmed with forget-me-nots, completed an extremely pretty costume.

Boucicault is out with a few more leaves from his diary. The reference to Joe Jefferson's famous play, Rip Van Winkle, and the manner in which he claims he swept aside Washington Irving, and made "Rip" a young fellow before his great 20-years' sleep, is good reading. An incident attending the production of Hunted Down is not without interest. A provincial trial of the play was determined upon before booking it to a London audience. A picked company had been engaged, but one of the leading characters had not been cast, the fashionable villain of the play, "Rawdon Scudamore," an unknown actor was called upon, who was none other than the now famous Henry Irving. Irving created the part, and from this insignificant event in 1866, we now recognize Irving as one of the greatest actors of the age. The Shanghran was originally written under the title of Boyne Water, but on account of the production of Clancarty, the change of name and part of the subject matter of the drama was changed.

There seems to be a kind of fashion attached to the drama of recent date. A short time ago scenery and costumery were the elements of commendation. Henry V was the rage with its showy scenery; Richard III was produced in London upon the basis of scenery by Mansfield. Hundreds of other plays vested their claims to favor on scenery. Then came the emotional element in the drama, and all else was sacrificed by the playwright to some character where the emotional was the crowning character. Others fixed upon song and dance as the culminating point of the drama, and all dramatic effect was thrown aside to afford some artist in this line to sing and dance himself or herself into public favor. This element is still in vogue. It is refreshing when we can witness a good, substantial drama, where all true art-work has an even chance. The public taste is ever demanding such dramas as are presented by companies like the Lyceum Combination, Modjeska, Booth, Palmer, Daly, Grismer, and a few others. No play is now complete without the adjunct of a precocious child. Ever since the innovation of The Little Lord, it has become something of a stage fashion to have a child in the role of a moral reformer. The new play presented by Grismer this week, called The Burglar, follows in this line. Karl has a little youngster with a wise old head. It is now the fashion, and it is safe to say that it is not a good one. There can be no genuine emotion from these little tottlers. All they do is of the parrot order, and only serves to create a very brief and unsatisfactory emotion in the hearts of the audience.

Book Chat.

The scholarship that has moved the world has not been the scholarship that wrought for a guinea a page nor for a thousand pounds a volume. It has been the scholarship that has been content to be poor and accounted obscure, that has not been in haste to speak or eager to rush into print, but which has revered supremely the truth, and has sought for it often with tears.—Forum.

Miss Vassarbrod—Oh, Emily! I understand that you took the prize offered by the Ladies' Magazine for the best essay written by a young lady under thirty? Miss Homebred—Yes; somehow I got it—I don't know how. Did you compete? Miss Vassarbrod—Yes, I sent them my graduation essay on "The Buddhist Extinction of Desire." What did you write on? Miss Homebred—"How to Knit a Patch in a Stocking."

Mrs. John Sherwood of New York, author of the novel entitled "A Transplanted Rose," and of the book on etiquette entitled "Manners and Social Usages," has been decorated with the insignia of Officier d'Academie—an honor conferred by the French Minister of Public Instruction on persons who have distinguished themselves in literary pursuits. It is said to be the first time that this decoration has ever been conferred upon an American woman.

George Alfred Townsend has undertaken to show that Lafayette was a hero only in our country—that he was a poor, miserable failure, without honor or ability. Mr. Townsend will have a difficult task to convince the world that Lafayette was not the greatest and most consistent advocate of liberty the world ever knew. His whole life and energies and fortune were devoted to the cause of liberty. Mr. Townsend could find better subjects to write upon.

Evidently the author of "The Quick or the Dead?" has made a conquest in London. "Those who have met Mrs. Chanler socially," says a writer in The Star of that city, "speak enthusiastically of her charm of manner, her absence of all affectation and conceit; and her ears would tingle at the glowing accounts of her personal beauty. She has beautiful fair hair in abundance, clear, bright, penetrating gray-blue eyes, which are set in relief by dark eyebrows and lashes."

In a letter to his wife in 1858 John Lothrop Motley wrote: "After breakfast I went down to the British Museum. I had been immersed half an hour in my manuscripts, when happening to turn my head round, I found seated next to me Thackeray, with a file of old newspapers before him, writing the ninth number of the 'Virginians.' He took off his spectacles to see who I was, then immediately invited me to dinner the next day (as he seems always to do to everybody he meets), which invitation I could not accept, and he then showed me the page he had been writing—a small, delicate, legible manuscript. After this we continue our studies. I can conceive nothing more harassing in the literary way than his way of living from hand to mouth. I mean in regard to the way in which he furnishes food for the printer's devil. Here he is just finishing the number which must appear in a few days. Of course, whether ill or well, stupid or fertile, he must produce the same amount of fun, pathos or sentiment. His gun must be regularly loaded and discharged at command. I should think it would wear his life out."—Correspondence of John Lothrop Motley.

Professional Chat.

Judge B. F. Myres, who presides over the Superior Court of Placer County, is the most exact in matters of punctuality of any Judge on the bench. There is at no time any mistaking what he means. Some years ago, and prior to the passage of the Act permitting administrators or executors to mortgage the property of decedents, Judge Myres was the attorney for an estate and in his judgment it became necessary to raise some funds for the benefit of the estate. He found no law authorizing such an act, but concluded to try a little scheme with the then presiding Judge whereby he could hypothecate some of the estate. His project succeeded. Sometime after he went on the bench another attorney of that county concluded to try the same scheme. He approached Judge Myres with his plan and called his attention to the case when the Judge accomplished his object. "Young man," said the Judge, "when you want anything of this kind, just follow the statute." "But there is no statute on the subject," said the attorney. "Well," said Judge Myres, "you must not follow anything I did while an attorney." So the Judge quietly sat down on the attorney who attempted to follow his tactics. The law has now been amended so as to permit the mortgage of trust property in the hands of administrators and executors.

The Paducah Standard has the following characteristic story about Governor Buckner, of Kentucky: "During his present tour he wears a comfortable flannel shirt, sack coat and 'breeches' of comfortable cut and altogether plain in appearance. Jim Lemon was introducing the Governor to his constituents during his recent visit to Marshall. Among others who shook hands with his excellency was an old Republican farmer. When the Governor went away the old farmer went up to Mr. Lemon and said: 'See here, Jim; you say that's Governor Buckner?' 'Yes, that's the Governor,' replied Jim. 'What's he running for?' 'Nothing.' 'Well, he's a Democrat and I'm a Republican, but I'll be darned if I ain't for him if he ever wants another office. A Governor who will dress like us common folks when not electioneering is the man for me.'"

A new set of stories about the Duke of Wellington includes these: The duke, being asked how it was that he had succeeded in beating Napoleon's marshals, one after the other, said: "I will tell you. They planned their campaign just as you might make a splendid set of harness. It looks very well, and answers very well until it gets broken, and then you are done for. Now, I made my campaign of ropes: If anything went wrong I tied a knot and went on." The duke detested being helped. One day a gentleman nearly as old as himself made some demonstration of assisting him to cross Piccadilly when crowded. When the duke reached the gate of Apsley house he touched his hat and said: "I thank you, sir." The stranger took off his hat and said: "My lord, I have passed a long and not uneventful life; but never did I hope to reach the day when I might be of the slightest assistance to the greatest man who ever lived." The duke looked at him calmly, and replied, "Don't be a d— fool!" and walked into Apsley house.

NOTES.

There should be some means of preventing decrepit old people from traveling without an attendant. When a person has passed the seven ages, and become an infant again, there ought to be a prohibition against allowing him or her to go out into the world alone. Scarcely a trip is made over any of the great thoroughfares that you do not find one or more of poor old imbeciles who have but a vague knowledge of where they want to go or what they wish to do. They are constantly committing blunders, which are annoying to the traveling public, as well as the servants of the carriers. They jump up at every station and insist on getting off, thinking—if they are capable of thought—that it is their destination. On a recent trip on one of the great thoroughfares, an old lady was a through passenger, and it was with difficulty that the fellow-passengers could keep her from disembarking at each station. In case of haste or a rush, these old people are always in the way. Again, their childish manners make them easy victims of any unscrupulous persons who invariably seize upon them and rob them of all they have. In no less than half a dozen cases recently, upon making the trip from this city to San Francisco, have poor old creatures been saved from robbery by some kind passengers, who interested themselves sufficiently to attend the aged persons to their destination. This cannot always occur, for people traveling are generally in haste, and do not care to stop and look after unfortunates.

In our issue of August 31 we called attention to a decision of the Supreme Court of Indiana, holding that the appointment of Supreme Court Commissioners was unconstitutional. We also adverted to the fact that the constitutions of Indiana and California in respect to such matters were very similar. It now develops that proceedings have been instituted to oust the present Commissioners appointed as auxiliary to the Supreme Court. THEMIS was the first and only paper on this coast to call attention to this matter. Our Supreme Court, however, is supreme in this matter, and is not bound by the action or determination of any other State Court. There is a very important constitutional question involved, and one which cannot be arbitrarily disposed of. The Attorney General has denied the use of the name of the people to the proceedings, holding the Commissioner Act constitutional.

There are serious evils in our political system. It is so common for the influence of some outside power to be exercised in very that corrupt men secure preferment to the exclusion of the competent and worthy. Our courts of justice in many localities are often used by the "ring maker" behind the throne, and the rights and liberties of the citizens are made merchandise of. Months, aye, even years, in advance of any election for public servants, the manipulators set to work arranging a programme, whereby public offices are meted out to those who are most likely to serve the master-hand. There is a way to avert this state of affairs, and that is for the people to act well in advance of the time for elections, and east about for suitable men for positions. By so doing this machine work can be destroyed. We make these general suggestions thus early to set the public mind to thinking.

What a travesty on justice is this lottery business. If some poor, unfortunate creature gets drunk, he is arrested instantly and punished. Should some citizen become angered at another and use boisterous language towards him, he is held amenable to the law. But here is a gross, wholesale violation of one of the most important penal sections that is a dead letter. Why, upon the news of any drawing of the lottery at San Francisco, the winning numbers are paraded on the bulletin boards, and extra editions of the daily papers are issued and heralded broadcast upon the streets. Thousands of investors in the scheme are attendant at the bulletins with note books out to ascertain if they have been one of the lucky ones. This is most demoralizing. It strikes directly at the body politic with the most corrupting influences, and is a deadly blow to the financial condition of our country. The hundreds of thousands of dollars that are drawn away from business enterprises make depression and a scarcity of coin. It is strange that the authorities do not put forth an effort to arrest this most dangerous and damaging system of robbery. Every town in this—in fact, on this coast—must soon feel the heavy drain upon its resources.

Every German regiment has a chiropodist attached to keep the soldiers' feet in order. Our gallant regiment will probably need some attache to keep the heads in order while at Santa Cruz encampment, particularly the staff officers. These encampments, or something in the commissary stores, have the effect to increase the size of heads in the morning.

In his personal reminiscences of early days in California, Judge Field, in speaking of his associates on the Supreme Bench of this State, at the time of his appointment, said: "The Supreme Court of the State then consisted of three members, the senior in commission being the Chief Justice. David S. Terry was the Chief Justice and Peter H. Burnett was the associate Justice. Both of these gentlemen have had a conspicuous career in California, and of both I have many interesting anecdotes, which would well illustrate their characters, and which, at some future day, I may put upon paper. They were both men of vigorous minds, of generous natures and of positive wills; but in all other respects they differed as widely as it was possible for two extremes. Mr. Terry had the virtues and prejudices of men of the extreme South in those days. His contact and larger experience since with men of the North have, no doubt, modified many of those prejudices, and his own good sense must have led him to alter some of his previous judgments. Probably his greatest regret is his duel with Mr. Broderick, as such encounters, when they terminate fatally to one of the parties, never fail to bring lifelong bitterness to the survivor. A wiser mode of settling difficulties between gentlemen has since been adopted in the State, but those who have not lived in a community where the duel is practiced cannot well appreciate the force of the public sentiment which at one time existed, compelling a resort to it when character was assailed.

The Bee just now has one of its periodical "watch dog of the treasury" spells, and is mercilessly digging up unsavory shortcomings of officials. If any official rests under the impression that he can be careless or delinquent in official matters and escape the argus eyes of the Bee, he is greatly mistaken. That paper, while it may seem heartless, never spares friend or foe, in delinquencies in public trusts. We hope that the apparent shortcomings developed by our unrelenting contemporary may only be the result of slight negligence, rather than anything more serious. Public officers should, however, never be careless or negligent. They have enough of sins of omission and commission to answer for in the bare fact of being officers, without any semblance of crime.

On Wednesday last Mr. Went. T. Crowell, business manager of THEMIS, made a short business trip to Folsom. He found the little mining town, where years ago all was bustle and activity, now a quiet place, with no advancement on the road to prosperity and success. Its citizens are all energetic, and look forward to the time when the Folsom of to day will outrival that of earlier years. While in Folsom he paid a short visit to the State Prison, which is about fifteen minutes drive from the town. Upon arriving at the Prison he was met by Secretary Brannard F. Smith, Mr. P. A. Humbert and Deputy-Warden Robinson. These gentlemen conducted him through the building and its surroundings, and explained how such a large body of men could be controlled. There are 560 prisoners within the prison building, and these are taken charge of by a total of 50 guardsmen and 4 captains. Accompanied by Captain Murphy, a visit to the dam was made, where over 480 of the prisoners are working. It was astonishing to see how well the prisoners are disciplined. No idlers were seen around the works and all seemed perfectly satisfied with what they had to do. It was indeed a delightful visit, and thanks are extended to the Deputy-Warden, Secretary Smith, Mr. P. A. Humbert and Captain Murphy for the courtesies shown the THEMIS representative.

We have heretofore noted that of late crime has been on the increase in this city. There is no doubt but that we have among us a great many who should be in the penitentiary. It is noticeable by the officers of the criminal courts that the majority of the burglars and robbers brought before the bar are young men, and that the testimony almost invariably develops that they had frequented certain dives. There is no excuse whatever why the city authorities should permit these places which are so well known to be the rendezvous of criminals to exist here. They have ample power to crush them out, and if the power were exercised it would be heartily endorsed by the people of this community. The expense of tolerating them is a heavier burden upon the tax payers of this city and county than is generally supposed. Aside from the losses by depredations, the expense of the maintenance of our city and county jails and of trials in court is a very important item. We have heretofore urged the Board of Trustees to consider the matter, and have suggested that if the ordinances are not broad enough to reach them, appropriate amendments should be made. Certain it is that government should be strong enough to protect the people. It would not be a bad idea for the gentlemen of the Improvement Association to seriously consider this matter. It is one which affects the personal and property interests of every good citizen.

There are people who have little or no regard for the welfare of the public, and a total disregard of the cleanliness and health of the neighborhood in which they reside. The rear of the St. George building on Fourth street is a striking illustration of this sentiment. Some of the roomers of that building make it a practice to dump their filth from the windows upon the space below. They are either too lazy to make proper disposition of their filth and garbage, or else they are fully endowed with the perversity of meanness. A glance at the premises in the rear of the building named would convince anyone of the truth of what we have said. Here is a fine field of operation for our health officer.

Criminal Calendar.

Judge Armstrong's court has been engaged this week in the trial of criminal cases. The Judge is fortunate in having had the assistance of a jury of unusually good judgment and intelligence. Their determinations have been satisfactory to all but the criminal element. On the coming in of one of the verdicts the Judge very properly took occasion to compliment the jurors. He called attention to the fact that in many instances jurors had failed to take a common sense view of cases, but had seemed to feel it their duty to hunt up technicalities that would defeat the ends of justice. There is much force and truth in the suggestions of the Judge. Courts are powerless to punish criminals if jurors do not observe their oaths. In very many instances verdicts are absurd and inconsistent with the possession of the most meagre common sense. In this connection it is but due to District Attorney Bruner to compliment him on his record. He is an effective prosecutor, and has been ready for trial in every case where it was possible to procure the attendance of the witnesses. If in the future our courts will do as effective work as they have lately, it will be very soon understood by the criminal element that Sacramento county is one excellent to avoid. It has been said, and it is regarded almost as a maxim, that there is not so much in the severity as in the certainty of punishment for crime. There should be certainty, but in very many cases there should also be severity, and the matter of passing sentence calls for the exercise of the soundest judgment. Even in the infliction of death the determination of the penalty is in the discretion of the Judge. In awarding it he considers not only the evidence, but such intrinsic matters as may tend to mitigate or aggravate the offense.

Confessed.

H. L. Gorton, convicted in Placer county of participation in the robbery of the express car at Clipper Gap, and who has received a sentence of ten years' imprisonment, has made a full confession, and he says that he makes it in justice to the messengers of the express company, Robert G. Johnston and Emory Carpenter, who were in charge of the car at the time of the commission of the offense. It will be recollected that the car was robbed while the train was in motion, and that the plan was peculiarly original. Rope ladders were dropped from the top down each side of the car, and the two men who committed the crime simultaneously broke the windows on each side, and at the point of revolvers compelled the messengers to open the side doors. The contents of the safe were taken, and the robbers sprang from the train when it slowed up. Messenger Johnston telegraphed full particulars from the next station, and his description of the men was so accurate that it resulted in the apprehension and conviction of Gorton. At the time of the robbery the Sau Francisco Chronicle was unkind enough to charge, editorially, the crime on the messengers. Their employers and skilled detectives, however, not only took no stock in the absurd charge, but commended the young men for the good judgment they displayed in the unexpected emergency. The Chronicle sent one of its irresponsible reporters to interview the messengers, but they declined to speak. The rules of the company very wisely provide that in cases of crime their employees shall communicate their knowledge to the officers of the law, and not to reporters, who may use it indiscreetly and thwart justice. This case is illustrative of the contemptible practice of some newspapers to use their power to attempt to injure the innocent. Now, that no man of intelligence can doubt that a gross injustice was done to these young men by the publication against them of a serious criminal charge, it is a matter of curiosity to note whether the Chronicle will be just enough to give their vindication the same prominence that it did the accusation.

Those Salaries Again.

The mandamus proceedings instituted by L. W. Farrell against the Board of Trustees, to compel the board to levy a tax for the payment of policemen's salaries, came up for a hearing yesterday before Judge Armstrong. The defense raised the question that, according to the former decision of the Judge in the action to compel the payment of the salaries, it was held that this payment could be made out of the general fund. If that is correct law, this mandamus will not lie to compel the levy of a tax, because there is an adequate remedy at law. There was no allegation in the petition that there was no money in the general fund, hence the petition must fail. The point was argued, and the Court took the question under advisement. It seems that this is a very important question, and if the petitioner is bound to allege the want of funds in the general fund, he may find some difficulty in making the proofs conform to the allegation, as it is a matter of fact that there is always money in that particular fund, although there may exist unaudited demands against the fund. The fact is there never should have been a cause or opportunity for the existence of these complications. It is the want of a sound and just comprehension of the science of government and political economy that has given rise to this unfortunate dilemma.

FLASHES.

Idle folks have the least leisure.
It is not the cowl that makes the friar.
A felon in jail is worth several in the haud.
Hope is a good breakfast, but a poor supper.
It is not safe to handle powder when the devil holds the candle.
If any of the great English trusts go to pieces, it will be to guinea pieces.
"There is always room at the top," they say, And I am very glad it is so.
For I've found in this life of worry and strife, That its dreadfully crowded below.
A dose of the newly discovered elixir of life should be administered to some of our local silurians. It would either kill or revive them.
"Oh, why did you marry so homely a man?" The people all said to our Sue;
"It's none of our business, but really, dear, He is homely enough for two."
"I know it," she said, with a eute little smile, "You are right, I can plainly see; He's homely enough for himself, that is one, And he's homely enough for me."

LOCAL BREVITIES.

At Mohr & Yoerk's packing house Fritz Grossherr was very nearly crushed to death by a descending elevator.
At Antelope Maggie Mitchell tried to collect a debt at the point of a pistol. She is now charged with drawing and exhibiting a deadly weapon.
A boy by the name of George Short, at Twenty-fourth and O streets, was seriously injured by a tine of a pitchfork penetrating his brain through the eye. He is in a critical condition.
There was a large assemblage of the Native Sons and invited guests at Mayor Gregory's residence on Friday night. The occasion was the thirty-fifth anniversary of Mayor Gregory's birth. The Native Sons presented him with a massive badge, emblematic of the order. The police department's offering was a splendid diamond stud.

Our military boys, forming the First Artillery Regiment, will depart to-night at 9 o'clock for the encampment grounds at Santa Cruz. At present there is an encampment of [San Francisco regiments at Santa Cruz. Our boys anticipate a regular picnic. The strictest military discipline will be enforced during the encampment, and it may not be so much of a picnic as many of the soldier boys expect.

Labor Union Picnic.

The Trades and Labor Unions of Sacramento will give their Second Annual Picnic at East Park to-morrow. Prize games will be the order. Music and dancing. One fare will only be charged on leaving cars from any part of the city.

SOCIAL.

Misses Annie Luther and Hattie Sims are at Tahoe.
E. K. Alsip went to Lovelocks, Nevada, yesterday.
Miss Lizzie O'Brien has gone to sniff the sea breezes.
Dr. W. Wood has gone to the Summit for a hunting trip.
Mr. W. H. Hunt and family are spending a six weeks' vacation at their old home in Gold Run.

The Weather.

The highest and lowest signal service temperature during the past week was 100 on Tuesday and 52 on Sunday. The highest and lowest temperature during the same time last year was 102 and 54. The temperature, wind and weather at 5 o'clock this morning Pacific standard time was as follows for the places named: Olympia 56 S and cloudy and .02 of an inch of rain; Portland 56 SE and cloudless; Roseburg 56 calm and cloudless; Eureka 50 SE and cloudless; Red Bluff 68 SE and cloudless; Sacramento 60 SE and cloudless; San Francisco 56 S and cloudy; Salt Lake 68 SE and partly cloudy; Cheyenne 68 NW and cloudless; Denver 66 S and partly cloudy; North Platte 66 SE and partly cloudy; Omaha 68 S and cloudless; Des Moines 64 SE and cloudless; Davenport 66 SE and cloudless and Chicago 60 N and cloudless.

GENERAL NEWS ITEMS.

There has been some very heavy rains in Arizona.

The Petaluma brewery was destroyed by fire yesterday.

A Mississippi jury found John L. Sullivan guilty of a violation of the State law.

Silas King was crushed to death at the Empire mine, Grass Valley, by a falling rock.

Near Columbus, Ohio, a freight train was wrecked, one man fatally injured and several wounded.

The famous Dr. J. Milton Bowers was discharged by Judge Wallace yesterday on motion of the District Attorney. The Supreme Court decision practically acquitted him.

The press association states that the Home Secretary, Matthews, will recommend to the Queen the commutation of the death sentence of Mrs. Maybrick to penal servitude for life, and that the commutation of the sentence will be announced after the Queen has given her formal consent.

The south-bound passenger train on the Butler Branch of the Western Pennsylvania railroad, which left Butler, Pa., at 2:35 o'clock yesterday afternoon, jumped the track at Carver's Station, and the entire train, consisting of two passenger coaches and combination smoking and baggage car, went over the embankment and was totally wrecked. A number of passengers were killed and wounded. The accident was caused by the spreading of rails on a small bridge.

Cardinal Lavigerie, it is understood, will shortly appeal in the name of the Holy Father, Leo XIII, to the nations of Europe to purchase from the infidel defilers the Holy City of Jerusalem, and as much of its surroundings as will be necessary to form a small province, to be forever independent and guaranteed its integrity by Western powers. If successful, this victory for the cause of civilization, it is considered by the Cardinal and Pope Leo, would be the greatest triumph ever achieved by the Catholic Church, would endear it to the affections of many now alienated from its teaching and prestige, and would do much toward creating a general desire for the restoration of its temporal power.

MISCELLANY.

* There is no man who is more thoroughly convinced that honesty is the best policy than he who is caught in the act of pursuing a different policy.

When Gen. O. O. Howard was marching down through Tennessee, Gen. Whittlesey, late President of the Freedman's Bank, was Assistant Adjutant-General on his staff. Whittlesey had been a clergyman down in Maine, and was fully as straight-laced as Howard. One day Howard drove into a farm-yard from which Whittlesey was just departing. A woman and her grown daughter were standing outside the door.

"My good woman," said Howard, will you kindly give me a drink of water?"

"No. Get out of my yard. A lot of more impudent Yankees I never seed."

"But I have done nothing and said nothing out of the way, and will severely punish any of my soldiers who should say or do anything wrong."

"That sojer insulted me," said she, pointing to the retreating form of Gen. Whittlesey. "He axed me for a drink of water and when I done give it to him he sassed me."

"But—but that is Gen. Whittlesey, of my staff. I am sure he wouldn't be rude to any woman."

"Maw," said the girl, pulling her mother's dress, "I reckon he moughtn't have meant anything misbeholden."

"Hush; don't I know low-down black-guard talk when I hears it. He asked me what was the State of my nativity."

Indulgence in spirits after a while—which is longer or shorter according to the constitution of the person—produces irritation, inflammation and fever of the stomach, hence the craving for drink; and the greater the fever the greater the craving. As spirits act also on the nervous system and on the brain, the nervous system becomes impaired and the brain weakened. Who can deny that a person ailing in these several ways is laboring under a serious disease? He has then no will power to exercise, because the seat of the will is in the nervous centers, and when these are impaired or destroyed so is also the will power.

Here is the cure: Let the person have within his reach a small vial of the best kind of tincture of Peruvian bark, and when the craving for liquor comes on him let him take a teaspoonful of the tincture every two hours. In a few days the taste for liquor is destroyed, and destroyed while indulging in it, for tincture of Peruvian bark is spirits into which has been drawn all the substance of Peruvian bark. It is to be found in every drug store, and should be of the very best.

Peruvian bark is a tonic. It is also the best, if not the only, cure known for fever. It is from Peruvian bark that quinine is extracted, and moreover, it is anti-periodic. It is by these three agencies that it destroys the craving for liquor. Any one wishing to be cured of that ailment can be in the way I have described, but there are few drunkards indeed who wish to be cured.

Some 225 variable stars have been seen in all, of which 160 are known to be subject to periodical changes. A majority of the others have been seen to vary only once or twice. The laws which can be established with reference to these periodical stars comprise the relationship between period, color and manner of variation. A consideration of the length of period shows the variable stars to be managed in groups, those of a few days only, and those which require about a year to complete their change. These groups are clearly not dependent upon accidents of observation, which would, for the most part, prevent the discovery of variables of a year's period, since they would be, at the favorable times of observation, in practically the same condition from year to year.

One such case was a variable in Orion, which, when found, was supposed to be a new star, so regular had it been seen of a different magnitude.

The next most tangible feature is color. The various stars range themselves again into two groups—white and red—the white stars being those of short period, and the red stars being clearly those of long period. This agreement, as shown by graphic charts, is most remarkable and exhibits no exception. Hence it may be clearly stated that color is related to period if the star is a variable; then the longer the period the redder the tint of the star. In the same way, a consideration of the character of the graphic line representing the variation of light exhibits singular differences, agreeing quite closely with the length of period.

The Opal.

The opal has been conspicuous in the superstition of nearly every age, and the first mention of the gem, either in history or tradition, invests it with a sacred character. One of the earliest traditions of the opal is found under the reign of Nebuchadnezzar, when he carried the Hebrews away into captivity. The tradition runs that the Israelites had so mingled idolatry with Judaism that the latter was almost in the orgies of the Assyrian priesthood, and what is known as the Babylonian Talmud for a time superseded the Levitical laws and canons. During their captivity a small number of Jews found refuge on Mount Lebanon, where they built a tabernacle. Beside the altar, in the tabernacle, was a golden serpent guarding a tablet on which lay an opal of great brilliancy. The priests taught the worshippers that in this stone was imprisoned the spirit of Moses, who was undergoing penance for his sin in murmuring because the waters that flowed from the Rock of Marah were bitter, but that after the lapse of a certain period he would be liberated and would again appear in material form to deliver his people. So great was the belief in the power of the opal that the ancients averred that the gods themselves could not resist its influence, and that any divine favor asked by its possessor would be granted. King Richard of England, surnamed Cœur de Leon, is said to have had full faith in the benign qualities of this gem, and never to have gone to battle without one. He carried it with him during the crusades, and to it he ascribed his victories over Saladin and his Saracen hosts. Shortly before he laid siege to the Castle of Shalus, garrisoned by the forces of the Viscount of Limoges, in 1199, Richard had left his favorite charm with a lady of rank, as a token of affection. After the battle had begun the king bethought himself that he had forgotten his amulet, and was immediately seized with a foreboding of ill. During the battle that followed he was mortally wounded, and died eleven days later. Precious opals seldom exceed an inch in diameter, and very few stones are of this size. Its value depends entirely upon its brilliancy and play of colors. It is rarely sold by carats or grains. For a large fine gem of great beauty $5000 has been paid, and fine ring or brooch stones often bring from $100 to $500, while smaller stones are sold from $1 to $100. But large opals, like large diamonds, bring immense sums of money. An opal in the Imperial Museum at Vienna—nearly as large as a man's fist, and weighing seventeen ounces—is valued at $250,000.

THE SECOND ANNUAL PICNIC

—OF THE—

Trades and Labor Unions

Of Sacramento, will be held at

EAST PARK, SUNDAY, AUGUST 18th.

PRIZES for various Games and Contests, Jig and Reel Dancing.

Music by WALRATH & GREER'S Orchestra Band

Admission 50 Cents. Ladies Free.

By special arrangement, but one fare —5 cts.—will be charged by Carey's Cars from any part of the city to the Grounds, and same amount to return.

SNOWFLAKE PARK.

Twenty-eighth and R Streets.

BASEBALL—CALIFORNIA LEAGUE.THIS DAY! THIS DAY!Saturday, August 17th
At 3 o'clock P. M., sharp.Sacramento v. StocktonMen, 25 cents | Ladies, 25 cents
Boys, 10 cents | Reserved, 25 cents

Train leaves depot at 2:45 P. M. Fare, for the round trip, 15 cents.

SPECIAL NOTICE.THE CARS OF THE CENTRAL STREET RAILWAY COMPANY will only stop at the further crossings.There will Always be Cars Waiting at the Close of Both Theaters.*THE NEW PAVILION

At South Sacramento will be open on SUNDAY, the 4th of August, and at all times thereafter.

Refreshments of all kinds always on hand.

SCHOOL.

PUPILS of the Public Schools who wish to review during their vacation will find BAINBRIDGE COLLEGE the place. We make a specialty of Grammar School and High School Studies. No extra charge for Penmanship or Elocution drill. You can attend in the cool part of the day; hours, 8 A. M. to 1 P. M. J. C. BAINBRIDGE, Principal.

No. 1017 J Street, Sacramento.

SECOND HAND"REMINGTON" TYPE WRITERS

FOR RENT AND FOR SALE.

Type Writers' Supplies of All Kinds.

AT THE

POST AGENCY, 1007 FOURTH STREET.R. W. PARKER,

Dealer in Choice Family

GROCERIES and PROVISIONS

Sold at the Lowest Cash Price.

Give him a call and be convinced.

Corner of Seventeenth and N Streets.

Also, Office of the Superintendent of the City Cemetery.

J. S. ROSS'Fourth-Street Restaurant

1023 FOURTH STREET,

Opposite Postoffice, SACRAMENTO.

OYSTERS IN EVERY STYLE.Meals Cooked to Order,
And served in first-class manner.NEW ORLEANS GUMBO SOUP THURSDAYS AND SUNDAYS.

I have had years of experience as a restaurateur, and feel confident that I can cater satisfactorily to the tastes of all who may favor me with their patronage. J. S. ROSS, Proprietor.

Cooper's Music Store.The Mathushek Pianos

Are fast taking the lead in musical circles on account of their very superior tone and splendid action. Mr. Cooper, the agent, has a large number of testimonials from purchasers of this particular style (the Grand), among them being Mrs. Stoumen, wife of ex-Governor Stoumen, who speaks in very favorable terms of these pianos, as follows: "I must speak to you in regard to my piano. Some of our finest musicians have spoken particularly of its very fine tone and action. It improves continually, which is the reverse of any other make of pianos, as my experience goes."

Largest and Best Selected Stock of Musical Instruments and Musical Merchandise.

NO. 631 J STREET,

Corner of Seventh, SACRAMENTO.

Fine Table Wines

From our Celebrated Orleans Vineyard.

Charles H. Lambeth & Co.
Producers of the
ECLIPSE
CHAMPAGNE,
530 Washington St.
SAN FRANCISCO.

CHAMPAGNE

W. B. CHAPMAN,
123 California St. San Francisco.
SOLE AGENT FOR THE PACIFIC COAST

To be sold by all first-class Wine Merchants and Grocers.

Samples and Instructions for Self-measurement sent by mail on application.

L. RADLOFF,LADIES' TAILOR,

218 POST STREET, SAN FRANCISCO.

Tailor Made Suits a Specialty.

A. AITKEN,*PREMIUM PIONEER MARBLE AND GRANITE WORKS

423 J Street, bet. 4th and 5th, Sacramento.

Costic Tile, etc. Cemetery lots enclosed with Granite. All kinds of work done in Italian and Vermont Marble. Direct importer of Scotch and Eastern Granite Monuments. Also, Marble, Slate, Wooden and Iron Mantels, direct from manufacturers, at Reduced Prices. Call and examine.

Lying Fallow.

The American is a spendthrift of food and clothes and money, because he lives in a bigger and fuller country than any other; but he is a spendthrift also of his brains, which are no fuller nor bigger than any other man's. He knows, too, that the resources of his country are, humanly speaking, everlasting; but he has but one mind, and when it is worn out that is the end of it, and of him. Nobody can ever live in our great cities, which are the central markets for all kinds of products, without being struck with the inconsiderate and reckless handling which professional men, authors, artists, journalists, give to this invisible short-lived genie that works for them, shut up in the lump of gray matter inside of their skulls. It is their sole breadwinner—they have no other capital. Men take care of any other kind of capital they may have. The thrifty farmer suffers his field to lie fallow over in four or five years; enriches the soil at great expense, does begrudge it time for the sun to shine and the rain to fall on it, knowing that he will be fully repaid by the crops of the year to come. The great Orderer of the world, too, deemed that one-seventh part of the life of man and beast should be spent in idleness. One would suppose that a rational man would gain a useful hint from these facts concerning the treatment of his mind, but how often and for how long in his life does a clever American who lives by his brain suffer it to lie fallow?

To begin he puts it to work too early. The German is just leaving the gymnasium to enter the university at the age when the American is quitting the university to study a profession. As for the profession, the European schools of law and medicine require a course of four or five years, while ours are satisfied with two, or at the most three. Hence the German or Englishman, when ready to earn their own living, is what the American would call middle-aged. We need not allude to the forcing, cramming process carried on in our schools. Thanks to the protests of the press, parents now are awake to the evils of this overworking system, and individually hold ignorant and over-zealous teachers in check. Vacations are prolonged; studies are fewer; but even yet there are not enough lapses of rest allowed to the immature slowly-growing brains of our children. Many a boy, and a still larger number of girls, would have their minds made more strong and alert for life if they were compelled to drop books for a year and set to work on a farm or permitted to follow their inclinations as to occupation and amusement. Knowledge thus would be absorbed as the fallow soil drinks in the juices of the rain.

In no career does this intellectual squandering process begin as early and continue with as inexorable cruelty to the working power as in literature and especially in journalism. All the bright school boys or girls nowadays who have an idea which seems to them seething in their brains, or the many wrongs in the world that need righting, feel that Heaven has put a pen into their hands and sent them out as teachers. Occasionally a genius of this type secures a position on some paper as reporter or manufacturer of squibs of literary or social gossip with just enough pay to keep him from starving. From that day there is an end to all development of his mind. He becomes a poor hack, hurrying here and there to scrape up grains of matter, to be dished up in an article which nobody will remember five minutes after reading. He and his writings and his life soon become "things of nothing, nothing worth." Yet when he began his work, he was clear, sincere, energetic, with a brain which, if generously nurtured and suffered to grow in natural and wholesome ways, might have given some real work to the world. His case is but one of thousands in the lower ranks of brain workers. They put their brains to work to help the age, to elevate the race and to earn their own living; but soon they let the age and the race take care of themselves, and to keep life in their bodies go on wringing the tired brain, which, like a dried sponge, will not yield a drop of moisture. Even the masters of the profession go on clattering the empty mill once full of golden wheat. They will not take time to fill it so long as the empty clatter brings them money.

What are they to do? they ask. They must live. In the first place, why set out to be teachers and prophets of the world unless we can take breath long enough to learn something to teach, or to hear the divine message of prophecy? If a boy has, or seems to have, the genius which will make him a great writer, why not give him some other way of earning his living than the pen. Let the word he is to speak grow in him slowly, and some day, in the fullness of time, when God and nature see fit, it will come forth spontaneously as the water of life from the well which was for the healing and the strengthening of the people. Why set him to trading in it, drawing from a spigot at so much a measure? Or if the profession is already chosen, and it is a middle-aged man who is thus destroying his working power as author or professional man, let him consider if he cannot economize in some way so as to give it a rest. He and his family must live, perhaps; but there is no need that they should live in that certain style, which they think essential. House decoration, rich furniture, a high order of music, arts, society we have come to rate as the necessities of modern civilization. If a man must pay for them by the slow death of power and mental faculty in himself, he and his children would be better off in the mud huts of his Gothic ancestors. Let us consider what fictitious luxury we can do without to gain, instead, the priceless necessity of occasional absolute rest.—Minneapolis Tribune.

The Fungus Demon.

"I suppose that many persons have noticed the great increase of flies in Albany during the present week," said State Entomologist Lintner to-day. "In some localities they have apparently come in swarms, like the sudden invasion of an army. This occurrence deserves note as being an unusually early appearance of the particular species of fly known as the 'common housefly,' musca domestica—one of the fifty species or more that occur in our dwellings. As a rule we never see this species before the month of August, but the peculiar meteorological conditions of the present year have brought it this season weeks in advance of its proper time. I noticed this morning upon my window panes the commencement of the fungus attack that every year kills many of our houseflies, causing them to adhere to the walls, furniture or windows, and surrounding them with the fungus thrown out from their bodies and looking like a white powdery substance. I have no recollection of ever seeing this fungus attack in former years earlier than the month of August. Rust on oats was reported by farmers so early as last month, owing, no doubt, to the excessive rainfall and moisture of the present season. Indications point not only to an unusually early appearance of rusts, blights, mildews, etc., which are different forms of fungus attacks, but to a remarkable prevalence of them, to the great injury of the farmer, fruit-grower, vineyardist, etc.—Albany Journal.

THE earth revolves on her axis in 23 hours, 56 minutes and 4 seconds. This time is required for one rotation from a star round to the same star again. The revolution is therefore called a sidereal day. While the earth has been turning on her axis she has been advancing in her orbit, and it will take her four minutes on the average to come to the same position in regard to the sun; thus, adding four minutes to the sidereal day, gives 24 hours for the solar day. The time of the axial rotation has not varied the hundredth part of a second in 2,000 years. It may, therefore, be considered as invariable, and is consequently adopted as a fundamental unit in astronomical measurement. The earth revolves in her orbit around the sun in 365.26 days, giving another standard measure of time, the length of the year. The velocity of the earth in her orbit is almost incomprehensible, for the huge sphere spins along at the average rate of eighteen miles in a second. The earth's orbital revolution and the inclination of her axis to the plane of the ecliptic cause the changes of the seasons and the varying length of day and night.

The earth has a more complicated motion known as the procession of the equinoxes. It consists of a wobbling motion of the pole of the heavens around the pole of the ecliptic in a small circle requiring 25,000 years to complete. It is caused by the attraction of the sun and moon upon the earth at the equator. Consequently, ecliptic and equator do not cross at the same point, but the equinoctial falls back each year fifty seconds of a degree. One effect of this movement is to change the polar star, for to whatever part of the heavens the pole points, the nearest star to that point is the polar star. The present polar star will no longer enjoy that distinction 3,000 years hence, and the brilliant Vega will be the polar star 12,000 years hence. The earth is moving through space. The sun, carrying with him the planets, satellites, comets and meteoric bodies following in his train, is hastening toward a point in the constellation Hercules at the rapid pace of 20,000 miles an hour. It might seem that, traveling at this rate, the goal must soon be reached. Such, however is the inconceivable distance of the stars that more than 1,000,000 years must pass before our sun and his family, at their present rate of travel, have spanned the depths of space that intervene between the shining suns of Hercules.

Captain C. H. Townsend, of New Haven, is developing a mechanical idea that promises well. It is a device for measuring two angles at once. It will be of use in platting sea areas, measuring distances on the water and making soundings. The navy is to adopt it.

The Austrian Archbishops are probably the most highly paid in the world. The Cardinal Archbishop of Vienna has only about £6,000 a year, but the Cardinal Archbishop of Olmutz has £40,000, the Cardinal Archbishop of Prague has £35,000, and the Archbishop of Erlau has £60,000; and the primate of Hungary, the Cardinal Archbishop of Grau, has £80,000.

A. L. HART,
ATTORNEY-AT-LAW

Sutter Building, cor. 5th and J.

W. A. ANDERSON,
ATTORNEY-AT-LAW,

No. 209 J Street, Sacramento.

W. A. GETT, JR.,

Attorney at Law,

Southwest Corner of Seventh and J Streets,

SACRAMENTO, CAL.

F. F. TEBBETS, DENTIST,

No. 914 SIXTH STREET,

Bet. I and J, west side, opp. Congregational Church.

DR. H. H. PIERSON,

SURGICAL & AND MECHANICAL & DENTIST

511 J Street, bet. 5th and 6th.

Gas administered for the painless extraction of teeth.

Joseph Hahn & Co.,
PHARMACISTS,

S. W. cor. Fifth and J Streets, Sacramento.

CHOICE PERFUMERIES, ETC.

Prescriptions carefully compounded, at all hours.

FIRE! ACCIDENT! LIFE!

—Insurance a Specialty.—

COMBINED ASSETS, - 50 MILLIONS.

Best in the World!

Royal, Norwich-Union & Lancashire,
Of England.

See my list of policy-holders and my prices.

"TRAVELERS," of Hartford, Conn. Everybody knows the name. I sell only first-class policies.

C. H. DENTON, 628½ J Street.

BOOTS AND SHOES made to order. Boots, $5 to $11. Shoes, $4 to $5. Ladies' Shoes, best quality French Kid, $5 to $7.

REPAIRING DONE at lowest prices.

NONE BUT BEST mechanics employed.

WE GUARANTEE to make perfect fitting to the worst of crooked and crippled feet.

COMPETE WITH any shoes on the market.

216 J Street

—AND—

208 K Street,

SACRAMENTO.

A. CASELLI
& COMPANY.

Take a Ride on the Riverside Road

AND BE SURE AND STOP AT

BILLY GROENVELD'S

Sutterville House

And get a glass of COOL BEER. Or if you want a bottle of CHAMPAGNE Billy has it on hand, or anything else you may wish for in his line.

Always a FINE LUNCH on the Counter.

M. T. GROENVELD, Proprietor.

A. C. SWEETSER & CO.,

Real Estate & Insurance Brokers

Lands For Sale in all parts of the State.

Some Good Investments in School Lands.

Send for Catalogue.

Office, No. 1012 Fourth Street,

SACRAMENTO, CAL.

L. K. Hammer

THE LEADING

MUSIC DEALER.

AGENT FOR

Chickering
Pianos,

Largest Stock of Musical Instruments in the City.

No. 820 J STREET.

GRAND OPENING

OF

NOLAN & SON'S

Boot and Shoe

STORE.

603 J STREET. SACRAMENTO,

One door above Sixth.

GEORGE T. BOYD,

Manufacturer of

Pure Candies and Ice Cream

Temple of Sweets,

907 K Street, next to Odd Fellows' Temple,

SACRAMENTO, CAL.

BELL & CO.,

GENERAL AUCTIONEERS.

Salesroom, 927 K Street, Sacramento, Cal.

Regular Salesdays—Wednesdays and Saturdays at 10 o'clock A. M.

Assistants—W. T. Crowell, Real Estate; J. Pulvermacher, Bookkeeper; J. Lambert, Furniture and Stock.

Particular attention paid to sales of real estate, house sales, and sales of farms, stock, etc.

Highest price paid for all kinds of household goods.

FRIEND & TERRY

LUMBER CO.

Wholesale and Retail Lumber Dealers, Also Shakes, Bolts, Ties, Doors, Windows, Blinds and Sereous. Main Yard and Office, No. 1310 Second Street. Branch Yard, corner Twelfth and J Sts. P. O. Box 233. E. J. Holt, Manager. Sacramento

OSBORN & FOLGER

DEALERS IN

ICE and COAL, HAY and GRAIN.

New 10-ton Fairbanks' Hay Scales.

N. E. cor. Fifth and I Streets.

Wood Yard, 806 I Street.

WESTERN HOTEL

209 to 219 K Street.

The Leading Hotel of Sacramento, Cal.

FREE BUS TO AND FROM HOTEL.

Meals, 25 Cents. Rooms, according to Location.

W. M. LAND, Proprietor.

$500 REWARD.

PURSUANT TO A RESOLUTION OF THE BOARD of Supervisors of Sacramento county, adopted May 7, 1889, said Board will pay the sum of Five Hundred Dollars ($500) for evidence leading to the arrest and conviction of any party illegally carrying on the business of hydraulic mining on the American river or its tributaries, in any and all mines or claims which have been heretofore enjoined by any Court of competent jurisdiction; provided, however, that said Board will pay but one reward for the arrest and conviction of a person or persons operating the same mine or claim.

Attest:

F. F. TEBBETS,

Chairman of the Board of Supervisors.

[SEAL]

W. B. HAMILTON, Clerk of Board.

FOR FRESH, CLEAN GROCERIES, GO TO

We invite a call at our new location, corner Eighth and K streets, where with our increased space we are enabled to give our large stock a fair display and our customers convenient room.

THE AMERICAN CASH STORE

Offers attractions to cash buyers of GROCERIES. A high quality of goods is carefully regarded.

O. F. WASHBURN, 801 K STREET.

O'BRIEN'S, 607 J.

SWEEPING REDUCTION IN LADIES' SHOES.

Best French Kid, hand turn, worth $7, reduced to $5. Ladies' French Kid Button, low heel, long vamp, worth $5, reduced to $4. Misses' and Children's Canvas Shoes reduced 25 per cent.

A. J. MUIR,
PLUMBER,
—Gas and Steam Fitter.—

Being a practical plumber, I can guarantee all work.

810 K STREET, Telephone 226.
SACRAMENTO, CAL.

ALBERT GRUBBS,

No. 1417 Fourth Street,

Will do all kinds of House Cleaning, Lay Carpets, Whitewashing, and everything in that line.

He also has the only wagon for the REMOVAL OF DEAD ANIMALS, and any orders left at his place of business will receive prompt attention.

Remember the address!

No. 1417 Fourth Street, Sacramento, Cal.

PAUL GRAF,

Manufacturer of and dealer in Saddles, Harness, Robes, Collars, Whips, Spurs, Brushes, Currycombs, etc.

1130 J Street, near Twelfth
Repairing Neatly Done.
Harness Made to Order.

Barrett & Berkey

PACIFIC RESTAURANT,
OYSTER HOUSE AND
WINE PARLORS
701 J Street, cor. 7th.

CALL AT 1118 J STREET,

—AT—

Fred Futterer's Saloon

And Get a Glass of Cool Beer.

The best Wines, Liquors and Cigars always on hand.

POOL AND BILLIARD TABLES.

FRED FUTTERER, 1118 J Street.

CHANGED HANDS.

SACRAMENTO EXCHANGE,

(Formerly Wm. Gamble's.)

1012 SEVENTH STREET.

Fine Wines. All the celebrated brands of Liquors and Cigars.
ROBERT ALLEN,
Formerly of Agricultural Park.

RHOADS & TOWNSEND HOUSE

On European Plan.

Cor. Second and J Streets, Sacramento.

ARTHUR MILLER, PROPRIETOR.

A Stranger in Town.

IT is safe to wager that this is a truthful portrait of the wonder and astonishment usually aroused by a stranger on entering a small country village. All stand with their mouths wide open, reminding the traveler of the Mammoth Cave, and they gaze on him as though beholding an apparition from another world. And, by the way, this is a forcible reminder of the fact that

Arcadian, the Ideal,

is creating just about as much commotion among the proprietors of competing brands as the appearance of the stranger does among the unsophisticated inhabitants of the rural village. Imagine the stranger in the above illustration to be

“Arcadian and Ideal,”

and the gawky, paralyzed spectators, competing drinks, and you have a very correct idea of the position occupied by Arcadian Sarsaparilla and Iron. A glass of IDEAL is, indeed, delightful. It is a great blood purifier, possesses valuable medicinal properties, and is warmly indorsed by eminent physicians in every part of England and America. It has long been a favorite drink among the English people, and is acquiring universal favor and popularity wherever introduced.

Ideal is prepared with pure Arcadian Mineral Water, and is bottled at Waukesha, Wis. It is a mild laxative, acts favorably in promoting the secretions of the kidneys, enriches the blood, and is of decided value in malarial diseases of every type. It imparts an invigorating tone to the entire system.

It is essentially a ladies' drink, and possesses rare merit.

ARCADIAN, THE IDEAL,

IS KEPT FOR SALE BY ALL FIRST-CLASS

Druggists, Grocers and Saloon Keepers.

ANHEUSER & BUSCH BEER

Can be found on draught only at

John Gruhler's Saloon

No. 522 J STREET.

The finest and best Wines, Liquors and Cigars constantly on hand.

Patronize Home Industry!

CITY & BREWERY

FRANK RUHSTALLER, Proprietor.

GENUINE

Pilsener Felsen Beer.

Corner Twelfth and H Streets,

Telephone 201.

SACRAMENTO.

CELEBRATED

WEINER LAGER BEER

CAPITAL BREWERY

LOUIS NICOLAUS,

Corner Twelfth and I Streets

SACRAMENTO.

COLUMBUS BREWERY

CHRIS. WAHL, Proprietor

Corner of Sixteenth and K Streets,

SACRAMENTO, CAL.

Agent for the Celebrated W. J. LEMP'S ST. LOUIS LAGER BEER

WISSEMAN'S SALOON,

Klebetz & Green's Old Stand,

1020 Fourth St., bet. J and K, Sacramento.

GEO. WISSEMAN, PROPRIETOR.

Families and Saloons supplied by bottle or keg.

Butchers' Home,

1020 J Street,

Between 10th and 11th, : Sacramento, Cal.

Fine Wines, Liquors and Cigars. Also, a

GOOD GLASS OF BEER.

JACOB GRUHLER, Prop'r.

CAPITAL ALE VAULTS.

Established in 1870, and still maintains the same reputation for keeping the best WINES, LIQUORS and Cigars in the city. The finest Hot Lunch in the city from 11 to 2. Clam Chowder a specialty every night.

NAGELE & SVENSSON, Prop'rs.

Telephone 38.

302 J and 1005 Third st.

California State Bank

DOES A GENERAL BANKING BUSINESS.

Draws Exchange on all the Principal Cities of the World.

OFFICERS:
PRESIDENT N. D. RIDEOUT
VICE-PRESIDENT FRED K. COX
CASHIER A. ABBOTT
ASSISTANT CASHIER W. E. GERBER

DIRECTORS:
C. W. Clarke, J. S. Steffens, N. D. Rideout,
Geo. C. Perkins, J. R. Watson, Frederick Cox,
W. E. Gerber.

W. R. STRONG & CO.

Founded 1852.

Fruit Packers
and Shippers.

PROPRIETORS OF

CAPITAL NURSERIES,
SACRAMENTO, CAL.

CURTIS BROS. & CO.

Wholesale and Retail Dealers in and Shippers of all kinds of

Fruits, Vegetables
And GENERAL PRODUCE.

Careful attention paid to the selection and packing of Choice Fruits and Vegetables for distant markets. Goods delivered in city free.

308 and 310 K Street, - - Sacramento, Cal.

King Bros.

[State Capitol Cash Grocery, 131 J Street, corner Second.

Goods sold on small margin, strictly for cash. Best Brands of Wines, Liquors and Cigars.

JAS. LONGSHORE,

SACRAMENTO TRUNK FACTORY,
530 K STREET.

Trunks, Valises & Bags Wholesale and Retail.

Waterhouse & Lester

DEALERS IN

IRON, STEEL, CUMBERLAND COAL,
Wagon Lumber and Carriage Hardware,
SACRAMENTO.

Earthquake and Fire Proof BUILDINGS

Constructed on my patent system. Perfect protection guaranteed. For estimates and particulars see E. HAWES, Twelfth and B streets, Sacramento.

PUMPS

Our Factory is the Largest and Best Equipped in Northern California.

Our Designs are New and Original and Calculated for Every Variety of Service.

CAPITAL IRON WORKS,
904 K Street, Sacramento.

CANCERS.

Ulcers, Wens, Lumps, Excrecences, etc.,
Positively Cured or no Pay.
No Knife Used.

As to the success of my treatment, I give the names of a few of the many cured. By addressing them they will give any information required—and it pays to investigate before being treated.
Mrs. O. C. Neilsen, Grass Valley, cancer.
John Service, Auburn, lupus.
Patrick Lynch, Sacramento, cancer.
Mrs. Jno. Shaw, Grass Val., birthmark removed.
N. S. Peck, S. P. R., R. Sacramento, cancer.
J. L. Woods, Washington, Yolo county, cancer.
John W. Douglas, Rocklin, cancer.
Miss Mamie Lynch, Yolo, tumor removed.
Chas. McLaughlin, Sacramento, cancer.
I might give many more. Those afflicted are invited to call and investigate for themselves. Consultation at office free. Send for circular.
Office, 426 K Street, Sacramento.
DR. J. H. SHIRLEY.

H. WACHHORST

Leading Jeweler of Sacramento

SIGN OF THE TOWN CLOCK,

No. 315 J STREET, SACRAMENTO.

W. D. Comstock, 501 -- 507 K, cor. Fifth

Furniture

Bedding.

On Exhibition, THE LARGEST AND BEST SELECTED STOCK.

FAIR DEALING! LOW PRICES!

GENSHLEA BROS.

Strictly High Grade Goods in all Lines. 624 J ST.

TRY THE LA ROSA ESPANOLA KEY WEST CIGAR.

JAS. G. DAVIS

Furniture, Carpets and Wall Paper

411 AND 413 K STREET,

Branch, 315 K St. Send for Catalogue. Prices Lowest.

Klune & Floberg,

WATCHMAKERS and JEWELERS

Agents for Rockford Watch Co.

NO. 428 J STREET, SACRAMENTO.

Something New

NEW STORE. NEW MEN.

BELL & FOUNTAIN

HAVE OPENED THE

Plaza Cash Grocery STORE,

Corner Tenth and J Streets,

And have stocked the same with all New and Fresh Goods, which they will sell for CASH at the smallest living margin.

All Goods Warranted as Represented.

Goods delivered to any part of the city.

Our Motto: "The nimble sixpence against the slow shilling!"

BELL & FOUNTAIN,

Plaza Cash Grocery Store,

R. H. PETTIT,

Wholesale and Retail Dealer in

IMPORTED & DOMESTIC CIGARS

Smoke the "Lone Fisherman."

The BEST FIVE-CENT CIGAR in the Market.

NO. 225 K STREET.

JESSE SLAUGHTER,

Office, No. 1217 Fifth Street.

Plastering, Whitewashing, Cleaning of Cesspools, Etc.

Also, CITY SCAVENGER.

Burying of dead animals attended to at short notice.

Don't forget the number—1217 Fifth street, the old stand, where I have been for 25 years.

REEVES & LONG, UNDERTAKERS,

609 J Street, bet. Sixth and Seventh.

WE KEEP ON HAND A COMPLETE Stock of Coffins and Caskets; also, Shrouds of every description. Orders from city or country receive prompt attention, day or night. EMBALMING done in the best manner; and at reasonable rates.

TRADE WITH THE

OVERLAND

Tea Company,

421 J STREET,

BETWEEN FOURTH AND FIFTH.

The Best of Goods Procurable.

HANDSOME PRESENTS GIVEN
TO CUSTOMERS.

For Particulars see the Daily Papers.

F. KUEHNE & CO.,

NO. 906 NINTH STREET,

Between I and J, SACRAMENTO.

Carpenters and Contractors

Store and office work a specialty.

ICE BOXES for Breweries and Saloons always on hand and made to order.

Jobbing and Repairing promptly attended to.

BAKER & HAMILTON,

San Francisco and Sacramento,

Importers and Jobbers of

Hardware, Iron, Steel, Coal, Powder,

MACHINERY

And Agricultural Implements.

Send for Catalogue.

American Steam Laundry

NINETEENTH AND I STS.—WHITE LABOR only. Linen polished in the neatest manner. We guarantee satisfaction. All ordinary mending, sewing on buttons, etc., free of charge. Washing called for and delivered to any part of the city. Main Office at Sawtelle's Book Store, 708 and 710 J street. Branch offices at all the Hotels.

RAILROAD TIME TABLE.

Southern Pacific Company

PACIFIC SYSTEM.

July 28, 1889.

Trains LEAVE and are due to ARRIVE at SACRAMENTO.

Lv.	Trains Run Daily.	Arr.
7-00 A	Calistoga and Napa	11-40 A
4-05 P	Calistoga and Napa	8-30 P
11-00 P	Ashland and Portland	3-40 A
5-05 P	Denning, El Paso and East	7-05 P
7-30 P	Knights Landing	7-55 A
4-30 A	Marysville (Mixed)	4-25 P
9-00 A	Los Angeles	9-55 A
9-00 P	Second Class, Ogden and East	6-30 A
10-30 P	Central Atlantic Express
3-00 P	Ogden and East	3-40 P
3-00 P	Oroville	9-50 A
11-00 P	Oroville	3-40 A
3-00 P	Red Bluff via Marysville	9-50 A
10-40 A	Redding via Willows	4-05 P
4-00 A	San Francisco via Benicia	10-40 P
7-00 A	San Francisco via Benicia	8-30 P
4-05 P	San Francisco via Benicia	10-10 P
10-00 A	San Francisco via Steamers	26-00 A
11-20 A	San Francisco via Livermore	2-25 P
3-05 P	San Francisco via Benicia	11-40 A
11-20 A	San Jose	2-25 P
9-00 A	Santa Barbara	9-55 A
5-05 P	Santa Barbara	7-05 P
7-00 A	Santa Rosa	11-40 A
4-05 P	Santa Rosa	8-30 P
9-00 A	Stockton and Galt	7-05 P
5-05 P	Stockton and Galt	9-55 A
9-00 P	Truckee and Reno	6-30 A
10-30 P	Truckee and Reno	3-40 P
8-30 A	Colfax	5-00 P
7-00 A	Vallejo	11-40 A
4-05 P	Vallejo	18-30 P
12-15 P	Folsom and Placerville (Mixed)	10-35 A
7-15 A	Folsom and Placerville	3-45 P
5-20 P	Folsom	6-50 A

*Sunday excepted. †Sunday only. ‡Monday excepted. A for morning. P for afternoon.
A. N. TOWNE, Gen'l Manager.
T. H. GOODMAN, Gen'l Pass. and Ticket Agent.

Edwin K. Alsip & Co.

ESTABLISHED 1860.

REAL ESTATE

AND INSURANCE AGENTS.

FARMING LANDS A SPECIALTY.

Catalogues issued monthly.

No. 1015 Fourth Street, Sacramento.

Gregory Bros. Co

Established 1852.

COMMISSION MERCHANTS,

Packers and Shippers of California Fruit and Produce,

126 and 128 J STREET,

San Francisco Office, 313 Davis St. SACRAMENTO.

ANGLO-NEVADA ASSURANCE CORPORATION

OF SAN FRANCISCO.

FIRE.—Cash Capital, $2,000,000.—MARINE.

Sacramento Branch:

No. 1018 SECOND STREET.

JOSEPH STEFFENS, Manager. HOWARD KIMBROUGH, Local Agent.

Hotfilter & Grafmiller,

MANUFACTURING JEWELERS,

Jewelry made to order. Watches, Clocks and Jewelry Repaired and Warranted.

No. 1026 Sixth Street, Sacramento.

B. Ruhl

Bookbinder, Paper Ruler and

Blank Book Manufacturer.

Periodicals, Magazines, Music, and all kinds of Binding neatly done at the lowest prices.

No. 409 J STREET, SACRAMENTO.

R. DAVIS,

NOTARY PUBLIC,

Real Estate and Insurance Agent.

Representing the following companies:

Manchester of England; Caledonian of Edinburgh, Scotland; London and Lancaster, England.

1002 J Street, Sacramento.

Restaurant de France,

FAURE & BECKER, PROPRIETORS.

(Successors to L. Payen.)

No. 427 K Street. Near Metropolitan Theater.

Family Entrance on Fifth Street.

Catering to Families, Banquets and Wedding Parties a specialty. Telephone 228.

NOTICE TO FRUITMEN!

Keep your trees free from scale and your apples from being wormy by the use of

Warner's Scale & Insect Exterminator

FOR SALE BY

G. T. NOE, - - DRUGGIST,
AUBURN, CAL.

Put up in one-half gallon and quart cans.

THEMIS

Vol. I.

SACRAMENTO: SATURDAY, AUGUST 24, 1889.

No. 27.

THEMIS: published weekly, by A. J. Johnston & Co. Publication Office, 410 J Street. Subscription—One year, by mail, $3 00; six months, by mail, $1 50, in advance; per month, by carrier, 25 cents. (Entered at the Post Office at Sacramento as second-class matter.)

It is a matter to be commended that efforts are being made, and will probably be successful, to prohibit by the Constitutions of some of the new States the following of the calling of private detectives. This calling, so generally disreputable, should be prohibited by law in every State. It offers too great a temptation for blackmail. There have been very many instances in this State where the grossest outrages have been perpetrated under the very shadowy guise of a private detective. In some instances, persons who followed the business ostensibly have been convicted of crimes and sent to prison. No man should be permitted to exercise police functions unless legally authorized, and he should be held strictly accountable for his acts to the municipality, county or State.

We recently had an amusing instance of the inefficiency of the private detective system, in this city. It seems that some gentlemen, who are doubtless sincere but very impracticable, organized a secret league in the interest of "Law and Order." They placed the administration of their affairs in the hands of a private detective agency, the members of which proved their entire lack of common sense and ordinary judgment when the first cases they instituted were brought on for trial—the cases of some Chinamen charged with selling tickets in a Chinese lottery. The trials were by jury, and in each instance the juries, which were composed of intelligent business citizens, determined that the wrong men had been arrested, and convictions were impossible. These detectives should be able if they attempt prosecutions to so perfect their cases that convictions will be at least reasonably certain.

We do not regard these Chinese lotteries so seriously as those conducted by Americans and Mexicans. In the case of the Chinese they are conducted among a people largely ignorant of our laws; the question of morals enters not so deeply; the money is not sent out of the country as the direct result of the gambling scheme. In our issue of May 19th we spoke at length on the subject of lotteries and their results.

The law is very plain on the subject. It is a misdemeanor to sell, give, or in any manner whatsoever furnish or transfer to or for any other person any ticket, chance, share, or interest, or any paper, certificate, or instrument purporting or understood to be or to represent any ticket, chance, share, or interest in, or depending upon the event of any lottery. It is a misdemeanor to advertise the managing or drawing of a lottery. Yet, in this regard the law is violated openly by the leading newspapers in the State—by papers that are constantly clamoring for the enforcement of the laws. It looks that with them the enforcement of the laws should be strict until it affects the pockets of the susceptible. It is not necessary to recapitulate the other state laws on the subject. They are, however, stringent enough to meet any case. We reiterate that tickets in "white" lotteries are openly sold in cigar stores in this city, and they are hawked about on the streets. No attempt is made at concealment, and as long as the laws are thus permitted to be violated by our own people it is in bad taste to attempt to visit punishment on a people of a lower race for a similar offence, but slighter in extent. The extensive drain of money from this city and State by the New Orleans lottery is a subject that should engage the serious attention of our business men, aside from the question of the violation of our penal laws. We have none too much money here now. Business is stagnated, not of course from that cause alone, but that is an important factor, and can be easily checked. If we have laws they should be enforced, particularly when their enforcement will add materially to our general prosperity. As it is, with these lottery schemes, what little money is retained here in the way of commissions or prizes falls into the hands of a few. The bulk of the drain leaves our State and remains away forever.

There is a general outward appearance of goodfellowship among the great crowned heads of the world. They seem to shake hands cordially and to wish each other well. But there is an undercurrent some place that is not visible to the ordinary observation, but which flows from the direction of Russia. It is certain that Great Britain, Germany, France and Austria are not at all anxious for any disturbance. The Pope is evidently fearful of some impending danger. Italy is liable to be entangled in some complications with the Turks. Crete, it is claimed, is subject to the greatest brutality from the Turks. The advice given the Servian Queen is to annoy the Austrians, and comes from the Czar. From the complications in both of these quarters great trouble is liable to break out at any time. Russia wants a collision between Servia and the Austrians. The Cretan situation is aggravated by Russian diplomacy. In either or both of these events the Russian bear would extend his paw over the Mediterranean States. Foreign capital is the best indicator of impending trouble, for it is seeking investment on the American Continent. In the event of Russian interference in the Cretan and Servian affairs, other powers are sure to be drawn in the vortex of war.

The death of William T. Higgins, at San Francisco, removes one of the most successful leaders that has figured in the politics of the State. He held his sway in republican politics almost without interruption for more than twenty years. Like all political leaders, he met with reverses at times, but opposition was never successful in waning his power for any considerable length of time. Unlike Buckley, he retained a strong following of the substantial business element of San Francisco, and depended not alone on the lower stratum of society for his strength. He was a man of wonderful ability as a political leader, and it is difficult to forecast who will be his successor. He was among the last of the old school who survived to remain actively in politics.

Last week we spoke of an impecunious debtor in a humorous manner, as one likely to be perpetuated in the memory of a portion of the public—his creditors. This suggests that wealth is a very great convenience. Money is a handy article to have in the house to make change. Wealth is the offspring of economy, but it is difficult to bring the ordinary mortal to realize this potent fact. We do not mean the economy of the miser, who hoards up his gold and denies himself all earthly comforts. Every man is a consumer, and, in the order of nature, should be a producer. We should produce more than we consume, and the surplus means wealth. It means also education, pleasure, fame. "Gold is king," said Senator Broderick in the halls of Congress, when standing against the fiery Southerner, who, in turn, proclaimed "cotton" king. The New Englander held "manufacture" king.

"No," said the western Senator, "corn is king." Thus the bitter debate went on. But gold is the great economic lever. It has become the great standard measure of man. "Wealth is the ticket of admission to the dress circle of society," said a great essayist. The great object and aim of life is to acquire wealth. The philosopher may urge that wealth is not an object of life, but we are convinced that the great stake after all is—gold. Poverty is very demoralizing. If a man could only keep out of debt he would live to a good old age, because there would be little to cause gray hair if that happy condition existed. Debt sours a man's nature, prevents application or study, and is a constant wear and tear on the sensitive mind. Again, the doors of so-called "good society" are often closed on the poor man, although he may be endowed with the highest order of genius and ability. This, however, is one of the perverted uses of wealth. The rich men of this country are generally very benevolent and charitable, and many of them were, at some period of their lives, poverty stricken, and can, therefore, appreciate the grandeur of true benevolence. Some of the very wealthy men of California are distinguished for their grand public contributions. The magnanimity of the American people has been demonstrated by the recent generous donations to a stricken community. It is a true saying: "The world is his who has the money to go over it."

We observe a disposition on the part of the San Francisco Call to complain that the enlargement of the Examiner to eight pages on week days and to sixteen on Sunday, has forced the other morning dailies in that city to increase their size correspondingly. There is no doubt that the papers are printing entirely too much matter, and that they would be more appreciated were they smaller and more carefully edited. It is a more difficult task to edit a small paper than a large one. In the case of the one, everything that is printed is selected with the greatest care, while in the other it is much like feeding the hopper of a threshing machine—much goes in to produce a little wheat.

The recent attempt to assassinate Emperor Dom Pedro, of Brazil, was but another of the acts of the irresponsible, which, of late years, have unfortunately been successful in removing some excellent rulers, and, in some instances, have effected radical changes in the policy of governments. In the case of the assassination of the Czar of Russia, Alexander II, March 13, 1881, by the Nihilists, it had been anticipated. Affairs in that country at that time, and for some years before, had been unsettled; a powerful secret organization was known to exist, and it was understood that they would not hesitate to resort to the most extreme measures to accomplish what they deemed to be their ends. Russia has, however, since changed; public sentiment has been molded by the advances in civilization of other countries. In the case of Pedro II, he has reigned since April 7, 1831, ascending the throne when but six years old, his father abdicating in his favor. Until 1852 the empire was distracted by wars and insurrections. Under his rule the country has steadily increased in power; extensive internal improvements have been made; slavery quietly abolished; general prosperity has been brought about. Perhaps no other ruler enjoys a more general affection of his people. Had the idiot who attempted to kill the Emperor succeeded, the loss to the world would have been severely felt. In this country the first attempt at the assassination of a ruler occurred January 30, 1835, when Richard Lawrence, a painter, attempted to shoot President Jackson, at Washington. Lawrence snapped two pistols at the President, but they missed fire. Jackson rushed at his assailant with uplifted cane, and would have stricken him down had he not been seized and conveyed to jail. Lawrence was tried, found not guilty by reason of insanity and committed to a lunatic asylum. The attempt that was made to poison President Buchanan has always been involved in mystery. By some it was supposed that his death was designed by the Southern leaders, with the purpose of elevating Breckinridge to the Presidency, he being a man who could be better depended upon in the then approaching crisis. The assassinations of Presidents Lincoln and Garfield are events of such prominence that particular reference to them is unnecessary. The death of the former was, perhaps, a greater calamity to the South than to the North. Had Lincoln lived the reconstruction of the Southern States would have been sooner brought about; he was in a position to conciliate without arousing in the North the feeling of suspicion that attached to the policy of President Johnson. While at the time the sentiment was quite general in the North that the act of Booth was dictated by the leaders of the vanquished confederacy, time has changed the public mind largely, and few now believe but that Booth was an ill-balanced enthusiast. In our country it is fortunate that in the event of the assassination or death of a Chief Magistrate the line of succession is complete of able statesmen. The fact that so little can be gained by a resort to violence in that direction, and that popular sentiment is so severely opposed to the use of explosives or the pistol as a means to reform imaginary political evils has, and will have, the effect to deter the elements that disturb in foreign countries from attempting to transplant their notions of government here.

"Dust."

How often have we sat and watched the struggling rays of the sun breaking through cracks and crevices in the shutters, and observed the countless particles of dust that seem to exist only in the space occupied by these rays of light. This, in our childhood days, was a wonderful phenomenon, and we could not comprehend why all this moving mass of particles should be confined to that particular space. But, as thus we passed from youth to maturity, we learned that this once wonderful thing, was only illustrative of many of the phases of life, and that while we only discerned the dust where the rays of light existed, that all other space was just as full of these moving mites. So it is in the affairs of life—all may seem serene, happy, beautiful and lovely, but if this ray of light could penetrate some crack or cranny of their being, these particles of "dust"—troubles, trials and tribulations—would be disclosed to our wondering eyes. How few, indeed, are not circumvented with the dust of life's ills, yet seem to be blessed beyond measure. See that young man gifted to a high degree, with not a thought of the vengeful future, as he leads to the altar that bright and lovely maiden. The brightest ray would fail to disclose anything but pure and holy joy and happiness to them. But how soon do these bright day dreams fade and vanish, amid the stern realities of life! How soon that mutual kiss and plighted faith is forgotten, and the subtle power of frail humanity breaks the case that encloses their happiness and admits the ray that reveals the "dust"—the impurity.

Dame Fortune, so smiling at the outset, follows for a time, then frowns and leaves them to wend their way alone. It is at just this period that all that is good or venal in human nature will appear—it is here that the ray of light penetrates and discloses the dust. How Godlike must those two beings be, who can, under this crucial test, clasp each other to their breasts and feel "two hearts that beat as one"—the same in prosperity or adversity—and blend themselves into each other's natures. Such natures as these are very rare, and seldom meet. The cases are very exceptional and isolated where true happiness exists in poverty, where the parties have been reduced from affluence. It is upon the wife, who has retained all her physical loveliness, that the reverse of fortune comes down in its fullest power. She has been accustomed to rich apparel and rich society, and to forego these tells deeply upon her. Her womanly nature of rather impulse than reason, "crops out," and she bemoans her lot, on account of the lack of that potent lever towards public favor—money. It is then that real unhappiness begins. It is then that she loses her identity with the loving wife, and irritates her husband by indulging in her "might have beens." Clashes follow. Doubtings, recriminations and bitterness are soon upon the wake. The husband is wearied, cross and ugly and is very inclined under circumstances of this nature to retaliate in kind—hence follow heart-burnings and bitterness which usually end in the mental, moral and physical destruction of both parties. Man and woman are often joined together under the formality of marriage, but are not mated—have none of the holy, self-sacrificing and forgiving love intended by the God of nature to exist between man and wife. Much of the unhappiness of the marriage relation could be averted if the parties would study each other's nature, and adhere a little more closely to that Divine admonition, that "a soft answer turneth away wrath." Illustrative of the "dust" that sometimes is stirred up in the marital relation, a little conversation between a young married couple occurred incidentally in our hearing, not a great while since, the tenor of which was about this: The young, and may be added, handsome wife, was importuning her husband for a new party dress, and argued that a series of parties were inaugurated in her honor, and that she had "nothing to wear." The husband remonstrated on the ground of impecuniosity and dull times. This exasperated the young wife to such a degree that reason gave place to the tyrant impulse, and she at once was severe in her censure and indulged in bitter words, flaunting before him many of her grievances (imaginary, no doubt), and ended by reminding him when and what she "might have been" had she not tied herself to him. We did not wait to hear the retort of the husband, but it was doubtless akin to the attack, and it is safe to say that those two mortals were the victims of many heart-aches, all because they did not comprehend each other's interests, and were given more to impulse than reason. And this, it was thought by all who knew the parties, was purely a love match, when they stood at the altar amid youth and beauty, with radiant hopes for the future. And we were astounded when the ray of light penetrated and the "dust" appeared. Should such scenes be common, the remaining embers of that strong first love that within them burned, will smoulder and die leaving a cold and cheerless hearth. If this should come to the notice of the couple whom we have in our mind's eye, may they profit by our advice, and cleanse their household of this "dust," with the resolve never again to let it enter. Let all your interests and acts be mutual and never lose sight of reason, in all the affairs of life.

The husband must be the sturdy oak, and the wife must be the vine to cling around, beautify and cherish.

"Two souls with but a single thought,
Two hearts that beat as one."

This "dust" is not confined to the marital relation, but permeates through many other phases of human life, and is revealed in many strange places where we would least expect to find it. We may at some future time peer in through the crevices and crannies in other matters where this "dust" is revealed.

CALIFORNIAN NOMENCLATURE.

How the Various Localities in This State Received Their Names.

Half Moon Bay is so named on account of its configuration. Halo Chemuc was formerly quite an Indian town on the west bank of the Sacramento river, a few miles above its mouth. The name in Indian meant "nothing to eat." Havilah was named from the place mentioned in the Old Testament where the first allusion is made to a land of gold: Genesis II, 11-12, "The name of the first is Pison; that is it which compasseth the whole land of Havilah, where there is gold; and the gold in that land is good; there is bdellium and the onyx stone." Haywards was named after William Hayward, who settled there in 1851; Healdsburg, after Harmon G. Heald; Hicksville, after William Hicks; Hollister, after an early Scotch settler of that name.

The valley of Ione was named before the town was started, by Thomas Brown, a great reader, after "Ione," one of the heroines of Bulwer's "Last Days of Pompeii." The town was first called Bedbug, then Freeze-out, and finally the people christened it Ione.

Knight's Landing was called after William Knight, who settled there in 1843; and Knight's Ferry after the same gentleman from the fact that he established a trading post there in 1848.

Langville was named after J. A. Lang. The locality of Little York was settled in early days largely by miners from New York and other Middle States. Afterward numbers came from Missouri and the West. An election was held to determine the name of the district and the Eastern men outvoted those from the West, and adopted the name of Little York over St. Louis, the choice of the minority. Livermore was named after Robert Livermore, who settled in the valley before the American Conquest and who died on February 14, 1858. Lockwood was named after its founder, Dr. D. J. Locke.

In 1841 Theo. Cordua settled in the forks of the Yuba and Feather rivers, where the city of Marysville now stands, under a lease from Captain Sutter. Cordua afterward sold out his interest under the lease, and it became the property of Charles Covillaud, John Sampson, J. M. Ramirez and Theo. Sicard. In January, 1850, the town was laid out by these four parties under the name of C. Covillaud & Co. There were a variety of opinions as to what should be the name of the place. Some wanted it called Yubaville, and some deeds were made out in that name. Others desired to call it Yuba City, some Norwich, and some Secardora—that being the favorite of Col. Perry. While the discussion of the name was pending, a public meeting was called to take into consideration the general interests of the new city. At that meeting Captain Edward Power, from St. Louis, proposed to name it after Mrs. Covillaud, who was then the only white woman living on the town plot; her name being Mary, it was then and there determined that the city should be named Marysville. Mrs. Covillaud died in that city on September 17, 1867. While Cordua was in possession the place was called New Mecklenburg.

The McLeod or McCloud river received its name from an old Scotch trapper, who, in 1827 or 1828, led the first party of Hudson Bay Company trappers that ever penetrated California. His name was Alexander Roderick McLeod. Years later a well-known citizen named Ross McCloud, a surveyor, lived on the stream and the similarity of the pronunciation of the names led to the common error of supposing that his name was the one that the river bore. Meridian was so called because the postoffice is only a quarter of a mile west of the Mount Diablo meridian, United States survey. Michigan Bar was so called from the fact that the first settlers were two men from Michigan, who discovered gold there in 1849. The Mokelumne river derives its name from a powerful tribe of Indians, the Mo-kel-kos, who inhabited its lower banks and the adjacent country. The Spaniards spelled the word differently.

Moore's Flat was named from H. M. Moore, who settled there and built a store in 1851. Mormon Island was so named from the fact that gold washing was commenced there soon after the discovery by Marshall, by a party of Mormons. Natoma is of Indian derivation, and signifies "clear water." Needles is so called on account of the spire or needle-like shape of certain rocks which were called "the Needles" in that vicinity. Newark was named by its founders after the New Jersey city, of which they were natives. New York of the Pacific was a wonderful city—on paper—in 1849. At one time it aspired to become the capital of the State. It was located by Col. J. D. Stevenson, and was named in honor of his regiment, which was called the New York regiment. Nicolaus was named after Nicolaus Allgeier, who arrived in the country in 1840, and who settled there in 1843.

North San Juan acquired its name from this circumstance: In 1853, a miner, named Kentz, who had accompanied General Scott when his expedition landed at Vera Cruz, was engaged in mining near the present site of the town. One evening he was impressed with the fancied resemblance of a bluff hill near by to the castle of San Juan de Ulloa, which guards the entrance to the port of Vera Cruz. He expressed his opinion, and the bluff was dubbed San Juan. Afterwards that name was applied to the town. In 1857, when an application was made for a postoffice to be established there, the authorities at Washington required a new name for the place, as an office had already been established at another town of that title in Monterey county. The citizens thereupon added the prefix "North" to the name. Nortonville was named after Noah Norton, the locator of the Black Diamond Coal Mine. Oakland was so called from the fact that immense live oaks formerly grew on its site.

The region of Owens Lake was visited in 1845 by a detachment of Fremont's expedition under the noted mountaineer, Captain Joe Walker. This party was accompanied by Prof. Richard Owens, who was the first white man to see the lake, and after him the lake, river and valley were named. Pacheco was named after Don Salvio Pacheco, who settled there in 1834, and who died in 1876. Petaluma is an Indian word, said by some to mean "Duck Ponds," and by others, "Little hills." Piedmont is the French for "foothills." Pigeon Point was so named from the fact that on May 6, 1853, the clipper ship "Carrier Pigeon" from Boston was totally wrecked there, and a large number of passengers drowned. Pit river received its name from a custom of the Indians along its banks of digging pits in which to capture bear, deer, and even intruding warriors of strange tribes. The pits were covered with brush and dirt to conceal them.

Placerville was originally called Hangtown, and was so named from this circumstance: In January, 1849, three men were in a saloon tent engaged in a game of poker. When the game broke up the proprietor was asleep, and the men robbed him at the point of the pistol. The next day they were arrested, tried, and sentenced to be flogged. After the punishment had been inflicted they were ordered to leave the camp. In a few days two of the men, when drunk around the camp, intimated that the parties who had been engaged in the trial were spotted, and would not live to flog another man. A meeting was called and the two men were arrested, tried, and hung to a tree. Pleasanton was at first called Alisal (Cottonwood), but was afterwards named by John W. Kotlinger in honor of General Pleasanton, a cavalry officer in the Union army.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

Buried Cities.

The following poem was first published some years ago. Some of our readers may be interested in locating the appended list of buried cities in the body of the poem:

No paler mouk than Father Charles, and none so gaunt and lean,
Since monks in academic air or cloister walls were seen.
The ravages of fatal war saw many dear ones fall,
But he in peace, and at our side, seemed nearer death than all.
An ice cold hand was his drear oven of decay!
The best of brandy, hottest bath, drove not that chill away.
We used to have nice dishes cooked to tempt his appetite,
And many a daisel made him cake, his palate to invite;
But all in vain: his feeble shape kindred to death appeared.
Beyond comparison he failed, his eye grew wild and bleared.
After his daily nap less strength and less he got.
'Twas not advancing age; no, all his years had not Reut one dark hair from off his brow, or with maturing gray,
Spreading his tinsured crown, worn his thick locks away.
But memory bleeds to think how suddenly he died.
His neck when we fell on, "Do not this thing," he cried.
"To duty constant, I no pleasure ever loved.
Can't one poor mortal thus a real saint be proved?"
His spirit loth to quit, oft flickered ere it fled.
At last his pulse met zero, and Father Charles was dead.
He had a monster funeral, the Queen's town clerk came down,

Ordered the bells to toll, and over all the town
They rang both old and new; burgher and magistrate
Came crowding when in old St. John's his body lay in state.
With thirty buried cities upon his reverend pate.

- | | | |
|-------------|--------------|---------------------|
| 1. Palermo. | 11. Venice. | 21. Leeds. |
| 2. Arles. | 12. Spa. | 22. London. |
| 3. Orleans. | 13. Pekin. | 23. Constantinople. |
| 4. Cairo. | 14. Paris. | 24. Canton. |
| 5. Warsaw. | 15. Naples. | 25. Quito. |
| 6. Tours. | 16. Genoa. | 26. Queenstown. |
| 7. Rome. | 17. Trenton. | 27. Dover. |
| 8. Nice. | 18. Turin. | 28. Andover. |
| 9. Thebes. | 19. Trent. | 29. Newburg. |
| 10. Bath. | 20. Reading. | 30. St. John's |

The Stage.

[Under this caption will appear a fair and impartial criticism of the drama, actors, music, and all noteworthy matters pertaining to the stage.]

Margaret Mather will play Gretchen in San Francisco next month.

For several months we have missed the Music and Drama from our exchange list. What is the matter? Our contemporary is too valuable to do without.

Charlotte Tittel, a Californian actress, has gone to New York under engagement with David Frohman for leading business. She will play at the Lyceum.

Wilhelmj, the violinist, is an accomplished whistler. No professional whistler can get with lips and tongue the tone that he can. It is like the notes of his violin. Only on rare occasions does he treat his friends to a whistling performance.

Miss Clyde Harron, an excellent actress, a former Sacramentan, is about to join one of the New York theater companies. Miss Harron is an industrious and painstaking artist, and whose ambition is to raise herself to the topmost round of dramatic fame.

A well-known actress is reported to have recently undergone a thirty days' fast in Chicago in order to melt her too, too solid flesh, from two hundred pounds down to the graceful proportions of an ideal leading woman. The lady in question is evidently averse to fat parts.

M. A. Kennedy, who won warm expressions of praise generally last season for his portrayal of the much-be-married Otto Brinkerhoff, in A Possible Case, will have his name in bigger type than any other in the cast next season. Manager Hill pays this tribute of recognition to the actor's merit. Big type tells.

Lawrence Barrett is annoyed because he is growing fleshy. It seems to be an incident to actors and actresses, of late years, to grow fat. Fanny Davenport is inclined that way. Belle Thorne is getting very plump. Rose Coghlan is no skeleton. Clara Louise Kellogg is very stout. Emma Abbott has the same tendency.

Occasionally a combination selects the capitol city to introduce itself to a Californian public. It is no boast when we say that Sacramento has a critical theater-going public. The City Directory and Easy Street are booked for to-night and Sunday night. There are some sterling comedians connected with the company. We don't know anything about the plays, but if there is any merit to either of them the artists connected with the company are capable of bringing it out.

Ferncliff, from the pen of William Haworth, brother of Joseph Haworth, is a comedy drama founded upon home scenes during the late civil war, presenting none of the horrors in so-called war dramas. All is refined and interesting, and all the characters are true to life, the sweet home life of simple country people. Tom Hewins, the hero, the mainstay of the family, is drafted, and his brother Jim goes as his substitute. Willard Hillton, the rejected suitor of Tom's wife, brings false news of Jim's desertion, which nearly crazes Dad Hewins, the father, and sends Tom to the front. Then comes news of Tom's death, and when two years' time is supposed to elapse Tom's wife consents to marry Willard. On their wedding eve Tom and Jim return, the former from Andersonville prison, the latter covered with glory and wearing the shoulder straps of a Captain. Willard is called away by telegram, and there is a happy reunion of the family. Willard returns, is forgiven by Tom, but commits suicide by flinging himself from a cliff.

There are often scenes enacted at the production of the drama that are not down on the bills. A few evenings since we were of the audience to witness the production of Grismer's new drama, The Burglar, now on the stage at the Bush-street theater of San Francisco. The drama is excellent, and there are many strong dramatic situations throughout the play. It is one of those dramas that have recently become the sensation, and has a strong child's part. Well, on the occasion mentioned, General Hart, of this city, occupied a private box next to the stage, with his wife and family, including his bright little nine-year old daughter, Mamie. This little elf is a child of nature. She fairly bubbles over with the greatest enthusiasm whenever her childish sensibilities are touched. It would almost seem that she is an art critic, from her timely and appropriate demonstrations. The little one was sitting in the front of the box, deeply absorbed in the actions of Editha, the child actress. Her applause was frequent, but finally became rapturously demonstrative. The audience became interested in the natural enthusiasm of the little critic, who was perfectly oblivious to all surroundings, and whose only thought was directed to the child actress on the stage. The audience applauded the outbursts of the little spectator. The actors on the stage paused for a time in admiration of her appreciation and discriminating applause. Actors and audience manifested a pleasure at the purely natural and unselfish applause of the child critic.

There are times when the brightest genius is circumscribed, and no matter what strenuous efforts are put forth, failure attends. The actor's calling is a living illustration of this sentiment. Here we have Rose Coghlan, one of the most accomplished and distinguished artists upon the stage, with two new dramas, making a complete failure. Even when she essayed that splendid comedy, portraying the stage and literature and entries of the last century in Peg Wofington, the gloom that surrounded the failure of Joselyn hung over the production of Masks and Faces, and even the wit and sparkle of Peg Wofington could not raise a faint recognition of the divine art. The indomitable spirit of the grand actress, Miss Coghlan, made a final effort to enlist public favor by presenting Conflicts, a new drama never produced on any stage. It is a French creation, and was written by Edward Cadol. The artist sought to please by newness and novelty, but again the fates were against her. Critics condemned the play, and the public followed the critics; thus Conflicts fell in the conflict of public disfavor. There is a spell over the San Franciscan public at this time, which calls only for such creations as those of Joe Murphy and Ed. Harrigan. A high order of drama and finished art work is at a discount. The knock down and drag out Irish comedy, or Dutch dialect speciality, has the grip on the theater-going populace, and the legitimate drama, however well put on the stage, must be retired. The Burglar does, however, make a slight exception to this rule, because it comes under the rage lately created for child heroes and heroines.

Book Chat.

"Beatrice" is the title of the new novel which Mr. Rider Haggard will begin to publish next January. It is a love story.

Tennyson and Swinburne write wretched hands. The laureate's chirography is large and uneven, while Swinburne's looks like the work of a school boy.

The "George Truman Kercheval" who wrote a successful book called "Lorin Mooruck and other Indian Stories," is said to be a young lady named Winifred Jennings.

Brander Matthews has a collection of dramatic literature which, though small compared to that of some collectors, is made up of very choice volumes. The rarest of these he keeps behind glass doors on velvet-lined shelves.

Secretary James G. Blaine has lived about twenty-eight years at the national capital in official life and yet he has never joined a club. He has carried one most of the time, however, and has often used it. It is American, you know.

Thomas Bailey Aldrich's dainty little poem "Baby Bell," was refused by the Knickerbocker Magazine and other periodicals, and was finally published in the New York Journal of Commerce, a strange place for the publication of such a poem. The poet was paid $5 for it. He has since received as much as $1,200 for a short poem, not so long and not so good as "Baby Bell." Such is fame.

In these days, when so many women who ought to be washing dishes are giving vent to their crude conceptions in what are known as erotico-pessimistic novels, it is pleasing to read the following words, from the preface of Laura Jean Libbey's latest book: "I write of men as I find them—loyal, noble and brave, with a chivalrous reverence for true womanhood, and who hold that purity in woman is the rose-bloom that jewels her existence." Laura is a literary dewdrop which sparkles in a field of dank and noisome weeds. The male sex owes a debt of gratitude to Miss Libbey. She ought to have a chaplet of roses from the men about town.

Edgar Saltus says that the works of fiction he likes best are the Old and New Testaments. Saltus has written some very strange and harsh things. His novels have generally been of that class that would not address themselves to a moral community. He is daring and brilliant, however, and the emanations from his pen are eagerly devoured by the reading public, even in the face of their doubtful moral lessons. The newest novel of Saltus, "The Pace That Kills," is free in a measure from the suggestion of immorality. In this he pictures a good woman, something, it has been said, he was incapable of doing. He also draws a splendid picture of the character of a dissolute youth, and the damning influence of the prodigal use of wealth to foster an inordinate propensity for high living and dissoluteness. Mr. Saltus is getting in a moral strain.

Referring to W. D. Howell's recent allusions to Sir Walter Scott, the Saturday Review has the following bitter sarcasm: "A fairy tale of the old sort might be written to this effect: Once there was a rich American merchant who had three daughters. All were beautiful; but the youngest, the Bud, was his favorite. On his deathbed he called them together and said: 'My dear daughters, I am busted up on Chicago Preferreds. I have nothing left for you but these three books. To you, Morlina, I give Monsieur Flaubert's 'Madame Bovary.' It is one impassioned cry of the austere morality,' Mr. Howells says: 'and, my dear girl, you need it all! To you, Felicia, I present 'The Quick or the Dead,' by Miss Amélie Rives. She is 'Our American Female Shakespeare'; I read that in the papers. Follow her maid, called Barbara—vous irez loin. And for you, Emma, I have kept a bad old book; but you will not be harmed by it,' he said, addressing the Bud. 'It is 'The Heart of Midlothian,' by a man who had a wicked feudal title, Sir Walter Scott. I should be very culpable if I did not warn you that the author was a blind Jacobite, and intensely devoted to the institutions of his country and his time. But you are warned.' Here the merchant expired, and the fairy tale would trace his daughter's adventures. Which young lady would you prefer to follow through life?"

Even in his old age Montaigne was a gay, cheerful, untiring traveler, always eager to be going on, delighted with every place he visited, and yet anxious for constant change of scene and for new experience. To be amusingly and simply selfish is ever part of the charm of Montaigne. He adds to his reader's pleasure in life by the keenness with which he relished his own existence, and savored every little incident as a man relishes the bouquet of wine. Without selfishness, how can this be managed? and without perfect simplicity and the good faith on which he prided himself, how could Montaigne, how could Pepys, have enriched the world as they have done? His essays are among the few works that really and literally make life more opulent with accumulated experience, criticism, reflection, humor. He gives of his rich nature, his lavish exuberance of character, out of that fresh and puissant century to this rather weary one, just as his society in youth might have been given to the sick old man. Besides what he has to give in this manner, Montaigne seems to express French character, to explain the French genius and the French way of looking at life more clearly and completely than any other writer. He has at bottom the intense melancholy, the looking forward to the end of all, which is the ground note of the poetry of Villon and of Ronsard, as of the prose of Chateaubriand. The jangled library in Montaigne's chateau was carved with mottoes, which were to be charms against too great fear of death. "For my part," he says, "if a man could by any means avoid death, were it by hanging a calf skin on his limbs, I am one that would not be ashamed of the shift." Happy it is, he thinks, that we do not, as a rule, meet death on a sudden, any more than we encounter the death of youth in one day. But this is only the dark background of the enjoyment of life, to which Montaigne clings, as he says, "even too eagerly." Merely to live, merely to muse over this spectacle of the world, simply to feel, even if the thing felt be agony, and to reflect on the pain, and on how it may best be borne—this is enough for Montaigne. This is his philosophy, reconciling in a way the maxims of the schools that divided the older worlds, the theories of the Stoic and wiser Epicurean. To make each moment yield all that it has of experience, and of reflection on that experience, is his system of existence.

Professional Chat.

When Bill Nye was in Paris he promised to attend a reception and assist Mrs. Shaw to entertain the company. Something happened to prevent our William from going, and when Mrs. Shaw met him here she chided him for his negligence. "I had to take care of your share of the entertainment as well as my own," she said, "and I shall retaliate, some time, by asking you to entertain somebody for me." "I will do it with pleasure," responded the gallant William. "I assure you I have often whistled for a queen." "Ah, then you held three," promptly replied la belle siffleuse, "I'm something of a poker player myself."

A number of years ago the writer was present at Santa Cruz during an important murder trial, where the defendant was represented by N. Greene Curtis. We think that the management of this case was the master-piece of his life, and far surpasses his efforts in the famous Laura D. Fair trial. The defendant was a young man with a beautiful wife and child. The evidence against the defendant was of the most damaging character, and it seemed that a conviction was inevitable. The sentiment of the community was set against the defendant. But Curtis had a way of snatching victory from defeat, and the result of the trial disclosed the fact that he did so in this case. For weeks before the trial he made research into the pedigree of each juror summoned, until he had each man's history at his memory's command. Then came the day of trial, and the defense marked out was an alibi. The court-room was each day crowded with ladies and gentlemen. Curtis seemed to be inspired. He opened the case with a degree of magnetism seldom witnessed. He paid a grand tribute to the people, to the beautiful sea coast and beach, and to everything pertaining to the community. He painted the crime as black as Erebus, and was unsparing of anyone who would perpetrate such an outrage and cowardly assassination. Then came his inspired argument to the jury. He touched the weak place in the composition of every juror, and around and around he went, addressing each juror separately. But he found that every time he came to a certain old puritanical fellow, there was a break in his magnetic chain. He tried again and again to cast the electric charm over the old hard-shell, for he felt certain of the other jurors. Just at this juncture the little tot got down from his mother's lap, and, being attracted by Curtis' actions in speaking to the jury, ran up to him, clasped one little arm about his knee, and with the other held up a piece of candy some person had given her, for him to take. Curtis stopped short, looked for an instant at the child, then at the audience, then at the jury, but never spoke a word. The effect was electric. There was not a dry eye in the courtroom; the women gave out uncontrollable sobs. That silent eloquence was grand—indescribably grand. Then he drew his own picture, and asked the jurors if they were fathers, and could find it in their hearts to make that child an orphan. With all this the old hard-shell remained obdurate, and as unmoved as the hills. At length Curtis roused himself for one more effort, and with tears and emotion actually knelt down and prayed long and fervently at the feet of the obdurate juror, when all at once tears came trickling down his cheeks, and he too was entangled in the electric chain. After the case was over, and the young man acquitted, Curtis said to the writer: "Do you know that it was a hard struggle to capture the puritanical old ass? Why, I was actually compelled to pray, and ordinarily it would have been ridiculous." And, said the Judge: "When I got him I thought of an event in the life of the elder Booth, who had no equal in his personation of Richard III. Well, Mr. Booth was to play his favorite character at Manchester, in England, which was a great place for manufacturing buttons. On the opening night the house was crowded, and Booth just let himself loose, but not a sign of applause followed his efforts. The audience was as silent as the tomb. He tried again and again, still no emotion or recognition. Driven to despair, he made an almost superhuman effort, and this time caught the entire audience at once. The applause was loud and continued. After the tumult, Booth, in his eccentric way, stepped to the footlights and said: 'What do you think of that, you damned button-makers?' Then he left the stage and would not finish the play. Now," continued Curtis; "I felt like Booth in that act, and wanted to say, out loud, after my fervent prayer: 'What do you think of that, you d—d old hard-shell?'"

KICKING AT A DEAD LION.

It looks as if there is an unnecessary and almost indecent effort being made by some newspapers to create a public sentiment in the trials that may grow out of the killing of David S. Terry. We expressed our opinion upon the subject last week, and have now nothing to add. We feel that confidence in our Courts that no injustice will be done to any party affected when a trial shall have been had. The matter is now one of ancient history; we can see no good in continually harping on it, and for one editor to express an ill-digested opinion, another to copy it with an endorsement, and the endorsement re-endorsed. Neagle will be tried in our Courts. We do not understand that the shaping of judicial determinations rests with the persons who write in newspapers—persons who may be warped by the pettiest prejudice or the most potential power behind the throne. We have not endorsed many acts of Terry, and particularly his assault on Mr. Justice Field; yet the man is in his grave, and we respect not those who kick at dead lions. Here are some samples of "calm expressions of judgment" that are now being presented to the people, written by men who doubtless would quail and cower at the shaking of Terry's little finger were he in life:

"It (the Neagle shot) closed a criminal career, distinguished by shameless infamies. The cold-blooded blackguard belonged to a class of treacherous and brutal ruffians, who, unwept and unregretted, are passing rapidly away. His fate is bewailed by none but his boon companions, and a few surviving confederates in successive conspiracies against society and government. * * * But why expose the shameless audacity of the blackguard who sought, with favorable opportunities, to make his crimes conspicuous? From his first warwhoop in border fray to the last crowning infamy of his diabolical and disreputable life, he was a predatory soldier of fortune, intent upon the bad eminence he attained. With the treachery of an Apache Indian, he had the courage which comes from the "trick of the weapon" and superior physical strength. * * * With the hanging mark of Cain upon him, the apostate Judge, who never felt nor feigned a moral obligation or loyal sentiment, withdrew from subordinate conspiracies against Northern men and institutions in California, to join a more gigantic confederacy against the nation. Having shared the crimes and licks of the rebellion and tarried for the benefit of robust health two years in Mexico, he returned to the State in whose penitentiary he should have spent the seven years of his absence. He came back a sadder and sourer, but not a better man."

Any man of intelligence will justify the conduct of Neagle. As we said last week, had he not acted as he did, and had Mr. Justice Field been killed, Neagle would have been exonerated. Terry was wrong; Field did nothing that warranted his arrest—it was simply an attempt to humiliate and him. We very much doubt if Mr. Justice Field endorses this cowardly vituperation against the dead. His estimate of Terry, which we published last week, was dignified and truthful, and was given to the world during the lifetime of Terry. The vice of this cowardly abuse that is now being indulged in is that it is very likely to create sympathy for Terry, in that his lips are sealed—he cannot reply.

Inventor of the Thermometer.

The actual inventor of the thermometer is not known. The honor of inventing it has been given to several natural philosophers—to Galileo, to Drebbel, to Sanctorio, to Paulo Sarpi and to Robert Fludd. The claims of Robert Fludd are more tangible than those of Drebbel, Sanctorio or Sarpi, but the instrument invented by Galileo, before 1597, seems best entitled to be considered the precursor of accurate thermometers. All the earlier instruments were air thermoscopes, and until the variation of atmospheric pressure was discovered their use was only deceptive. The great step in advance of inventing the alcohol thermometer is also due to Galileo, but the date (probably 1611 or 1612) is not precisely known. Edward Halley introduced mercury as the liquid for the instrument in 1680.

Ferdinand Guzman, the most famous bandit in Spain, is a dwarf who at one time kept a small store in Granada. He became angered at some action taken by the authorities and took to the mountains. He is hideously ugly in appearance and utterly unscrupulous. The romantic chivalry attributed to Spanish bandits does not apply to him at all. He has gathered about him a crew of the worst cutthroats in Europe and over them he reigns supreme. The Spanish Government has determined to arrest him and his followers.

NOTES.

Fifty thousand women voted at the recent Kansas elections. Many women were elected to office. The woman suffrage idea is fast gaining favor in the public eyes.

Astronomers say that there are several comets flitting around in the neighborhood of this terrestrial sphere. One is said to be a comet that has lost its tail—a bob-tailed harbinger of evil. The learned men are discussing the question as to how this vagrant wanderer lost his caudal appendage.

Constantine, heir to the Greek throne, is 22 years of age—very handsome and of fascinating manners. He is extremely fond of military affairs. He is of a literary turn of mind, and can read and speak English, French, German, Russian and Danish. He is destined to make a popular ruler.

There exists a prophecy—a superstition, rather—emanating from what astrologers read in the stars, that the month of August is fraught with troubles: "There will be many sad accidents and troubles, many murders and violent atmospheric disturbances. The weather is likely to be hot, with heavy storms of rain and thunder. There will be much sickness, but the number of deaths will be below the average. August will be a month of stirring events and accidents throughout the world."

If our brave policemen do not succeed in securing their salaries it will not be the fault of Judge Armstrong. The cases involving the question have been heard and determined in nisi prius, with a promptness seldom found in litigation. The last case, involving some intricate constitutional points, was submitted on Tuesday, and the next day a full exposition of the law, in a written opinion, was filed by the Judge, granting the writ of mandate, directing the Board of Trustees to levy the tax prayed for. There is nothing so commendable in courts as the prompt and rapid disposition of court matters.

One of the daughters of the late Brigham Young has come out in defense of polygamy. She compares families reared on monogamous principles with families reared in polygamy, and claims that she has seen and known more real happiness in the latter than in the former. She says she loved all her father's numerous wives, and has been devotedly attached to all her brothers and sisters. It is rather a strange position for a woman to take, particularly if she is intelligent. We cannot conceive how any woman can favor a division of her husband's affections. Miss Young will find that she is championing a cause that has no considerable support in this age; it should have none.

The Canadian Pacific line of steamers from Vancouver to Japan have now been running for a little over a year, says the Canadian Manufacturer, and are completely cutting out the Pacific mail steamers under the United States flag which sail from San Francisco. The rates of freight are much the same, yet in the past tea season the Canadian Pacific steamers carried 5,357,944 pounds of Japan tea, against only 735,265 pounds carried by their American rivals, and the curious circumstance is that more than nine-tenths of this tea is consumed in the United States. Not in tea only, but in all other goods is the preference given to the Canadian line, which now carries a large part of the transcontinental traffic, as well as that destined for the United States.

It is stated that the mandamus proceedings relating to the levying of a tax for the payment of the policemen's salaries, just decided by Judge Armstrong, will be appealed to the Supreme Court. The other case, which was decided on demurrer, and which is a direct action at law for the payment of the salaries out of the general fund, has not yet reached a judgment. It is not probable that anything will arise to change the Judge's opinion on the merits, hence an appeal will also have to be taken in that case in order to be consistent. There is a disposition on the part of many taxpayers to accept the ruling of Judge Armstrong as final, and meet the obligation incurred by the Police Commissioners. The Board of Trustees will probably set the matter at rest on Monday, by either approving the action of counsel in appealing or recalling the same.

We record with gratification the conviction of a saloon keeper in this city for selling liquor to a boy. It is a step in the right direction, and no well meaning person can adversely criticize it. We have always advocated the severest restrictions on dives—we have suggested the passage of ordinances that would have the effect to absolutely close them. If the city authorities would do their duty in this regard, the public would not be shocked by the publication of the depravity of young girls in visiting questionable drinking places—an instance of which was recorded by the press as having occurred this week in a K street dive. It is very apparent, from the result of the case of this man who violated the law by selling liquor to a minor, that our jurors are now in a frame of mind to do their duty if the facts establishing guilt are reasonably presented to them, and it is evident that the law or ordinance has been violated. The fault now lies with the municipal authorities; if they act intelligently and firmly it will soon be that Sacramento city will not be stained by a single dive.

The final determination of the cases of Drager and Olsen by the Supreme Court, and the expressed determination of Governor Waterman that he will not interfere to prevent the execution of the death penalty, suggests the advisability of a change in the manner of the infliction of the extreme punishment. It is possible that a practical test under the new law of New York, of the infliction of death by electricity, will be so satisfactory that it will be adopted from motives of humanity. It is certainly true that hanging is repulsive, particularly as it has been inflicted. We believe that so long as that character of punishment is recognized by law its infliction should be at a State prison, and only in the presence of selected officers. No good has resulted, or can result, from the gratification of morbid curiosity by publications of the details of the execution of criminals. As now inflicted, hanging is but a relic of barbarism. We are not contending that the death penalty should not be inflicted in punishment for the commission of certain crimes, but we question the mode of its infliction. When John D. Lee was to be executed in Utah for his connection with the Mountain Meadow massacre, he was given his choice of three modes of death—hanging, shooting or beheading. He selected shooting—a most natural choice. The laws of this State are, however, unbending—the condemned must be hanged by the neck to death. We hope to soon see a change in our laws providing for a more scientific and humane mode of execution.

An American Flag Under Difficulties.

In the year 1865 after it was thought that the Atlantic cable enterprise was a failure, an expedition, under command of Col. E. S. Bulkeley was sent out by the company to ascertain the possibility of establishing a telegraph line on the Siberian side. While up in that region the members of the expedition frequently met some exceedingly intelligent natives as well as occasional traders. In 1866, on July 4th, the expedition was far advanced to the north and virtually without the pale of all civilized life. But even in this desolate locality the spirit of "76" seized upon them and they determined to have a celebration of our natal day. Everything was arranged, but there was no national emblem—no flag. This was a dilemma indeed. One of the company, however, bethought himself of some silk handkerchiefs of the tricolors, and formulated the idea of converting them into a flag. In the neighborhood of the camp were a number of natives including a very bright Indian girl about 16 years of age. She was addressed and a diagram of what was desired presented to her, whereupon she took the handkerchiefs and set to work making a flag. The stripes and field of blue were neatly made and were in fact perfect. When it came to the stars on the blue ground there was apparently nothing of which they could be made. The little Indian girl, however, was equal to the emergency and overcame the difficulty by drawing white threads from the silk and working the same into stars in the most artistic manner. The celebration was a success, and the fine silk flag and its maker were cheered to the echo. The expedition then went on to New Westminster, where the news came of the ultimate success of the Atlantic cable, thus rendering the further efforts of the expedition useless, and they returned in 1868. Col. Bulkeley kept the memorable flag, brought it to this city, where, in 1868, he presented it to Captain Wm. M. Siddons, who still possesses it. We were permitted to examine this singularly improvised national emblem, and found the work exquisite. The thirty-five stars are models of workmanship, and show perfectly from both sides. The silk in the body of the flag and stripes, although now nearly 24 years old, preserves its colors remarkably well. Captain Siddons prizes this little memento very highly. It has been suggested that he donate it to the Sacramento Art Museum. R. A. Fisk, one of our fellow-townsmen, was a member of that memorable expedition to the Arctic regions.

The sea serpent has been killed, according to authentic reports from Panama, but no sooner was it dead than it proceeded deliberately to sink before its carcass could be secured as a guarantee of good faith. A sea serpent which will come up to a ship, and then sink the top of its ugly head blown off and then sink out of sight is no friend of man. It cannot hope for any sympathy whatever, and very properly goes to its grave uncoffined, unhonored and unused.

GENERAL NEWS ITEMS.

There are extensive forest fires raging in Sierra county.

The Ute Indians are committing depredations in Colorado.

General Dimond has resigned the position of Park Commissioner at San Francisco.

President Harrison has visited Indiana and Ohio, and after royal receptions, returned to Deer Park.

The State Government of Coahuila has been declared illegal by the Courts. More trouble may be expected.

An important discovery of natural illuminating gas has been made on the farm of Captain Boyes, near Sonoma. This gas looks and burns like artificial coal gas.

The final trial of the "Charleston" is evidently a success. She has made over nineteen knots. She is now on her trial trip and was sighted at Santa Barbara yesterday.

Again we are informed that Legitime's power is waning. This has become so frequent that it amounts to ancient history. The revolution still exists in Hayti, notwithstanding these rumors.

Jimmy Hope, the bank burglar, was released from Auburn, N. Y., penitentiary yesterday morning, the sentence for the crime for which he was extradited from this State having expired. He has gone to New York.

A riot is imminent at Mount Pleasant, S. C., between the whites and blacks, because of the shooting of a negro woman by a white man. Two companies of State troops have been ordered out. The man who shot the woman is named Shaffer. The negroes threaten to storm the jail and lynch him.

Sir Alexander Galt of Montreal was interviewed on the Behring Sea troubles. He don't think anything serious is likely to happen. The United States catches seals, England manufactures sealskins and Germany gets the profits. With this view it seems easy to avert a disastrous war. Canada will have more trouble with the United States about railroad traffic than the Behring Sea seizures.

Other trades are joining the striking dockmen. The carmen of Pickford & Co., general carriers and agents of the London and Northwestern and other railroad companies, are joining them. The laborers in Spratt's biscuit factory have struck, causing the entire stoppage of the works. All classes of unskilled labor in London threaten to join the strike. Trouble is feared. The police are preparing for a possible emergency.

The St. James Gazette, which supports the Government, devotes a long editorial to the subject of the seizures, and says: "If the United States desires to produce very strained relations with Great Britain, they are achieving a large measure of success. The seizures, which are eminently unfriendly and provoking, may, if persevered with, lead at any moment to a rupture of diplomatic relations between the two countries. The Washington Government should not trade too far on the assumption that John Bull tamely submits to constant indignities." The journal strongly suggests the submission of the Atlantic and Pacific fishery disputes to an impartial tribunal of able diplomatists.

Pearls of Reflection.

One may ruin himself by frankness, but one surely dishonors himself by duplicity.—[Viellard.]

A woman whose ruling passion is not vanity is superior to any man of equal capacity.—[Levater.]

It is a great misfortune not to have enough wit to speak well, or not enough judgment to keep silent.—[La Bruyere.]

Good qualities are the substantial riches of the mind, but it is good breeding that sets them off to advantage.—[Locke.]

It is heaven upon earth to have a man's mind move in charity, rest on Providence and turn upon the poles of truth.—[Bacon.]

Of all the gifts that nature can give us the faculty of remaining silent or of answering apropos is perhaps the most useful.—[Mme. Campan.]

Receive no satisfaction for premeditated impertinence. Forget it, forgive it, but keep him inexorably at a distance who offered it.—[Levater.]

He that does not know those things which are of use and necessity for him to know is but an ignorant man, whatever he may know besides.—[Tillotson.]

Nothing is so great an instance of ill-manners as flattery. If you flatter all the company you please none; if you flatter only one or two you affront the rest.—[Swift.]

We should love our friends as true amateurs love pictures; they keep their eyes perpetually fixed on the fine points and do not see the defects.—[Mme. Dufresnoy.]

God takes men's hearty desires and will instead of the deed, where they have not the power to fulfill it; but he never took the bare deed instead of the will.—[Baxter.]

At the workingman's house hunger looks in, but dares not enter, nor will the bailiff or the constable enter, for industry pays debts as despair increaseth them.—[Franklin.]

FLASHES.

Truth is mighty—scarce.
The first national flower was the May-flower.
We believe in an omen—when it has a "w" before it.
"Poets are born"—poor fellows, they couldn't help it.
Policemen and gamblers are kindred spirits—they are both on the beat.
Editors will never go to heaven—they have too much happiness on this earth.

If we could see all our thoughts for a single day in print what a sensation it would make.

The countryman generally distinguishes himself by blowing in his coin and blowing out the gas.

When a young lady begins to manifest an interest in the arrangement of a young man's cravat his bachelor days are numbered.

The David of our scripture must have been a Republican. We read in the Bible where "David pleadeth for protection."

The crank who inflicts his fool notions on the public is not half so bad as the one who reserves his for the bosom of his family.

A Texas paper declares that corn brings the best price when it is sold as bacon. Possibly; but in the Lone Star State the demand is greater when it is sold as sour mash.

Senator Vance tells a story of a white man tried in North Carolina for stealing chickens from a negro, before a jury composed of seven whites and five blacks. A negro was made foreman, and when the jury came in, answered the clerk: "Have you agreed upon a verdict?" "Yes, sah." "Well, what is it?" "De jury am gone democratic, sah, and de prisoner am not guilty."

Society of Pioneers of New England.

A letter has just been received by the Sacramento Society of Pioneers from the Society of California Pioneers of New England through Wm. H. Thomes, the President, inviting representatives of the Sacramento Society to be present at a dinner to be given at Boston on September 9th. The letter says: "We hope to be in your city in April, 1890, as the enclosed prospectus will show, and we hope that your Society will give the New England Pioneers a fraternal hand shake." The Boston Society now numbers 270 members. The President, Mr. Thomes, is the well-known writer, and we believe visited this coast many years before the gold discovery. He re-visited us recently. Hon. John Conness, one of the Directors, represented California in the United States Senate. In the event of the excursion referred to next year, it is proposed that they will remain in Sacramento three days, "giving all a chance to visit their old mining camps." It is also expected that a reception will be tendered them at the State Capitol. The excursion is elaborately planned. We have no doubt if the gentlemen come here they will be received in a manner that will exceed their expectations, and that they will "be filled with wonder at the progress of the human race in the past twenty-five years," and that "it will be something to remember for the remainder of their lives." Leaving this city, they propose to go to San Francisco, quartering at the Palace Hotel for five days, thence going to San José, stopping on the way to visit Senator Stanford's new university, and to look over his stock farm. Other points of interest will be visited on the coast.

Off for Mexico!

Frank A. Smith, the manager of the Sacramento house of Waterhouse & Lester, sails to-day for Mexico. He will be gone five weeks or two months. The trip will be one of vacation. We, in common with his many other friends, wish him an enjoyable jaunt. Mr. Smith is prominent in business and public affairs, and has a wide circle of appreciative friends. It has been a great many years since Mr. Smith has taken to himself a vacation, having devoted his whole time to business affairs.

*Imported Champagne.

It is generally acknowledged that the Perrier-Jouët is one of the best champagnes imported on this coast. The demand for it is constantly increasing. It is pronounced by connoisseurs the most popular wine. It is for sale by all first-class wine merchants and grocers. W. B. Chapman, No. 123 California street, San Francisco, is the sole agent for the Pacific Coast.

Nothing in life for an old maid? Why, bless my soul, even the men that day looked upon this calm cool maiden lady, and wished in their hearts that they were old maids. For my part, I have never been to a ball or a dinner, or on sea or land, or on mountain top or beach, without finding somewhere a lovely, charming, intelligent old maid who was a delight to every one about her.

LOCAL BREVITIES.

Tony Gerber, convicted of selling liquor to minors, was fined $30.

A large number of old awnings have been condemned by Inspector Starr.

The Central Street Railway Company will have twelve new cars next month.

Mayor Gregory has been elected President of Sacramento Parlor, No. 3, N. S. G. W.

The Board of Education met last night but nothing of importance occurred except the payment of some bills.

Miss Ida Beufey, a niece of Governor Waterman, gave a recital of Elaine at Oakland last night. She is described as beautiful and with a matchless voice.

The decision of Judge Armstrong in the habeas corpus matter of Dan Conant and Ed. Hogau, charged with burglary at Elk Grove, will be rendered Monday.

The alarm of fire turned in about one o'clock to-day was for an old barn in the alley between N and O and Fifth and Sixth streets. Very little damage was done.

The Board of Trade has named E. J. Gregory, P. E. Platt, Chas. McCreary, C. A. Luhrs and David Lubin delegates to the commercial conference to be held at San Francisco.

As the time for holding the annual State Fair is close at hand, the city has become infested with sneak thieves and burglars. Our citizens should be unusually cautious and keep sharp look out for these pests.

The Press Association of Central and Northern California will assemble at Sacramento September 9th. Joseph Steffens will deliver the address of welcome, Mayor Gregory making the opening address at the "Press" supper.

Hon. Joseph McKenna, Congressman from this district, has been confined to his home at Suisun for five weeks, from an accidental injury to his knee, received while out hunting. It is thought that he will be able to be about next week.

"Detective" Cone is again arranged before the bar of justice for crookedness. He is charged with larceny of $50 from a Chinaman by trick and fraud. It is understood the City Attorney intends putting a "prior conviction" against him, which will make the charge a felony.

Hon. Robert T. Devlin, President of the State Prison Commission, left for the East Thursday, for the purpose of making an investigation of reformatory institutions. The object of Mr. Devlin's tour of observation is to obtain information to be utilized in the establishment of a Reform School in this State. He will visit nearly all the Eastern States, and expects to return home about November 1st.

Proposed New Charter.

It must be apparent to those who were opposed to a new organic law for the government of this city, that we are greatly in need of the same now. The serious conflict arising on account of the several commissions existing under our present form of government have developed the necessity for a change. Our license and ordinance system, in addition to the inconsistencies of the charter with the State Constitution, make a new organic law necessary. It may be said that there is yet plenty of time for the consideration of this matter, but it is better to deal with the vital questions which will present themselves in framing a new charter in a careful manner. The Constitution allows ninety days for the freeholders in preparing a charter for submission to the people. Thirty days are then given for publication. Now, it would not be out of place to have an election for fifteen freeholders at a very early date, and allow them plenty of time in the consideration of the important questions that must per force arise in framing a charter. The fifteen freeholders should be non-partisan, and the respective political party committees should see to it that the ablest and best informed citizens should be selected to act in this capacity. We are glad to see the leaders of the Improvement Association enlisted in this cause. The great opposition in the past came from that organization. The charter can be carefully prepared and be submitted to a vote of the people in plenty of time before the convening of the next Legislature.

The Irish Flag of Fontenoy.

There hangs to-day from the wall of the Hotel des Invalides, in Paris, one of the flags carried by the Irish Brigade on that field of Fontenoy where Irish valor turned defeat into a victory for the French army. That flag is the property of the French nation, and the Second Battalion of Irish Volunteers, whose headquarters are in New York, has resolved to petition the French Minister at Washington that the flag be presented to its organization, as descendants of the men who served France so faithfully on that memorable 11th day of May, 1742. The idea originated with Captain P. J. Coleman, commanding the Grattan Guards, and will be acted on immediately.

PERSONAL.

Fred. Cox left for Shasta yesterday.

Geo. A. Blanchard has gone to the Bay city.

Father Gualco left for the East this week on a visit.

Mrs. Joseph Hahn returned home Thursday morning from a three months' visit to Indiana and other Eastern States.

J. B. Harris and E. Fitzpatrick, of Polson, are delegates to the Grand Council of the Young Men's Institute at Oakland.

Trustee McLaughlin and wife gave a birthday party to their little daughter on Thursday. A large number of masters and misses were present.

Mrs. W. A. Butterfield gave a very enjoyable party Wednesday evening to her daughter, Alice. Mrs. Butterfield leaves Sacramento the first of September to rejoin her husband, who is in business in Portland, Oregon.

Alarming Increase of Cigarette Smoking.

An examination of the reports of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue brings out many facts of interest. The one we wish specially to consider at this time is that relating to the consumption of cigarettes. Here are the figures under this head:

Fiscal Year.	Number.
1878-79	238,276,817
1879-80	408,708,365
1880-81	567,395,983
1881-82	554,544,186
1882-83	637,021,653
1883-84	908,090,723
1884-85	1,058,749,238
1885-86	1,310,961,350
1886-87	1,584,505,200
1887-88	1,862,726,100
1888-89	2,151,515,360

The way this business is increasing, while gratifying to manufacturers and sellers, is not so encouraging to those who look upon the alleged evil effects of too much cigarette smoking, especially as a great proportion of this is done by minors, mere children in too many cases.

It will be noticed that in the first four years, the number of cigarettes smoked was more than doubled. It will be hard to find a parallel in any other article of consumption. In 1884-85 over 1,000,000,000 of these cigarettes ended their days in smoke from the mouths of the people. That was the first year that so large a number had been consumed, and many thought the progress of consumption thereafter would be less rapid, as it is more difficult to double up on a larger than on a smaller number. Those who have been making such calculations are no doubt disappointed by the facts given in the above table. In the past four years there has been another doubling up of cigarette consumption. The 1,000,000,000 of 1884-85 became over 2,000,000,000 in 1888-89. The population of the country does not increase in any such ratio by a long way. The inevitable conclusion is that the circle of smokers is widening at a more rapid rate than the increase of population justifies. Possibly, also, the habit grows on those addicted to it faster than they realize. The facts here presented deserve the attention of all thoughtful people.—S. F. Bulletin.

Moral Maxims.

If we were one-tenth as good as the judgments whereby we judge others we should be angels.

Most people want to be good, but don't know how. Most people who fall are victims of circumstances.

The reason some men never stole $100,000 is because they never had a chance.

People are apt to use spectacles to observe others' faults rather than looking-glasses to behold their own.

Mean people are always the first to detect meanness in others.

Pray more and scold less.

Samuel J. Tilden had a marvelous memory. A friend who was with him at the time says that while sitting at the side of the casket in which the body of Horace Greeley reposed, Mr. Tilden recounted the deathbed scene, with date and place and minute circumstances, of every President and Vice-President of the United States. All the facts he related were afterwards verified without exception.

SNOWFLAKE PARK.

Twenty-eighth and R Streets.

BASEBALL—CALIFORNIA LEAGUE.

Sunday August 25, 1889
At 2 o'clock P. M., sharp,

Sacramento v. Stockton

Prices of admission: Men, 50 cents; ladies, 25 cents; small boys, 10 cents; reserved seats, 25 cents—can be obtained any time at H. C. Megerle's News Depot, Fourth street, between J and K, or at Park before the game.

Trains leave depot at 12:45, 1:05, 1:25 and 1:45—stopping at Third, Tenth and Eighteenth sts. Fare, for round trip, 15 cents.

Admission to Park (including fare both ways), 50 cents.

California State Bank

DOES A GENERAL BANKING BUSINESS.

Draws Exchange on all the Principal Cities of the World.

OFFICERS:
PRESIDENT.....N. D. RIDEOUT
VICE-PRESIDENT.....FRED'K COX
CASHIER.....A. ABBOTT
ASSISTANT CASHIER.....W. E. GERBER

DIRECTORS:
C. W. Clarke, Jos. Steffens, N. D. Rideout,
Geo. C. Perkins, J. R. Watson, Frederick Cox,
W. E. Gerber.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

THE CARS OF THE CENTRAL STREET RAILWAY COMPANY will only stop at the further crossings.

There will Always be Cars Waiting at the Close of Both Theaters.

THE NEW PAVILION

At South Sacramento will be open on SUNDAY, the 4th of August, and at all times thereafter.

Refreshments of all kinds always on hand.

Fine Table Wines
From our Celebrated Orleans Vineyard.
Produced by the
ECLIPSE
CHAMPAGNE,
530 Washington St.
SAN FRANCISCO.

CHAMPAGNE

W. B. CHAPMAN,
123 California St. San Francisco.

SOLE AGENT FOR THE PACIFIC COAST.

100 case by all first-class Wine Merchants and Grocers.

Samples and Instructions for self-measurement sent by mail on application.

L. RADLOFF,
LADIES' TAILOR,
218 POST STREET, SAN FRANCISCO.
Tailor Made Suits a Specialty.

A. AITKEN,

PREMIUM PIONEER MARBLE AND GRANITE WORKS

423 J Street, bet. 4th and 5th, Sacramento.

Costly Tile, etc. Cemetery lots enclosed with Granite. All kinds of work done in Italian and Vermont Marble. Direct importer of Scotch and Eastern Granite Monuments. Also, Marble, Slate, Wooden and Iron Mantels, direct from manufacturers, at Reduced Prices. Call and examine.

SLANDER.

'Twas but a breath—
And yet a woman's fair name wilted,
And friends, once warm, grew cold and stilted,
And life was worse than death.

One venomed word,
That struck a coward, poisoned blow,
In craven whispers, hushed and low,
And yet the wide world heard.

'Twas but one whisper—one—
And muttered low, for very shame,
The thing the slanderer dare not name—
And yet its work was done.

A hint so slight,
And yet so mighty in its power
A human soul, in one short hour,
Lies crushed beneath its blight.

The White Slave Trade.

Mme. Paschkoff, who has recently visited the old city of Sinope, on the northern coast of Asia Minor, found there a few wealthy Turks, the inmates of whose household, she says, are beautiful women of Circassia. These favorites of the harem are attended not only by black slaves of both sexes, from the Soudan, but also by older and less comely women from their own country. All are slaves, bought for trade goods or cash, the more fortunate among them to live in luxury and idleness, and the others to perform the menial services of the household.

In spite of Russia's repeated prohibitions of the white slave trade of Circassia, it still seems to flourish. Some years ago it was reported that there was such a glut in the Circassian slave girl market in Constantinople that prices had fallen about three-fourths. Mme. Paschkoff has given some attention to the means by which the supply of white slaves is maintained.

The trade would probably cease entirely were it not that it is the highest ambition of many a fair Circassian to become an inmate of some luxurious harem far away from her own land. There is among the Circassians an unwritten law that no girl shall be sold without her consent, and the fact is that many of them are eager to be sold, and so their fathers do not hesitate long to accept any tempting offer which the agents from the slave marts may make.

As Russian subjects Circassian girls have no trouble in journeying under the escort of their purchasers to Batoum, the Black Sea port of the Caucasus. Only one to three are taken there at a time by an agent and, if need be, they can assume to be members of his family. In the harem of some important Mohammedan at Batoum the destination of the girls is decided, and in very small parties they are taken to one or another market in the dominions of Turkey. It has been a part of the policy of Russia to profess respect for the usages of her Mohammedan subjects. No surveillance worth mentioning is maintained by Russia over the thousands of harems among the Mohammedans of that vast empire. It is, therefore, easy at Batoum to negotiate for the purchase and sale of these girls; and so long as the trade is quietly conducted Russian officials seem to wink at violations of law, of which they cannot be ignorant, and thus the harems of Turkey are still supplied with their chief ornaments.

Adam's Wooing.

All the facts in regard to Adam's wooing have not been told. There was a deception about it that has not been practiced since. For instance: Adam assured Eve that she was "the loveliest of her sex." There was so much about the statement that was pleasant that Eve did not stop to analyze it and find just how empty the compliment was.

"Yes, my enslaver," he went on, "you are indeed the loveliest of your sex. No woman has ever before made such an impression on my heart. Never, till I saw you, did I realize what womanly beauty was."

"No woman's eyes have thrilled but thine. This faithful heart of mine!"

"Are you sure you never told any woman this but me?" inquired Eve.

"Fair one, I swear it."

And in this way he went on, till Eve thought that if she were the handsomest woman in all the world she must indeed be very beautiful.

The sensation of Berlin is, just now, a young Cossack giantess, who is being exhibited at the popular "Passage Panopticon." The girl, who is eleven years old, is nearly three yards high; she weighs twenty stone, and is still growing very rapidly. She is very pretty, with large dark eyes and a pleasant face, and in the national costume of the Don Cossacks, which consists of a red skirt, blue jacket, long apron embroidered in gold, and necklaces of many colors, she captures everybody's heart. But since she is still chiefly interested in her dolls and toys, she cannot be said to return the sentiment of her admirers.

According to the St. Louis Republican there are 6,000,000 acres of land uncultivated out of a total acreage of 7,440,000 in the southwestern corner of that State. This vacant land would make 37,500 farms of 160 acres each for settlers, and would sustain not less than a quarter of a million people.

The Stream of Life.

The following passage is from a sermon preached by Bishop Heber to his parishioners a short time before his departure for India, in 1823: "Life bears us on like the stream of a mighty river. Our boat glides down the narrow channels of the placid murmuring of the little brook and the winding of its grassy borders. The trees shed their blossoms over our young heads; the flowers on the brink seem to offer themselves to our young hands. We are happy in hope, and we grasp eagerly at the beauties around us. But the stream hurries on, and still our hands are empty. Our course in youth and manhood is along a wider and deeper flood, and amid objects more striking and magnificent. We are animated by the moving pictures of enjoyment and industry which pass before us; we are excited by some short-lived disappointments, but our energy and our dependency are both in vain. The stream bears us on, and our joys and our griefs are alike left behind us. We may be shipwrecked, but we cannot anchor; our voyage may be hastened, but cannot be delayed. Whether rough or smooth, the river hastens toward its home, till the roar of the ocean is in our ears, the tossing of the waves beneath our keel, and the lands lessen from our eyes and floods are lifted up around us. The earth loses sight of us, and we take our last leave of earth and its inhabitants; and of our further voyage there is no witness but the Infinite and Eternal."

A minister being called upon suddenly to address a Sunday-school, thought he would get a few original ideas from his young hearers. "Children," said he, "I want some of you to tell me what I shall talk to you about to-night. What shall I say?" At first there was no response. "That bright little fellow over there," said he, pointing to a youngster sitting in one of the back seats. "What shall I say to you to-night?" In a little piping voice came the answer: "Say amen! and sit down."

To reduce one's weight, an easy way is to wear a short flannel sweater and ride on a brisk trot. If the horse trots roughly, and the rider bounces up and down in the saddle, so much the better. Ten pounds a week can be lost by this process. The best kind of sweater is made by taking four, six or eight thicknesses of flannel and wrapping them around the loins and lower part of the chest. The upper chest should be left free.

FRIEND & TERRY
LUMBER CO.

Wholesale and Retail Lumber Dealers, Also Shakes, Bolts, Ties, Doors, Windows, Blinds and Screens. Main Yard and Office, No. 1310 Second Street. Branch Yard, corner Twelfth and J Sts. P. O. Box 233. E. J. HOLT, Manager. Sacramento

OSBORN & FOLGER

DEALERS IN
ICE and COAL, HAY and GRAIN.
New 10-ton Fairbanks' Hay Scales.
N. E. cor. Fifth and I Streets.
Wood Yard, 806 I Street.

PUMPS

Our Factory is the Largest and Best Equipped in Northern California.

Our Designs are New and Original and Calculated for Every Variety
of Service.

CAPITAL IRON WORKS,

904 K Street, Sacramento.

PAUL GRAF,

Manufacturer of and
dealer in Saddles, Har-
ness, Robes, Collars,
Whips, Spurs, Brushes,
Currycombs, etc.

1130 J Street, near Twelfth
Repairing Neatly Done.
Harness Made to Order.

SCHOOL.

PUPILS of the Public Schools who wish to review during their vacation will find BAINBRIDGE COLLEGE the place. We make a specialty of Grammar School and High School Studies. No extra charge for Penmanship or Elocution drill. You can attend in the cool part of the day; hours, 8 A. M. to 1 P. M. J. C. BAINBRIDGE, Principal.

No. 1017 J Street, Sacramento.

SECOND HAND

"REMINGTON" TYPE WRITERS

FOR RENT AND FOR SALE.

Type Writers' Supplies of All Kinds.

AT THE

YOST AGENCY, 1007 FOURTH STREET.

L. K. Hammer

THE LEADING
MUSIC DEALER.

AGENT FOR

*Chickering
Pianos.*

Largest Stock of Musical Instruments in the City.

No. 820 J STREET.

W. R. STRONG & CO.

Founded 1852.

Fruit Packers

and Shippers.

PROPRIETORS OF

CAPITAL NURSERIES,

SACRAMENTO, CAL.

CURTIS BROS. & CO.

Wholesale and Retail Dealers in and Shippers of
all kinds of

Fruits, Vegetables

And GENERAL PRODUCE.

Careful attention paid to the selection and packing of Choice Fruits and Vegetables for distant markets.
Goods delivered in city free.

308 and 310 K Street, - - Sacramento, Cal.

R. W. PARKER,

Dealer in Choice Family

GROCERIES and PROVISIONS

Sold at the Lowest Cash Price.

Give him a call and be convinced.

Corner of Seventeenth and N Streets.

Also, Office of the Superintendent of the City Cemetery.

King Bros.

State Capitol Cash Grocery, 131 J Street,
corner Second.

Goods sold on small margin, strictly for cash. Best
Brands of Wines, Liquors and Cigars.

JAS. LONGSHORE,

SACRAMENTO TRUNK FACTORY,

530 K STREET.

Trunks, Valises & Bags Wholesale and Retail.

Waterhouse & Lester

DEALERS IN

IRON, STEEL, CUMBERLAND COAL,

Wagon Lumber and Carriage Hardware,
SACRAMENTO.

Earthquake and Fire Proof
BUILDINGS

Constructed on my patent system. Perfect protection guaranteed. For estimates and particulars see
E. HAWES,
Twelfth and B streets, Sacramento.

$500 REWARD.

PURSUANT to a RESOLUTION OF THE BOARD
of Supervisors of Sacramento county, adopted May 7, 1889, said Board will pay the sum of Five Hundred Dollars ($500) for evidence leading to the arrest and conviction of any party illegally carrying on the business of hydraulic mining on the American river
or its tributaries, in any and all mines or claims
which have been heretofore enjoined by any Court of competent jurisdiction; provided, however, that said
Board will pay but one reward for the arrest and conviction of a person or persons operating the same mine or claim.

Attest:

F. F. TEBBETS,
Chairman of the Board of Supervisors.
W. B. HAMILTON, Clerk of Board.

[SEAL]

A. L. HR T,

ATTORNEY-AT-LAW

Sutter Building, cor. 5th and J.

W. A. ANDERSON,

ATTORNEY-AT-LAW,

No. 209 J Street,

Sacramento.

W. A. GETT, JR.,

Attorney at Law,

Southwest Corner of Seventh and J Streets,

SACRAMENTO, CAL.

F. F. TEBBETS, DENTIST.

No. 914 SIXTH STREET,

Bet. I and J, west side, opp. Congregational Church.

DR. H. H. PIERSON,

SURGICAL & AND & MECHANICAL & DENTIST

511 J Street, bet. 5th and 6th.

Gas administered for the painless extraction of teeth.

Joseph Hahn & Co.,
PHARMACISTS,

S. W. cor. Fifth and J Streets, Sacramento.

CHOICE PERFUMERIES, ETC.

Prescriptions carefully compounded, at all hours.

A. C. SWEETSER & CO.,

Real Estate & Insurance Brokers

Lands For Sale in all parts of the State.

Some Good Investments in School Lands.

Send for Catalogue.

Office, No. 1012 Fourth Street,

SACRAMENTO, CAL.

BELL & CO.,

GENERAL AUCTIONEERS.

Salesroom, 927 K Street, Sacramento, Cal.

Regular Salesdays—Wednesdays and Saturdays at 10
o'clock A. M.

Assistants—W. T. Crowell, Real Estate; J. Pulvermacher, Bookkeeper; J. Lambert, Furniture and Stock.

Particular attention paid to sales of real estate,
house sales, and sales of farms, stock, etc.

Highest price paid for all kinds of household goods.

Barrett & Berkey

PACIFIC RESTAURANT,

OYSTER HOUSE AND

WINE PARLORS

701 J Street, cor. 7th.

J. S. ROSS'

Fourth-Street Restaurant

1023 FOURTH STREET,

Opposite Postoffice, SACRAMENTO.

OYSTERS IN EVERY STYLE.

Meals Cooked to Order,
And served in first-class manner.

NEW ORLEANS GUMBO SOUP THURSDAYS AND SUNDAYS.

I have had years of experience as a restaurateur, and feel confident that I can cater satisfactorily to the tastes of all who may favor me with their patronage.
J. S. ROSS, Proprietor.

CANCERS,

Ulcers, Wens, Lumps, Excesses, etc.,
Positively Cured or no Pay.
No Knife Used.

As to the success of my treatment, I give the names of a few of the many cured. By addressing them
they will give any information required—and it pays
to investigate before being treated.

Mrs. O. C. Neilsen, Grass Valley, cancer.
John Service, Auburn, lupus.
Patrick Lynch, Sacramento, cancer.
Mrs. Jno. Shaw, Grass Val., birthmark removed.
N. S. Peck, S. P. R. R. Sacramento, cancer.
J. L. Woods, Washington, Yolo county, cancer.
John W. Douglas, Rocklin, cancer.
Miss Mamie Lynch, Yolo, tumor removed.
Chas. McLaughlin, Sacramento, cancer.
I might give many more. Those afflicted are invited to call and investigate for themselves. Consultation at office free. Send for circular.
Office, 426 K Street, Sacramento.

DR. J. H. SHIRLEY.

O'BRIEN'S, 607 J.

SWEEPING REDUCTION IN LADIES' SHOES.

Best French Kid, hand turn, worth $7, reduced to $6.
Ladies' French Kid Button, low heel, long vamp, worth $5, reduced to $4.
Misses' and Children's Canvas Shoes reduced 25 per cent.

A. J. MUIR,
PLUMBER,
—Gas and Steam Fitter.—

Being a practical plumber, I can guarantee all work.

310 K STREET, Telephone 226.
SACRAMENTO, CAL.

ALBERT GRUBBS,
No. 1417 Fourth Street,

Will do all kinds of House Cleaning, Lay Carpets, Whitewashing, and everything in that line.

He also has the only wagon for the REMOVAL OF DEAD ANIMALS, and any orders left at his place of business will receive prompt attention.

[Remember the address!]

No. 1417 Fourth Street, Sacramento, Cal.

JESSE SLAUGHTER,
Office, No. 1217 Fifth Street.

Plastering, Whitewashing, Cleaning of Cesspools, Etc.
Also, CITY SCAVENGER.

Burying of dead animals attended to at short notice.

Don't forget the number—1217 Fifth street, the old stand, where I have been for 25 years.

R. H. PETTIT,
Wholesale and Retail Dealer in
IMPORTED & DOMESTIC CIGARS
Smoke the "Lone Fisherman,"
The BEST FIVE-CENT CIGAR in the Market.
NO. 225 K STREET.

Take a Ride on the Riverside Road
AND BE SURE AND STOP AT
BILLY GROENVELD'S

Sutterville House

And get a glass of COOL BEER. Or if you want a bottle of CHAMPAGNE Billy has it on hand, or anything else you may wish for in his line.

Always a FINE LUNCH on the Counter.
M. T. GROENVELD, Proprietor.

CALL AT 1118 J STREET,
—AT—

Fred Futterer's Saloon

And Get a Glass of Cool Beer.

The best Wines, Liquors and Cigars always on hand.

POOL AND BILLIARD TABLES.

FRED FUTTERER, 1118 J Street.

CHANGED HANDS.

SACRAMENTO EXCHANGE,
(Formerly Win. Gamble's.)

1012 SEVENTH STREET.

Fine Wines. All the celebrated brands of Liquors and Cigars.
ROBERT ALLEN,
Formerly of Agricultural Park.

RHOADS & TOWNSEND HOUSE

On European Plan.

Cor. Second and J Streets, Sacramento.

ARTHUR MILLER, PROPRIETOR.

A Stranger in Town.

IT is safe to wager that this is a truthful portrait of the wonder and astonishment usually aroused by a stranger on entering a small country village. All stand with their mouths wide open, reminding the traveler of the Mammoth Cave, and they gaze on him as though beholding an apparition from another world. And, by the way, this is a forcible reminder of the fact that

Arcadian, the Ideal,

is creating just about as much commotion among the proprietors of competing brands as the appearance of the stranger does among the unsophisticated inhabitants of the rural village. Imagine the stranger in the above illustration to be

"Arcadian and Ideal,"

and the gawky, paralyzed spectators, competing drinks, and you have a very correct idea of the position occupied by Arcadian Sarsaparilla and Iron. A glass of IDEAL is, indeed, delightful. It is a great blood purifier, possesses valuable medicinal properties, and is warmly indorsed by eminent physicians in every part of England and America. It has long been a favorite drink among the English people, and is acquiring universal favor and popularity wherever introduced.

Ideal is prepared with pure Arcadian Mineral Water, and is bottled at Waukesha, Wis. It is a mild laxative, acts favorably in promoting the secretions of the kidneys, enriches the blood, and is of decided value in malarial diseases of every type. It imparts an invigorating tone to the entire system.

It is essentially a ladies' drink, and possesses rare merit.

ARCADIAN, THE IDEAL,

IS KEPT FOR SALE BY ALL FIRST-CLASS

Druggists, Grocers and Saloon Keepers.

ANHEUSER & BUSCH BEER

Can be found on draught only at

John Gruhler's Saloon

No. 522 J STREET.

The finest and best Wines, Liquors and Cigars constantly on hand.

Patronize Home Industry!

CITY BREWERY

FRANK RUHSTALLER, Proprietor.

GENUINE

Pilsener Felsen Beer.

Corner Twelfth and H Streets,

Telephone 201.

SACRAMENTO.

CELEBRATED

WEINER LAGER BEER

CAPITAL BREWERY

LOUIS NICOLAUS,

Corner Twelfth and I Streets

SACRAMENTO.

COLUMBUS BREWERY

CHRIS. WAHL, Proprietor

Corner of Sixteenth and K Streets,

SACRAMENTO, CAL.

Agent for the Celebrated W. J. LEMP'S ST. LOUIS LAGER BEER

WISSEMAN'S SALOON,

Klebetz & Green's Old Stand,

1020 Fourth St., bet. J and K, Sacramento.

GEO. WISSEMAN, PROPRIETOR.

Families and Saloons supplied by bottle or keg.

Butchers' Home,

1020 J Street,

Between 10th and 11th, : Sacramento, Cal.

Fine Wines, Liquors and Cigars. Also, a

GOOD GLASS OF BEER.

JACOB GRUHLER, Prop'r.

CAPITAL ALE VAULTS.

Established in 1870, and still maintains the same reputation for keeping the best WINES, LIQUORS and Cigars in the city. The finest Hot Lunch in the city from 11 to 2. Clam Chowder a specialty every night.

NAGELE & SVENSSON, Prop'rs.

Telephone 38.

302 J and 1005 Third st.

Incompatibility of Occupation.

The voice of the lady trembled slightly as she looked at the middle-aged, but well preserved gentleman before her, and said:

"Can it be possible? Is this Henry Slumpus, the friend and companion of my earlier days?"

"It is, Florence—Mrs. Grampus," he said, his own voice betraying an excitement he could not suppress. "I have come five hundred miles to see you."

"How strange!" she said, as she sank into a chair. "Pray be seated, Harry—Mr. Slumpus. How it seems to bring back old times to see you again!"

"It does—it does!" he replied. "Twenty years have gone. It seems an age. Yet how lightly time has touched you! Pardon me for saying so, but you look scarcely a day older than on that sad, bitter morning so long ago, when that foolish quarrel, in which I was to blame, separated us"—

"Do not speak of it, Har—Mr. Slumpus," replied the lady. "I was not blameless myself. But tell me your history. Where have you been and what have you done in all these years? Are you—are you?"

"Married?" he interrupted, in a voice that quivered in spite of him. "No; there has never been room in my heart for more than one love!"

For a few moments he was silent, and then he resumed:

"When I left your presence that memorable morning I went to the far west. I threw myself into business, caring little whether I was successful or not. I prospered. In due time I learned through a friend of your marriage to Mr. Grampus. I threw myself still deeper into business. I made fortunes and lost them again, unmoved by either success or failure. At present I am not rich, but am in comfortable circumstances, with my means invested in a business that furnishes me a satisfactory income. I learned a few days ago, by accident, that you had been a widow for several years, and a longing came upon me to see you again. I could not resist it, and I am here. Are you sorry to see me, Florence?"

"I—I am not," said the widow, softly. "You have told me of yourself, Mr. Slumpus"—

"Call me Harry, please."

"Well—Harry—and it may interest you to know that Mr. Grampus, while not wealthy, left me a competence which is invested in a business that is in every way prosperous."

"May I ask what it is?"

"It is an establishment for the manufacturing of russet shoes."

The visitor rose and took his hat.

"My romance is at an end, Mrs. Grampus," he said, in a hollow voice. "I am a manufacturer of liquid shoe-blackening.—Chicago Tribune."

One beautiful trait of our humanity is the tenderness with which we cherish the memory of the departed. Let Death take from the household that troublesome and ungovernable child, and all that is remembered is his sweet and gentle words, his rare qualities, his loving ways, his beauty, and his manliness. The child stands before his parent's eyes, not as he was, but as he might have been had all God put in him been perfected by love and grace. He is now always "dear child" in their thoughts, and not selfish or unloving. The children long for their dead companion with real and tender grief; they would be pleasanter were he back again; they are surprised to find how much they loved him. Friends long to have the opportunity, now lost, to show their love. Why did I not prize him more? why did I not serve him better? is the universal feeling.

"One of the funniest incidents that happened under my observation during the late war," said Colonel Mosby, "occurred in a cavalry fight in the Shenandoah Valley along in 1864. In the midst of a sharp cavalry engagement with Sheridan's men, in a charge near Berryville, there came crashing like a whirlwind into our lines a Yankee soldier on a big black horse. A score of men tried to stop horse and rider, but the old black's blood was up and he went clean on through the lines before he was under control. The rider was sent to Libby Prison and we mustered the black charger into the Confederate service. A few days later we charged some of Custer's men, and I'll be — if that old horse didn't return the compliment by carrying a 'reb' into the Federal lines, and never came back."

The report of an alleged discovery by a Professor in the State University of California of a new system of tanning leather, which will have the effect of rendering it impervious to water and at the same time rendering it very pliable, is met with a smile of incredulity on the part of leather men in New York. The assertion made that the new system will revolutionize the leather trade, and that boots and shoes manufactured from leather thus prepared will last five times as long as the footwear now in use, is declared to be a manifest absurdity. A number of large firms have expressed themselves as having no faith in the value of the alleged discovery.

H. WACHHORST

Leading Jeweler of Sacramento
SIGN OF THE TOWN CLOCK,
No. 315 J STREET, SACRAMENTO.

W. D. Comstock, 501 -- 507 K, cor. Fifth

On Exhibition, THE LARGEST AND BEST SELECTED STOCK.

FAIR DEALING! LOW PRICES!

GENSHLEA BROS. 624 J ST.

Strictly High Grade Goods in all Lines.

TRY THE LA ROSA ESPANOLA KEY WEST CIGAR.

JAS. G. DAVIS Furniture, Carpets and Wall Paper
411 AND 413 K STREET,
Branch, 315 K St. Send for Catalogue. Prices Lowest.

Wm. J. Hassett.

A. J. Johnston.

A. J. Johnston & Co.

PRINTERS,

410 J Street,

Sacramento

Klune & Floberg, WATCHMAKERS and JEWELERS
Agents for Rockford Watch Co.
No. 428 J STREET, SACRAMENTO.

Something New

NEW STORE. NEW MEN.

BELL & FOUNTAIN

HAVE OPENED THE

Plaza Cash Grocery

STORE,

Corner Tenth and J Streets,

And have stocked the same with all New and Fresh Goods, which they will sell for CASH at the smallest living margin.

All Goods Warranted as Represented.

Goods delivered to any part of the city.

Our Motto: "The nimble sixpence against the slow shilling!"

BELL & FOUNTAIN.

Plaza Cash Grocery Store.

BAKER & HAMILTON,

San Francisco and Sacramento,

Importers and Jobbers of

Hardware, Iron, Steel, Coal, Powder,

MACHINERY

And Agricultural Implements.

Send for Catalogue.

REEVES & LONG, UNDERTAKERS,

609 J Street, bet. Sixth and Seventh.

WE KEEP ON HAND A COMPLETE Stock of Coffins and Caskets; also, Shrouds of every description. Orders from city or country receive prompt attention, day or night. EMBALMING done in the best manner; and at reasonable rates.

BOOTS AND SHOES made to order. Boots, $6 to $11. Shoes, $4 to $9. Ladies' Shoes, best quality French Kid, $5 to $7.

REPAIRING DONE at lowest prices.

NONE BUT BEST mechanics employed.

WE GUARANTEE to make perfect fitting to the worst of crooked and crippled feet.

COMPETE WITH any shoes on the market.

216 J Street

—AND—

208 K Street,

SACRAMENTO.

A. CASELLI

& COMPANY.

WESTERN HOTEL

209 to 219 K Street.

The Leading Hotel of Sacramento, Cal.

FREE BUS TO AND FROM HOTEL.

Meals, 25 Cents. Rooms, according to Location.

WM. LAND, Proprietor.

F. KUEHNE & CO.,

NO. 906 NINTH STREET,

Between I and J,

SACRAMENTO,

Carpenters and Contractors

Store and office work a specialty.

ICE BOXES for Breweries and Saloons always on hand and made to order.

Jobbing and Repairing promptly attended to.

American Steam Laundry

NINETEENTH AND I STS.—WHITE LABOR only. Linen polished in the neatest manner. We guarantee satisfaction. All ordinary mending, sewing on buttons, etc., free of charge. Washing called for and delivered to any part of the city. Main Office at Sawtelle's Book Store, 708 and 710 J street. Branch offices at all the Hotels.

RAILROAD TIME TABLE.

Southern Pacific Company
PACIFIC SYSTEM.

July 28, 1889.

Trains LEAVE and are due to ARRIVE at SACRAMENTO.

Lv.	Trains Run Daily.	Arr.
7:00 A	Calistoga and Napa	11:40 A
4:05 P	Calistoga and Napa	8:30 P
11:00 P	Ashland and Portland	3:40 A
5:05 P	Deming, El Paso and East	7:05 P
7:30 P	Knight's Landing	7:55 A
4:30 A	Marysville (Mixed)	4:25 P
9:00 A	Los Angeles	9:55 A
9:00 P	Second Class Ogden and East	6:30 A
10:30 P	Central Atlantic Express	3:40 P
3:00 P	Ogden and East	9:50 A
11:00 P	Oroville	3:40 A
3:00 P	Red Bluff via Marysville	9:50 A
10:40 A	Redding via Willows	4:05 P
4:00 A	San Francisco via Benicia	10:40 P
7:00 A	San Francisco via Benicia	8:30 P
4:05 P	San Francisco via Benicia	10:10 P
*10:00 A	San Francisco via Steamer	26:00 A
11:20 A	San Francisco via Livermore	2:25 P
3:05 P	San Francisco via Benicia	11:40 A
11:20 A	San Jose	2:25 P
9:00 A	Santa Barbara	9:55 A
5:05 P	Santa Barbara	7:05 P
7:00 A	Santa Rosa	11:40 A
4:05 P	Santa Rosa	8:30 P
9:00 A	Stockton and Galt	7:05 P
5:05 P	Stockton and Galt	9:55 A
9:00 P	Truckee and Reno	6:30 A
10:30 P	Truckee and Reno	3:40 P
8:30 A	Coffax	5:00 P
7:00 A	Vallejo	11:40 A
4:05 P	Vallejo	18:30 P
*12:15 P	Folsom and Placerville (Mixed)	*10:35 A
*7:15 A	Folsom and Placerville	*3:45 P
*5:20 P	Folsom	*6:50 A

*Sunday excepted. †Sunday only. ‡Monday excepted. A for morning, P for afternoon.

A. N. TOWNE, Gen'l Manager.

T. H. GOODMAN, Gen'l Pass. and Ticket Agent.

Edwin K. Alsip & Co.

ESTABLISHED 1860.

REAL ESTATE

AND INSURANCE AGENTS.

FARMING LANDS A SPECIALTY.

Catalogues issued monthly.

No. 1015 Fourth Street, Sacramento.

Gregory Bros. Co

Established 1852.

COMMISSION MERCHANTS.

Packers and Shippers of California Fruit and Produce,

126 and 128 J STREET,

San Francisco Office, 313 Davis St. SACRAMENTO.

ANGLO-NEVADA ASSURANCE CORPORATION

OF SAN FRANCISCO.

FIRE.—Cash Capital, $2,000,000—MARINE.

Sacramento Branch:

No. 1018 SECOND STREET.

JOSEPH STEFFENS, Manager.

HOWARD KIMBROUGH, Local Agent.

Hotfilter & Grafmiller,

MANUFACTURING JEWELERS.

Jewelry made to order. Watches, Clocks and Jewelry Repaired and Warranted.

No. 1026 Sixth Street, Sacramento.

B. Ruhl Bookbinder, Paper Ruler and Blank Book Manufacturer.

Periodicals, Magazines, Music, and all kinds of Binding neatly done at the lowest prices.

No. 409 J STREET,

SACRAMENTO.

R. DAVIS,

NOTARY PUBLIC,

Real Estate and Insurance Agent.

Representing the following companies:

Manchester of England; Caledonian of Edinburgh, Scotland; London and Lancaster, England.

1002 J Street, Sacramento.

Restaurant de France,

FAURE & BECKER, PROPRIETORS.

(Successors to L. Payen.)

No. 427 K Street, Near Metropolitan Theater.

Family Entrance on Fifth Street.

Catering to Families, Banquets and Wedding Parties a specialty. Telephone 228.

NOTICE TO FRUITMEN!

Keep your trees free from scale and your apples from being wormy by the use of

Warner's Scale & Insect Exterminator FOR SALE BY

G. T. NOE, — DRUGGIST,

AUBURN, CAL.

Put up in one-half gallon and quart cans.

THEMIS

Vol. I.

SACRAMENTO: SATURDAY, AUGUST 31, 1889.

No. 28.

THEMIS: published weekly, by A. J. Johnston & Co. Publication Office, 410 J Street. Subscription—One year, by mail, $3 00; six months, by mail, $1 50, in advance; per month, by carrier, 25 cents. (Entered at the Post Office at Sacramento as second-class matter.)

Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes, the author and poet, celebrated the eightieth anniversary of his birthday at his summer residence, near Boston, on Thursday. Dr. Holmes and Whittier can be classed as the only survivors of the old school of distinguished American poets. Holmes graduated from Harvard in 1829; first entered upon the study of law, which he abandoned for medicine. He was chosen professor of anatomy and physiology in Dartmouth College, and afterward filled the same chair in Harvard. The first collected edition of his poems was published in 1836, and there have been numerous republications of his works, both in this country and in England. William Cullen Bryant, a contemporary of Holmes, died at New York June 12, 1878, at the age of 84. Bryant gave early evidence of poetic talent. He contributed lines to a local newspaper before he was ten years of age, and in his fourteenth year there were published two considerable poems of his authorship. In his nineteenth year he wrote Thanatopsis, still one of the most impressive poems in our language. This poem was afterwards published in the North American Review, and he became a frequent contributor to that periodical. From 1826 until his death he was the editor of the New York Evening Post, but ceased not until the ending of his life to copiously contribute to English literature. Henry Wadsworth Longfellow died March 24, 1882, at the age of 75. He wrote several meritorious poems in his college days, and before he had reached the age of 30 was a contributor to the North American Review. Whittier, the Quaker poet, was born December 17, 1807. At the age of 22 he entered the profession of journalism and became editor of a Boston newspaper. At 28 he was a member of the Massachusetts Legislature. He early espoused the anti-slavery cause, and was prominently connected with it until its successful accomplishment. One of his grandest productions was the hymn for the opening of the centennial exhibition at Philadelphia in 1876. The poems of Whittier are sympathetic and patriotic. His friendship for the lamented Rev. Thomas Starr King is testified by a hymn for the opening of the house of worship in San Francisco, and by a tender poem written after the death of that great divine.

The proposition to require prisoners convicted of misdemeanors to work is excellent. It has seemed of late that the jails of this city and county have been over-populated. Hardly a week day passes without an examination case, wherein a offender is held to answer to the Superior Court on a charge of felony. While many of them plead guilty, the county jail has been of late well tenanted. The persons who are awaiting trial on charges of felony cannot, of course, be made to work here, but those convicted of misdemeanors should be required to labor. There is plenty of work to do that will be of public benefit, and that will not interfere with free labor. The suggestion that the prisoners break up granite blocks into material for use in street work is one that should be adopted. The city can procure the refuse granite from the Folsom prison at an insignificant cost, and the work of breaking it here, by those whom we have to maintain at public expense, will cost comparatively nothing. Certainly one result will be effected: If it is understood that we have in this city an abundance of work for those convicted in our local courts it will not be long before it will be generally known by the criminal element, and we will have fewer of them to feed.

The indications are that the approaching State fair will excel any that has heretofore been held in the State. The details are being rapidly perfected, and additional stables are being constructed to accommodate the increased stock entries. There is no doubt that the county exhibits will be more elaborate than ever before. The management are sparing neither pains nor expense to perfect accommodations for the exhibits. Some one hundred more horses are entered in the races than last year, and the display of live stock promises to excel anything in that line ever shown on the coast.

The telegraphic dispatches inform us that a kinswoman of Mrs. Maybrick—one Mrs. Polly Bartlett—was the first woman to suffer the death penalty in the State of Georgia, and that she was hanged in 1806 for procuring the murder of her husband. The hanging of women in this country has been of rare occurrence. The most noted instance was that of Mrs. Surratt, who was executed at Washington, July 7, 1865, for complicity in the assassination of President Lincoln. It is doubtful if she would have been hanged had her trial occurred at a time when public feeling was more temperate; and, viewing the matter in the light of subsequent developments, it would seem that the penalty visited upon her was too severe. She was charged with having "on or before the 6th day of March, 1865, and on divers other days and times between that day and the 20th of April, 1865, received, entertained, harbored and concealed, aided and assisted" the conspirators in the execution of their plans to kill President Lincoln, Vice-President Johnson, Secretaries Seward and Stanton and General Grant. She was charged with being cognizant of the intended crimes and with having assisted in the escape of the assassins. In this State we recall but one instance of the execution of a woman. That occurred in the early 50's at Downieville, at the hands of a mob. The affair was disgraceful and a reproach to those who participated in it.

Readers of the Saturday issues of the Bee for two weeks past, have been treated to a literary feast in the sharp, witty, and instructive letters from the caustic pen of Chas. K. McClatchy, managing editor of the Bee, who is on a pleasure jaunt across the oceans. He, like his father, the veteran editor of the Bee in his lifetime, is a keen observer of events, and but little can pass that does not receive his scrutinizing observation. Even out on old ocean he finds ample food for reflection and pictures the various characteristics of his fellow tourists—some with an unsparing hand, which, by the way is one of Chas. McClatchy's characteristics. Whenever he observes a sham or a fraud in one of his fellows, he becomes his meat at once. His descriptive powers are rarely equalled by correspondents or writers.

A recent writer who has investigated the subject of foreign immigration presents some startling figures and results of an indiscriminate admission of the foreign element into this country. Even the old Puritan families of New England are being displaced by Irish and French Canadians, and it may be that some of the descendants of the Puritans shall stand in Boston alone amid a throng of these late citizens who have nothing in accord with this country and the founders of this nation. A century ago foreigners were rare in Massachusetts. To-day, out of a population of 1,942,110, the foreign born number 527,867, not including such children of alien parentage that were born in this country. Of 122,263 illiterate persons of ten years or over, nearly 90 per cent are of foreign birth. The foreign born represent one-fifth of the people employed in agriculture, one-half of those employed in the fisheries, two-fifths of those employed in the manufactories, and two-thirds of those employed in mining as laborers. In many of the other States the proportion is even larger than that of this State.

In all that has been written or said, with regard to the original conception and execution of the plan to construct the great trans-continental railroad, one very important chapter has been omitted. No place in the history of the great enterprise of constructing the Central Pacific railroad has any mention been made of the first survey and the parties concerned therein. We propose to correct history in this matter and give credit where credit is due. Several years before anything whatever had been done toward the execution of any plan by the accredited projectors of this great undertaking, a party comprising five gentlemen formed a little private company of their own and actually surveyed, and laid out the trans-continental railroad as far as Roseville. They paid out a large sum of money in making the survey and preparing maps and diagrams. The names of those gentlemen were A. P. Catlin, Theodore D. Judah, Leet an engineer, A. G. Kinsey and H. A. Thompson. Judah and Leet made the surveys and plans and were about ready to commence operations, when the stronger combination of Crocker, Stanford, Huntington and Hopkins came forward with their gigantic scheme. Judah was selected as the engineer, and to him more than to any other one man is the credit due for the successful culmination of the monster enterprise. Catlin and his companions, at Judah's suggestion, turned over all their maps and plans already prepared as far as Roseville, to the new projectors. The road was constructed upon the identical survey thus made, and the continuation made across the continent by this great engineer. Thus the credit for the first steps toward the building of the great thoroughfare belongs to Catlin, Judah, Leet, Kinsey and Thompson. A. P. Catlin is still with us enjoying the ample fruits of an honorable practice at the bar. A. G. Kinsey is a wealthy citizen of New York, T. D. Judah died a number of years ago, but not until the great work was an assured success. H. A. Thompson was a wealthy mine operator, and died a few years ago in Arizona; his widow resides in this city and is the sister of Hon. R. M. Clarken. Engineer Leet's whereabouts are to us unknown.

It has become a popular delusion that we are retrograding in oratory—that there are no orators now who compare favorably with those of the past. It is common to hear the expression, in literary circles, "We have no Clays, Websters, Calhouns, now." There are greater orators to-day than ever lived in any epoch of this world. The apparent decadence is due to the spread of cheap publications, and the ability of our great newspapers. All public and important matters are ably presented by the press, which, in a measure, averts the necessity of orators, either on the rostrum, pulpit, or in the halls of legislative bodies. In the times past there was a regular system, or drill and training for orators, or rather for those who desired to become orators. To-day the force and power of eloquence from the mouth of the orator is as potent as at any time in the world's history. The time, occasion and subject under consideration makes the orator of to-day, and we find him in the pulpit, on the rostrum and in the national, as well as the State, legislative bodies. At the bar we have the greatest, most impressive, magnetic and powerful orators the world ever knew. There we find those who can sway the minds and actions of men in a degree that far surpasses anything of the past. The orator of the past, not only in voice, but in all physical and intellectual matters, was drilled and trained as we now train a race horse or prize fighter. Those men who desired to be leaders of men, by virtue of oratorical powers, always put themselves under the severest training. Every movement of the body, arms, expression of the face, tone of voice, was made a study. Oratory to-day is not a matter of study, not dependent upon the art of acting, not the result of profound learning, not dramatic effect, but the magnetic outbursts of the heart upon prepared soil—upon the hearts and reason of the hearers. It is not a matter of long, deliberate, measured and classic sentences, but the brief electric appeal to the senses. We hear this at the bar of every State in the Union, in the leading pulpits, from the lips of Ingersoll, Cox, Talmage, Barrows, Congressmen Mason, Reed and McKinley, editor Grady, Ben Butler and an army of others who are the superiors in oratory of anything ever developed in the past. The original purity of style of to-day can stir the public heart at will, and whenever the orator of to-day finds the time, the occasion and the subject, his burning words fall red hot among the people, who bow to his power and will. It is sheer nonsense to say that oratory is declining. There are fewer long-winded, studied efforts than characterized the olden times, but the true and genuine oratory exists and only awaits a call to send forth the fire that moves the hearts and reason of men. One may train the voice and action for the stage, the drama, but the eloquence and oratory is something spontaneous, and, as we said at the outset, must depend on the time, the occasion and the subject. Rarely is there an important murder case tried in this State that does not bring forth some bright and effective gems of oratory, scarcely equalled in anything of by-gone days. Unexcelled oratory exists to-day in the pulpit, at the bar, on the rostrum and in the halls of Congress.

We note that some of the eastern papers are discussing the propriety of making a new arrangement of the stars in our national emblem. The present custom is to arrange the stars in a series of rows. Our new flag will have forty-two stars, which, under the old plan, would make six rows of seven stars each. Ex-Treasurer Spinner, whose name appears upon so much of our national currency, suggests that all the stars be arranged so as to represent one large star. The idea is most excellent. It would be emblematic of the nation itself, and an illustration of the national motto: "One composed of many." The flag made in this manner would be decidedly more attractive than the even rows of stars as formerly arranged.

Some political economists claim that the larger the public debt the greater is the stability of the government. This idea, however, is only applicable to governments of resources equal to the emergency. It is said that most of the Southern States are heavily incumbered with debts. The funded debt of the thirteen Southern States aggregates $96,158,643, not including an unfunded debt of $20,000,000 more. This immense indebtedness does not add to the prosperity of our southern brethren, notwithstanding the doctrine of the political economists.

CALIFORNIAN NOMENCLATURE.

How the Various Localities in This State Received Their Names.

Red Bluff was established by M. L. Covert, and was at first called Covertsburg. Redding was originally called Reading, after Major P. B. Reading, the pioneer of Shasta county. The change to the present spelling was done in compliment to the late B. B. Redding. Red Dog Hill was so named because of its supposed resemblance to a hill of that name in the lead district of Illinois. Redwood City was so called from its proximity to the vast forests of redwood timber that formerly covered the slopes of the mountains. Rough and Ready was established in the fall of 1849, by the "Rough and Ready" company of immigrants, who had just arrived from Wisconsin under the command of Captain Townsend. Routiers' was named after Hon. Joseph Routier. Scott river and mountain were named from John W. Scott, who mined on Scott Bar in July, 1850. Sebastapol, Sonoma county, was at first called Pine Grove. During the Crimean War, and at the time when Sebastapol was besieged, two men engaged in a fight in the town, and one retreated into the store and the proprietor refused to admit the victorious party. From this circumstance the store was called Sebastapol, and the town was subsequently so named.

Shingle Springs was named from the fact that at the upper end of the town are several springs of water. At an early day, near the springs, a machine was erected and operated for the manufacture of shingles. Hence the name.

Somerville was named from Francis Somers, an early resident. The mountain of St. Helena was named in honor of the Empress of Russia, by the Russian naturalist, Wosnesensky, who ascended it in 1841.

When the settlement at Stockton was started it was called and known everywhere as Weber's Settlement, or as French Camp—the latter name being the better known. Captain C. M. Weber and his partner were undecided as to the name of the new town. New Albany was the choice of the partner, because of his birth in Albany, New York. Weber preferred either Tuleburg or Castoria. Tuleburg was regarded as appropriate because the tules grew thick and high in the vicinity. Castoria is a Spanish name, meaning beaver settlement. At that time beaver abounded in large numbers. Afterward Weber was taken prisoner by the Mexicans, and after his liberation met Commodore Robert F. Stockton, who promised to send out a government steamer for the use of the pioneers. At Weber's suggestion the name of the town was changed to Stockton, and it was first legally known by that name in a petition to the Court of Sessions, dated July 23, 1850. Suisun is an Indian word meaning "big expanse." Sunol was named after Antonio M. Sunol, an early resident who died March 18, 1865. Suscol was the name of an Indian Chief. Sweetland was named after H. P. Sweetland, who settled there in 1850. Sutter Creek was named from the fact that in 1848 Captain Sutter came through that country with a retinue of Indians on an excursion to the mountains and camped on the spot where Sutter Creek now stands, which event gave the town its name.

The derivation of the word "Tahoe" has, perhaps, been more elaborately discussed than that of any other word of geographical designation in the State. The beautiful lake, lying on the boundary line between this State and Nevada, has borne that name since aboriginal days. On February 10, 1870, an Act of the Legislature was approved declaring the name of the lake to be "Bigler," in honor of the ex-Governor. In the debates in the Legislature the matter of the name of the lake became almost a partisan issue. The Democrats favored the name Bigler, and the Republicans Tahoe. The Democrats claimed that the name Tahoe had been borne by a disreputable and vicious Indian chief who had murdered an American family named Rothrock on the Truckee river in early days. The Republicans contended that it was an Indian word, meaning "big water." A correspondent in the Sacramento Union of February 3, 1880, claimed that the word was a corruption of "Tejon," or badger, and that the lake had been so called by the half-civilized Indians who had fled to the mountains to escape servitude to the Spaniards—the region about the lake being prolific with badgers. The correspondent was no doubt in error. Tehachapi is an Indian word of unknown signification. Temescal is an Indian word, meaning "sweathouse." Tomales bay was named after a tribe of Indians of that name who lived in that vicinity.

William Baldrige, a very early pioneer, writes the following account of the derivation of the word "Truckee":

In 1845, James M. Harbin and a few others were on their way to California, via overland route, and on arriving at the sink of the Humboldt, they met with an Indian and employed him to pilot them across the desert. While en route Harbin noticed a resemblance in him to a Frenchman he had formerly known, and therefore bestowed the name of the Frenchman (Truckee) on the Indian, and on arriving at the river (Truckee) they were greatly elated at their good fortune, and named it Truckee's river. "Truckee" and two of his brothers came to California with the immigrants in 1846, and served in Fremont's battalion until the end of the war.

The Reno Gazette, in 1880, published the following account of the same incident:

In 1844 a party of men left Council Bluffs, Iowa, to go to Oregon. They came across the plains, and when they reached the hunting grounds of the Shoshonnes they procured an Indian guide named Truckee. This Indian accompanied them as far as Sutter's fort. In traversing this region the Indian told them of a rapid river that flowed from one great lake to another. The party did not reach this river as soon as they expected, and they began to look upon Truckee's river as a river of the mind, a flowing fiction. Truckee's river was, for a time, a frequent jest upon their lips, and when at last they reached the stream he described they had already named it.

Ukiah derives its name from the Enkio or Ynkio tribe of Indians, who dwelt in the valley when it was first visited by the whites. Vallejo was founded by General M. G. Vallejo, from whom it received its name. It was for a short time the capital of the State. Visalia was named after Nat Vise, a bear hunter, who lived there in early days. Walloupa was named after an Indian chief. It is a corruption of Guadalupe, the name which he had received from the missionaries. Washoe is the Indian name for the valley lying along the eastern base of the Sierra Nevadas. The word signifies "beautiful." Watsonville was named after J. H. Watson, who founded it in 1853; Weaverville was named after a miner named Weaver, who at an early period obtained a large quantity of gold from Weaver creek. Winters was laid out in 1875, and was named in honor of Theodore Winters, who owned an interest in the town site; and Woodbridge was named after its founder, J. H. Woods. Yeomet is an Indian name, signifying rocky falls, and was given to the forks of the Cosumnes river, in Amador county. Yosemite is a corruption of "Oo-soom-ite," an Indian word meaning, in the language of the tribe that inhabited the valley, "large grizzly bear." Yountville was named after George C. Yount, who died October 5, 1865. The town of Yreka was originally called Shasta Butte City, but as this was too much like Shasta City, the Indian name for Mount Shasta, I-e-ha, (meaning white), was substituted, and the orthography was changed to Wyreka. In the course of time the "W" was dropped, and the present spelling adopted.

Appended are a few of those names bestowed on localities by the miners in early days. It is not necessary to trace their derivation, as they are sufficiently suggestive:

American Hollow, Barefoot Diggins, Bloomer Hill, Blue Belly Ravine, Bob Ridley Flat, Bogus Thunder, Brandy Gulch, Cayote Hill, Centipede Hollow, Chicken Thief Flat, Christian Flat, Chucklehead Diggins, Coon Hollow, Dead Man's Bar, Dead Mule Cañon, Deadwood, Devil's Basin, Devil's Elbow, Gas Hill, Git-up-and Git, Gopher Flat, Gospel Gulch, Gouge Eye, Graveyard Canyon, Greaser's Camp, Greenhorn Cañon Gridiron Bar, Wild Goose Flat, Whisky Bar, Grizzly Flat, Ground Hog Glory, Happy Valley, Hell's Delight, Hempback slide, Hen Roost Camp, Hog's Diggins, Horsetown, Humburg Cañon, Hungry Camp, Jackass Gulch, Jim Crow Cañon, Last Chance, Lazy Man's Cañon, Liberty Hill, Loafer Hill, Loafers' Retreat, Long Town, Lousy Ravine, Love Letter Camp, Mad Cañon, Miller's Defeat, Mount Zion, Murderer's Bar, Nary Red, Nigger Hill, Nutcake Camp, One Eye, Paint Pot Hill, Pancake Ravine, Paradise, Pepperbox Flat, Piety Hill, Pike Hill, Plughead Gulch, Poker Flat, Poodletown, Poor Man's Creek, Port Wine, Poverty Hill, Puppytown, Push Coach Hill, Quack Hill Ragtown, Rat Trap Slide, Rattlesnake Bar, Seven by Nine Valley, Seven-up Ravine, Seventy-six, Shanghai Hill, Shinbone Peak, Shirttail Cañon, Skinfint, Skunk Gulch, Slap Jack Bar, Sluice Fork, Snow Point, Sugar Loaf Hill, Swell Head Diggins, Wild Cat Bar, Yankee Doodle.

The Paradise of Tears.

Beside the River of Tears, with branches low,
The bitter leaves, the weeping willows grow;
The branches stream like the dishevelled hair
Of woman in the sadness of despair.

Then comes a child, whose face is like the sun,
And dips the gloomy waters as they run,
And waters all the region, and behold,
The ground is bright with blossoms manifold.

Where fall the tears of love the rose appears,
And where the ground is bright with friendship's tears,
For-get-me-nots and violets heavenly blue,
Spring, glittering with the cheerful drops like dew.

The souls of mourners, all whose tears are dried,
Like swans, come gently floating down the tide.
Walk up the golden sands, by which it flows,
And in the Paradise of Tears repose.

There every heart rejoins its kindred heart;
There, in a long embrace that none may part,
Fulfillment meets desire; and that fair shore
Beholds its dwellers happy evermore.

—Wm. Cullen Bryant.

THE PINE CONES.—A FAIRY TALE.

In the season when the pine cones lay scattered on the ground, Corasan went every morning to the forest to gather a sackful for his mother. He would gladly have dispensed with this task, which he felt unsuited to his age (he was already 25 years old); however, he obeyed his mother's orders, for in the country where he lived it was not considered proper to throw aside all filial submission as soon as one's beard began to grow.

One day when he was in the great forest, pursuing his accustomed work, he said to himself, as he gathered the pine cones:

"Oh! if the mountain fairy would only change them into gold!"

The mountain fairy heard him; with a loud, cracking noise one of the largest pine trees burst open, and from it came a beautiful woman, dressed in white, who said to Corasan:

"The pine cones which you shall have gathered will change to gold as soon as you reach your house, provided that, on the way from the forest to the house, you do not have one evil thought. I will let you make the trial six times."

Corasan prostrated himself and thanked the fairy, who re-entered the pine tree.

The young peasant finished the filling up of his sack, and resolved to keep a strict watch over himself in order to satisfy the condition which had been imposed on him. But, alas! the pine cones remained pine cones, and not a single one of them was changed to gold.

The next day, on returning to the forest, Corasan cried:

"Oh! mountain fairy, what evil thought of mine prevented the accomplishment of the miracle?"

The fairy suddenly reappeared and answered:

"It would take too long to recall all of them to your memory. Tell me, only, why after filling the sack as usual, you also filled your pockets, a thing that you had never done before? Oh! Corasan, before even taking your burden upon your back, you had an evil thought. 'When the pine cones are changed into gold,' you said to yourself, 'I wish to have some for myself, which I shall not be obliged to share with my brothers and my sisters.' Come, try once again, and be wiser this time."

Corasan made very humble excuses to the fairy, who disappeared. He again filled the sack, but he did not fill his pockets. However, he was no more successful than the first time, and his mother said to him:

"Ah! my son, you gather cones which burn marvelously well."

"What evil thought did I have this time?" asked the young man of the fairy the next day; "for really it seems to me I have nothing to reproach myself for."

"Have you forgotten what you said to yourself as you passed the house of Abarie, your rich neighbor? 'That house is beautiful, but in a short time it will not be the handsomest in the neighborhood!' Recall the wicked joy you felt at this thought, and let that suffice to explain your new failure."

Corasan, without replying, set courageously to work promising himself to be better upon his guard this time. But all his precautions were in vain, and that day the pine cones burned better than ever.

"Powerful fairy," he cried the next day, as soon as he had entered the forest, "how could it be that the miracle was not performed? I watched over myself with the greatest of care, and, on passing the house of my rich neighbor, I turned away my head in order not to be seduced by any evil thought."

"And you cast your eyes upon the wretched dwelling of a poor goatherd, and you said to yourself: 'That man is an idle, good-for-nothing fellow to leave the roof of his house in such a condition!' And yet you well knew that for six months he has been deprived of the use of his limbs. Oh! Corasan, upon the point of becoming rich you should have other thoughts in considering the misery of your neighbor."

The poor peasant sighed and knelt down upon the ground to once again gather up the pine cones. He was persuaded that the miraculous transformation could not now fail to take place; so he filled the sack to the brim in order to augment his riches. Useless trouble! On opening the sack the pine cones fell out without changing in weight or color. All the family rejoiced in their brilliant flames. Corasan alone was sad and melancholy, and had no appetite for the soup which his mother prepared over this beautiful fire.

The next day he asked new explanations of the fairy, who said to him in a severe tone:

"You believe yourself innocent, and you were never more guilty. Why, on leaving the forest, when you saw your young friend Colombelle coming toward you, did you leave the accustomed path and cut across the fields so as to avoid meeting her? Formerly you would have gone out of your way to meet her, but you thought in your heart: 'My mother forbids me to think of Colombelle; I must obey my mother.' Hypocrite, your real thought was that henceforth Colombelle would be too poor for you!"

The guilty man, with tears in his eyes, said to the mountain fairy:

"Yes, I am a wretch, and I really believe that one cannot, without thinking evil, seek the favors of fortune. I have merited my punishment. Leave me poor as I am, and only grant, good fairy, that my mother may give me Colombelle for a wife!"

"Return in peace to your home," replied the fairy, "and when you have laid down your sack, throw yourself upon your knees before your mother and ask this favor of her."

Corasan did not fail to obey. After having, without any ambitious thought, gathered up his pine cones, he returned to his house, never thinking on the way of anything but his innocent love, and when he had placed his sack in the corner near the chimney, he fell on his knees before his mother and said to her:

"Mother, give me Colombelle for my wife!"

At the same instant the sack burst open, and from it fell, with a noise that made the whole family tremble, a heap of pine cones, glittering like gold; and they really were pure gold.

There was enough for a dowry, not only for Colombelle, but also for all Corasan's brothers and sisters, and there were twelve of them, not counting him. And when they had shared the pine cones between them equally (for Corasan insisted upon this) they found themselves the richest peasants for twenty leagues around, but more benevolent people could not be found in the entire world. The roof of the goatherd's house was repaired, and by the care of skillful physicians the goatherd himself was cured.

The Stage.

[Under this caption will appear a fair and impartial criticism of the drama, actors, music, and all noteworthy matters pertaining to the stage.]

Joe Murphy in his Irish dramas, Joseph Grismer with The Burglar, Rose Coghlan in "Peg Wofington," Fanny Davenport in La Tosca, are booked for a season in Sacramento.

Here's gratitude. Henry Irving says he will not come back to the United States because the press treated him so shabbily. What does the man want? He couldn't change his collar but the papers gave him a notice.

John M. Norton, who first brought Mary Anderson and many other prominent actresses to the fore, is just now much interested in the success of his latest protégé, Georgie Davids, the Louisville beauty who has recently been engaged by Manager J. M. Hill.

Old Lavender is one of Harrigan's best personations. Cordelia's Aspirations has also been witnessed here. It seems that Mr. Harrigan could have given us one at least of his later successes, for instance, Lorgaire or Squalter Sovereignty. Cordelia's Aspirations to-night.

The Kirmess is a new and novel means of entertainment now popular in the eastern cities. It is an entertainment made up almost entirely of the various national dances, with characteristic costumes. In order to form a true conception of the grandeur of this performance it must be witnessed on the stage. Each nation on earth is represented by its most picturesque costume and most graceful dance.

It is now an assured fact that the Clunie Opera House will go under the management of Maurice Hageman, who will conduct the business thereof after October 15, 1889. Stock companies, in popular dramas, English and comic operas, will alternate. The house will be managed so that only the purest and most taking dramas and operas will be presented. The very best talent will be secured. Popular prices will only be charged. The plan of conduct will be in a measure after the style of the San Francisco Tivoli. Mr. Hageman is an experienced manager, excellent actor, and a most affable gentleman. Within the few years last past Mr. Hageman has been manager of a theater at Portland, Oregon; stage manager for Thomas Opera Company, Kansas City, also of the Academy of Music, Baltimore; comedian of Albaugh's Opera Company, Washington, D. C.; stage manager of Lillian Conway Opera Company, Philadelphia, and of Maid of Bellville Company, on the road; comedian at Casino, New York city; comedian of Ford's Academy Opera Company, on the Southern States circuit, and associate manager of New York Ideals. From his wide experience, it is safe to prophesy that the new undertaking will prove a success.

A party of young men who are given to the discussion of deep philosophic questions met in the lobby of a theater up town a few nights ago and drifted off into a discussion of the perplexing question: "What is the longest hour in a man's life?" There was an interesting diversity of opinion. The hour which was occupied in waiting for one's best girl, the hour before it's time to get paid when you have not had anything to eat that day, the hour spent in waiting for a belated train, and other hours that seem to have several sixty minutes in them were given as examples, but they did not seem to fill the bill. Finally, Comedian James Powers, of the Casino, who was one of the party, said: "The longest hour of a man's life, if he is an actor, is the hour before the curtain goes up on the first night's performance of a new piece. No matter how familiar with the stage some men are, they are always awfully nervous before the show begins. They worry the life out of themselves fretting over their part. It is always so with me, and the funny part of it is that the fear begins to leave me just as soon as the curtain goes up. Another time when actors and actresses get very nervous, no matter how experienced they may be, is when they are called on to take part in impromptu concerts and recitations. I saw a good instance of this coming over on the 'City of Paris' a few weeks ago. Among my fellow passengers were Miss Marie Wainwright and Tony Pastor. Some of the passengers got up a concert in the cabin, and Miss Wainwright and Tony Pastor were among those who were called upon to take part. Miss Wainwright was asked for a recitation. She agreed, but before her turn came I noticed that she grew pale and trembled so that she could scarcely stand up. Of course this all left her as soon as she began to recite, but it goes to show how new surroundings will affect even the most experienced of actors and actresses."—N. Y. Times.

Book Chat.

The number of female novelists makes it look as if there was some merit in the claim for woman's writes.

Among the novels of George Meredith, "The Egoist," is mentioned as one of the most interesting and characteristic, "being not only full of brilliant aphorisms and epigrams, but a story whose plot holds the reader from first to last."

A Venetian publisher is about to issue a book describing a bold project mooted by two Venetian engineers. It is the excavation of a ship canal right across Italy from Venice to Spezza, which would form a direct waterway between the Adriatic and the Gulf of Genoa.

The European country which possesses the largest number of public libraries is Austria. In Austria there are no fewer than 577 public libraries, containing 5,475,000 volumes, without reckoning maps and manuscripts, a total which comes out at twenty-six volumes per 100 of the population.

Tolstoi, the Russian novelist, although of noble birth, affects the life of a peasant and the trade of a shoemaker. He dresses like a village artisan; his shirt is soiled with soot, trousers begrimed with mud, and his whole appearance is that of a workingman, a day laborer, a down-trodden Russian serf.

Mallock, the author of "Is Life Worth Living," is described as having deep-set eyes, rather small and almost weird in their alterations of fire and dullness. His face is distinguished by lines of unhappy thoughtfulness, and is of that peculiar pallor which is sometimes born of illness and sometimes of mental misery.

John Thomas Scarf, the reputed historian of Maryland, is what Bulwer called a "miscellaneous youth." He was a soldier and sailor under the Confederacy, afterward a lumber merchant and collector of pictures, then he studied law, was next a member of the Maryland Legislature, finally, for something better to do, turned author.

It is remarkable how soon a family loses what might be called its marketable value after it falls from power. Publishers no longer make handsome offers to Rose Elizabeth Cleveland, photographers have left off importuning Mrs. Cleveland for sittings, and ex-President Cleveland is not considered a valuable card by summer hotels.

Olive Schreiner, the author of "Three Dreams in a Desert" and "The Story of an African Farm," has been discussing a voyage to America this autumn, though she has almost decided against it for another year. She has a curiosity to see something of republican institutions, and especially to study the part played in occidental civilization by women.

The celebrated French novelist, Honoré de Balzac, was born at Tours in May, 1799. He at first wrote under the name of Horace de St. Aubin, and other pseudonyms, but in 1829 appeared in his own name as the author of a historical romance entitled "The Last Chouan." He was the author of numerous other romances, and died in Paris, August 18, 1850.

James Payn, the popular English novelist, had twenty-six articles rejected in one year by various periodicals. Still, he persevered, feeling that he had something to tell, if he only knew how to tell it, and could get an editor to read it. He did finally write something worth telling and made a successful hit, and has since written thirty-six novels, all more or less popular.

Messrs. Sotheby will shortly sell in London a remarkable collection of Shakesperian books. In addition to copies of the first, second, third and fourth folio editions there are between twenty and thirty of the plays in quarto, some being first editions, notably "Love's Labor Lost," "Much Ado About Nothing," "Pericles," "Othello," and also the exceedingly scarce "Lucrece" of 1594. The library also includes a large number of the original editions of the plays of Mrs. Behn, Shirley, and other seventeenth century authors.

This amusing little story is told by Mrs. Carlyle in the days when she was small Jeannie Welsh: She went to a school in Haddington, where she soon showed herself a pupil of extraordinary ability. When she was 9 years old she was able to read Virgil. Yet Jeannie with all her learning was a real girl, and, being a real girl, she had a doll upon which she bestowed much affection. And now arose a distressing question. Was it not a shame that a girl who could read Virgil should care for a doll? She was forced to think that the time had come when she could no longer keep her toy. Accordingly, on her tenth birthday, she made a funeral pile of lead pencils and cinnamon sticks, and poured some perfume over it, after the manner of the ancients. Next she recited the speech of Dido, from Virgil, and then she stabbed the doll, letting out all the sawdust. The pile was then set fire to, and, after the doll had been burnt to ashes, poor wee Jeannie sat down and cried.

Professional Chat.

I. S. Taylor is one of our religious lawyers, and a church member. He often engrafts in his arguments in court scriptural quotations and references. One day recently he was arguing a case before a jury in Judge Henry's court. Now, Judge Henry is also one of the good men who reads his bible and attends divine service. During the course of his speech, lawyer Taylor compared his opponent to "a doubting Daniel." "Stop," said Judge Henry, "I will not permit any man to misquote scripture in my court." "Now, sir," continued the Judge, "you meant to say doubting Thomas, sir." "Now," continued the court, "go on with your argument, but don't let me ever hear you misquote the bible again."

The results of jury trials have been the theme of wonderment. It has become a proverb that there is nothing more uncertain than the verdict of a petit jury. A comical phase of a petit jury was demonstrated sometime since in the Police court. A jury of "twelve good men and true" was sworn to try the case and a true verdict render. The prosecution made out a clear case, and the jury was instructed and retired to deliberate on their verdict. On the first ballot there were eleven for conviction and one for acquittal. The eleven were greatly surprised at the action of the twelfth man. Being remonstrated with, and the absolute certainty of defendant's guilt shown, the twelfth intelligent juror remarked, "I was told to serve on this jury by Lige Hart, and I'm here to stay." It is needless to say that there was a hung jury, and "Lige's" man was "there to stay."

Major Thomas J. Newsham, of Edwardsville, Illinois, tells this story: I met General Sherman two years ago at the Lindell Hotel, and in the course of a long conversation I asked him what he considered the most critical event or turning point of the war. His reply was, that what he considered the most critical event of the war was a little incident that occurred in the woods of Tennessee a short time after the battle of Corinth—the intended resignation of General Grant. Sherman had been on special duty with his command, and had returned to report to General Halleck. While at Halleck's headquarters he was informed that Grant had determined to resign. He (Sherman) got on his horse and rode direct to Grant's headquarters, some distance away. He found Grant with a number of papers before him on an improvised table. Grant and Sherman shook hands cordially. Sherman asked Grant what he was doing, and also told him he had heard that he (Grant) was going to resign. Grant handed Sherman a paper, which proved to be his resignation already written out. "I can stand this no longer," said Grant, alluding to his ill treatment by his superiors. "If I can't command a brigade or a division I can carry a musket." There was a great deal of sadness in these words as Grant spoke them. Sherman asked Grant if he would do him a favor. Grant replied that he would do anything in his power for Sherman. Sherman took the written resignation, tore it into fragments, and said that the favor he asked was that Grant would withhold his resignation for two weeks. Grant agreed to this, and the resignation was not heard of again. Halleck was removed in a few days, and Grant was restored to his command. "That," said General Sherman, "I consider was the turning point of the war."

THIS EXCELS "BUNKO."

A Bare-faced Confidence Scheme—The Alleged "Detective" Cone an Actor in Clean Out Robbery.

One of the most outrageous confidence operations came to light this morning, wherein W. W. Cone, the fraudulent detective, was the chief operator, and a poor, confiding Swede, by the name of Petersen, a carpenter in the railroad shops, was the victim. The victim met Chief Lee this morning on the street and accosted him with a desire for consultation. They repaired to the chief's office, where the following remarkable statement was made. Strange to relate, while this interview was in progress in the chief's office, the charge against Cone for defrauding a Chinaman out of $50, by the issuance of bogus certificates, was dismissed by the City Attorney without the knowledge and against the consent of Chief Lee, who was making preparations for a vigorous prosecution of that case, the prosecution of which would have been greatly facilitated by the developments in the case of Petersen, now under consideration.

John P. Petersen made a sworn statement in the police station at noon to-day in the office of the Chief of Police, and in the presence of the Chief of Police and District Attorney Bruner. It was taken in shorthand by the Official Court Reporter, Winfield J. Davis, and was in substance as follows:

"I have a little ranch near Auburn; am a carpenter; work in the car department of the railroad shops here, but my family live on the ranch. I had got acquainted with Frank Eddy when he worked at the railroad shops. Two weeks ago to-day I met him on J street, and he asked me if I still was at work at the shops. I invited him to take a drink, and when we got our beer he wanted to pay for it, but I insisted on paying, as I had called him in.

He told me that he was making more money than I was, that he did not want me to spend my money as I needed it for my little ones. He got talking with me and said I could just as well do something evenings and Saturdays that would not interfere with my work at the shops. He finally took me into one of the back rooms of the saloon and talked further about it and he said

HE WILL SEE THE CHIEF

About getting me in. I said, "There is nothing wrong about it? If it is honorable and honest work I will think of it." He made an appointment to meet me after dinner. We met at the same saloon, and he said he had seen the Chief and it was all right. I asked him what kind of work it was. He said: "If you can keep it secret I will tell you, but

YOU MUST KEEP IT SECRET,

Because, if you do not, we cannot do anything." Said I: "You can depend on that, if I promise you to keep it secret." He said: "We will go down to your room." We went there, and the lady of the house saw him. He told me to shut the door. I did so, and he pulled out some papers, similar to those I afterward got, and which I have given to Chief Lee, and showed them to me. Then he explained the matter to me, and every once and awhile he said—

"DON'T GO BACK ON ME

And tell anything or I can't do anything then." I said I would not. I asked him, "How are you paid; are you paid a salary, or how?" He said, "I will tell you how I am paid. It is $6.00 a night. Some nights it will not be so late, and some nights it will be later; but it will be estimated. You can work almost every night. You can work every night, you may say, and commence right now.

IF YOU HAD YOUR MONEY HERE

To get your papers, you could commence to-night." He told me that for day and night work I will get $10.00, and $6.00 for night work. I said "That is a mighty big thing if you are backed up." He said, "we are backed up by the Law and Order League," and then he told me that

MRS. CROCKER HAD DONATED $5,000

To it. And he said most all of the biggest of business men, and all the church people here, are backing us up with money, and that there are thousands of money behind it.

He said they were working for those people and they paid them. "But there is one thing," said he. Said I, "What is it?" He said, "Have you got $50?"

IT WILL COST YOU $50

To get a commission." As far as I can think of it, he said, there was $10.00 goes to the Chief, and $40.00 goes to Washington to the headquarters for the papers. He asked, "When can you get the money?" I says, "I can go to Auburn to-night and get it." He said, "Do. When will you get back?" I said I would be back on the 5 o'clock train the next day, and he said he would meet me. He left, and when he came back to my room the lady of the house, who had seen him come in, asked me who he was, and I said it was an acquaintance of mine, who used to work in the shops. She thought he was a kind of a

SUSPICIOUS FELLOW.

I did not say anything, as I had promised him not to say anything. I did not go to Auburn, but Eddy claimed that he went to the train for me, but he did not see me, and he did not know what to think of it. That was when he met me next. On Sunday I was around town, and Eddy came to the house and inquired of the lady where I was. She said she did not know, but probably he could see me at dinner. He said he went to the dining-room and looked in and did not see me, and he did not know what to think of it. He did not see me until evening, when he

CAME OUTSIDE OF MY WINDOW

And called for me and asked me to come out. When I came out he asked me if I had been to Auburn. I told him no. He said he had been around and could not see me, that he did not know what to think of it, and he said, "I hope you are not going to go back on me?" I said, "No, I have nothing to go back on. You need not be alarmed, I will not say a word." Said he, "Ain't you going to go into it, and try it?" I said, "No, I am a little afraid of it." He said,

"I AM SORRY I HAVE TOLD YOU WHAT I HAVE."

So he commenced to explain to me again that it was all right, and how much money there was in it. And I told him to tell me the truth; that I did not want him to get me into anything where I will lose my money. He told me he would not, and that I could take his word of honor for it. Said I: "If that is so, I will go up to-night and get the money." I went up on the 10:40 train on August 18th. When I got home my wife did not expect me, but I explained to her and told her what I wanted the money for. She said, "Look out." I said I always took Eddy for my friend, and he has guaranteed my money back in a couple weeks time, or at least three weeks, and that I will get probably more than I paid out. I told my wife I would not pay out the money until

THE DETECTIVE CHIEF, THAT IS CONE,

Gave me the same assurance, because I needed my money. I came down Monday on the 4 o'clock train, and Eddy met me at the depot, and he said "Let's go right over to the office?" When we got to the office nobody was there but Mrs. Cone. Eddy asked her where the Chief was, and she said he was over in Court. They telephoned or something. They had a messenger boy there and sent for him. Cone came in a few minutes and I asked Cone the same thing I had Eddy. I said, "Don't take my money if I cannot get it back; that is the only money I have got, and I have to fix my house; don't take it without there is a show to pay me back by working for you, and for to get it back in a couple or three weeks." Cone and Eddy both guaranteed me that. Cone said, "We have plenty of work."

I INTEND TO HIRE FROM 20 TO 30 MEN

From now until the Fair is over. I am going to put a stop to all gambling and selling liquor to minors." I did not talk much with the Chief then, because he said he was in a hurry. Cone said, "I have got to go to Court again. Excuse me. You sign your name to this contract." He presented me a paper; I signed it without reading, and he took my money. I said to him: "If I pay you this money, you must guarantee me my share, and that I will get my money back in two or three weeks—or any how before the Fair is over, because I have to get my house fixed." He said: "There is no trouble about that; you will get it back." Then Eddy said: "There is one thing, Chief," and and put it on my vest, and he gave me these papers, and he said: "You must excuse me, boys, I am in a great hurry. We will have a drink before I go to court, I am dry." And then Eddy motioned to the chief and said: "Chief, there is one thing I and John have been speaking about. He is a little in debt on a piece of ground up there, and I know where it is, and he was speaking of borrowing money to pay the mortgage on it. Don't you think we could help him out with a little money. We are handling quite a little change here all the time, and might as well invest in that as anything else?" The chief said: "I do not see why we could not. Cone then left, and I do not know what became of the contract I signed. Before I left Eddy said, "Can't we put him to work to-night?" Cone said, "No, I don't hardly think we can. We have been so busy in court that I have not time to go out myself. Let it go until to-morrow night. About 7 o'clock to-morrow night report to the office." I said all right, and we had a drink and parted.

CONE HANDED ME A BADGE

The following night I reported to the office, and reported nightly afterwards. On the third or fourth night Eddy met me on Fourth street, and told me that Cone said to take me out and show me some of the bad places. Eddy and I were around about three hours, when he said, "John, we have earned our $6.00 to-night, anyhow." I said, "What do you mean—between us?" He said, "Each of us." I said, "I will be satisfied if I have half of that." He said, "Never mind, it is just what I told you; that is what we are paid." We had some beer and I went home I reported every night after that, but they kept giving excuses. On one night Eddy and I went to Q street and to Fifteenth and N and back, and I went out one night with Cone; but as a general thing they kept putting me off when I came there. They had a sore foot, or a headache, or were busy in Court, or tired.

I HAVE RECEIVED NO MONEY FROM THEM

Except the night I went out with Cone. He gave me fifty cents for spending money in saloons. He said we had to go in saloons to look for cases. Cone told me that he generally paid every Saturday night "because I draw the pay from the Law and Order League every Saturday, but a man can have his money every night if he wants it. It don't make any difference to me." On Thursday night when I reported they told me they did not have anything to go out for and told me to come again Friday night when they would probably go out. Cone said that. And he said, "I can probably have a little money for you then to go up home.

IT WILL KIND OF ENCOURAGE YOU."

Last night I went there, and Cone and Eddy were talking about the police force and one thing and another, and finally they talked about going out, and they said they did not think there was anything to go out for. Cone said he was sorry he had not collected any money. He had his office boy sent out to collect money, and he did not get a cent. "But," he said, "I suppose you have no objection to let it go until you come back from home? You may drop in to-morrow morning before you go,

I MIGHT COLLECT FOR YOU TO-NIGHT."

I told him I was going on the 8:30 train the next morning, meaning this morning. Cone and his wife made an arrangement to go somewhere, and Eddy, the office boy and myself stopped in the office. I got uneasy about my money. Eddy said, "John, let us go." When we got down to the bottom of the stairs, Eddy said, "Let us have a glass of beer." I said, "No; I will not drink any more with you!" He said, "What's the matter with you, John?" I said, "There is nothing the matter, only I don't think I am treated quite right." He said, "Why?" I said, "Because you fellows don't come up to your promises. I don't think your word is good for anything any more." He said, "Why?" I said, "because

YOU DON'T LIVE UP TO WHAT YOU PROMISE. You promised to put me to work nearly every night, and to have my money back, and there is no show for it yet." He said: "You have done better than I have. They have had me up in Court, and had me arrested, and you have been out a couple or three nights." I said: "I haven't got anything for it." He said: "You will get your money. I will bet you anything you will have your money back before the Fair is over." I said: "Don't be too sure of it." He walked with me to Sixth and K, and he said: "Don't speak so loud. You are speaking loud enough to make it a public affair." I said: "That is all right; I am not going to keep anything secret any more." He said: "John, I am sorry to see you dissatisfied, after

I HELPED YOU INTO A GOOD THING.

You can go with me to my room and take anything you want to satisfy you. I would rather lose myself." I said, "I don't want any of your things. All I want is my money, but I do not suppose I will get a penny of it. I do not expect it. I have not anything to show for it except my papers." He said, "Be easy and keep everything right to yourself and you will come out all right." I said, "If it was not for your wife and little child I would have you and Cone arrested." He said, "I will not be insulted by you. I have done the best by you." I said, "You have done the best to get my money."

About 6 o'clock this morning I went to Cone's office and rang the bell. He got up in his night clothes, peeped out and said: "Hello, you are pretty early!" I said, "Yes, I came down to see you. I want to go up to my home. I came to see if you will show me the receipt for the $40 you said you would send to Washington." He said, "What Washington; what $40 receipt?" I said, "You got $50." He said, "Didn't I give you a receipt for it." I said "Yes; but you told me the night you were out with me you would have to have $10, and $40 was going to Washington to the United States Association."

He said, "I never told you any such thing. I have had trouble enough with you," and he slammed the door. I called to him and said, "Mr. Cone, listen to me. If you will give me the $50 back I will not say anything about it—about what has happened between us; but if you do not I will see what I can do." He said, "All right. You come back in business hours and not this time of day." He slammed the door and

I WENT OFF TO LOOK FOR THE CHIEF OF POLICE,

But could not find him, and came back to wait for Cone to come out. When he came out I asked him for the $50.00, and I said, "Cone, if you will show me the receipt for the $40.00, and show me you got that, I will not say anything about it. I want to see that or you pay me the $50.00 back." He said he would not do it. He said, "I have not any money, but I will do the same as I told you the other evening.

I WILL GIVE YOU MY PROMISSORY NOTE To be used by you to get your money after the Fair. I will have plenty of money then, but I haven't any now, it has been going so hard with me with all these cases."

I said, "That is no good to me; your note is no good if your word is no good. I want you to pay me the $50.00 back and we will have no trouble about it. I cannot get along without it." He said he did not have it and for me to go ahead. I did not tell him that I was going down to see Chief Lee.

Following are copies of the papers referred to in Petersen's statement, which, with a six-bit shield bearing the inscription "United States Detective," is all he has or ever will have, probably, to show for his $50:

UNITED STATES

DETECTIVE [Badge.] AND BUSINESS

SACRAMENTO, ASSOCIATION. CALIFORNIA.

To Whom It May Concern—Greeting: Know Ye, That reposing special trust and confidence in the ability integrity and discretion of John P. Peterson, we do hereby appoint him a member of our Agency. He is therefore carefully to discharge the duties devolving upon him, as such a member, and to obey all orders and directions which he shall receive from this Association.

Given under our hand and seal, this 19th day of August, 1889.

W. W. CONE, Chief Mngtr.
W. E. WHITMORE, Pres. pro tem.
D. H. CONE, Sec'y.

UNITED STATES DETECTIVE ASSOCIATION.
Incorporated December 6th, 1886.

No. 482. Sacramento, Cal., August 19, 1889.

To Whom It May Concern: The bearer of this, Mr. J. P. Peterson, is in our employ, and detailed for Special Secret Service. Police officers are requested not to interfere with him unless he violates the law.

W. W. CONE, Chief of Detectives.

NOTICE.—Pay no money on Receipts not an exact duplicate of this, as they are not genuine and will not be accepted by me.—W. W. CONE.

Sacramento, Aug. 19, 1889.
Received from John P. Peterson, Fifty Dollars, as full payment on life membership appointment to U. S. Detective Association.
W. W. CONE.

FLASHES.

Beware of a silent dog and a wet rat.
The sole is often moved by lively music.
The last thing we learn—is that it is too late.

Envy shoots at others, but usually wounds herself.
Spilled ink, like spilled blood is difficult to eradicate.

A golden key will often unlock the most secret drawers.

An opening attraction—pulling the cork from a bottle of wine.

The honest man, like a brilliant man, has no occasion to proclaim it.

No matter how dark the cloud that hangs over you, remember that it contains fruitful showers.

It is said that electricity will smooth out wrinkles. Here is a chance for the ancient ballet girl.

Judge Buckley convicted a man by the name of Sault. It was apparent that Sault was too fresh.

There is one way that a man can lord it over woman—marry a typewriter—you can dictate to her.

About the only fire in an ordinary orthodox sermon of these days, is a reference to a certain warm place.

Marriage is the hitching post on the road of life. Some of these hitches are not strong enough to prevent a runaway.

Impertinence is not wit any more than insolence is brilliancy. Some of our lawyers might profit by a study of this sentiment.

Why is it that when an official of the city or the State goes away for a few days' rest the announcement is invariably made that he is taking a "well earned vacation?"

This should be laid down as an edict of civilization: If a young man cannot tell a man from a deer at the distance of a few rods, he should never be allowed to get a gun.

Married.—Ebenezer Sweet to Jane Lemon.

Thus we see extremes meet

In Jane and Ebenezer;

She's no longer sour, but Sweet,

And he's a Lemon squeezer.

"Self Defense."

A few evenings since a number of gentlemen who denominate themselves "injuns," after the manner and style of the aboriginal red men of the forest and prairie, and are happy in their wonderful sounding titles—"Great Scalpen," "Wampum Holder," "Chief Red Jacket," etc., etc.—including Johnnie Uckle, Jaken Agle, Geon Ichols and a host of other chiefs and warriors of the everglades and mountains, were holding a midnight pow-wow where the fire water and pipe of peace were indiscriminately utilized, and the wrongs and rights of the brave red man were discussed from a purely civilized standpoint. During this confab, story telling of exploits and encounters was the order. One warlike chief broke the spell of aboriginal chat by interpolating that source of all good stories, the Irishman, in telling the following of three recent arrivals from the Emerald Isle. These three greenhorns, as they were designated by their countrymen who were so fortunate as to arrive a few years prior, secured employment on the public works. All went well with them until one of the trio, Teddy by name, was taken ill and died. Pat and Mike, his former companions, were disconsolate, but resolved to give Teddy a genuine Irish wake. During the wake, and about 12 o'clock at night, all the other visitors had departed leaving Pat and Mike alone with the subject of the wake. Wake duty had the effect to make the watchers thirsty, and Pat asked Mike for the lack. Mike replied that it was all gone. "Plawat shall we do?" says Mike. "Be the powers," says Pat, "I have it; ye's tak 'Teddy' be the one arm, and I'll tak the other and we'll walk him to the saloon beyant, and call for a drap of the cratur." "Be me sowl, that's the idea," says Mike. The three marched into the saloon as though they were boon companions on a little toot. The barkeeper, with the usual smirk in anticipation of adding a little to the profits of the day, asked, "Well, gents, what will it be?" "Give me the cratur wid a drap of sour," says Mike. "A little toddy for me-self," said Pat. "What's yours?" says the barkeeper to the corpse. "Oh, he's a frind, don't mind him," says Mike and Pat in chorus. The two then stepped out leaving "Teddy" leaning against the bar. They stationed themselves where they could watch events. Presently the barkeeper addressed "Teddy," saying, "Dig up, settle for the drinks," etc. Of course there was no response. The barkeeper, now thoroughly enraged at the supposed heat, came from behind the bar and dealt him a Sullivan blow, the corpse falls, and simultaneously the two friends, Mike and Pat, rush in, and accuse the barkeeper with killing Teddy, their friend, and saying, "Ye's 'll be indited." The barkeeper now frightened, said, "My dear sirs, he drew a knife on me, and I killed him in self defense." Let some of our Sacramento jurors apply the moral.

LOCAL BREVITIES.

School Superintendent Howard and family and Miss Addie Morton returned from Allen Springs yesterday.

P. F. Dolan, County License Collector, has gone into the country on his periodical collecting tour. Mr. Dolan is a very successful collector.

The annual election of officers of the Sacramento Society of California Pioneers will take place this evening. The indications are that it will be spirited.

James Coady was robbed by two foot-pads of $7.50. They did the business in the most approved style. The police are on the track of the robbers.

The Supreme Court has affirmed Judge Armstrong's judgment in the State Library Trustees case. The decision will seat Dana Perkins as Librarian.

Hon. Robt. T. Devlin, of this city, was elected one of the local council for the Pacific coast division of the American Bar Association at a meeting held at Chicago Friday.

Mrs. Jacob Lang and daughter, Mrs. Greps, Ellis, Lottie and Harry Greps, Laura Hooks and Mrs. Herman Mier and children have returned from Santa Cruz. Mr. Mier and Mr. Greps of same party went south for a short trip.

Peter Morlath returned from Germany Tuesday. During his absence some one circulated a report here, and it was published, that he had been convicted, in the old country, for the murder of his wife, and sentenced to be hanged. It turns out that the story was a base fabrication, but it seems not likely that it will be traced to its source.

Interesting Legal Point.

Yesterday, when George Nelson, who had been convicted of highway robbery, appeared for sentence in the Superior Court before Judge Armstrong, his counsel, W. A. Anderson and J. C. Tibbs, made a motion in arrest of judgment, "because the Court has no jurisdiction of the subject matter of said alleged information set forth, in this: That said information is not based on any legal order or lawful examination; that the defendant has never been held upon the lawful order of any officer named in Section 808 of the Penal Code." The defendant's counsel contend that de jure there was no such officer as Township Justice of the Peace, and that the Legislature had no power to delegate to the Board of Supervisors authority to create the office and appoint an officer to fill it—the office of Justice of the Peace being a Constitutional office. Certainly that the Supervisors could not create the office, which they in fact did. It was contended that while in civil cases the action of a de facto magistrate might be valid, that in criminal cases a matter of jurisdiction could not be waived, and could be taken advantage of at any time before judgment. District Attorney Bruner contended:

1. That Justice Henry is a de jure Justice of the Peace, inasmuch as the Constitution of California has delegated to the Legislature the power of establishing Justice and other inferior Courts, and defining their powers and duties, and the Legislature has exercised this power in creating Justice Courts in and for each township in the State, and that the Court would take judicial notice of the existence of the Township of Sacramento.

2. That, conceding that Justice Henry is not a de jure officer, he is a de facto officer, and his powers and duties cannot be inquired into collaterally. In other words, his acts are legal until by proper action it is judicially determined that he has no power to act. In State vs. Carroll (Conn.), found in American Reports, vol. 9, page 426, the Court says: "A public office is to be supposed necessary for the public service, and for the convenience of all the various members of the community, and that, therefore, it will be duly filled by the public authority. When one is found actually in office, and openly and notoriously exercising its functions in a limited district, so that it must be known to those whose official duty it is to see that the office is legally filled; and also, that it is not illegally usurped. And when this goes on for a great length of time, or for a period which covers much of the time for which the office may be lawfully conferred, it would be entrapping the citizen and betraying his interests, if, when he had applied to the officer de facto to do his business, and got it done, as he supposed, by the only person who could do it, he could yet be told that all that was done was void."

3. That the jurisdiction of Justice Henry could not be inquired into on a motion in arrest of judgment, unless a demurrer had been interposed (which was not done) prior to the plea of the defendant to the information.

Judge Armstrong took the motion under advisement, and will decide the question before next Friday, when, if the motion in arrest of judgment is denied, the court will hear the motion for a new trial upon the statutory grounds, which has been filed.

Equalization of Taxation.

The San Francisco press is distressed that the Board of Supervisors of that city and county has been summoned by the State Board of Equalization to show cause next month why the assessments of real estate in that city should not be increased to conform to the assessments in the rural counties. We do not know the basis of assessment this year in San Francisco, but it is ordinarily safe to assume that in most of the counties property valuations are entirely too low. Property throughout the State should be assessed on the basis of its real cash value, as nearly as it can be ascertained. Were that rule followed universally the tax rate would be materially lowered, yet the same amount would be realized by the collections. The disposition seems to have been with County Assessors to lower valuations, in that the State tax levy will fall more heavily on counties other than their own. The principal duty of the State Board of Equalization is to correct the irregularity and to even the burdens of governmental support. We are inclined to think that as an entirety the roll of San Francisco, as a general proposition, will justify a raise, but we fully agree with the Call that "The spirit of a sound system of taxation on real estate is based on the principle that nothing is taxable but real value. Fancy values, created for the moment by speculation and predicated on dreams of future development, are not properly taxable. They are the offspring of imagination, liable to vanish with the whim of the moment, and are not any more properly subjects of assessment than the castles in Spain, which young men often construct when they go into business."

If Not Spirit Presence, What?

From a reliable source comes this remarkable fact, which needs no comment. Some years ago a lady was heir to a part of a large estate, a brother and other sisters sharing it with her. That brother always addressed her as "Sister," and had a habit of touching her shoulder as he came up to speak with her. He passed away, and she lived in a large house, which she owned, but which was in charge of the executors of the estate. She wished to make certain improvements on the premises, but it was a question whether the estate must pay for them or whether the cost would fall on her. Her lawyer held it quite doubtful, and at last she said: "I will make the improvements and pay the costs myself, if necessary." The day she came to this decision, while walking from her parlor to another room, not thinking of her brother, she felt that familiar touch of a hand on her shoulder and heard her brother's voice say: "Sister, you can go on with your plans and the estate will pay the expenses."

She asked her lawyers to see the executors, which he promised to do, but thought it quite useless. In a day or two he told her they were bound to pay the cost of the proposed rebuilding, a verdict which surprised him, but they did pay that cost. None of these persons were Spiritualists, and this account comes from one of the sisters, not a Spiritualist.—Religio-Philosophical Journal.

SNOWFLAKE PARK.

Twenty-eighth and R Streets.

BASEBALL—CALIFORNIA LEAGUE.

THIS DAY! THIS DAY!

Saturday, August 31st

At 3 o'clock P. M., sharp.

San Francisco vs. Sacramento.

Men, 25 cents | Ladies, 25 cents
Boys, 10 cents | Reserved, 25 cents

Train leaves depot at 2:45 P. M. Fare, for the round trip, 15 cents.

Capital Iron Works.

Vertical and Horizontal Engines

BOILERS,

STEAM AND POWER

PUMPS,

Deep Well Pumps,

Hand Pumps,

Stock Pumps,

PUMPMAKERS' SUPPLIES,

HORSE-POWERS, WIND MILLS,

Tanks and Tank Houses.

904 K Street, Sacramento.

California State Bank

DOES A GENERAL BANKING BUSINESS.

Draws Exchange on all the Principal Cities of the World.

PRESIDENT.....N. D. RIDEOUT
VICE-PRESIDENT.....FRED K. COX
CASHIER.....A. ABBOTT
ASSISTANT CASHIER.....W. E. GERBER

DIRECTORS:
C. W. Clarke, Jos. Steffens, N. D. Rideout,
Geo. C. Perkins, J. R. Watson, Frederick Cox,
W. E. Gerber.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

THE CARS OF THE CENTRAL STREET RAILWAY COMPANY will only stop at the further crossings

There will Always be Cars Waiting at the Close of Both Theaters.

THE NEW PAVILION

At South Sacramento will be open on SUNDAY, the 4th of August, and at all times thereafter.

Refreshments of all kinds always on hand.

Fine Table Wines

From our Celebrated Orleans Vineyard.

Produce of the

ECLIPSE

CHAMPAGNE,

530 Washington St. SAN FRANCISCO.

CHAMPAGNE

W. B. CHAPMAN,
123 California St. San Francisco.
SOLE AGENT FOR THE PACIFIC COAST
10 sale by all first-class Wine Merchants and Grocers.

Samples and Instructions for Self-measurement sent by mail on application.

L. RADLOFF,
LADIES' TAILOR,
218 POST STREET, SAN FRANCISCO.
Tailor Made Suits a Specialty.

A. AITKEN,

PREMIUM PIONEER MARBLE AND GRANITE WORKS

423 J Street, bet. 4th and 5th, Sacramento.

Costic Tile, etc. Cemetery lots enclosed with Granite. All kinds of work done in Italian and Vermont Marble. Direct importer of Scotch and Eastern Granite Monuments. Also, Marble, Slate, Wooden and Iron Mantels, direct from manufacturers, at Reduced Prices. Call and examine.

Nothing to Do.

Nothing to do—condensation of bliss! To feel lazy luxury's lingering kiss; To drift with the hours, nor attempt to withstand The sweep of old Time's irresistible hand. When existence is ended I ask not to go [glow, Where some long golden stretch tires the eye with its Nor puzzle my mind with the flats or the sharps Of anthems celestial on aureate harps. "Twere better by far to recline near some grove Where even the winds stop to rest ere they rove; Or where tall grasses nod as the breeze loiters through And laugh while they whisper of nothing to do.

Mr. and Mrs. Bowser at a Sunday Picnic.

"I think we'll go up to the park to-morrow," said Mr. Bowser the other Saturday evening, as he finished his cigar.

"But won't it be dreadful crowded?" I queried.

"There you go! You are always ready to oppose anything I suggest."

"I am not opposing you, only you know that the boats are always crowded on Sunday, and that one is apt to meet with many lawless characters. I have heard you say that the place was in possession of a mob all day Sunday."

"Never! On the contrary, I have always boasted of how orderly it was. I guarantee that you can go up there alone and stay all day and you will be treated like a Queen."

"Well, if you think we had best go, why—"

"Of course, I do. I think a little trip on water will do us all good, and at the island we can seek some sylvan retreat and enjoy the beauties of the surroundings."

"And you—you won't get mad?"

"Mrs. Bowser, what do you mean?"

"If things do not go right you won't scold and blame everything to me?"

"Have you gone mad? When did I ever blame you? If you suspect that you are getting softening of the brain let me know, and I'll have a medical examination."

After dinner next day we made a start. I think Mr. Bowser started with the firm determination to keep his good nature at every hazard, but something occurred almost immediately to upset him. The street-car was jam-full and running over, but it stopped and we wedged our way in. In the squeeze some one stepped on Mr. Bowser's corn, some one else knocked his plug hat off, and a third person was heard to remark that if he weighed a ton he would charter a special car when he wanted to ride. This put Mr. Bowser in trim to say to the conductor:

"Does the manager of this line think we are a lot of hogs that we can be packed in an old car this way?"

"Don't know, sir."

"Then you'd better find out! It's an insult on decent people, and I for one don't propose to submit to it!"

"Thaz rize, old fel'r!" shouted a half-drunken man from the front of the car.

"Go in, old bay window!" added a second.

"Ten to one on old Bowser!" yelled a man from the rear platform.

We finally got down to the boat. It was black with humanity, and I didn't want to go, but Mr. Bowser elbowed people right and left, and I followed. After being crowded, pushed, jammed, squeezed and knocked about for ten minutes, I got a chair from which a drunken man had just fallen off, and Mr. Bowser found standing room beside me.

"I told you I thought the boats would be crowded," I remarked as soon as I could get my breath.

"Well, that shows all you know about it. There is no crowd on this boat. She could carry as many again."

"But what a rough set of people!"

"No rougher than we are. You simply want to find fault and make me uncomfortable."

Just at that moment a tough came up, looked Mr. Bowser over from crown to heel, and then said:

"You look like the bloke who threw mud at me little sister last May."

"Sir! You are mistaken?" replied Mr. Bowser.

"What er you doin' wid all that stoile on?" demanded the tough, as he brought his arm around and gave Mr. Bowser's hat a "swat" which sent it flying to the deck.

Mr. Bowser grabbed him, and there would have been a fight had not a number of men interfered. When the hat was recovered it had a shoulder-blade and three ribs broken, and in the brief clinch the tough had torn away Mr. Bowser's necktie.

"I'm so sorry we came," I said as I got a chance to speak to him. "You know I told you I thought it would be very unpleasant."

"Yes, of course, you are sorry! You can't bear to see me enjoying myself! I wasn't aware that anything unpleasant had occurred."

In getting off the boat at the island some one stepped on my dress-skirt and nearly tore it off, while Mr. Bowser's hat was crushed down over his eyes and some one picked his cigar-case out of his coat-tail pocket. We finally got out of the crowd and wandered away until we reached a shady spot, and then it did seem as if we might take some comfort. I began to express my sympathy for Mr. Bowser, when he turned on me with:

"When I want to be consoled with I'll let you know. Thus far we have had a real good time, and I don't want to hear any more kicking about it."

"This is the sylvan retreat you spoke of, I suppose?" I remarked as I looked around and saw cigar stubs, playing cards, pretzels, beer bottle corks, and a rusty old cork-screw lying on the grass.

He didn't say. He was going to when a couple of young men came that way and stopped and asked Mr. Bowser for a match to light their clay-pipes. He didn't have any, and one of them said:

"Well, yer needn't be so crusty about it. We are just as good as you are."

"And a blamed sight better, Jim," added the other. "I've seen this old bungee up here every Sunday this summer, and he's always had a different woman with him! He's up to snuff, and don't you forget it."

Mr. Bowser jumped up, but both of them piled onto him, and I screamed and brought assistance. They split his coat up the back, tore his collar off, and tore three buttons off his vest, and as they went away they threatened to come back and finish him off.

"Mr. Bowser," I said, after the crowd had started, "hain't we better go home?"

"No, ma'am, we hain't! I came up here to enjoy myself, and I'm bound to do so."

I coaxed and argued, but he was obstinate, and pretty soon something else happened. A gang of five or six men came along, ripe for mischief, and one of them halted before Mr. Bowser and inquired:

"Shay, ole fel, I lost a dollar here about an hour ago, and you picked it up."

"You are mistaken, sir."

"Course he did," put in a second tough, "and he's got to give it up."

"I haven't seen anything of your dollar!" hotly replied Mr. Bowser, and the gang was making threats when I ran for help.

Before I got back they had rolled Mr. Bowser on the grass, taken all his change away, and cuffed him about until he presented a sad sight. Then the policeman who had come too late advised him:

"Say, old man, you'd better go home. You've had five or six rows within an hour, and I shall have to run you in if you don't leave. You are evidently a desperate character."

Mr. Bowser beckoned to me and led the way to the boat. On the way down he was pointed out as Sullivan and Kilrain, and everybody had a gibe at him. At the wharf he hired a hack to take us home, and not one word would he speak to me all the way up. When we finally got into the house he locked the door of the sitting room and sat down in front of me and said:

"Mrs. Bowser, look at me!"

"Yes, it's awful! I was afraid it would turn out this way."

"And yet nothing would do but you must go."

"Why, I didn't want to go one step."

"Take care! You are to blame for this whole business. I have borne and borne, but the worm has finally turned at last. Make out a list of what furniture you want to keep, and let us settle on the amount of the alimony."

We didn't settle, however. He felt better next day, and I don't think he will refer to the matter again unless I bring it up.—Detroit Free Press.

FRIEND & TERRY LUMBER CO.

Wholesale and Retail Lumber Dealers. Also Shakes, Bolts, Ties, Doors, Windows, Blinds and Screens. Main Yard and Office, No. 120 Second Street. Branch Yard, corner Twelfth and J Sts. P. O. Box 233. E. J. HOLT, Manager. Sacramento

OSBORN & FOLGER

DEALERS IN ICE and COAL, HAY and GRAIN. New 10-ton Fairbanks' Hay Scales. N. E. cor. Fifth and I Streets. Wood Yard, 806 I Street.

PAUL GRAF,

Manufacturer of and dealer in Saddles, Harness, Robes, Collars, Whips, Spurs, Brushes, Currycombs, etc.

1130 J Street, near Twelfth
Repairing Neatly Done.
Harness Made to Order.

SCHOOL.

PUPILS of the Public Schools who wish to review during their vacation will find BAINBRIDGE COLLEGE the place. We make a specialty of Grammar School and High School Studies. No extra charge for Penmanship or Elocution drill. You can attend in the cool part of the day; hours, 8 A. M. to 1 P. M. J. C. BAINBRIDGE, Principal.

No. 1017 J Street, Sacramento.

SECOND HAND

"REMINGTON" TYPE WRITERS

FOR RENT AND FOR SALE.

Type Writers' Supplies of All Kinds.

AT THE

YOST AGENCY, 1007 FOURTH STREET.

L. K. Hammer

THE LEADING

MUSIC DEALER.

AGENT FOR

Chickering Pianos,

Largest Stock of Musical Instruments in the City.

No. 820 J STREET.

W. R. STRONG & CO.

Founded 1852.

Fruit Packers

and Shippers.

PROPRIETORS OF

CAPITAL NURSERIES,

SACRAMENTO, CAL.

CURTIS BROS. & CO.

Wholesale and Retail Dealers in and Shippers of all kinds of

Fruits, Vegetables

And GENERAL PRODUCE.

Careful attention paid to the selection and packing of Choice Fruits and Vegetables for distant markets. Goods delivered in city free.

308 and 310 K Street, - - Sacramento, Cal.

R. W. PARKER,

Dealer in Choice Family

GROCERIES and PROVISIONS

Sold at the Lowest Cash Price.

Give him a call and be convinced.

Corner of Seventeenth and N Streets.

Also, Office of the Superintendent of the City Cemetery.

King Bros.

State Capitol Cash Grocery, 131 J Street, corner Second.

Goods sold on small margin, strictly for cash. Best Brands of Wines, Liquors and Cigars.

JAS. LONGSHORE,

SACRAMENTO TRUNK FACTORY,

530 K STREET.

Trunks, Valises & Bags Wholesale and Retail.

Waterhouse & Lester

DEALERS IN

IRON, STEEL, CUMBERLAND COAL.

Wagon Lumber and Carriage Hardware, SACRAMENTO.

Earthquake and Fire Proof BUILDINGS

Constructed on my patent system. Perfect protection guaranteed. For estimates and particulars see E. HAWES, Twelfth and B streets, Sacramento.

$500 REWARD.

PURSUANT TO A RESOLUTION OF THE BOARD of Supervisors of Sacramento county, adopted May 7, 1889, said Board will pay the sum of Five Hundred Dollars ($500) for evidence leading to the arrest and conviction of any party illegally carrying on the business of hydraulic mining on the American river or its tributaries, in any and all mines or claims which have been heretofore enjoined by any Court of competent jurisdiction; provided, however, that said Board will pay but one reward for the arrest and conviction of a person or persons operating the same mine or claim.

Attest: F. F. TEBBETS, Chairman of the Board of Supervisors. W. B. HAMILTON, Clerk of Board.

A. L. HRT,

ATTORNEY-AT-LAW

Sutter Building, cor. 5th and J.

W. A. ANDERSON,

ATTORNEY-AT-LAW,

No. 209 J Street, Sacramento.

W. A. GETT, JR.,

Attorney at Law,

Southwest Corner of Seventh and J Streets,

SACRAMENTO, CAL.

F. F. TEBBETS, DENTIST.

No. 914 SIXTH STREET,

bet. I and J, west side, opp. Congregational Church.

DR. H. H. PIERSON,

SURGICAL & AND & MECHANICAL & DENTIST

511 J Street, bet. 5th and 6th.

Gas administered for the painless extraction of teeth.

Joseph Hahn & Co.,

PHARMACISTS,

S. W. cor. Fifth and J Streets, Sacramento.

CHOICE PERFUMERIES, Etc.

Prescriptions carefully compounded, at all hours.

A C. SWEETSER & CO.,

Real Estate & Insurance Brokers

Lands For Sale in all parts of the State.

Some Good Investments in School Lands.

Send for Catalogue.

Office, No. 1012 Fourth Street,

SACRAMENTO, CAL.

BELL & CO.,

GENERAL AUCTIONEERS.

Salesroom, 927 K Street, Sacramento, Cal.

Regular Salesdays—Wednesdays and Saturdays at 10 o'clock A. M.

Assistants—W. T. Crowell, Real Estate; J. Pulvermacher, Bookkeeper; J. Lambert, Furniture and Stock.

Particular attention paid to sales of real estate, house sales, and sales of farms, stock, etc.

Highest price paid for all kinds of household goods.

Barrett & Berkey

PACIFIC RESTAURANT,

OYSTER HOUSE AND

WINE PARLORS

701 J Street, cor. 7th.

J. S. ROSS'

Fourth-Street Restaurant

1023 FOURTH STREET,

Opposite Postoffice, SACRAMENTO.

OYSTERS IN EVERY STYLE.

Meals Cooked to Order,

And served in first-class manner.

NEW ORLEANS GUMBO SOUP THURSDAYS AND SUNDAYS.

I have had years of experience as a restaurateur, and feel confident that I can cater satisfactorily to the tastes of all who may favor me with their patronage. J. S. ROSS, Proprietor.

CANCERS,

Ulcers, Wens, Lumps, Excrescences, etc., Positively Cured or no Pay. No Knife Used.

As to the success of my treatment, I give the names of a few of the many cured. By addressing them they will give any information required—and it pays to investigate before being treated.

Mrs. O. C. Nielsen, Grass Valley, cancer.
John Service, Auburn, lupus.
Patrick Lynch, Sacramento, cancer.
Mrs. Jno. Shaw, Grass Valley, birthmark removed.
N. S. Peck, S. F. R. R. Sacramento, cancer.
J. L. Woods, Washington, Yolo county, cancer.
John W. Douglas, Rocklin, cancer.
Miss Mamie Lynch, Yolo, tumor removed.
Chas. McLaughlin, Sacramento, cancer.
I might give many more. Those afflicted are invited to call and investigate for themselves. Consultation at office free. Send for circular.
Office, 426 K Street, Sacramento.

DR. J. H. SHIRLEY.

O'BRIEN'S, 607 J.

SWEEPING REDUCTION IN LADIES' SHOES.

Best French Kid, hand turn, worth $7, reduced to $6.
Ladies' French Kid Button, low heel, long vamp, worth $5, reduced to $4.
Misses' and Children's Canvas Shoes reduced 25 per cent.

A. J. MUIR,

PLUMBER,

— Gas and Steam Fitter. —

Being a practical plumber, I can guarantee all work.

810 K STREET,

Telephone 226.

SACRAMENTO, CAL.

ALBERT GRUBBS,

No. 1417 Fourth Street,

Will do all kinds of House Cleaning, Lay Carpets, Whitewashing, and everything in that line.

He also has the only wagon for the REMOVAL OF DEAD ANIMALS, and any orders left at his place of business will receive prompt attention.

[Remember the address!]

No. 1417 Fourth Street, Sacramento, Cal.

JESSE SLAUGHTER,

Office, No. 1217 Fifth Street.

Plastering, Whitewashing, Cleaning of Cesspools, Etc.

Also, CITY SCAVENGER.

Burying of dead animals attended to at short notice.

Don't forget the number—1217 Fifth street, the old stand, where I have been for 25 years.

R. H. PETTIT,

Wholesale and Retail Dealer in

IMPORTED & DOMESTIC CIGARS

Smoke the "Lone Fisherman,"

The BEST FIVE-CENT CIGAR in the Market.

NO. 225 K STREET.

Take a Ride on the Riverside Road

AND BE SURE AND STOP AT

BILLY GROENVELD'S

Sutterville House

And get a glass of COOL BEER. Or if you want a bottle of CHAMPAGNE Billy has it on hand, or anything else you may wish for in his line.

Always a FINE LUNCH on the Counter.

M. T. GROENVELD, Proprietor.

CALL AT 1118 J STREET,

—AT—

Fred Futterer's Saloon

And Get a Glass of Cool Beer.

The best Wines, Liquors and Cigars always on hand.

POOL AND BILLIARD TABLES.

FRED FUTTERER,

1118 J Street.

CHANGED HANDS.

SACRAMENTO EXCHANGE,

(Formerly Wm. Gamble's.)

1012 SEVENTH STREET.

Fine Wines. All the celebrated brands of Liquors and Cigars. ROBERT ALLEN, Formerly of Agricultural Park.

RHOADS & TOWNSEND HOUSE

On European Plan.

Cor. Second and J Streets, Sacramento.

ARTHUR MILLER, PROPRIETOR.

A Stranger in Town.

IT is safe to wager that this is a truthful portrait of the wonder and astonishment usually aroused by a stranger on entering a small country village. All stand with their mouths wide open, reminding the traveler of the Mammoth Cave, and they gaze on him as though beholding an apparition from another world. And, by the way, this is a forcible reminder of the fact that

Arcadian, the Ideal,

is creating just about as much commotion among the proprietors of competing brands as the appearance of the stranger does among the unsophisticated inhabitants of the rural village. Imagine the stranger in the above illustration to be

"Arcadian and Ideal,"

and the gawky, paralyzed spectators, competing drinks, and you have a very correct idea of the position occupied by Arcadian Sarsaparilla and Iron. A glass of IDEAL is, indeed, delightful. It is a great blood purifier, possesses valuable medicinal properties, and is warmly indorsed by eminent physicians in every part of England and America. It has long been a favorite drink among the English people, and is acquiring universal favor and popularity wherever introduced.

Ideal is prepared with pure Arcadian Mineral Water, and is bottled at Waukesha, Wis. It is a mild laxative, acts favorably in promoting the secretions of the kidneys, enriches the blood, and is of decided value in malarial diseases of every type. It imparts an invigorating tone to the entire system.

It is essentially a ladies' drink, and possesses rare merit.

ARCADIAN, THE IDEAL,

IS KEPT FOR SALE BY ALL FIRST-CLASS

Druggists, Grocers and Saloon Keepers.

ANHEUSER & BUSCH BEER

Can be found on draught only at

John Gruhler's Saloon

No. 522 J STREET.

The finest and best Wines, Liquors and Cigars constantly on hand.

Patronize Home Industry!

CITY & BREWERY

FRANK RUHSTALLER, Proprietor.

GENUINE

Pilsener Felsen Beer.

Corner Twelfth and H Streets,

Telephone 201.

SACRAMENTO.

CELEBRATED

WEINER LAGER BEER

CAPITAL BREWERY

LOUIS NICOLAUS,

Corner Twelfth and I Streets

SACRAMENTO.

COLUMBUS BREWERY

CHRIS. WAHL, Proprietor

Corner of Sixteenth and K Streets,

SACRAMENTO, CAL.

Agent for the Celebrated W. J. LEMP'S ST. LOUIS LAGER BEER

WISSEMAN'S SALOON,

Klebetz & Green's Old Stand,

1020 Fourth St., bet. J and K, Sacramento.

GEO. WISSEMAN, PROPRIETOR.

Families and Saloons supplied by bottle or keg.

Butchers' Home,

1020 J Street,

Between 10th and 11th, : Sacramento, Cal.

Fine Wines, Liquors and Cigars. Also, a

GOOD GLASS OF BEER.

JACOB GRUHLER, Prop'r.

CAPITAL ALE VAULTS.

Established in 1870, and still maintains the same reputation for keeping the best WINES, LIQUORS and Cigars in the city. The finest Hot Lunch in the city from 11 to 2. Clam Chowder a specialty every night.

NAGELE & SVENSSON, Prop'rs.

Telephone 38.

302 J and 1005 Third st.

NOTES.

The old prophecy that the month of August is fraught with great disasters, has been verified by the terrific floods in Japan. Ten thousand souls perished in the deluge and twenty thousand are homeless. Enormous losses in property.

We noticed, a few days ago, mechanics engaged in patching up an old engine boiler, evidently for use in some country town. It is this patchwork business that swells the record of "disasters," "another boiler explosion," "several workmen killed" etc.

Senator Hoar says: "Nearly a majority of the United States Senate favor woman suffrage. Of those opposed to it, many have committed themselves to the doctrine that the control of the matter should be left to the States. President Harrison, as is well known, voted, when in the Senate, to submit a woman suffrage amendment to the States, or paired on that side."

It is as we intimated last week that the Law and Order League is composed of conscientious men, but who have little good judgment when it comes down to dealing with the suppression of crime. To those at all conversant with the proceedings of our criminal courts, it is well known that some of the men sailing under the badge of private detectives are very dangerous to the community. Chief Lee was right when, in reply to a demand from the League that he should aid the private detectives, he said that neither he nor his officers would have anything to do with the men who were at present employed as detectives by the League, as he considered that a number of them were worse criminals than the culprits whom they pretended to be tracking. He wanted nothing to do, he said, with the Cone element, and as long as that individual had anything to do with the League the police force would not lend an assisting hand. Continuing, the Chief said: "If you gentlemen will just pick out any number of good, honest men, we will make them special police officers, and assist them with the greatest of pleasure, and they will be given the same rights as our regular officers have. We don't want to be working with a lot of blackmailers."

There is one class of law-breakers that has given the minor courts much trouble in the past, and is a source of great annoyance to magistrates at all times. We speak now of the man who is arraigned before the Police Court for violence against his wife or family, or the drunkard who has a family. If the wife or family prosecute—and a conviction is sure to follow such prosecution—then the penalty, as a matter of fact, falls upon the unfortunate's wife or family. If he is fined, that is taking just that amount from the mouths of his suffering family. If he is imprisoned, they are deprived of the proceeds of his labor during incarceration. Thus it develops that a brute of a husband can get drunk, beat and abuse his wife, and if he is arrested, retaliates by starving them while in jail. For years we have noticed the hundreds of cases where poor, mistreated wives have been compelled, for their safety, to seek police aid by the arrest of the husband, and only to come weeping and pleading next day into court for mercy toward the husband, and the invariable excuse is, "we will starve unless he is allowed to go." There should be some remedy for this evil, but thus far it has baffled our wise heads and law-givers.

Proposed Improvements at the County Jail.

Sheriff McMullen has suggested that the engine room in the southwest corner of the county jail be removed, and the space utilized as the site of an addition to the county jail—the upper story to be arranged with cells for female prisoners and the lower floor to be fitted for a receiving hospital, and a cell for the incarceration of prisoners under sentence of death—in that they can be there kept removed from contact with the general prisoners. The idea is an excellent one, as the engine room is now in disuse, the county buildings being heated by stoves. The receiving hospital is a necessity. In some urgent cases it is a hardship to transport patients to the county hospital. In cases of sickness of prisoners in the jail, it is better that they be provided for within the jail walls; the danger of escape is obviated.

The Weather.

The highest and lowest temperature during the past week was 94 on Saturday and Friday and 52 on Saturday. The highest and lowest for the same time last year was 108 and 58. The Signal Service reports at 5 o'clock this morning show rain to be falling at Portland and Roseburg, Oregon, and Eureka, California. The total rainfall for the 24 hours ending at 5 A. M., was for Olympia, .38 of an inch; Fort Cauby, .50; Portland, .42; Roseburg, .26 and Eureka, .04 of an inch.

H. WACHHORST Leading Jeweler of Sacramento

SIGN OF THE TOWN CLOCK,
No. 315 J STREET, SACRAMENTO.

W. D. Comstock, 501 -- 507 K, cor. Fifth

On Exhibition, THE LARGEST AND BEST SELECTED STOCK.
FAIR DEALING! LOW PRICES!

GENSHLEA BROS. 624 J ST.
Strictly High Grade Goods in all Lines.

TRY THE LA ROSA ESPANOLA KEY WEST CIGAR.

JAS. G. DAVIS Furniture, Carpets and Wall Paper
411 AND 413 K STREET,
Branch, 315 K St. Send for Catalogue. Prices Lowest.

Wm. J. Hassett.

A. J. Johnston.

A. J. Johnston & Co.

PRINTERS,

410 J Street,

Sacramento

Klune & Floberg, WATCHMAKERS and JEWELERS
Agents for Rockford Watch Co.
NO. 428 J STREET, SACRAMENTO.

Something New

NEW STORE. NEW MEN.

BELL & FOUNTAIN

HAVE OPENED THE

Plaza Cash Grocery
STORE,

Corner Tenth and J Streets,

And have stocked the same with all New and Fresh Goods, which they will sell for CASH at the smallest living margin.

All Goods Warranted as Represented.

Goods delivered to any part of the city.

Our Motto: "The nimble sixpence against the slow shilling!"

BELL & FOUNTAIN,

Plaza Cash Grocery Store.

BAKER & HAMILTON,

San Francisco and Sacramento,

Importers and Jobbers of

Hardware, Iron, Steel, Coal, Powder,

MACHINERY

And Agricultural Implements.

Send for Catalogue.

REEVES & LONG, UNDERTAKERS,
609 J Street, bet. Sixth and Seventh.

WE KEEP ON HAND A COMPLETE Stock of Coffins and Caskets; also, Shrouds of every description. Orders from city or country receive prompt attention, day or night. EMBALMING done in the best manner; and at reasonable rates.

BOOTS AND SHOES made to order. Boots, $6 to $11. Shoes, $4 to $9. Ladies' Shoes, best quality French Kid, $5 to $7.

REPAIRING DONE at lowest prices.

NONE BUT BEST mechanics employed.

WE GUARANTEE to make perfect fitting to the worst of crooked and crippled feet.

COMPETE WITH any shoes on the market.

216 J Street

—AND—

208 K Street,

SACRAMENTO.

A. CASELLI & COMPANY.

WESTERN HOTEL
209 to 219 K Street.

The Leading Hotel of Sacramento, Cal.

FREE BUS TO AND FROM HOTEL.

Meals, 25 Cents. Rooms, according to Location.

WM. LAND, Proprietor.

F. KUEHNE & CO.,

NO. 906 NINTH STREET,

Between I and J,

SACRAMENTO,

Carpenters and Contractors

Store and office work a specialty.

ICE BOXES for Breweries and Saloons always on hand and made to order.

Jobbing and Repairing promptly attended to.

American Steam Laundry

NINETEENTH AND I STS.—WHITE LABOR only. Linen polished in the neatest manner. We guarantee satisfaction. All ordinary mending, sewing on buttons, etc., free of charge. Washing called for and delivered to any part of the city. Main Office at Sawtelle's Book Store, 708 and 710 J street. Branch offices at all the Hotels.

RAILROAD TIME TABLE.
Southern Pacific Company
PACIFIC SYSTEM.
July 28, 1889.

Trains LEAVE and are due to ARRIVE at SACRAMENTO.

Lv.	Trains Run Daily.	Arr.
7:00 A	Calistoga and Napa	11:40 A
4:05 P	Calistoga and Napa	8:30 P
11:00 P	Ashland and Portland	3:40 A
5:05 P	Deming, El Paso and East	7:05 P
7:30 P	Knights Landing	7:55 A
4:30 A	Marysville (Mixed)	7:25 P
9:00 A	Los Angeles	9:55 A
9:00 P	Second Class, Ogden and East	6:30 A
10:30 P	Central Atlantic Express	3:40 P
3:00 P	Ogden and East	9:50 A
11:00 P	Oroville	3:40 A
3:00 P	Red Bluff via Marysville	9:50 A
10:40 A	Redding via Willows	4:05 P
4:00 A	San Francisco via Benicia	10:40 P
7:00 A	San Francisco via Benicia	8:30 P
4:05 P	San Francisco via Benicia	10:10 P
10:00 A	San Francisco via Steamers	26:00 A
11:20 A	San Francisco via Livermore	2:25 P
3:05 P	San Francisco via Benicia	11:40 A
11:20 A	San Jose	2:25 P
9:00 A	Santa Barbara	9:55 A
5:05 P	Santa Barbara	7:05 P
7:00 A	Santa Rosa	11:40 A
4:05 P	Santa Rosa	8:30 P
9:00 A	Stockton and Galt	7:05 P
5:05 P	Stockton and Galt	9:55 A
9:00 P	Truckee and Reno	6:30 A
10:30 P	Truckee and Reno	3:40 P
8:30 A	Colfax	5:00 P
7:00 A	Vallejo	11:40 A
4:05 P	Vallejo	7:30 P
*12:15 P	Folsom and Placerville (Mixed)	*10:35 A
*7:15 A	Folsom and Placerville	*3:45 P
*5:20 P	Folsom	*6:50 A

*Sunday excepted. †Sunday only. ‡Monday excepted. A for morning. P for afternoon.
A. N. TOWNE, Gen'l Manager.
T. H. GOODMAN, Gen'l Pass. and Ticket Agent.

Edwin K. Alsip & Co.
ESTABLISHED 1860.

REAL ESTATE

AND INSURANCE AGENTS.

FARMING LANDS A SPECIALTY.

Catalogues issued monthly.

No. 1015 Fourth Street, Sacramento.

Gregory Bros. Co

Established 1852.

COMMISSION MERCHANTS.

Packers and Shippers of California Fruit and Produce,

126 and 128 J STREET,

San Francisco Office, 313 Davis St. SACRAMENTO.

ANGLO-NEVADA ASSURANCE CORPORATION
OF SAN FRANCISCO.

FIRE.—Cash Capital, $2,000,000—MARINE.

Sacramento Branch:

No. 1018 SECOND STREET.

JOSEPH STEFFENS, Manager.

HOWARD KIMBROUGH, Local Agent.

Hotfilter & Grafmiller,

MANUFACTURING JEWELERS,

Jewelry made to order. Watches, Clocks and Jewelry Repaired and Warranted.

No. 1026 Sixth Street, Sacramento.

B. Ruhl Bookbinder, Paper Ruler and Blank Book Manufacturer.

Periodicals, Magazines, Music, and all kinds of Binding neatly done at the lowest prices.

No. 409 J STREET,

SACRAMENTO.

R. DAVIS,
NOTARY PUBLIC,
Real Estate and Insurance Agent.

Representing the following companies:

Manchester of England; Caledonian of Edinburgh, Scotland; London and Lancaster, England.

1002 J Street, Sacramento.

Restaurant de France,
FAURE & BECKER, PROPRIETORS.

(Successors to L. Payen.)

No. 427 K Street, Near Metropolitan Theater.

Family Entrance on Fifth Street.

Catering to Families, Banquets and Wedding Parties a specialty. Telephone 226.

NOTICE TO FRUITMEN!

Keep your trees free from scale and your apples from being wormy by the use of

Warner's Scale & Insect Exterminator

FOR SALE BY

G. T. NOE, — DRUGGIST,

AUBURN, CAL.

Put up in one-half gallon and quart cans.

THE EMERSON

Vol. I.

SACRAMENTO: SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 7, 1889.

No. 29.

THEMIS: published weekly, by A. J. Johnston & Co. Publication Office, 410 J Street. Subscription—One year, by mail, $3 00; six months, by mail, $1 50, in advance; per month, by carrier, 25 cents. (Entered at the Post Office at Sacramento as second-class matter.)

The thirty-sixth State Fair of California will open on Monday. It will be the most noteworthy exhibition of that character that has occurred in the history of the State. The expositions that have been held in other States we have no doubt will be eclipsed by the display of the resources of the thirty-first State of the American Union. When we consider that the territory we now occupy was regarded by early explorers as sterile; that afterwards the gold discovery dissipated all ideas that benefit could be derived by cultivation of the soil or in the line of the rearing of domestic animals, it is astonishing that in those directions the people of California have demonstrated that their State will now more than favorably compare with the older settlements, that have been considered perfect in that regard. While not abandoning by any means mining, we have made advances in agricultural developments that have astonished the world; the live stock we have produced have ranked with the best in the world. Our fast horses need no sentence of apology; they have beaten the record of the universe. In the matter of exhibits of the products of our counties, they have been elaborate enough heretofore at our State Fairs. This year they will excel anything that has occurred in the past. There has been a disposition manifested by the counties to generally vie with each other in presenting at the State Exposition a representation of their resources. We venture that if their exhibits at the coming State Fair were presented at an exposition in the Old World or in the East, they would be regarded as phenomenal. Credit is justly due to the management of the Fair for the success, in that the very details have been assiduously attended to.

Our city fiscal affairs are in a decided muddle. The Superior Court orders the salaries of the twenty-five policemen paid out of the general fund—rather than was the ruling on demurrer. Then comes an application for mandamus, to compel the Trustees to levy $12,000 additional taxes, which also was granted. The Trustees do not feel like submitting to either of these orders, inasmuch as the additional ten officers were appointed against their protest, and because the official fiscal estimate had already been made and acted upon. An appeal, therefore, will be prosecuted in order to test the validity of the act authorizing the appointment of the extra ten officers.

In the forcing the ten extra officers upon the Trustees there has been an entire disregard of all business principles. The Act creating this new burden has the decided appearance of conferring on the Police Commissioners municipal functions inhibited by Section 13 of Article XI of the Constitution, in addition to creating obligations in excess of the authorized official estimate. It was to prevent such contingency that the above provision was engrafted with the organic law. While it would please us to see the officers, who are serving in good faith, get the pay for their services, still there is a principle underlying this question that cannot be safely ignored. In fact, any citizen would have the right to bring this matter before the Courts for judicial determination, and doubtless there would be some taxpayers resist the levy of any such tax, or the creation of an additional burden upon our general fund. So it is probably, best for all, that this question receive the adjudication of the Court of dernier resort.

Again, there is another branch of the municipal government that is placed in the same position, so far as this rule of legislation goes. The Funded Debt Commission Act was amended last session of the Legislature, by giving that Commission additional powers to exercise municipal functions and to deal in matters pertaining to the finance of the municipality, which powers are clearly prohibited by the Constitution. In a certain measure the case at bar will adjudicate that matter. Certainly if either or both of these Commissions are, by virtue of these recent amendments to the charter, exercising functions prohibited by the organic law, it would be for the public good to have all such illegal functions cease. No citizen would desire to have any Board do what is inhibited by law.

In the management of the city bonded indebtedness, it seems that our Trustees have abandoned all consideration of this very grave and important question, and have virtually turned the entire matter over to the bond creditors themselves, in conjunction with the Funded Debt Commission. The fortunate decisions of Judge Hunt have blocked the way of the cormorantic coupon holders into the treasury, and when these decisions are affirmed by the appellate Court, some decided and politic line of action should be laid out by the Board of Trustees, in the interest of the taxpayers, and not solely and wholly for the benefit of those creditors. As matters now stand, the creditors cannot enforce interest on over-due coupons, nor on over-due bonds. Under this state of affairs, the first installment of $400,000 bonds, which fell due on February 1, 1888, do not bear any interest. As a matter of fact a large proportion of this issue belongs to the Funded Debt Commission. In four years more we will get rid of the interest on about $400,000 more.

Now, with regard to refunding these bonds at this time, there could not be much gained by the city even if the creditors could be induced to take new bonds at a reduced rate of interest. If a refunding scheme was adopted, all the bonds and coupons which do not now bear any interest would have to be included in the re-issue of bonds, and the interest on them would greatly exceed the amount we might gain by a one or two per cent reduction. And, under the refunding laws as they now stand, the credit could not extend over twenty years, and the Trustees would have to provide for an interest fund, as well as a sinking fund sufficient to pay 20 per cent. of the bonds in five years, 40 per cent. in nine years, and the full amount on or before the twenty years expire. It will be observed, therefore, that unless we get a reduction on the face value of the outstanding bonds, there is nothing to be gained by any refunding scheme. On the other hand, we will have to pay interest on that portion of our debt which Judge Hunt's decision in effect says does not have any interest that can be enforced.

The manner of refunding our city debt is not in the least complicated. Whenever four-fifths of the Board—in our case it would therefore take the unanimous Board, because it is so composed that a four-fifths part could not be obtained without taking the whole Board—determine upon a refunding scheme, all that is necessary is to frame an order or ordinance in conformity with the Act of the Legislature passed March 15, 1883, and with Sections 4445 to 4449 of the Political Code. The bondholders can then surrender their bonds and coupons, and take the new issue, or the Trustees can sell the new issue at not less than face value, with coupons attached, and with the proceeds redeem the outstanding obligations.

When we look back over the financial history of this city and call to mind the reckless way in which this monstrous debt was contracted and accumulated, and then again the deplorable manner in which it has been managed, it causes a feeling of just indignation. Hundreds of thousands of dollars have been paid out which should have been, and with proper management could have been avoided. All the $400,000 paid out upon outlawed coupons was little short of a crime, because the Supreme Court of the United States had repeatedly held that the statute of limitation runs against such obligations. With the question in the situation it now is, it only devolves upon the Trustees to act with caution and good judgment, and, with the rule laid down by Judge Hunt, affirmed by the Supreme Court, we may yet dictate terms to these rapacious creditors.

Several months ago, in our "Book Chat," we made a brief review of Edward Bellamy's recent book entitled "Looking Backward." The Utopian ideas were, at the time, epitomized. The book has been greatly read and commented on since that time. The novel ideas and quaint philosophy has set thousands of people to thinking. There is no subject that addresses itself so strongly to people of every class, particularly the working elements, as that which proposes a scheme for the perfection of human relations and trials of the economic social science. For hundreds of years there appears in the history of civilization and political economy schemes for the betterment of the world and of the condition of mankind. In Mr. Bellamy's recent work, we are only admonished that there is in reality nothing new. About fifty years ago we found Horace Greeley and the New York Tribune the earnest advocate of ideas similar to those of Mr. Bellamy, at that time denominated Fourierism. There were many eminent men disciples of this philosophy, and societies were organized in many parts of the Union. This idea of government was not confined to America, but was a feature in England and France. In England the experiment was tried by Robert Owens, an English manufacturer of exalted ideas and sentiments. For thirty years he worked to establish his Utopian notions, but failed. In France we have another example in the person of Cabet, a communist and politician, although possessed of no advantages of birth or eloquence, or of even ability, he gained some success by the singularity of his opinions. His views met favor among the radical workmen of Paris. He made an experiment of his communistic notions in America, by securing a tract of land on Red river, in Texas, where he placed a small colony. The experiment was a failure. He tried the same scheme upon the abandoned settlement of the Mormons in Illinois, but with no success. Cabet became the friend of Robert Owens, and while in England wrote—or was accredited with writing—a romance embodying about the same ideas that appear in "Looking Backward." It has always been conceded that Mr. Owens had considerable to do with this particular work attributed to Cabet, it being understood that Cabet was not possessed of sufficient learning to be the absolute author. Clubs were founded throughout France, having for their government the ideas advanced by Cabet's romance, and of a character similar to the national clubs, founded on Bellamy's philosophy. Unfortunately for all these Utopian ideas, the business world cannot discard the idea that facts are potent powers in governmental affairs. It is very difficult to convince the reasoning business man that you can "pool" all wealth and business ability and make a fair divide at any particular time, or in any other manner than upon business principles. In all stages of the world the lines have been drawn between men, between poverty and wealth, between education, business tact and ignorance, and no Utopian idea can convince the thinking people that there can be an equality. Some men will get rich, others will remain poor, and no economic philosophy can change this condition.

Recent discoveries in medical science develop that "hanging" is a remedy for many nervous diseases, and has the effect to give the subject a new lease of life. While "hanging" is designated as the remedy, it must be remembered that it is not such a suspension as is employed to snap the spinal cord, but just enough to stretch the spinal column a little. It seems from experiments that this is a cure for certain cases of paralysis. That is a novel cure, indeed, when you have to hang the patient first, and take chances of escaping death by the process.

"OLD SANDSTONE."

A Prominent Sacramento Writes a Letter to a College Reunion—Glimpses of College Days.

An Eastern friend has sent us a copy of the Independent Democrat, of August 28th, published at Oregon, Illinois, and containing a full page account of the reunion of students of the Mount Morris College, in commemoration of the fiftieth anniversary of its institution. More than 500 old students were in attendance. It is, perhaps, a little unjust to expose the secrets of the early life of one of our own citizens, but we cannot refrain from giving to our readers the following letter that was there read from the President of the Sacramento Board of Trade. Confessions of this character are always interesting reading, and we feel that we will be pardoned in giving the letter publicity here, even if it does betray that which may be considered a confidence. At all events we will try to square it with our Illinois correspondent:

SACRAMENTO BOARD OF TRADE,
SACRAMENTO, Cal., July 25, 1889. }

DR. W. T. SPEAKER, Secretary Reunion—Dear Sir: As reported you three years ago, the writer was born in Canada, in 1837; was taken to South Elkhorn, Carroll county, Ill., in 1840; left the old farm for Rock river Seminary about 1856-7, and in 1859 went to Freeport, Ill., to clerk for Clayton Bros. In 1852 he came overland to California, and from that time to the present has been bookkeeper and then junior partner in a successful and fairly prosperous California mercantile house. About a third of a century ago, it was then that the writer was given $200 by a good, indulgent father, on the condition that the money should be used in "getting an education at the Seminary at Mt. Morris." The conditions were agreed to, and the boy went—very soon the money went to. Like a fickle girl it went off with the other fellow. After earning some practical education at Clayton's, this scribe then came to this "glorious climate," got married, and in a l-dition thereto, and now claims one boy, owns three girls (rivals to the graces); also one double-barrelled shotgun, one dog and one private cemetery in his door-yard, behind the palm trees. That "chip" of a boy is as yet no basket filler, for about a fortnight ago he returned from the State University with a diploma, and, after his home meal was well down, he boldly requested his father to "send him to Berlin and Heidelberg to continue his studies." Wonderful climate! Cheeky "chip." The father recovered his breath, got a batch of letters together, one of special interest to all concerned (viz: a letter of credit), told "chip to go and fly." He has already gone past you and is now well out to sea, and ere you get this he will doubtless be safely located in that land where the "great American hog" bristles with disgrace, and diplomatic beer is sandwiched with die-no mite cheese and sauerkraut philosophy. Time and climate bring changes. If both keep well on our great grand "chips" will yet have a chance to shie it knowingly around this grand old baseball world.

Writer best remember the pioneer seminary when it was in charge of Professors Harlow, Pope, Martin and Hale, and while there he feared the unknown effect of "family arrangements" of old "Sandstone" might bear on him, so young Joseph went down town and roomed and boarded at Mrs. Webb's, nee Jones, a jolly, good lady—Heaven bless her! When his hanging around became monotonous, Mrs. W. used to send him over to see Carrie. This was a treat, for Carrie could talk a precious evening into the past nicer and quicker than most of them, and when it was gone forever, yours truly would go home to fall asleep, dreaming of the sweet face of "Juliet," the classmate, who looked much, nodded a little, but said nothing. Now right here let me say to you young college suckers, just keep right on with your lessons and don't spend any valuable time in overhauling old, dusty catalogues to discover these names, for both the "dear girls" have doubtless long since well married, or gone to Heaven, which is about the same thing; and a writer has done just as well, and intends to go there to. But dear friends, when that little "reunion does take place on the other side," one of those "dear, old-time girls" will have to apologize for some things she over-said, and the other will have to explain some things she did not say, or somebody will have to hold her own harp when she wants to take a little rest.

The events of "Old Sandstone's" life would make an interesting book. The Professor's prayers were often worth all the time they took, yet once on a time they caused trouble between chum and writer. It was right after one of Professor's off-suplications when leaving the assembly, chum said Professor's prayer came hard this time and scattered some, didn't it? Writer promptly replied, "O, he did not try to pray, in fact, he had no intention of so doing." Chum again followed up with "Well, I would like to know what else you would call it?" Writer answered, Professor was only sounding the faculty and the students to see how they would take a religious joke. Chum then closed the subject, very curtly saying, "There you go, again, you had best do some praying for yourself." We separated, one went one way to get his hair cut and the other to take a bath. At another time, writer was editor of that Manuscript Magazine, which so often "rib-boned" together the literary production of the future intellectual lights of the "Great North West." Young Rapp, the coming vaudeictorian, was engaged for a heavy article. He wrote up a description of a "tussle" he had witnessed as having occurred between a prairie zephyr and Professor Pope's "tile." The author was surprised when the editor approved and retained the article. It was placed at the last of the readings. The vaudeictorian went off to a pine grove picnic. In the contest Rapp said that the "tile" was worsted, but it seems that the prairie zephyr has ever since been breeding tornados. And now after closing any further historical, biographical brie-a-brac, and after asking your forgiveness for previous unpardonable levity, the writer now proposes to tender you a "toast" to-wit: "Friend with friend, face to face, the heavenly feature of human life." "As it was in the New Garden at the beginning, so of times is it now." Two is a world of company, and the next best thing is a grand re-union of a multitude of friends. The very conception of having a grand re-union of "Old Sandstone's" students is commendable of itself. But when it is borne in mind that the old rock-ribbed castle of the Mount, has passed into the hands of the "Invaders," as it were, it is intellectual Christianity, and a creditable broad view of things to have "Old Sandstone's" venerable students bid the old of the seminary and the new of the college to join in establishing one grand old fraternity! One sees in this the early morning of the coming day; when one sun will illumine all habitations and when the darkened places of sectarianism, will throw out a new and auxiliary light. "Old Sandstone's Semi-Centennial" will warm up many an old heart and turn others aside from the rush and selfishness of the present, to gather fresh strength, from old recollections and from interchange with new and warm human sympathies. As a cup of choice refreshing tea is one of the best things with which to overcome the clammy oppressiveness of your "dog days," so will the associations of the semi-centennial re-union, dispel the cares and perplexities of the present and to set one out again on the trying journey of life. May God go with and speed those who tomorrow will set out on this journey anew, and may heaven guard and care for those who are "resting by the way."

"While Pickney's faith our army cheers,
Let Rawlin's valor lead the march."

Praternally yours, JOSEPH STEFFENS.

CAPTAIN DUCK.

Capt. Duck was a Modoc Indian, with the shortest possible legs. His legs were so short that when he walked he waddled along like a very fat duck. And that is why he was called Capt. Duck at the stage station, which was at the foot of the great white mountain in the heart of the Modoc country, Mount Shasta. Some said his legs had been shot off in a battle. And then some said his legs had been eaten off by a bear. But I do not very well see how that could be, for his feet were there, all right. And very big feet they were, too; wide and big and flat like ducks' feet. So I think he must have been born that way.

Poor Capt. Duck could not hunt very well, or go on the war path with the other Indians, and so he came to the stage station to hire out with the few rough men who kept the old log fort and took care of the stage horses there.

These men did not like the old Indian, but as they were a lazy set, they were glad to have him at the fort to rub down and water the stage horses when the sun was hot or there was frost in the air. But they made all sorts of sport of the poor Indian. And, indeed, they laughed at him so much, and made so much fun of his short legs and big feet, that he often wished he was dead. For he was very sad and sensitive.

One day, Big Dan, the stage driver, left at the station a little boy whose father and mother had died; for the boy had no money to pay his fare further. The rough, lazy men there put him to work with the Indian, and they named him "Limber Tim," because he was so slim and limber. And they did not know his name. But I suppose that would have made no difference, anyway; for, in the mountains of California, they name folks just what they please. And if a boy looks as if his name ought to be "Limber Tim" or "Timber Slim," or anything of that sort, why that must be his name and he can't help it.

The little orphan boy was sent out every day with the short legged Indian, up on the side of the mountain, to herd the stage horses and keep guard over them. He had a belt, and a pistol in it, and a bowie-knife in it; and also a gun to carry on his shoulder.

Pretty soon he came to like this very much and began to grow like a weed and get fat. He and the Indian were the best friends in the world. But the men at the station, somehow, were harder and harsher than ever.

But Capt. Duck and the boy did not mind it so much now, for each had a friend—a friend in the other.

They would buckle on their pistols as soon as it was daylight and they had had a little breakfast of crackers and boiled bear meat or venison, and, each mounting a horse and driving the others, they would go up on the mountain side, and there, by a little grove of thick wood, they would stop and let them graze all day. Sometimes Limber Tim would go to sleep on a warm, flat rock, while he was supposed to stand guard and look away to the right and to the left for Indians on the war path. But Capt. Duck would never betray him.

Every time that Big Dan, the stage driver, came by he would make all sorts of fun of Capt. Duck, as he hobbled about and hitched up the four stage horses, while the driver sat high up in the box and snapped his long whip.

The Indian did not like Big Dan, and Big Dan did not like the Indian. Dan said the Indian was a spy, and told the men at the stage station that some night Captain Duck would set fire to the place and run away by the light of the blaze.

One hot day, as he sat on the box with the four lines in his hand ready to start off at a gallop down the great mountain, he told the Indian, with an oath, to "waddle in on his duck legs" and get him a drink.

The Indian did not move. Then Dan struck him with his whip. The men standing around roared with laughter. Still the sad faced cripple did not move. Then Dan struck him another cut across the face.

The Indian's brow grew dark and terrible, but he did not stir. Some one else brought the drink, and then, the driver snapping his whip, the stage dashed away down the mountain and left the Indian standing there, with the boy tenderly wiping his friend's bleeding face and speaking kind and pitiful words to him. The two friends went up on the mountain side by the little pine grove, and watched the horses as before, and the Indian never spoke at all of what had happened.

A month or two went by and everybody forgot about the trouble between Big Dan and the sad faced savage. Everybody, did I say?

One day the stage came thundering in with Big Dan, the driver, leaning forward helpless on the box. There had been a shot fired from the thick wood back upon the mountain side. The man was dying, and the four reins were slipping through his helpless hands.

Who could have fired that shot? When the stage driver was dead and buried some of the men took Limber Tim aside and asked him whether he had been all the time with Captain Duck the day the shot was fired.

"All the time, every minute, every second," answered the lad, earnestly. For he had no suspicion at all that Captain Duck had shot the stage driver. Indeed, the boy believed what he said, and would have maintained it at any hazard. He forgot that he had fallen asleep on the warm flat rock that cool autumn day.

The next summer signal fires were seen one night on the mountain tops. The men at the stage station hastened to fasten the old log fort. For this, they knew, meant war. The Modocs were on the war path.

The men made their guns ready and gave Limber Tim an extra pistol to put in his belt, so that he might fight with all his might and help save their lives. But when they came to look for Captain Duck next morning he was gone. He had joined the Indians.

Then the men at the stage station were very much afraid, for they had been very cruel, not only to the cripple, but to all the Indians, and they knew that if they fell into their enemies' hands they had no right to expect any mercy at all.

The next night the Indians set the woods on fire, and all the land was dark with smoke. The great pine trees were falling across the road, and no soldiers nor anybody could come to help the men shut up in the little log fort, and surrounded by the blazing forests.

The men looked one another in the face as the air grew dark and dense from the smoke, and shook their heads sadly—for they believed their time to die had come.

About 10 o'clock one morning the Indians appeared behind the stables and began to fire on the fort. They took the horses out, mounted them and then set fire to the stables.

And now there was little hope, for the flames would spread to the fort, and then all must perish. The smoke was so dark and thick that the men were almost choked. They could not see to shoot the Indians, for it was like night.

"What can we do?" cried the men shut up in the fort, and hiding their eyes from the smoke. "The Indians will not come near enough for us to see them to fight. If we go out to find them we shall be shot down from behind the rocks and trees, and not one of us will live to tell the tale."

"Let me go out," said little Limber Tim. "If I can find Capt. Duck, I will save you all."

They hurried the boy through the great wooden gate of the fort, as he tied a white towel on a ramrod and held it high over his head in the thick smoke. Then the men bolted the great gate and left the brave little fellow to do his best with the white flag.

By and by the boy with the white flag on the ramrod came pounding at the gate, and the men gathered around, wild and eager as they opened it.

"What luck? What hope?"

"Well, if you will all leave your guns and go one at a time down the stage road and never come back here any more you can go."

"Never come back here any more?" cried one man as he jumped toward the gate; "catch me comin' back here any more, if I ever get out of this!" and he leaped out through the gate like a newly sheared sheep leaping over the bars.

Then another followed and another, all feeling very much ashamed of the way they had treated the boy. But somehow they did not have the manhood to hold up their heads and say so.

When the men had gone, glad to go and never thinking of looking back, or ever returning to the Modoc country, Capt. Duck came hobbling in. The Indians helped Tim to put out the fire, and then went away, taking all the stage horses and guns and blankets with them. So when the soldiers came, three days after, they found only these two in the fort—little Limber Tim and Capt. Duck.

The government left some soldiers there after that, and Limber Tim was made station master by the stage company.

He was the youngest station master, I suppose, that ever was on the border.

When I passed by there, last year, on a visit to my parents in Oregon, I saw him once more. But he is a man now. He has long hair, a small black mustache, and wears two pistols in his belt; for the frontier ways prevail in that country still.

As for poor Capt. Duck, he is shorter in the legs than ever, I think. His face is deeply wrinkled now, and his long, black hair has turned as white as are the shining snows of mighty Mount Shasta when seen against the cold, blue sky above. He never speaks to any one. But he loves Limber Tim with all his heart, and never is long away from his side nor out of his sight, if he can help it.

Capt. Duck was sitting in the chimney corner by the great log fire, smoking his pipe, when I saw him last. He was looking straight into the fire—thinking, thinking. And what was he thinking about? Maybe he was thinking about the dead stage driver who had struck him with a whip. It may be so; it may be so. —Joaquin Miller.

Human happiness does not result from bodily excellence or from riches, but is founded on uprightness of conduct.

Smile when you can; it may lighten a burden—

You know not how many your brother must bear,
Know not how oftentimes a bright smile may soften
A heart that is ready to yield to despair.

One of the secrets of successful living is the steadiness of aim and the resolution of will by which one bends circumstances or events to the working out of his own purpose; the other great secret of life is hearty, intelligent and complete submission to its conditions and to all that it brings.

Forget; for why remember
The wrongs of yesterday?
Perchance kind words were spoken
To heal the breach to-day!
Then let the past forever be
A blank leaf in the memory.

From the very first Lord Randolph Churchill framed himself upon the model of Disraeli, and as leader of the House frequently recalled in a comic way the familiar figure of Vivian Grey in his favorite attitude, the drooping head, the folded arms, the half-closed eyes and the coat-tail brought carefully forward and covering the knees. Lord Randolph did it all religiously, even to the orderly arrangement of the coat-tails, struggling with himself, often ineffectually, to prevent his hands going up to curl his mustache. His peculiar style of oratory, too, is strongly suggestive of "Dizzy" in his younger days, although lacking the polish of the astute gentleman. When Lord Beaconsfield spoke his audience was perpetually on the qui vive for some personal thrust at some mutual friend, and they were not often disappointed. This is why the House of Commons fills up to hear the disjointed talk of Lord Randolph. His audacity is reckless and he hits out right and left and generally wounds somebody. On ordinary occasions he speaks in a low, confidential manner, and in moments of repose his gestures suggest that he is about to perform some sleight-of-hand trick, but when he gets excited he waves his hands violently above his head, signalling Mr. Speaker as though he were a horse-car or an omnibus and yells at the very top of his voice, which is singularly hard and unmusical.

The Stage.

[Under this caption will appear a fair and impartial criticism of the drama, actors, music, and all noteworthy matters pertaining to the stage.]

Signor Salvini is about to sail to begin his next American tour.

Sir Arthur Sullivan has consented to write a serious opera for Mr. D'Oyly Carte.

Bartley Campbell scribbled off his famous play, My Partner, on common wrapping paper, with a blunt lead pencil.

A new song has been dedicated to Miss Mattie Vickers, the actress, but in other respects the young lady is doing quite well.

Henry Irving cables an emphatic denial of the report that he has complained of unfair treatment by the newspapers of America.

Robert Buchanan has begun a suit for $2,000 damages against Mrs. Langtry for the non-production of a play written by him. The question will probably turn upon the point whether the parts in the play were written as stipulated.

Dr. Geffcken, noted in connection with the journal of Kaiser Friedrich, is making arrangements for the performance of his historical drama, "Rudolph von Schwaben," in New York. If his work is accepted for production in your city, the professor will sail in the autumn.

Joseph R. Grismer and Phoebe Davis, will hold the boards of the Metropolitan all of next week. Phoebe Davis is one of the best and most popular actresses on the stage, and Joe Grismer is always a favorite in this city. They have a good company and will produce two new dramas, which have been added to their repertoire The Burglar and The Tigress.

There are hundreds of actors and actresses in this country without engagements. The surplus is greater this season than at any former time. So great is the importation of foreign theatrical companies, with foreign scenery, acting foreign plays, that the American actors are called upon to enter their protest. It is again in order for the profession to call for Congressional protection from this foreign invasion.

A. M. Palmer, in a recent letter to Edward E. Kidder, the dramatist, writes: "I should be under great obligations to you if you would submit to me anything you may write, for you seem to me to have rare power as a playwright." Mr. Kidder has just finished two strong plays—one a society melo drama called A Rolling Stone, and the other An Ocean Pearl, in which he has placed a very original and effective "sensation" scene.

Mattie Vickers has acquired an enviable reputation as an artiste of great ability, and the part of "Katrina," the German flower girl, in which she will be seen in the second act of Jacquine, the play selected for the opening week, is a fine piece of acting. It hides the actress that you have seen in the first act in a characterization clean cut, intelligently conceived and so delicately drawn that you see in her the realization of the author's ideal. Her singing and dancing are both highly spoken of by the press of the various cities throughout the country. The play of Jacquine is based upon the life of actors and actresses behind the scenes, the second act showing the stage as seen from the actor's side of it. Miss Vickers has called to her aid an able company. Comedian Harry W. Rich has met with a most flattering reception in the part of "Dick Vinton."

The latest "fad" among young women who play the piano is to accompany themselves with an imitation of a cornet, produced by a peculiar buzzing sound through the lips. The art is difficult to acquire, but when it is once achieved the effect is quite entertaining. A performance sounded like a small band. Indeed, a person standing outside the parlor door would have supposed there were several instruments all going at once. An ear for imitation is necessary in the performer to begin with. Then, by dint of constant practice, with the lips compressed as if for whistling, but with the aperture wide and elliptical, instead of round, the accomplishment is gradually acquired. A quick, lively tune is best suited to make the imitation of the cornet successful. Meanwhile, the banjo is more popular than ever as a musical instrument with young women who are not content with their efforts at the piano.

Rose Coghlan is one of the queens of drama. While Jocelyn may not, as a great play be a success, Miss Coghlan is. It will, however, be a dramatic as well as an artistic trial to witness Miss Coghlan's rendition of Peg Woffington, a portrayal of a great actress of the last century surrounded by authors, critics and fast noblemen. Masks and Faces we believe has never been presented on the metropolitan boards. We will be afforded an opportunity to see "Peg Woffington" in her true and noble self. The "Triplet" of the play is in good hands, with E. Tom Webber. Miss Agnes Thomas makes a model "Mabel Vane." "Sir Charles Ponder" in the hands of John T. Sullivan, is an art work; so much cannot, however, be said of Herbert Leonard's "Ernest Vane." We saw this splendid presentation at its opening night at the Baldwin recently and speak advisedly. Miss Coghlan also created the part of "Stephanie" in Forget Me Not, which she renders at the matinee this afternoon. To-night Masks and Faces.

Most of the big lights of the profession who spend more or less time in New York during the season are still away on their vacations. A few of them are here, though, and one of the few is the younger Salvini. He is to appear under Mr. Palmer's management, as is his distinguished father. The elder Salvini will arrive in that city by the first of next month, but will not make his bow on the stage at Palmer's until October 9th, when he plays the part of the dusky Moor, in Othello. King Lear, The Gladiator and Samson will follow. Salvini, pater, point blank refuses to play more than four times a week, and on the two "off nights" each week his son will be the star attraction at Palmer's. The young man has a couple of new plays especially written for him, and wants to star in one of them, but Mr. Palmer will probably refuse to give his assent to this, and the young tragedian will most likely play one of his familiar roles. There is a life size crayon portrait of the elder man in the lobby at Palmer's, and it is an attraction which claims the attention of the ladies.

Book Chat.

The novelists, Charles Reade and Victor Hugo, preferred immense sheets of paper and the coarsest of pens.

Edgar Fawcett's latest novel deals with the humanization of a canine progeny. Fawcett calls it his dog's tale.

Lady Colin Campbell's new novel, "Darell Blake," will be a strictly society affair. Some of the characters will be recognized by the readers as prominent society people.

Mark Twain asks from $500 to $1,000 for a story or sketch, and he gets what he asks. Frank Stockton's price for 3,000 words is $250. T. B. Aldrich charges $300 for a few verses. Richard M. Johnston received $500 for a story recently published in Harper's Magazine.

Josiah Boyce, a Californian, who has written some articles for magazines and newspapers, has written a novel—"The Feud of Oakfield Creek." It is an American novel, but with scenes, people and incidents peculiar to California, and full of the romance and dramatic annals of the State.

Mrs. Harriet Beecher Stowe once visited Edinburgh, where she was invited to dinner by William Chambers, the dull but pompous publisher of Chambers's Journal, of which he was excessively vain. Mrs. Stowe accidentally mentioned that she believed he published a journal of some kind, but she really forgot its name. Mr. Chambers was speechless with astonishment.

Edward L. Burlingame, the editor of Scribner's Magazine, is unknown in literature. He is the son of Anson Burlingame, who, after acting as United States Minister to China, returned to this country as Chinese Minister to the United States. The son is a man about 45 years old. He wears a long beard, and has soft, insinuating manners. His voice and language are carefully studied. He was the literary adviser of the Scribner Publishing House before the magazine was started.

To succeed in literature it is better to have many more good enemies than good friends. Good friends are like women who tire of their lovers—they forget rapidly; but good enemies are like forsaken women, who pursue us even beyond the grave. This sentiment does not emanate from a cynical Frenchman, but the author of many charming stories and novelettes, who, with Tolstoi and Dostoievsk, the Russians, has won fame as a writer—Sachin Masoch. He is still a very young man, and gives promise of fame.

Current Literature has attained the front rank as a literary review. It is, in fact, a library of the choice literature and book lore of the world. In addition to the editorial department, each number contains some of the most select short sketches of the book world, together with original stories. The "Sketch Book" and "Poet Philosopher" departments cannot be excelled in entertaining, as well as instructive reading. With all the misgivings of the croakers, when Current Literature was launched on the sea of literature, that the venture could not succeed, we find that it has astonished even its proprietors.

Thomas Hardy, the novelist, has incurred the enmity of the British maidens. Mr. Hardy has adopted a theory that on the subject of marriage no woman knows her own mind. They would like to swim if it could be done without going into the water. They think they would like to marry, but are a little doubtful as they approach the altar. They are not sure of their own love, and fear that they might love somebody else better. He makes one of his characters say: "These cursed women, there is not an inch of straight grain in 'em!" The above are some of the sentiments that arouse the ire of the ladies.

Sitting in Mark Twain's home in Hartford, waiting for the humorist to return from his daily walk, the writer was suddenly aroused by sounds of devotional singing, which came in through the open window from the direction of the outer conservatory. The singing was low, yet the sad tremor in the voice seemed to give it special carrying power. "You have quite a devotional domestic," said the writer. "That is not a domestic who is singing," was the answer. "Step to the window, look in the conservatory and see for yourself." There, sitting alone on one of the rustic benches in the flower house, was a small, elderly lady. Keeping time with the first finger of her right hand, as if with a baton, she was slightly swaying her frail body as she sang softly, yet sweetly, Charles Westley's hymn, "Jesus Lover of My Soul," and Sarah Flower Adams' "Nearer, My God, to Thee." But the singer was not a domestic. It was Harriet Beecher Stowe! There sat the once brilliant authoress like a child crooning a favorite air.—Mail and Express.

Professional Chat.

"We have met the enemy and they are ours," is a phrase familiar to all readers of American history. It was in this laconic dispatch that the naval hero, Oliver Hazard Perry, announced his victory on Lake Erie, Sept. 13, 1813. Commodore Perry was born in Rhode Island in 1785. He entered the navy at an early age, where he was rapidly promoted, and, for his brilliant victory on Lake Erie, he was awarded the thanks of Congress and a gold medal. Commodore Perry died August 23, 1820.

An amusing story is told of Mr. Justice Stephen's testiness on the bench. He was trying a poaching case, and to poachers he has always had a strong aversion. The barrister who defended the prisoner was frequently interrupted by the Judge in the course of his speech. "Really, you ought to know that this is quite irrelevant," said the bench, and at last: "You are confusing the case so much that the jury can't distinguish between the prisoner and the plaintiff." "Exactly, my lord," said the counsel, with great readiness. "You have put my case completely. The question of identity is most difficult, for the night was so dark that I don't wonder at the jury mistaking the plaintiff for my client." There was a verdict of acquittal, much to Mr. Justice Stephen's disgust.

"Verestchagin's pictures" are an index to the man's character, and the fact that he sells none and contributes his net income from them to the support of Russian hospitals, stamps him as a man whose chief end in life is not to get rich. When he visited this country he gave an example of his contempt for mere money power in New York. He was shown every consideration by the public, and among others of his callers, C. P. Huntington, the railroad magnate, paid his respects. "Who is this?" asked the great painter, examining the card. "That," was the reply, "is C. P. Huntington, one of the richest men in America. He has made his millions out of railroads." "Oh, what do I care about such people? Bring me men who have done something instead of stacking up dollars for themselves," said the painter impatiently, and he returned to appointed daily duties.

Four men, partners in business, bought some cotton bales. That the rats might not destroy the cotton, they purchased a cat. They agreed that each of the four should own a particular leg of the cat, and each adorned with beads and other ornaments the leg thus apportioned to him. The cat, by an accident, injured one of its legs. The owner of that member wound about a rag soaked with oil. The cat, going too near the fire, set the rag on fire, and, being in great pain, rushed in among the cotton bales where she was accustomed to hunt rats. The cotton thereby took fire and was burned up. It was a total loss. The three other partners brought an action to recover the value of the cotton against the fourth partner, who owned the particular leg of the cat. The Judge examined the case and decided thus: "The leg that had the oil rag on it was hurt; the cat could not use the leg—in fact, it held up that leg and ran with the other three legs. The three unhurt legs therefore carried the fire to the cotton, and are alone culpable. The injured leg is not to be blamed. The three partners who owned the three legs with which the cat ran to the cotton will pay the whole value of the cotton to the partner who was the proprietor of the injured leg."

ADMISSION OF CALIFORNIA.

A Memorable Struggle in Congress—Prominent Statesmen Who Figured in the Debates—How the News of the Admission Reached Here and was Received.

Monday will be the thirty-ninth anniversary of the admission of California into the Union. The question of her admission became a prominent subject in national politics soon after the acquisition of the territory from Mexico, and even before. On August 8, 1846, President Polk, believing that peace could be concluded with Mexico, and that our government could acquire a large territory by purchase, asked Congress for the necessary means. A bill was introduced appropriating $2,000,000 for that purpose. The question was raised whether slavery should be tolerated in the territory to be acquired, and it was pending the consideration of that bill in the House that David Wilmot moved to add his famous proviso, as follows:

"Provided, That as an express and fundamental condition to the acquisition of any territory from the Republic of Mexico by the United States, by virtue of any treaty that may be negotiated between them, and to the use by the executive of the moneys herein appropriated, neither slavery nor involuntary servitude shall ever exist in any part of said territory, except for crime, whereof the party shall first be duly convicted."

The bill, with the proviso, passed the House, but was defeated in the Senate. Early in the next session, however, the money was appropriated. The war was terminated by the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo in 1848, and left California United States territory, but without a civil government. Then was renewed in Congress the historical struggle on the proposition whether slavery should be tolerated in the newly acquired territory. A bill providing a territorial government for California and other territories was referred to a committee composed equally of Whigs and Democrats, and it consisted of John M. Clayton, John H. Clarke, Samuel S. Phelps and Joseph R. Underwood—Whigs; and Jesse D. Bright, John C. Calhoun, D. R. Atchison and Daniel S. Dickinson—Democrats. The committee reported in favor of a temporary government for California, with officers to be appointed by the President and approved by the Senate. The federal laws were to extend over the territory, and the Governor, Secretary and Supreme Justices were to constitute a legislative council to pass laws, subject to the approval of Congress; but were not to legislate on the subjects of religion, public indebtedness, the primary disposition of the soil or slavery. Should any question arise respecting slavery it was to be determined by the federal judiciary. The bill passed the Senate at 8 o'clock on the morning of July 27, 1848, after a continuous session of twenty-one hours, but was tabled in the House the next day on motion of Alexander H. Stephens, by a vote of 112 to 97.

The second session of that Congress met in December, 1848, and on the 11th, Stephen A. Douglas introduced a bill for the admission of California as a State, and in it nothing was said on the subject of slavery. On January 9, 1849, the judiciary committee of the Senate reported adversely upon it, but recommended that the new country be erected into two territories, and that the territory of California be composed of the region lying west of the Sierra Nevadas. On the 24th, the bill went to a select committee, composed of Stephen A. Douglas, Reverly Johnson, George W. Jones, J. M. Clayton, Jefferson Davis, George E. Badger, and John M. Niles. A substitute was reported, providing for the formation of the States of California and New Mexico, but it was also lost. The Committee on Territories was then instructed to report to the House a bill providing a territorial government for California without slavery. Such a bill was reported, and the debate on the motion to strike out the slavery restrictive clause lasted until near the end of the session. The measure passed the House, but was lost in the Senate on the last day of the session.

The Twenty-first Congress convened December 3, 1849, and the principal business considered related to the organization of the new territories. Various propositions were considered and rejected. Senator Henry S. Foote introduced a bill to organize territorial governments in California, Deseret and New Mexico, and pending the debates, on January 29, 1850, Henry Clay submitted the following compromise resolutions:

"It being desirable for the peace, concord and harmony of the union of these States to settle and adjust amicably all existing questions of controversy between them, arising out of the institution of slavery upon a fair, equitable and just basis, therefore, resolved: "1. That California, with suitable boundaries, ought, upon her application, to be admitted as one of the States of this Union, without the imposition by Congress of any restriction in respect to the exclusion or introduction of slavery within those boundaries.

"2. That as slavery does not exist by law, and is not likely to be introduced into any of the territory acquired by the United States from Mexico, it is inexpedient for Congress to provide, by law, either for its introduction into, or exclusion from any part of the said territory; and that appropriate territorial governments might be established by Congress in all the said territory not assigned as within the boundaries of the proposed State of California, without the adoption of any restriction or condition on the subject of slavery."

The remaining resolutions related to slavery in the District of Columbia and other matters. These resolutions were debated for two months, and were warmly opposed by the Southern Democrats. On February 15, 1850, President Taylor transmitted to Congress the Constitution that had been adopted by the people of California. On March 25th, Senator Douglas introduced another bill to admit California as a State, but the following month a motion of Thomas H. Benton to take the bill up was tabled by a vote of 27 to 24. A select committee was then appointed by the Senate to consider the questions raised by the Clay resolutions, and also by resolutions offered by John Bell, which provided among other things, for the acceptance of the Constitution of California and her admission as a State. The committee was composed of Henry Clay, Daniel Webster, S. S. Phelps, James Cooper, W. P. Mangum, John Bell and John M. Berrien, Whigs; and Lewis Cass, Daniel S. Dickinson, Jesse D. Bright, William R. King, James M. Mason and S. W. Downs—Democrats. On May 8th, the committee reported a basis for a general compromise, providing, among other things, for "the admission forthwith of California into the Union, with the boundaries which she has proposed." A bill to that effect was reported and debated with vigor, and on August 13th it passed the Senate by a vote of 34 to 18. It was opposed with spirit in the House, but passed that body on September 7th by a vote of 150 to 56. Two days later it was approved by President Fillmore, and California became one of the States of the American Union.

In the meantime the people of California had, on November 13, 1849, adopted a State Constitution and elected officers. The first State Legislature met December 15, 1849, and framed a code of laws. Thus it was that California conducted a State government for almost a year before her admission into the Union. The people were impatient at the delay of Congress and with the interminable debates which did not particularly concern them.

The news of the admission of California reached San Francisco by the steamer "Oregon," on October 18, 1850, she having connected with the "Cherokee," which left New York September 13th. General John Bidwell came out on the steamer, bearing the authentic documents, and among the passengers was Mrs. Crosby, the mother of Mrs. S. J. Hensley. General Bidwell requested the lady to take charge of the valuable documents, which she did, and only released them when she stood on California soil. Speaking of the admission, the New York Tribune, in its edition carried out by the "Oregon," said:

"We are at last enabled to send the news so long awaited by our fellow-citizens on the Pacific Coast. California is admitted into the American Confederacy, and to-day takes rank as the thirty-first State of the Union. The bill for her admission was brought up in the House on Saturday, and, after a short discussion, passed as it came from the Senate. The fifty-seven votes against the bill were all from the ultra Southern members. The representatives from California, who have been so long in waiting, will probably take their seats to-day. The news has been received everywhere with most unbounded satisfaction. At Washington, one hundred minute guns were fired on Saturday evening, followed by a display of fireworks. In this city, many of the hotels and public offices hoisted the National flag in token of rejoicing."

Speaking of the reception of the news, the San Francisco Alta, of October 19th, said:

"We have never seen so general and joyous excitement, nor anything comparable with it, as that which has resulted in this city from the news received here yesterday. It had been half expected, yet so many disappointments and delays had been our fate, that everything has been perfectly quiet up to the time when the first gun from the "Oregon" gave notice of her approach. Then the excitement commenced, and increased, and up to the present writing has not diminished. It at once took down everybody. The beautiful steamer came gallantly into the harbor gracefully decorated, and telling the importance of the news she brought by continued cannonading. At once the American flag went up from every possible place in the city. One gallant fellow worked his way up the slippery flagstaff on the square, and rove the pennant halyards amid the cheers of the crowd. Then the stars and stripes went floating aloft, every hat swung around, and every voice was brought into requisition, to welcome the first public flag ever raised there in honor of the Thirty-first State of the Union. * * *

Soon two splendid pieces of ordnance were on the ground beneath the flag, and a grand salute of—we do not know how many guns—fired in honor of the great occasion. * * * Universal joy seems to prevail among all classes. Several thousand dollars were subscribed within two hours for a grand ball in honor of the event. The El Dorado and other buildings were illuminated, and crackers and fire arms and happy voices all told unmistakably of the love of the Union, which is one of the strongest feelings in the hearts of our citizens. We only wish that those who have so long prevented this act of justice to the wishes of California could have witnessed the scene."

On the 29th there was a grand celebration. Salutes were fired, the shipping in the harbor were handsomely decorated, there was a procession under the marshalship of Col. J. D. Stevenson, and an oration by Judge Nathaniel Bennett. In the procession were representatives of various nationalities, among others, Chinese, and speaking of this feature the Alta said: "The Celestials had a banner of crimson satin, on which were some Chinese characters and the inscription 'China boys.' They numbered about fifty, and were arrayed in their richest stuffs, and commanded by their chief, Norman Assing." A steamer brought the news to Sacramento. She had a gun on board, and commenced firing below Sutterville.

THE STATE FAIR.

Its Inauguration—Character of the Exhibits—Fine Racing Promised.

The preparations for the annual State Fair, to commence here on Monday, are about completed, and the indications are that it will be the most creditable exposition in the history of California. These annual fairs are, perhaps, the best thermometer we have of the progress of this great State. Men among us, who are yet young, recollect the early exhibitions given by the Society. Compared with the one forthcoming they were crude, yet creditable. But a few years ago the old pavilion, at Sixth and M streets, furnished ample accommodations for the indoor exhibits. The fair of this year, so far as the pavilion is concerned, will open with every foot, and more, of the space taken.

There has been a great deal of attention paid to the improvement of the race track at the park. It has been thoroughly cultivated, harrowed, scraped and rolled. While having been used daily, at all seasons of the year, more than any other track in the State, with the improvements that have recently been made, it is now regarded as the fastest track in the United States. It has for years enjoyed the reputation of being one of the best tracks in the Union; it is now in better condition than ever before.

The fences and trees around the park have been whitewashed, the buildings painted and generally cleaned up. The benches on the grand stand and the floors have been swept. This work was completed yesterday. The quarter-stretch has been covered with tan bark, and during the fair it will be thoroughly dampened daily to make a cool footing, free from dust.

Recently there have been erected fifty-four new, large and roomy box stalls, lined with sugar pine and fitted up after the most modern style. At the park there are in all four hundred horse stalls, fully as many as are in the Washington Park, at Chicago, and more than an average of the number in the exposition grounds in the leading States of the Union. Over six hundred stalls are provided for the accommodation of cattle, and every breed of cattle raised in the State will be represented. So far as a variety of exhibits is concerned, the same remark will apply to sheep and swine. The stock accommodations at the park are perhaps more complete than those elsewhere on this side of the continent.

There are two hundred and eighteen horses entered in the races this year, as against one hundred and eighty-six last year. This will be the first meeting in the State where running stakes will be run off, and they will be contested for by the leading stock farms. Within the last few years many breeders have made a specialty of thoroughbreds, and they will make their first appearance this year. Heretofore the general public took little interest in horse-racing, but since the inauguration in the east of large racing clubs, where grand stakes were run for in the contests, in which California horses figured prominently, an interest has been awakened in that class of racing here, and almost everyone is acquainted with the pedigrees and performances of noted horses. That matter will add much to the success of the coming fair. The people desire to see such performances on the turf as they have read of in the papers.

The successes of the district fairs have contributed very much to the State exposition. From many of them important exhibits will be sent here. Transpiring before the State Fair, they have given the horses a chance to work in races at a better advantage than had they been in ordinary training, and we will have here a concentration of all the leading horses in the State.

From the information that we gather from our exchanges and from conversations with visitors we feel that we can assure a larger attendance at this State Fair than at any of its predecessors.

We have stated that every inch of the immense pavilion has been taken, and added the remark "and more." The firm of Weinstein, Lubin & Co. have fitted up in the angle at the north and east wings of the pavilion a space 192 by 165 feet. It is enclosed with lumber, and canopied with canvas, and connected with the pavilion. The interior sides of the enclosure to the height of 20 feet present a continuous and magnificent panorama. A view of the paintings renders it unnecessary to say that they are the work of one of the best scenic painters in the Union. The subjects are historical and instructive. The grounds are arranged for various games. We regret that our space does not permit such a description of this display as its merits deserves. It certainly reflects credit on the firm placing it, and they are entitled justly to the honor of making the most elaborate, tasty and practical display that has ever been witnessed in this State and perhaps in the nation. It will do very much to add to the attraction of the fair and to the comfort and entertainment of the visitors. Mr. Lubin informs us that his firm purposes tendering the equipments in the exhibit to the city or to some responsible local organization, if the guarantee is given that there will be maintained here a free public playground and place of entertainment. An offer of this kind should be accepted, it is generous, and we believe that our citizens will so regard it when they will view the exhibit. If there is anything Sacramento needs it is places of entertainment which can be resorted to by all classes and by the old and the young. It is not often that an opportunity is afforded such as is now offered.

So far the park announcements are: The entries of live stock will close at 6 P. M. on Thursday, September 12th.

The races will begin on Thursday, September 12th, at 1 o'clock P. M.

Ladies' tournaments will commence at 9 o'clock on September 13th and 20th, at each of which there will be introduced the new feature of "tilting at the ring," as practiced in India. Rings will be hung on cranes, and the ladies will take one with a spear while riding by at speed.

Stock parades will be held at 9 A. M. on Saturday, September 14th, Tuesday, September 17th and Thursday, September 19th, and of premium stock on Saturday, September 21st.

The music at the park and pavilion will be furnished by the First Artillery Band—twenty one pieces Chas. A. Neale, leader. The music at the fair will be almost entirely new, and will include all of the latest Eastern novelties.

Killip & Whitehead will be the official pool-sellers. They will occupy a roomy tent, at Seventh and K streets, on the site of the new Postoffice. There will be an abundance of seating capacity, and pools will be sold there morning and evenings.

At this fair a new feature will be introduced: Commencing with Monday of the second week, there will be auction sales at the park of live stock every morning.

It is but due to the Directors of the Society and to the Secretary, Ed. F. Smith, that they should be accorded commendation for the attention they have given to even the minor details of the fair. Through their efforts largely will be due its success, and it is not too early now, in view of the outlook, to say they could have done no more. To handle so great an undertaking, involving the interests of a State so large as ours, would seem almost impossible; that its accomplishment will be successful is now beyond doubt.

SOCIAL.

Gertie Carley is visiting friends at Newcastle.

John E. Butler, of Natoma, is a visitor to the city.

Miss Genevieve Green, of the Colusa Sun, is in the city.

C. H. Oatman and wife have returned from their bridal tour.

Judge E. P. Bush, of Woodland, was here yesterday, attending Court in the case of Craft vs. Harlan.

Mr. and Mrs. William Skeels will depart to-morrow for Napa city. Mrs. Skeels intends to remain at Napa during the balance of the summer, and then go to the southern part of the State to spend the winter. Mr. Skeels accompanied his wife to Napa, and will return in a few days.

Press Association.

The first annual meeting of the Central and Northern California Press Association will be held in this city Monday, commencing at 3 o'clock, P. M. The programme is interesting, and includes addresses by gentlemen of prominence. A Citizens' Reception Supper will be tendered to the members of the Association at Odd Fellows' Temple on Tuesday at 7 P. M. Guests will assemble at the Capital Hotel parlors at 7 sharp, to be escorted to the banquet hall.

FLASHES.

The watering place friendship is not of long duration.

Never anticipate an evil—it is bad enough when it comes.

A jewel of a woman is worth more than a woman of jewels.

The man that can't do any hurt in this world can't do much good.

Swell things in hats—Some of the Bee editors heads on Monday morning.

A man who owns a goat has only to earn his bread; he has his butter for nothing.

Fashionable women soon tire of their husbands—particularly if the pocket book gets light.

Mayor Gregory this morning was commending a cargo of Bartlett pears. It was a pear-oration.

It is said that sponges are scarce. There are plenty in this city, some of wonderful absorbing capacity.

A Boston newspaper wants to know if "the Czar in oil" is a Czarine? This is a Czardonic question.

Now we are told that English capital is seeking investment in American gas. What a crowd of American politicians will have to be bought up in order to give a monopoly. English gas and beer trusts will be an all powerful combine.

LOCAL BREVITIES.

Henry Miller, the hackman, narrowly escaped injury from a runaway of his hack team.

A large number of Native Sons of this city will attend Admission Day ceremonies at San Jose on Monday.

The Foresters gave a banquet last night in honor of the return delegates from the High Court, held in Minneapolis.

Irvin, who was shot by Babbist a couple of days ago, is said to be improving, and that the wound will not be fatal.

The stairway leading to the Hall of Records have been ordered covered with corrugated rubber, to prevent further accidents.

Owen Morgan, who was charged with setting fire to the Western Hotel, was yesterday discharged on motion of the District Attorney.

The portrait of the late Governor Bartlett, from the brush of Miss E. A. Rockwell, arrived and will be put in place to-day. It is a fine portrait of the deceased governor.

The Restaurant de France, kept by Faure and Becker, is the only place where a genuine French dinner can be obtained. Faure is the chef and "Adolph" attends to the business department.

There will be a meeting of the executive committee of the Sacramento City and County Improvement Association Monday evening, September 9th, at 8 o'clock, at the rooms of the Association, 614 I street.

The Pioneers will meet at their hall at 12 M. Monday, to celebrate the anniversary of the admission of California into the Union—in accordance with their established precedent. Open house will be kept all day. At 3:30 they will join the Grand Army, and participate in the ceremonies of the unveiling of the monument erected on the Grand Army plot in the City Cemetery.

Baseball.

There will be an interesting and skillful game of baseball between the Placers, of Auburn, and the Lavensons, of Sacramento, at Snowflake Park to-morrow. Game will be called at 2 P. M. Two trains will be run from the depot to the park. The Northern League has some players equal to, if not better than those of the big League. Following are the players in to-morrow's game:

Lavensons.	Placers.
McHale.....Catcher.....	Utt.....
Baltz.....Pitcher.....	Cook.....
Dawson.....First base.....	Burrows.....
Denney.....Second base.....	Hulen.....
Hughes.....Third base.....	Johnson.....
Newbert.....Shortstop.....	Arlett.....
Menke.....Left field.....	Burns.....
McDonald.....Center field.....	Robinson.....
Baker.....Right field.....	Miller.....

The Weather.

The highest and lowest signal service temperature during the past week were 101 and 56, while for the same time last year it was 104 and 54. The temperature at 5 o'clock this morning, Pacific standard (120 meridian) time, was as follows for the places named: Olympia, 54; Portland, 56; Roseburg, 52; Eureka, 52; Red Bluff, 68; Sacramento, 54; San Francisco, 56; Salt Lake, 60; Cheyenne, 42; Denver, 44; North Platte, 50; Omaha, 58; Des Moines, 58; Davenport, 58 and Chicago, 64.

Chain-gang Work.

The chain-gang have been doing good work of late. They have whitewashed all of the fences and trees at the various school houses, and the fences, stalls, buildings and trees at Agricultural Park. They have been engaged on the entire work five weeks, and in it have used over 190 barrels of lime. The gang is in charge of Nick Dole and M. J. Sullivan.

NOTES.

Next week we will experience that inscrutable phenomenon of "dark horses" flashing under the wire in advance of the favorites.

The various district fairs that have so far been held have been successful. The exhibits have been elaborate, the stock displays complete, the races excellent and the attendance large. The fairs of this State furnish an excellent thermometer of our progress.

The Chico Normal School, recently erected by the State, was formally opened on Tuesday. Some seventy pupils successfully passed examinations and were enrolled. The success of the school at the outset is gratifying; it adds another to the public educational institutions of the State of which we may well be proud.

Becky Sharp thought it would be easy for one to be good on $15,000 a year. It is an easy thing to be funny on an income of $15,000 per year. None of our wits, including Mark Twain, Artemus Ward, Bob Burdette, and hundreds of others, ever became excessively funny in the public consideration of the matter until they became wealthy.

James Walker, the historical painter, died this week at the residence of his brother, in Watsonville. During the Mexican war, of which he was a veteran, he filled his sketch-book with the details that afterward aided him in producing his famous picture of "The Storming of Chapultepec," which occupies a place in the Capitol at Washington. He was engaged for four years on the "Battle of Lookout Mountain," which he painted for General Hooker, and which is regarded as one of his finest examples.

In New York City a Switzerland woman has established a law school for women. This modern Portia proposes to train the feminine mind in legal lore. In her own country, any man may be a lawyer—a tailor, shepherd, laborer, in fact it does not require any legal training or education, but no matter how competent or trained, a woman is debarred from the profession of the law. This Daniel in petticoats, this emissary from the learned Bellario, is named Madame Emily Kempin, LL. D.

The impudence of cigarette-makers is as pronounced as ever. A man in Washington recently purchased a package of cigarettes and found therein a photograph bearing the name "Miss Halford." At the White House the picture was recognized as that of Private Secretary Halford's daughter. The photograph was sent to Mr. Halford at Deer Park. It is a shame that even the ladies belonging to the family of a President's private secretary should be subjected to such impertinence. Cigarette photographs are becoming in their way as unwarrantable as cigarettes themselves.

The Northwestern States are not in accord with the idea that the competing lines of the Canadian roads are an injury to the American traffic. The Northwestern and New England newspapers are outspoken and claim that they will not permit any material restriction to the competition of Canadian roads. It is asserted that as long as there is a fair bid for American traffic, and a compliance with American laws, none but fair and just tactics shall be pursued. It is urged that subsidies for construction are not factors in determining the operating expenses. There seems to be a decided difference of opinion with regard to this competition, between our New England and Northwestern brethren, and some of our leading papers on this coast. We propose to examine this question in a fair light, and express our opinion in the future.

New Street Cars and Free Ride.

On Thursday L. L. Lewis and E. K. Alsip, on behalf of the Central Street Railway, tendered a complimentary trip to the Pioneers, officials and other guests on the new cars just received for use on the road. The cars are superior in all respects to those formerly in use. They are artistically made and decorated, and equipped with electric bells at each seat, whereby the passenger can signal the driver to stop without arising. Those which are to run on the J street line are green and yellow. The inscription on these cars is: "South Sacramento and Oak Park, via J Street and Sutter's Fort. Shortly after 3 o'clock the invited guests, consisting of a large number of Pioneers, city and county officials, representatives of the press, and a number of ladies took the cars at Seventh and J street and proceeded to the pavilion at East Park, where they were greeted by music from Jones, Fisch & Watson's orchestra. After this a bountiful supply of refreshments were served to the guests. All the guests were loud in the praise of the enterprise and push manifested by the managers of the Central Street Railway Company. As the guests embarked on the return trip three hearty cheers were given for the managers of the road.

SNOWFLAKE PARK.

Twenty-eighth and R Streets.

BASEBALL—NORTHERN CALIFORNIA LEAGUE.

Sunday.....September 8, 1889
At 2 o'clock P. M., sharp,

PLACERS, of Auburn, vs.

LAVENSONS, of Sacramento.

Admission.....25 Cents | Boys.....10 Cents

Trains leave depot at 1:25 and 1:45 P. M., stopping at Third, Tenth and Eighteenth streets.

SNOWFLAKE PARK.

Twenty-eighth and R Streets.

BASEBALL—CALIFORNIA LEAGUE.

Monday.....September 9th
(Admission Day), at 3 P. M. sharp.

Sacramento v. Stockton

Prices of admission: Men, 50 cents; ladies, 25 cents; small boys, 10 cents; reserved seats, 25 cents—can be obtained any time at C. S. Houghton's, J street, between Sixth and Seventh, or at Park before the game. ONE TRAIN leaves depot at 2:45 P. M.—stopping at Third, Tenth and Eighteenth sts. Fare, for round trip, 15 cents.
Admission to Park (including fare both ways), 50 cents.

PIONEERS.

Meet at your Hall on MONDAY, SEPTEMBER NINTH, at 12 o'clock M. Every member is expected to be in his seat at that time. Wear your badges.
P. S. LAWSON, President.

JOHN S. MILLER, Secretary.

FIFTH AVENUE SALOON,

1015 Fifth Street, between J and K.

E. DIETERLE.....Proprietor.

Philadelphia Lager Beer on draught, five cents a glass. Also, fine Wines, Liquors, Cigars, etc.

THE FINEST IN THE LAND.

SAN FRANCISCO

Steam Dyeing Works

Removed to 524 K Street.

Brauch, 805 K St. Dye Works, 2511 J St.

All orders promptly attended to. Don't make a mistake—Main office at Capital Transfer Company.

JOHN STEEN, Proprietor Dye Works.

Trunks Removed, 25 Cents.

CHAS. J. FREDERICKS & CO.

Fashionable and Practical

HATTERS,

802 J STREET,

Importers and Manufacturers of

Fine Hats and Caps.

Latest Novelties on hand and constantly arriving. REPAIRING A SPECIALTY.

R. W. PARKER,

Dealer in Choice Family

GROCERIES and PROVISIONS

Sold at the Lowest Cash Price.

Give him a call and be convinced.

Corner of Seventeenth and N Streets.

Also, Office of the Superintendent of the City Cemetery.

California State Bank

DOES A GENERAL BANKING BUSINESS.

Draws Exchange on all the Principal Cities of the World.

OFFICERS:

PRESIDENT.....N. D. RIDEOUT
VICE-PRESIDENT.....FRED'K COX
CASHIER.....A. ABBOTT
ASSISTANT CASHIER.....W. E. GERBER

DIRECTORS:

C. W. Clarke, Jos. Steffens, N. D. Rideout,
Geo. C. Perkins, J. R. Watson, Frederick Cox,
W. E. Gerber.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

THE CARS OF THE CENTRAL STREET RAILWAY COMPANY will only stop at the further crossings.

There will Always be Cars Waiting at the Close of Both Theaters.

THE NEW PAVILION

At South Sacramento will be open on SUNDAY, the 4th of August, and at all times thereafter.

Refreshments of all kinds always on hand.

Fine Table Wines

From our Celebrated Orleans Vineyard.

Produce of the
ECLIPSE
CHAMPAGNE,
530 Washington St.
SAN FRANCISCO.

CHAMPAGNE

PERRIER-JOUËT

W. B. CHAPMAN,
123 California St. San Francisco.

SOLE AGENT FOR THE PACIFIC COAST

For sale by all first-class Wine Merchants and Grocers.

Samples and Instructions for Self-measurement sent by mail on application.

L. RADLOFF,

LADIES' TAILOR,

218 POST STREET, SAN FRANCISCO.

Tailor Made Suits a Specialty.

A. AITKEN,

PREMIUM PIONEER MARBLE AND GRANITE WORKS

423 J Street, bet. 4th and 5th, Sacramento.

Costic Tile, etc. Cemetery lots enclosed with Granite. All kinds of work done in Italian and Vermont Marble. Direct importer of Scotch and Eastern Granite Monuments. Also, Marble, Slate, Wooden and Iron Mantels, direct from manufacturers, at Reduced Prices. Call and examine.

The 'Stiller's Daughter.

"The folks that lived in that house moved there from Pike county, Georgia, in 1869," said Plunkett, as he pulled back the wagon sheet and pointed up the mountain cove to a little cottage that looked sad in its desolation.

"Yes, and they were as fine a young couple as ever left Georgia for these mountains," spoke up Brown as the wagon jostled over a big root that stretched across the road.

"The fellow's name was John Dawson, and the girl that he married was named Lucy," resumed Plunkett, without taking notice of Brown's remarks. "I seed Lucy when she was baptized, and I knowed her when she was the pet of the settlement, and her daddy was rich and she was as tender as a tiny flower."

"I seed John and Lucy when they come erlong the road moving here," resumed Plunkett, "and Lucy looked mighty happy when she raised the wagon sheet and looked out at us, and they did do mighty well when they first got here, but after awhile John got acquainted with four or five rowdy fellows, and it warn't no great while till he begin to go er 'drivin' with them, and would occasionally jist happen up at the still house till arter awhile they would go outen their way to get to the still, and then pretty soon they'd leave home and spend the day there, till it began to look as if John preferred to stay at the still house and listen to the yarns of the mountaineers than to be at home with his wife, and pretty soon Lucy took it that way, and then she went to work to persuade him from going with these fellows."

"John promised at once that he would break off from his rowdy associates, and he kissed Lucy and smoothed down her hair as she sat on his knee and he told her that there was no use in her being scared erobout his ever having anything to do with whisky, or of forming any attachments that would cause him to neglect his farm or forget his little wife, but Lucy was scared, and she turned eround on his lap and put her hands on each side of his face and stroked his cheeks till his lips pouted, and then kissing him she 'lowed, in a timid voice as the tears glistened in her eyes,

"Now, John, don't you think that you go with these fellows jist a little too much?"

"I didn't think so, Lucy, it was jist sociability; but I will quit—I won't go with them any more."

"Then Lucy kissed him ergin, and he vowed that he would turn over a new leaf from that minit, and he got up and went whistling out to his lot.

* * * * *

"More than a month had passed since John had turned over his new leaf, and Lucy looked happier than she ever had looked in the mountains, and new gates and pretty fixings erround the house showed up well to the credit of John's new ways.

"John was at work down in the new ground, outen sight of his house and he was whistling erway as he worked, when erlong came his rowdy friends on their way over to the still house and they sat down on a log and began to talk and laugh with John and they had er little 'corn juice' erlong and they would have him take er little—jist to be sociable—and he took a drink and then they talked and laughed till arter awhile the bottle was passed erround ergin and pritty soon one of the rowdies proposed that John go erlong with the crowd right from there and that his wife wouldn't miss him and that they would have a sociable time over at the still. John was a mighty sociable fellow when he got a drink or two in him, though he had never been drunk in his life and never expected to be, for he was one of those fellows that could control himself, and so, arter much persuading, the whole crowd lit over the new ground fence and put out for the still.

"Lucy got dinner ready and blowed the horn for John to come and while she was waiting she went to the glass and smoothed her hair and then went out and looked toward the new ground, but she didn't see no John ercoming and then pretty soon she blowed the horn ergin and went out and waited and watched, but no John didn't come, and then she put out down across the field and went nearly to the new ground and sarched and called and called and sarched till she was hoarse and exhausted and she fell down on the grass in the corner of the fence she 'lowed between her sobs:

"Oh, John, John, where have you gone?" "And there she lay till John and his cronies come back and found her and John, for the first time in his life was drunk, and for the first time in his life he was unkind to Lucy and told her in a drunken passion that her old daddy made his riches by selling peach brandy and running a still.

* * * * *

"John's cronies never had much trouble after that in getting him off to the still. They would get him to take a drink and then would talk erbout believing in the man wearing the breeches and sich like, till it warn't long till John spent the most of his time at the still and his little wife lost the bloom in her cheek and the sparkle in her eye and folks that didn't know her said she was dyspeptic and didn't make home happy and give her all the blame.

* * * * *

"One night in December the neighbor wimen had gathered in to see Lucy die. John was off at the still and they sent arter him and jist as he stepped into the door Lucy seemed to revive er little and as she reached out her hand in a senseless manner she spoke in a low, sweet voice:

"Tell the folks around old Hebron church that this is Lucy, the little blue-eyed girl that they used to pet; Lucy that was baptized in the little pool by the spring at the old church; Lucy who lived in the big white house in the fork of the roads."

"And then a shadow seemed to flit across her face and she gasped and added:

"Lucy, poor Lucy—my father made his riches by selling peach brandy and running a still, and it has come home to his innocent little girl whom he loved so well, and she was dead.

* * * * *

"Lucy is buried right over there, and it may be that I am an old superstitious fool, as they say I am, but when I look at that grave I think to myself that I would not sell whisky nor run a still if I knowed I could make a thousand dollars a minit, and I hain't none of these here prohibitionists nother."

"Through a long life I have never seed a man make riches by sellin' whisky, but what it come home to him or to his children."

Appropriate to To-day.

Extracts from the writings of Thomas Jefferson, author of the Declaration of Independence:

Taste cannot be controlled by law.

The only security for all is a free press.

A respectable minority is useful as censors.

I never suffered a political to become a personal difference.

When the press is free, and every man able to read, all is safe.

The execution of the laws is more important than the making of them.

Is uniformity of opinion desirable? No more than of face and stature.

Science is more important in a republican than in any other government.

No man will ever bring out of the presidency the reputation which carries him into it.

Laws and institutions must go hand in hand with the progress of the human mind.

It is error alone which needs the support of government. Truth can stand by itself.

An equilibrium of agriculture, manufactures and commerce is essential to our independence.

Were we directed from Washington when to sow and when to reap, we should soon want bread.

The whole body of the nation is the sovereign legislative, executive and judiciary power for itself.

The state and federal governments are coordinate departments of one simple and integral whole.

I wish that at the end of four years Congress had made the president forever ineligible a second time.

Education is the only sure foundation that can be devised for the preservation of freedom and happiness.

A naval force can never endanger our liberties nor occasion bloodshed; a land force would do both.

I am not among those who fear the people. They, and not the rich, are ever dependents for continued freedom.

It is not by the consolidation or concentration of powers, but by their distribution, that good government is enacted.

It is a fatal heresy to suppose that either our state governments are superior to the federal, or the federal to the states.

The excise law is an infernal one. The first error was to admit it by the constitution; the second, to act on that admission.

A representative government, made responsible at short periods, produces the greatest sum of happiness to mankind.

I never appointed a relation to office, and that merely because I never saw the case in which some one did not offer, or occur, better qualified.

I think, myself, that we have more machinery of government than is necessary—too many parasites living on the labor of the industrious.

Agriculture, manufacture, commerce and navigation, the four pillars of our prosperity, are the most thriving when left most free to individual enterprise.

Were it left to me to decide whether we should have a government without newspapers, or newspapers without a government, I should not hesitate a moment to prefer the latter.

He who is now against domestic manufacture must be for reducing us either to dependence on England or to be clothed in skins and to live like wild beasts in dens and caverns.

Whenever any one State in the American Union refuses obedience to the confederation by which they have bound themselves, the rest have a natural right to compel it to obedience.

My earnest desire is to see the republican element of popular control pushed to the maximum of its practical exercise. I shall then believe that our government may be pure and perpetual.

It is our business to manufacture for ourselves whatever we can, to keep our markets open for what we can spare or want, and the less we have to do with the amities or enmities of Europe the better.

I believe this the strongest government on earth; the only one where every man at the call of the laws will fly to the standard of the law, and meet invasions of the public order as his own personal concern.

I have always thought that where the line of demarcation between the powers of the general and the State governments was doubtfully or indistinctly drawn, it would be prudent and praiseworthy in both parties never to approach it but under urgent necessity.

I never told my own religion nor scrutinized that of another. I never attempted to make a convert nor wished to change another's creed.

The example of four presidents, voluntarily retiring at the end of their eight years, has given it in practice the force of precedent and usage; in so much that should a president consent to be a candidate for a third election, I trust he would be rejected on this demonstration of ambitious views.

Experience has taught me that manufactures are as necessary to our independence as to our comfort.

FRIEND & TERRY LUMBER CO.

Wholesale and Retail Lumber Dealers. Also Shakes, Bolts, Ties, Doors, Windows, Blinds and Screens. Main Yard and Office, No. 1310 Second Street. Branch Yard, corner Twelfth and J Sts. P. O. Box 233. E. J. HOLT, Manager. Sacramento

OSBORN & FOLGER

DEALERS IN

ICE and COAL, HAY and GRAIN.

New 10-ton Fairbanks' Hay Scales.

N. E. cor. Fifth and I Streets.

Wood Yard, 806 I Street.

PAUL GRAF,

Manufacturer of and dealer in Saddles, Harness, Robes, Collars, Whips, Spurs, Brushes, Currycombs, etc.

1130 J Street, near Twelfth

Repairing Neatly Done.

Harness Made to Order.

SECOND HAND

"REMINGTON" TYPE WRITERS

FOR RENT AND FOR SALE.

Type Writers' Supplies of All Kinds.

AT THE

YOST AGENCY, 1007 FOURTH STREET.

SCHOOL.

PUPILS of the Public Schools who wish to review during their vacation will find BAINBRIDGE COLLEGE the place. We make a specialty of Grammar School and High School Studies. No extra charge for Penmanship or Elocution drill. You can attend in the cool part of the day; hours, 8 A. M. to 1 P. M. J. C. BAINBRIDGE, Principal.

No. 1017 J Street, Sacramento.

King Bros.

State Capitol Cash Grocery, 131 J Street, corner Second.

Goods sold on small margin, strictly for cash. Best Brands of Wines, Liquors and Cigars.

JAS. LONGSHORE,

SACRAMENTO TRUNK FACTORY,

530 K STREET.

Trunks, Valises & Bags Wholesale and Retail.

Waterhouse & Lester

DEALERS IN

IRON, STEEL, CUMBERLAND COAL,

Wagon Lumber and Carriage Hardware,

SACRAMENTO.

Earthquake and Fire Proof BUILDINGS

Constructed on my patent system. Perfect protection guaranteed. For estimates and particulars see

E. HAWES,

Twelfth and B Streets, Sacramento.

A. L. H. T.,

ATTORNEY-AT-LAW

Sutter Building, cor. 5th and J.

W. A. ANDERSON,

ATTORNEY-AT-LAW,

No. 209 J Street,

Sacramento.

W. A. GETT, JR.,

Attorney at Law,

Southwest Corner of Seventh and J Streets,

SACRAMENTO, CAL.

F. F. TEBBETS, DENTIST.

No. 914 SIXTH STREET,

Bet. I and J, west side, opp. Congregational Church.

DR. H. H. PIERSON,

SURGICAL & AND & MECHANICAL & DENTIST

511 J Street, bet. 5th and 6th.

Gas administered for the painless extraction of teeth.

Joseph Hahn & Co.,

PHARMACISTS,

S. W. cor. Fifth and J Streets, Sacramento.

CHOICE PERFUMERIES, Etc.

Prescriptions carefully compounded, at all hours.

A. C. SWEETSER & CO.,

Real Estate & Insurance Brokers

Lands For Sale in all parts of the State.

Some Good Investments in School Lands.

Send for Catalogue.

Office, No. 1012 Fourth Street,

SACRAMENTO, CAL.

BELL & CO.,

GENERAL AUCTIONEERS.

Salesroom, 927 K Street, Sacramento, Cal.

Regular Salesdays—Wednesdays and Saturdays at 10 o'clock A. M.

Assistants—W. T. Crowell, Real Estate; J. Pulvermacher, Bookkeeper; J. Lambert, Furniture and Stock.

Particular attention paid to sales of real estate, house sales, and sales of farms, stock, etc.

Highest price paid for all kinds of household goods.

Barrett & Berkey

PACIFIC RESTAURANT,

OYSTER HOUSE AND

WINE PARLORS

701 J Street, cor. 7th.

J. S. ROSS'

Fourth-Street Restaurant

1023 FOURTH STREET,

Opposite Postoffice, SACRAMENTO.

OYSTERS IN EVERY STYLE.

Meals Cooked to Order,

And served in first-class manner.

NEW ORLEANS GUMBO SOUP THURSDAYS AND SUNDAYS.

I have had years of experience as a restaurateur, and feel confident that I can cater satisfactorily to the tastes of all who may favor me with their patronage. J. S. ROSS, Proprietor.

CANCERS,

Ulcers, Wens, Lumps, Excesses, etc., Positively Cured or no Pay. No Knife Used.

As to the success of my treatment, I give the names of a few of the many cured. By addressing them they will give any information required—and it pays to investigate before being treated.

Mrs. O. C. Nielsen, Grass Valley, cancer.

John Service, Auburn, lupus.

Patrick Lynch, Sacramento, cancer.

Mrs. Jno. Shaw, Grass Val., birthmark removed.

N. S. Peck, S. P. R. R. Sacramento, cancer.

J. L. Woods, Washington, Yolo county, cancer.

John W. Douglas, Rocklin, cancer.

Miss Mamie Lynch, Yolo, tumor removed.

Chas. McLaughlin, Sacramento, cancer.

I might give many more. Those afflicted are invited to call and investigate for themselves. Consultation at office free. Send for circular.

Office, 426 K Street, Sacramento.

DR. J. H. SHIRLEY.

O'BRIEN'S, 607 J.

SWEEPING REDUCTION IN LADIES' SHOES.

Best French Kid, hand turn, worth $7, reduced to $6.
Ladies' French Kid Button, low heel, long vamp, worth $5, reduced to $4.
Misses' and Children's Canvas Shoes reduced 25 per cent.

A. J. MUIR,
PLUMBER,
—Gas and Steam Fitter.—

Being a practical plumber, I can guarantee all work.

810 K STREET, Telephone 226.
SACRAMENTO, CAL.

ALBERT GRUBBS,

No. 1417 Fourth Street,

Will do all kinds of House Cleaning, Lay Carpets, Whitewashing, and everything in that line.

He also has the only wagon for the REMOVAL OF DEAD ANIMALS, and any orders left at his place of business will receive prompt attention.

Remember the address!

No. 1417 Fourth Street, Sacramento, Cal.

JESSE SLAUGHTER,

Office, No. 1217 Fifth Street.

Plastering, Whitewashing, Cleaning of Cesspools, Etc.

Also, CITY SCAVENGER.

Burying of dead animals attended to at short notice.

Don't forget the number—1217 Fifth street, the old stand, where I have been for 25 years.

R. H. PETTIT,

Wholesale and Retail Dealer in

IMPORTED & DOMESTIC CIGARS

Smoke the "Lone Fisherman,"

The BEST FIVE-CENT CIGAR in the Market.

NO. 225 K STREET.

Take a Ride on the Riverside Road

AND BE SURE AND STOP AT

BILLY GROENVELD'S

Sutterville House

And get a glass of COOL BEER. Or if you want a bottle of CHAMPAGNE Billy has it on hand, or anything else you may wish for in his line.

Always a FINE LUNCH on the Counter.

M. T. GROENVELD, Proprietor.

CALL AT 1118 J STREET,

—AT—

Fred Futterer's Saloon

And Get a Glass of Cool Beer.

The best Wines, Liquors and Cigars always on hand.

POOL AND BILLIARD TABLES.

FRED FUTTERER, 1118 J Street.

CHANGED HANDS.

SACRAMENTO EXCHANGE,

(Formerly Wm. Gamble's.)

1012 SEVENTH STREET.

Fine Wines. All the celebrated brands of Liquors and Cigars. ROBERT ALLEN, Formerly of Agricultural Park.

RHOADS & TOWNSEND HOUSE

On European Plan.

Cor. Second and J Streets, Sacramento.

ARTHUR MILLER, PROPRIETOR.

A Stranger in Town.

IT is safe to wager that this is a truthful portrait of the wonder and astonishment usually aroused by a stranger on entering a small country village. All stand with their mouths wide open, reminding the traveler of the Mammoth Cave, and they gaze on him as though beholding an apparition from another world. And, by the way, this is a forcible reminder of the fact that

Arcadian, the Ideal,

is creating just about as much commotion among the proprietors of competing brands as the appearance of the stranger does among the unsophisticated inhabitants of the rural village. Imagine the stranger in the above illustration to be

"Arcadian and Ideal,"

and the gawky, paralyzed spectators, competing drinks, and you have a very correct idea of the position occupied by Arcadian Sarsaparilla and Iron. A glass of IDEAL is, indeed, delightful. It is a great blood purifier, possesses valuable medicinal properties, and is warmly indorsed by eminent physicians in every part of England and America. It has long been a favorite drink among the English people, and is acquiring universal favor and popularity wherever introduced.

Ideal is prepared with pure Arcadian Mineral Water, and is bottled at Waukesha, Wis. It is a mild laxative, acts favorably in promoting the secretions of the kidneys, enriches the blood, and is of decided value in malarial diseases of every type. It imparts an invigorating tone to the entire system.

It is essentially a ladies' drink, and possesses rare merit.

ARCADIAN, THE IDEAL,

IS KEPT FOR SALE BY ALL FIRST-CLASS

Druggists, Grocers and Saloon Keepers.

ANHEUSER & BUSCH BEER

Can be found on draught only at

John Gruhler's Saloon

No. 522 J STREET.

The finest and best Wines, Liquors and Cigars constantly on hand.

Patronize Home Industry!

CITY BREWERY

FRANK RUHSTALLER, Proprietor.

GENUINE

Pilsener Felsen Beer.

Corner Twelfth and H Streets,

Telephone 201.

SACRAMENTO.

CELEBRATED

WEINER LAGER BEER

CAPITAL BREWERY

LOUIS NICOLAUS,

Corner Twelfth and I Streets

SACRAMENTO.

COLUMBUS BREWERY

CHRIS. WAHL, Proprietor

Corner of Sixteenth and K Streets,

SACRAMENTO, CAL.

Agent for the Celebrated W. J. LEMP'S ST. LOUIS LAGER BEER

WISSEMAN'S SALOON,

Klebetz & Green's Old Stand,

1020 Fourth St., bet. J and K, Sacramento.

GEO. WISSEMAN, PROPRIETOR.

Families and Saloons supplied by bottle or keg.

Butchers' Home,

1020 J Street,

Between 10th and 11th, : Sacramento, Cal.

Fine Wines, Liquors and Cigars. Also, a

GOOD GLASS OF BEER.

JACOB GRUHLER, Prop'r.

CAPITAL ALE VAULTS.

Established in 1870, and still maintains the same reputation for keeping the best WINES, LIQUORS and Cigars in the city. The finest Hot Lunch in the city from 11 to 2. Clam Chowder a specialty every night.

NAGELE & SVENSSON, Prop'rs.

Telephone 38.

302 J and 1005 Third st.

The Sneeze.

A waft of incense mingled with the breath
Of roses; dim light shining through a glass
Of amber; heavy swings a sombre brass
Old lantern, pouring on Elizabeth Soft candle-light through jeweled eyes. Who saith

This maiden is not fair must be—alas—
With grievous envy filled. Shall one surpass
Me in her heart, mayhap? Then, welcome death!

Her classic gown free from her shoulder falls,

Her Pysche knot shows little curls astray;
I gaze and listen, while her fingers tease
Sweet music from cold keys, and deep enthralls

Me a fierce longing; how can I allay
This irresistible desire to—sneeze?

Queer Barometers.

"I can always tell when it is going to rain half a day ahead of any change in fair weather," said champion George Slosson as he was knocking around billiard balls in the Columbia rooms just after the recent deluge.

"How's that?" asked a bystander, getting interested directly.

"Why, there isn't a better barometer in existence than an ivory billiard ball or a good billiard cue," the billiard expert replied;
"they are better than a favorite corn."

"How d'ye tell?"

"A ball always rolls slow and with difficulty over the cloth when it is going to rain.
Ivory is so sensitive to changes of temperature, particularly from dry to moist, the effect is felt almost instantaneously. The cue will get cranky, too, when there is going to be a change, long before the dampness is perceptible in any other way. Another peculiarity of the ivory globes is their tendency to become egg-shaped. They contract at what are called the top and bottom poles, and swell out at the sides so that you might as well play with potatoes, if you don't watch their idiosyncrasies. They are worse than old men in their susceptibility to draught. A draught will crack the ivory and make it chip off quick as a wink, and, like old folks, you can never get the spheres acclimated to these draughts. Just take a billiard ball and study its behavior, and you can beat the clerk of the weather prophesying. You can bet on your own prophecy every time."—New York Sun.

W. R. STRONG & CO.
Founded 1852.

Fruit Packers
and Shippers.

PROPRIETORS OF

CAPITAL NURSERIES,
SACRAMENTO, CAL.

CURTIS BROS. & CO.

Wholesale and Retail Dealers in and Shippers of
all kinds of

Fruits, Vegetables
And GENERAL PRODUCE.

Careful attention paid to the selection and packing
of Choice Fruits and Vegetables for distant markets.
Goods delivered in city free.

308 and 310 K Street, - - Sacramento, Cal.

Capital Iron Works.

Vertical and Horizontal Engines
BOILERS,

STEAM AND POWER

PUMPS,

Deep Well Pumps,

Hand Pumps,

Stock Pumps,

PUMPMAKERS' SUPPLIES.

HORSE-POWERS, WIND MILLS,

Tanks and Tank Houses.

904 K Street, Sacramento.

H. WACHHORST Leading Jeweler of Sacramento
SIGN OF THE TOWN CLOCK,
No. 315 J STREET, SACRAMENTO.

W. D. Comstock, 501 -- 507 K, cor. Fifth

On Exhibition, THE LARGEST AND BEST SELECTED STOCK.

FAIR DEALING! LOW PRICES!

GENSHLEA BROS. 624 J ST.

Strictly High Grade Goods in all Lines.

TRY THE LA ROSA ESPANOLA KEY WEST CIGAR.

JAS. G. DAVIS Furniture, Carpets and Wall Paper
411 AND 413 K STREET,
Branch, 315 K St. Send for Catalogue. Prices Lowest.

Wm. J. Hassett.

A. J. Johnston.

A. J. Johnston & Co.

PRINTERS,

410 J Street,

Sacramento

Klune & Floberg, WATCHMAKERS and JEWELERS
Agents for Rockford Watch Co.
NO. 428 J STREET, SACRAMENTO.

Something New

NEW STORE. NEW MEN.

BELL & FOUNTAIN

HAVE OPENED THE

Plaza Cash Grocery

STORE,

Corner Tenth and J Streets,

And have stocked the same with all New and Fresh Goods, which they will sell for CASH at the smallest living margin.

All Goods Warranted as Represented.

Goods delivered to any part of the city.

Our Motto: "The nimble sixpence against the slow shilling!"

BELL & FOUNTAIN.

Plaza Cash Grocery Store.

BAKER & HAMILTON,

San Francisco and Sacramento,

Importers and Jobbers of

Hardware, Iron, Steel, Coal, Powder,

MACHINERY

And Agricultural Implements.

Send for Catalogue.

REEVES & LONG, UNDERTAKERS,

609 J Street, bet. Sixth and Seventh.

WE KEEP ON HAND A COMPLETE
Stock of Coffins and Caskets; also,
Shrouds of every description. Orders from city or country receive prompt attention, day or night.
EMBALMING done in the best manner; and at reasonable rates.

BOOTS AND SHOES
made to order. Boots,
$6 to $11. Shoes, $4 to
$9. Ladies' Shoes, best quality French Kid, $5
to $7.

REPAIRING DONE
at lowest prices.

NONE BUT BEST
mechanics employed.

WE GUARANTEE
to make perfect fitting
to the worst of crooked
and crippled feet.

COMPETE WITH
any shoes on the market.

216 J Street

—AND—

208 K Street,

SACRAMENTO.

A. CASELLI

& COMPANY.

WESTERN HOTEL
209 to 219 K Street.

The Leading Hotel of Sacramento, Cal.

FREE BUS TO AND FROM HOTEL.

Meals, 25 Cents. Rooms, according to Location.
WM. LAND, Proprietor.

F. KUEHNE & CO.,

NO. 906 NINTH STREET,

Between I and J,

SACRAMENTO.

Carpenters and Contractors

Store and office work a specialty.

ICE BOXES for Breweries and Saloons always on hand and made to order.

Jobbing and Repairing promptly attended to.

American Steam Laundry

NINETEENTH AND I STS.—WHITE LABOR
only. Linen polished in the neatest manner.
We guarantee satisfaction. All ordinary mending, sewing on buttons, etc., free of charge. Washing
called for and delivered to any part of the city.
Main Office at Sawtelle's Book Store, 708 and 710 J
street. Branch offices at all the Hotels.

RAILROAD TIME TABLE.
Southern Pacific Company
PACIFIC SYSTEM.
July 28, 1889.
Trains LEAVE and are due to ARRIVE at
SACRAMENTO.

Lv.	Trains Run Daily.	Arr.
7-00 A	Calistoga and Napa	11-40 A
4-05 P	Calistoga and Napa	8-30 P
11-00 P	Ashland and Portland	3-40 A
5-05 P	Deming, El Paso and East	7-05 P
7-30 P	Knight's Landing	7-55 A
4-30 A	Marysville (Mixed)	4-25 P
9-00 A	Los Angeles	9-55 A
9-00 P	Second Class, Ogden and East	6-30 A
10-30 P	Central Atlantic Express	3-40 P
3-00 P	Ogden and East	9-50 A
11-00 P	Oroville	3-40 A
3-00 P	Red Bluff via Marysville	9-50 A
10-40 A	Redding via Willows	4-05 P
4-00 A	San Francisco via Benicia	10-40 P
7-00 A	San Francisco via Benicia	8-30 P
4-05 P	San Francisco via Benicia	10-10 P
10-00 A	San Francisco via Steamer	26-00 A
11-20 A	San Francisco via Livermore	2-25 P
3-05 P	San Francisco via Benicia	11-40 A
11-20 A	San Jose	2-25 P
9-00 A	Santa Barbara	9-55 A
5-05 P	Santa Barbara	7-05 P
7-00 A	Santa Rosa	11-40 A
4-05 P	Santa Rosa	8-30 P
9-00 A	Stockton and Galt	7-05 P
5-05 P	Stockton and Galt	9-55 A
9-00 P	Truckee and Reno	6-30 A
10-30 P	Truckee and Reno	3-40 P
8-30 A	Colfax	5-00 P
7-00 A	Vallejo	11-40 A
4-05 P	Vallejo	7-30 P
12-15 P	Folsom and Placerville (Mixed)	10-35 A
7-15 A	Folsom and Placerville	3-45 P
*5-20 P	Folsom	4-50 A

*Sunday excepted. †Sunday only. ‡Monday excepted. A for morning. P for afternoon.
A. N. TOWNLE, Gen'l Manager.
T. H. GOODMAN, Gen'l Pass. and Ticket Agent.

Edwin K. Alsip & Co.

ESTABLISHED 1860.

REAL ESTATE

AND INSURANCE AGENTS.

FARMING LANDS A SPECIALTY.

Catalogues issued monthly.

No. 1015 Fourth Street, Sacramento.

Gregory Bros. Co

Established 1852.

COMMISSION MERCHANTS,

Packers and Shippers of California Fruit and Produce,

126 and 128 J STREET,

San Francisco Office, 313 Davis St. SACRAMENTO.

ANGLO-NEVADA ASSURANCE CORPORATION
OF SAN FRANCISCO.

FIRE.—Cash Capital, $2,000,000—MARINE.

Sacramento Branch:

No. 1018 SECOND STREET.

JOSEPH STEFFENS,
Manager.

HOWARD KIMBROUGH,
Local Agent.

Hotfilter & Grafmiller,

MANUFACTURING JEWELERS,

Jewelry made to order. Watches, Clocks and Jewelry
Repaired and Warranted.

No. 1026 Sixth Street, Sacramento.

B. Ruhl Bookbinder, Paper Ruler and
Blank Book Manufacturer.

Periodicals, Magazines, Music, and all kinds of Blind-
ing neatly done at the lowest prices.

No. 409 J STREET,

SACRAMENTO.

R. DAVIS,
NOTARY PUBLIC,
Real Estate and Insurance Agent.

Representing the following companies:
Manchester of England; Caledonian of Edinburgh,
Scotland; London and Lancaster, England.
1002 J Street, Sacramento.

Restaurant de France,
FAURE & BECKER, PROPRIETORS.

(Successors to L. Payen.)

No. 427 K Street, Near Metropolitan Theater.
Family Entrance on Fifth Street.

Catering to Families, Banquets and Wedding Parties
a specialty. Telephone 228.

NOTICE TO FRUITMEN!

Keep your trees free from scale and your apples
from being wormy by the use of

Warner's Scale & Insect Exterminator
FOR SALE BY

G. T. NOE, - - DRUGGIST,
AUBURN, CAL.

Put up in one-half gallon and quart cans.

THEMIS

Vol. I.

SACRAMENTO: SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 14, 1889.

No. 30.

THEMIS: published weekly, by A. J. Johnston & Co. Publication Office, 410 J Street. Subscription—One year, by mail, $3 00; six months, by mail, $1 50, in advance; per month, by carrier, 25 cents. (Entered at the Post Office at Sacramento as second-class matter.)

I stood by the old fort's crumbling wall, on the eastern verge of the town;
The sun, through clefts in the ruined hall, flecked with its light the rafters brown.
And sifting with gold the oaken floor, seemed to burnish the place anew;
While out and in through the half closed door, building their nests, the swallows flew.
Charmed by the magic spell of the place, the present vanished, the past returned;
While rampart and fortress filled the space, and yonder the Indian camp-fires burned.
I heard the sentinel's measured tread, the challenge prompt, the quick reply—
And there on the tower above my head, the Mexican banner flaunts the sky.
Around me were waifs from every clime, blown by the fickle winds of chance;
Knight-errants, ready at any time, for any cause, to couch a lance.
The staunch old Captain, with courtly grace, owner of countless leagues of land,
Benignly governs the motley race, dispensing favors with open hand.
On miles of meadow his cattle feed, while brown vaqueros, with careless rein,
Swinging riatas, on restless steed, and dashing madly over the plain.
Only a moment the vision came; where tower and rampart stood before,
Where flushed the night with the camp's red flame, dust and ashes, and nothing more.
Borne to my ear on the ambient air, mingled with sounds of childish glee;
I heard again the low hum of care, like the restless moan of the sea.

So the poet wrote of Sutter's Fort, "on the eastern verge of the town." The ruined abode that stands on the mound is all that remains of the first handiwork of civilized man in the Sacramento valley. The old fort, once the scene of busy pioneer life, is now deserted and uncared for; once the only fortress for protection, it is to-day but a sorry reminder of a glorious past. We are gratified that a movement has been inaugurated looking to the securing of the fort grounds by the Pioneers and Native Sons, with a view to their restoration and preservation. It should have been done long ago; while it is now late, it is not too late to accomplish it. We endorse the expression of the Record-Union in its issue of the 10th inst. That journal said:

If such a historic spot of ground was within the bounds of any considerable Eastern community, it would be inclosed, beautified, its primal structures restored, and the whole guarded jealously from all ordinary decay. That such action has not been taken by the people of California concerning the most romantic historic plat within its domain, is humiliating. The Pioneer and Native Sons Societies would find no difficulty whatever in raising all the money needed to reclaim the grounds from private ownership, restore the fort, erect a museum and memorial hall, and make the place one that would be visited with interest by all tourists, remain to the rising and coming generations a suggestive monument of the stirring and heroic days of California infancy, and stand as evidence of the thoughtfulness and good taste of the people of California.

The interior building is now all that remains. It has been standing for half a century, and is about ready to fall down. It is not likely that it can, in neglect, withstand the inroads of the elements much longer. Not a vestige remains of the inclosing walls, and it is difficult to determine their site and the arrangement of the fort. The editors of THEMIS have taken an interest in matters of early California history, and particularly in the early settlement of this valley. Some months ago we caused a survey to be made of the old fort with a view of obtaining reliable data and plats that could be available should there be a restoration in the future. There is not on the ground any indication of where the inclosing walls stood originally. In our work we had to rely largely on the recollections of men who were familiar with the fort when it existed.

Plats of surveys have been sent to those who were here when the fort was intact, with a printed series of questions requesting information upon doubtful points. The answers we have received have materially aided us in determining the original location of the fort walls and the interior subdivisions. We hope to be able from a comparison of all the data we will receive, to as nearly as possible present a plan of the fort as it stood. We propose having engraved a ground plan of the fort and also plans of the different floors of the interior of the building which now exists. It seems strange that there should be so much difficulty in finding the exact location of the walls of a structure that was designed to be so permanent as the old fort. Many of the early deeds refer to the corners of its walls for the initial point in descriptions of property. Upon the ground nothing now exists to show where these corners were, but in the surveys we have made we believe that from excavations and the evidence we have thus found we can definitely locate them. A little money would restore the fort, and if once restored the cost of maintenance will be trifling. We have no doubt that the Legislature will contribute with liberality to the acquisition and restoration of this property were attention called to it at the next session.

Something should be done in this county to make human life respected. Within as many months, three men have been murdered, and in each of the cases the facts of the homicides will justify the infliction of the extreme penalty upon the offenders. It is, however, unfortunate that the victims in each of these cases were Chinamen, and it is very apparent to the officers of government that there has been in some of these cases an adjustment by the Chinese authorities, and that the Courts of this country are powerless to act. We have no doubt, from the knowledge we have, that in the case of one of the parties arrested for murder here, the wrong man is in jail, and that against him designing men of his own nation have plotted. These matters, however, will be determined by a jury of Americans, and we have no doubt the determination will be about correct. We have intimated that in cases of Chinese murders the authorities are comparatively powerless to act. At 10 o'clock at night, recently, a Chinaman was shot through the heart on the other side of the American river, and but a few miles from the governmental seat of Sacramento county. Information of his murder reached the Chinese quarters here at 6 o'clock the following morning, but did not reach the officers until a few minutes before 10. The Sheriff, District Attorney and Coroner went to the scene of the tragedy immediately on hearing of its occurrence. They found the dead man lying by the roadside, weltering in his blood. It is unnecessary to say that the murderer was not there, and that no information could be obtained of his whereabouts. From the meager information the officers managed to obtain, it was very apparent that the victim had been shot down wantonly and in cold blood; that his slayer and friends had come to Sacramento, and the matter had been arranged by Chinamen here. In fact, a representative of the Chinese companies came from San Francisco to investigate the killing. The result of his investigation has not been made known to the governmental authorities. We speak of these matters in that they would not be tolerated with our own people. Had a white man been shot down, and it became known that the knowledge of the crime had been concealed for twelve hours, the person having such knowledge would be called upon to explain his reticence; particularly so when the concealment resulted as in this case, in the escape of the murderer. Of course it may be said that the persons who have been destroyed were Chinamen. They were, however, human beings, and their slaying should be avenged by our laws, for we are presumed to be civilized. The fact that a Chinaman was killed, and that his body was permitted to lay by the side of a public highway without care for twelve hours, is a matter that reflects little credit upon the people of a county so law-abiding as Sacramento sets itself up to be.

We are not to be understood as reflecting upon the officers; they acted promptly; they are simply handicapped by the penurious policy upon which our local governments are administered. The Sheriff, to act in a case of this kind, is compelled to pay his expenses and those of his subordinates from his own pocket. Through an inexcusable blunder, the city police receive no compensation, and it is a question whether the service they perform for the public will be a donation. This county would save money if it employed a competent detective to assist the Sheriff and District Attorney in the prosecution of important cases. As it is, the Sheriff has about all he can handle to care for the jail, attend the Courts and serve processes. The District Attorney is placed in a position of disadvantage in every case of importance. If a defendant or his friends have money the attorneys representing them have men specially employed to hunt up evidence available at any stage of the case, and the prosecution is placed in a position of enforced inability. It has resulted in very many instances in flagrant miscarriages of justice and men have walked from our courtrooms acquitted who should have expiated their crimes upon the gallows. The policy of the law has always been that every advantage is given to a defendant. It has resulted in very many cases in the defendant posing as an injured innocent, and from some of the verdicts in murder cases we have seen recorded here we have felt that an appropriate formality had been omitted, in that the foreman of the jury did not present to the defendant a chromo of appreciation. The county has stored in the basement of the Court House what was once a very efficient gallows; it may be in the interest of public economy to suggest that it be cut up into firewood rather than to permit its destruction from dry rot. It may seem harsh to suggest a resort to extreme measures by our juries in cases of high crime; the fact, however, that we have annually some six or eight deaths in this county from criminal violence justifies the suggestion that it is about time that the blind goddess removed her bandage.

There are constantly arising some queer conflicts of laws. The novel situation in this city in regard to the jurisdiction of the State and Federal Courts over the Postoffice site is a slight illustration, but the New York World mentions a curious case that developed in the State of New York recently which illustrates the strange possibilities of legal complications. A man brought suit for absolute divorce in one county, and on the same day his wife brought suit in another county for absolute dissolution of the marital relations. Neither suit was opposed, and on the same day at the same hour decrees were granted in both cases. In the decree in favor of the husband he is permitted to marry again, and the wife is prohibited under the laws of the State of New York. The decree rendered in favor of the wife in the other county grants her the right to remarry and enjoins the husband from again assuming the marital relations. Here we have the same inconsistency of each being distinctly authorized to remarry at pleasure, and also each is forbidden by the decree of courts of the same jurisdiction from ever marrying. In the case mentioned the wife has acted upon the decree in her favor and married, and her new husband, learning of the decree prohibiting it, seeks to have an annulment of the last marriage. There is food for reflection in this matter.

From the time that Dickens so woefully and erroneously attempted to portray American character by what he saw and heard on Mississippi steamboats and a trip down the Mississippi river many years ago, it seems that novelists are still as prone to jump at conclusions and form their estimate of general character from some isolated and often exceptional subject. An English or French author will come to this country, and form his opinions of our national character by the peculiarities of the associations with which he comes in contact. Therein lies the error. This contact is not of the class generally that can give any adequate idea of the true American. He may go to the workshops of some of our skilled laborers, and imagine he has obtained the underlying principles that governs labor—but he only gains the individual view after all. He may visit the places of general resort, but he acquires only a personal realism. Take up any foreign novel or even historical work and you will find the American depicted in some ridiculous manner, as a cowboy, or a Josh Whitcomb, or a snivelling Yankee, but rarely in anything like his true character. Our women are portrayed as coarse, dowdy and silly. It is altogether likely that the foreign author gets his idea of American women from some that he has met at our, and perhaps their, watering places.

When the Governor of the great State of Georgia expressed the sentiment that under the changed condition of the South, "that they might never hope to witness another civilization which shall equal that which began under Washington and ended with Lee," he was certainly looking backward with a vengeance. It is hard to bring those hidebound Southrons to realize that the element of human slavery does not constitute a very high order of civilization. Such men as Gordon evidently mourn for the return of the old regime, when the power and control of the Government shall be at the will of the so-called chivalry of the South. If these selfish and violent tempered men would give place to those of more progressive ideas, the South would soon almost realize the Utopian character portrayed by Bellamy's "Looking Backward." It is such men as this Gordon that fosters that foolish idea of keeping alive the bitter animosities of the war, and who are seeking to further inspire that feeling by placing the name of Lee with that of Washington as a great hero, and having his birthday made a legal holiday.

The great bell of Hung-wu, which has long laid buried in China, and which has defied all resources of engineering, has at last been raised by foreign machinery, and hung in a Buddhist pagoda, built of iron rails by a foreign firm. According to a prophecy, this bell was never to be lifted until China entered upon a new era of prosperity. Now we can expect lively times in the Celestial Kingdom. Perhaps the new railroad enterprise in that country is due to this prophecy.

Our American novelists are also sadly lacking in anything like the true conception of American character. While they are, in some instances, men of culture and ability, they are deficient in taste and judgment in the work they assume to perform. Indeed, our authors have erected false standards and raised false tastes regarding American literature. It is not astonishing, then, when we hear the expression among actors and actresses that we have not a real American drama, based upon and portraying genuine American character. It is only some peculiar and exceptional phase that we see presented in the drama, and in the romance. We have no literature accurately reflecting American life, save what comes from the pen of the newspaper reporter who is keenly alive to all phases of life, but who insists on appending a dramatic coloring to many true pictures, which detracts from the real value.

Upon this subject the New York World says: "They insist upon dogmas of realism, and yet refuse to be at even ordinary pains to understand the life they undertake to portray.

"Mr. Howells began his career of realism most hopefully, studying trifling phases of life and character apparently as a preparation for something better. But when he essayed the something better the extreme narrowness of his acquaintance with American life became almost distressingly evident. He knows the summer boarder and a few familiar types very well. But he has nowhere given the least hint of having made real acquaintance with the people of this country, their aspirations, their sorrows or their needs. Perhaps that accounts for his socialistic leanings.

"Prof. Boyesen, who is more robust and of keener sight, disappoints us in his latest book, 'The Light of Her Countenance,' by somewhat indolent invention which spares the trouble of making itself seem probable, and still more by neglecting the final work of individualization. He contents himself with broadly drawn types, when, with his unquestioned power and a little more patience, he might easily have given us finely differentiated individuals whose personality would have taken firm and lasting hold upon the mind.

"The gist of the whole matter is this, that we have no really hard-working novelists patiently studying life in order that they may faithfully portray it. There are some of them who do not lack capacity for great things, but they lack the patience and industry necessary to the achievement of great things.

OUR LOCAL JUDICIARY.

How Our Tribunals Have Been Organized—Who Have Administered Justice in Sacramento County.

Under Mexican rule the Government of California was conducted under the laws of March 20th and May 23, 1837, and those laws were observed, on the acquisition of the country by the United States, until the organization of the State Government. They provided for the selection of Alcaldes, whose duties were to care for good order and public tranquility, to see that police regulations, laws and decrees were enforced, to provide for the apprehension of criminals, and in some cases to impose fines or imprisonment upon malefactors. There were also justices of the peace, who served as municipal and judicial officers. There was in the territory a superior tribunal, consisting of four judges and an Attorney General, which had the general reviewing of cases tried before inferior courts. There were also courts of "First Instance," in which cases, both criminal and civil, were originally brought.

The first Legislature, by an act passed March 16, 1850, divided the State into nine judicial districts, and constituted the counties of Sacramento and El Dorado the Sixth Judicial District. Afterward the counties of Sacramento and Yolo composed that district, and it so existed until the taking effect of the Constitution of 1879, which abolished that court.

The same Legislature, by an act passed April 13, 1850, created a county court in each county, and by an act approved on the 11th of that month, the Court of Sessions was created, to be composed of the County Judge and two justices of the peace, who were to serve as Associate Justices. The latter were chosen by the justices of the peace of the county. That Court had jurisdiction in cases of misdemeanor, and also exercised functions now performed by the Board of Supervisors, such as the supervision of claims against the county, the management of roads, etc. Subsequently the Court of Sessions was abolished, and its jurisdiction vested in the County Court. Its legislative and supervisory powers were transferred to the Board of Supervisors. The present State Constitution abolished all of these courts, and provided for the organization of a Superior Court in the county, with two departments, and two judges, with civil and criminal jurisdiction.

In the latter part of August, 1849, General B. Riley, Acting Military Governor of California, appointed James S. Thomas Judge of the Court of First Instance, with civil jurisdiction. He also appointed W. E. Shannon Judge of the Court of the First Instance with criminal jurisdiction. On the second of September, 1849, Thomas entered upon the duties of his office. A suit was instituted for the recovery of money. A summons was made returnable the same day at four o'clock, at which time judgment was entered, and execution ordered. This gives some idea of the rapidity with which business, even of a judicial character, was transacted at that early period of Sacramento's history. On the third of September, Judge Thomas appointed J. P. Rogers Clerk of his Court. The latter gentleman served in that capacity till the 19th of November following, and resigned, whereupon James R. Lawrence was appointed. He continued until the 27th of December, at which time Presley Dunlap was appointed to the position.

Judge Shannon opened his court for criminal business in September, 1849. R. A. Wilson was appointed clerk, and S. C. Hastings—afterward Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the State and subsequently Attorney General—acted as prosecuting attorney. D. B. Hanner, who had been elected Sheriff by the people in their primary capacity, attended both the civil and criminal courts. The first case before Judge Shannon was a prosecution against a party for stealing a cow from Samuel Norris. During the trial, defendant's counsel objected to the proceedings because they were not in conformity with the constitutional provision guaranteeing to every party accused of high crime, that before he could be put upon trial he must have been indicted by a grand jury. The Court held that inasmuch as the defendant had not raised the question in the beginning of the case he was deemed as waiving his right, and that the trial must proceed. The defendant was found guilty and fined $200 and costs, which amounted to $515—rather costly beef!

About December 1, 1849, R. A. Wilson succeeded to the bench, vice Shannon deceased. On January 11, 1850, he appointed A. J. McCall clerk of his Court for Sacramento, and on January 26th he appointed Stephen J. Field, now a Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, clerk of his Court, to reside at Marysville. During the time Sacramento was flooded that winter, Wilson held his court at Marysville. The two courts alluded to did the judicial business of the district, both civil and criminal, until the organization of the Judiciary under the State Constitution, May 20, 1850.

The first District Judges were elected by the Legislature March 30, 1850, and James S. Thomas was elected Judge of the Sixth Judicial District. He resigned November 9th following. Tod Robinson was appointed by the Governor to succeed him on January 2, 1851, and assumed office on the 8th. Ferris Forman succeeded Robinson by appointment on August 13, 1851; and on September 15th of the same year Lewis Aldrich assumed the office. He resigned November 19, 1852, and A. C. Monson was appointed by Governor Bigler on November 26, 1852. He took office on the 1st of December of that year. Monson had been elected at the general election on November 2, 1852. He resigned August 17, 1857, and Governor Johnson, on the 3d of September, appointed Charles T. Botts to succeed him. At the general election held September 1, 1858, John H. McKune was elected, and was reelected October 21, 1863. On October 20, 1869, Lewis Ramage was elected and October 20, 1875, Samuel C. Denson was elected. He served until the new Constitution, abolishing the Court, took effect.

Thomas, after his resignation, returned to the East, and died at St. Louis in 1857 or '58. Robinson, who was a prominent member of the bar, and who belonged to a family of distinguished lawyers, died in San Mateo county, October 27, 1870. Forman was afterward Secretary of State, and is now living in the East. Aldrich died at San Francisco, May 19, 1885. Monson removed East, and is still living. Botts was a brother of John Minor Botts. He had been a member of the first Constitutional Convention of the State, and was afterward State Printer. He died in San Francisco, October 4, 1884. McKune is still in the law practice here. Ramage removed to Kansas City, and died there February 14, 1879. Denson was afterward elected Superior Judge of the county, resigned that office, and is now in law practice in this city.

As we have stated, the Court of Sessions was composed of the County Judge and two associates. The latter were elected by a convention of the justices of the peace, held on the first Monday of October of each year—except the first convention which was held May 20, 1850. C. C. Sackett and Charles H. Swift were then elected associates. The associates held office for two years. On November 27, 1850, the County Treasurer resigned, and Swift was appointed to fill the vacancy. James Brown was elected associate in his stead, and assumed the duties of his office February 7, 1851. On August 14th, following, D. D. Bullock succeeded Brown. The last meeting of the Court of Sessions was held July 6, 1862.

The following is a list of the subsequent Judges of the Court from October, 1851, to October, 1862:

E. J. Willis, Judge; George Wilson and James R. Gates, Associates.

1852-3—E. J. Willis, Judge; he resigned November 18th, and John Heard was appointed. James R. Gates and J. T. Day were Associates.

1853-4—John Heard, Judge; Gilbert M. Cole and D. H. Taft, Associates.

1854-5—John Heard, Judge; H. Lockwood and B. D. Fry, Associates.

1855-6—John Heard, Judge; S. N. Baker and C. C. Jenks, Associates.

1856-7—Same.

1857-8—Robert Robinson, Judge; C. A. Hill and Peter Bross, Associates.

1858-9—Robert Robinson, Judge; James Coggins and W. B. Whitesides, Associates.

1859-60—Robert Robinson, Judge; James Coggins and Hodgkins, Associates.

1860-61—Robert C. Clark, Judge; James Coggins and George Cone, Associates.

1861-2—Robert C. Clark, Judge; Geo. Cone and W. W. Crouse, Associates.

After the abolishment of the Court of Sessions, Judge Clark continued County Judge, was successively elected to that office and occupied it until the abolishment of the County Court by the operation of the new Constitution. The County Court also exercised the functions of a Probate Court.

Willis left here and returned to the East in early days. Wilson died in one of the northern counties of this State a number of years ago. Day died recently. Heard still lives here. Jenks removed to Oakland, and has held public offices there. Robinson is still a resident of Sacramento. Coggins died a number of years ago. Cone was afterward a member of the State Legislature from this county and is now dead. Clark had been a Senator and Assemblyman, and after the abolishment of the County Court, was elected with Denson, a Judge of the Superior Court and held the office until the time of his death.

At the first election held under the new Constitution, September 3, 1879, Samuel C. Denson and Robert C. Clark were elected Judges of the Superior Court. Judge Denson resigned December 16, 1882, and on the 18th Governor Perkins appointed Thomas B. McFarland to fill the vacancy. The latter was elected by the people to succeed himself at the general election held November 4, 1884; and at the general election held on November 2, 1886, McFarland was elected one of the Justices of the State Supreme Court. He resigned the office of Superior Judge, and Governor Stoneman, on December 31, 1886, appointed John W. Armstrong to the office. At the general election held in November 6, 1888, Armstrong was elected to succeed himself, and is now serving on the bench.

Judge Clark died January 27, 1883, and Governor Stoneman appointed John W. Armstrong to succeed him. At the general election held November 4, 1884, W. C. Van Fleet was elected for the full term, and he still occupies the bench.

There is profound truth in the words of Phillips Brooks: "The only way to flee away from God is to flee into him." The only way to escape the worst sufferings and the deepest anguish of life is to accept the will which is being worked out in us and through us, and cooperate with it.

The Stage.

[Under this caption will appear a fair and impartial criticism of the drama, actors, music, and all noteworthy matters pertaining to the stage.]

The Mirror of Ireland drew good audiences at Armory Hall during this week.

The Grismer-Davies Company has done a good business this week at the Metropolitan.

Denman Thompson denies that he ever lost $100,000 or any other sum at poker or faro.

Edwin Atwell and J. Amory Knox have finally decided to call their musical comedy A Stuffed Dog.

Louis James' repertory this season will include Richard III, Virginius, Comez La Vega, Othello and Julius Caesar.

The Tourists in a Pullman Car has been entirely rewritten for W. A. Mestayer, Theresa Vaughan and company, and is once more on its travels.

Evans and Hoey, with The Parlor Match, played to a full house last night at the Clunie Opera House. To-night is the last of The Parlor Match.

We stated last week, in speaking of Rose Coughlan and the comedy Masks and Faces, that we did not recollect of it ever having been played in this city. The old version of Masks and Faces was played at the Metropolitan in 1874, by Katherine Rogers, which fact had slipped our memory.

Marie Cahill, the soubrette of the Barry & Fay Company, is one of the most industrious and studious actresses on the stage. Over two years ago she began to work out the evolutions of that particular style of dancing which helped to win the favor of the public for the London Gaiety Company when they played here. Miss Cahill is now in the cast of McKen-na's Pirations.

The American Musician heartily commends Secretary Tracy's general order, that on all ships and stations having bands, "The Star Spangled Banner" shall be played at morning colors and "Hail Columbia" at evening colors, all hands not necessarily otherwise employed facing and saluting the colors on hoisting or lowering. It is noted as the first official recognition by the Government that we have any national music, and is recommended to the Secretary of War for imitation.

Tit for tat is fair play. We have had English players coming over here of late, not in single file, couples, trios or quartets, but in whole companies, with bag, baggage, etc. There has been a good deal of talk on the subject; but let us think for a moment. We do a little visiting ourselves. There is Augustin Daly and his company; W. J. Scanlan was so encouraged with his recent visit that he will go again; then Richard Mansfield bearded the lion in his lair with a Shakespearian production; Mary Anderson shared honors and pounds with the best English players; Minnie Palmer will divide her seasons hereafter between here and abroad; Rudolph Aronson is going over to show Paris how to put French opera on the stage in a garden-topped theater; McCaull's Opera Company is so happy in Clover here that they want London to see it as we see it, and next May Gustave Amberg will take his German light opera brigade over to Drury Lane for a summer season with Augustus Harris. There are others besides those above quoted. The relations therefore to a certain extent are reciprocal, and if our visitors go back with more money than they brought, our people can console themselves with the thought that they return home with more experience.—World.

A writer in the North American Review for September asks the question, "What makes the actor?" After a lengthy discussion of the question, concludes that he is not rash enough to attempt to define the constituent properties of the art. Actors confess their inability to designate the qualities of mind and temperament that make the actor. We think that acting, like oratory, depends very much upon a vivid imagination and strong emotional powers, together with personal magnetism. The Review writer gives the following as a partial answer to the question: "A large class of actors and writers about the stage claim that good acting is simply the result of thought and skillful technique. We have lately had in New York one or more distinguished actors of this school, but much as their talents have been admired, the one touch of true feeling that makes the efforts of less finished artists reach the heart has been felt to be wanting. Acting that emanates from the brain only will never rouse the majority of theater-goers. A highly-cultivated intellect is by no means necessary to theatrical success. Any one who has a large acquaintance with actors will confirm the truth of this statement. Indeed, it is questionable if high intellect and much culture do not as a rule destroy that mobility and plasticity of temperament and bearing which are a part of the tools of a great actor. 'Magnetism' is a word which has of late come into general use to describe the qualities of sympathetic actors. Its employment does not, however, define anything. The grouping of powers under this head makes their origin no more easy to understand than is that of the mysterious force whose name has been given to them. Beauty of face, figure and voice do not make up magnetism. Several of the most beautiful women on the stage are utter 'sticks.' Many who are plain to an almost painful degree can play at will on the feelings of their audiences."

Book Chat.

Mrs. Burnett's love story, "Vagabondia," is reported by booksellers to be the best selling and most called-for book this summer.

Miss Elizabeth Balch, authoress of "Zora," "An Author's Love" and "Mustard Leaves," has adapted a play from the French, which will be brought out in London during the autumn.

The present editor of Punch, Mr. F. C. Barnard, was, by solemn meditation and the early contemplation of his sins, peculiarly fitted for his present melancholy occupation. In his youth he studied for the priesthood.

After a hundred years in Edinburgh, the famous firm of Messrs. A. & C. Black are about to move their headquarters from the Scottish Capital to London. The houses of Blackwood and Chambers remained in the North, but each had a branch establishment in London.

Zola's newest novel, "La Bete Humaine," contains all the personal experience of life on the railway which the author was so busy in acquiring last winter when he rode on express engines, interviewed traffic managers, traveled with guards and hobnobbed with porters and signalmen.

The announcement is made from Boston of a new and non-descript newspaper, soon to be started there, with abundance of capital, by literary and other journalists. It will be a candidate for a general circulation throughout the country. "Unlike any other paper" is its present characterization.

Professor John A. Paine endeavors in the September Century to clear up the mystery of the smiting of Pharaoh's first born, and fix the identity of the monarch from Egyptian monuments. The article, "The Pharaoh of the Exodus and His Son," is a sequel to the writer's paper of two years ago, entitled "Pharaoh, the Oppressor, and His Daughter."

John B. Alden, New York, issues in his handy 12mo form "The Teaching of Epictetus," the Emerson of antiquity, or, as even the pious Augustine was fain to call him, "the noblest of the Stoics." The volume contains the "Encheiridion" and other selections, translated by T. W. Rolleston from the Greek, with notes. It is a strong reinforcement of modern ethical culture as compared with implicit Christianity, a good mixture to put with the latter, at any rate.

Zola does all his writing himself, novels, letters, and even seals and addresses everything himself. He writes and rewrites a novel half a dozen times before he is satisfied with it, scarcely a sentence escaping his effacing fingers. Sometimes whole pages are remodeled, sentences are condensed into two or three words. Here a semicolon is changed into a full stop, commas are changed to semicolons. Notwithstanding all the trouble he gives, the printers do not complain, but vie with the author in presenting his works perfect to the world.

Ouida's personal history has a mystery about it which piques curiosity. All that is really known of her is that her name is Louise de la Rame, and that her father was a Frenchman, and her mother an Englishwoman. Upon one occasion, when she was asked how she came to know so much about camps, clubs, barracks and other places only frequented by men, she looked straight at her companion, and saucily said with a provoking smile: "It is none of your business." Her home is a beautiful villa two miles from Florence. Her house is full of dogs and she is always surrounded by them, whether at home or abroad. She is a dashing looking woman, 45 years old.

A correspondent of Notes and Queries throws doubt on Dicken's attainments as a Biblical scholar, as exhibited in "Dombey and Son." "The edition known to me," he says, "is the original one, as it came out in parts, and I am unable to say whether the mistake, which is as follows, has been corrected since. Dr. Blimber, who, notwithstanding his pomposity, etc., is, I presume, intended to be a scholar, not an ignoramus like Squeers, imposes it as a penalty on the boy Johnson to repeat by heart from the Greek Testament St. Paul's first Epistle to the Ephesians. Could Dickens have been ignorant that there is only one Epistle to the Ephesians in the New Testament?"

The story of how "Mark Twain" won his wife forms by no means the least interesting chapter of his interesting life. One of his companions in the European tour which furnished material for "Innocents Abroad" was Charles Langdon of Elmira, N. Y., the son of a wealthy coal operator. The two young men became warmly attached to each other, and upon their return to the United States Langdon invited the humorist to visit him at his home. It was there he met the sister of his friend and his future wife. Though the alliance at first met with considerable opposition from the lady's father, it has been fraught with the happiest consequences. Husband and wife are passionately devoted to each other, and the children which have been born to them have but served to increase their happiness.

The writers who sneer at the practice of "cutting" one's own MSS. ought to consider the example of Charles Dickens. He was pre-eminently the great "cutter." "Cutting" was his grand maxim, pruning down florid sentences and adding little effective points of his own. Slips of his work are to be seen astonishingly improved by these touchings—a labyrinth of insertions, transpositions, and erasures, all in his favorite blue ink, which he adopted when "Copperfield" had run about half its course. The original "copy" or MS. of nearly all his works is to be seen in the Forster Library at South Kensington, in great stout quartos. It is curious to note how every line almost is carefully amended or altered, and the substituted passages written in the very minutest characters. So close are the lines and so "squeezed" the writing that the effect is bewildering; but his printers knew his ways perfectly. Each page holds about forty lines of close writing, and each line some twenty words, making about 800 words in each page. He followed one system, and never failed in the practice—to make the words erased illegible. This must have cost him time and trouble; for it is done in thorough fashion. The erring sentence is laboriously effaced by a series of minute flourishes.

Paul Revere, the hero of Longfellow's poem, was born at Boston, Mass., January 1, 1735. He served in the campaign on Lake George as lieutenant of artillery in 1756, then became a goldsmith, and afterward a copperplate engraver, producing prints illustrative of the repeal of the Stamp act, of the Boston massacre and the landing of the British troops at Boston. He was a member of the Tea Party, and at the instance of General Warren rendered an important service to his country by secretly leaving Boston at 10 o'clock on the night of April 18, 1775, and riding through Charlestown to Concord to announce the British expedition of the following day, which was resisted at Concord and Lexington. In the same year he engraved the plates and printed the bills of the paper money of Massachusetts; afterward set up a powder mill; became lieutenant colonel of State artillery; participated in the Penobscot expedition of 1779; established a foundry of cannon and church bells; erected extensive works for rolling copper at Canton, Mass., still maintained by his successors as the Revere Copper Company, and became grand master of the Masonic order, in which capacity he assisted in laying the cornerstone of the Boston State House in 1795. His death occurred at Boston on May 10, 1818. In his honor the town of North Chelsea, Mass., took the name of Revere, on March 24, 1871. His descendants have been quite as famous for valor, one grandson, Paul Joseph Revere (born at Boston on September 10, 1832), graduated at Harvard in 1852, and becoming a soldier in the Army of the Potomac, died at Westminster, Md., on July 4, 1863, of a wound received at Gettysburg; and another, brother of Paul J., who was born on July 23, 1827, became a surgeon in a Massachusetts regiment, and was killed at Antietam on September 17, 1862.

Professional Chat.

In the course of his recent bright speech at the Ashfield dinner Joseph H. Choate told a story of a dying miner whose doctor advised him to call a clergyman. "What do I want with a clergyman?" said the miner; "I never voted the Democratic ticket in my life." George William Curtis sat next to Mr. Choate, but it is not stated what sort of an expression passed over his face while Mr. Choate was paying this beautiful tribute to a party for which Mr. Curtis has done so much.

There was a good joke on Judge S. C. Denson when he took the District Court bench here in January, 1876. His predecessor, Judge Ramage, was troubled with cold feet, and had had placed under a convenient footstool under the bench a coil of steam heating pipe. About the third day after Denson had presided, he despondingly intimated to one of the officers of the court that while he did not attribute it to stage fright, he could not understand why, whenever he went on the bench he suffered from a high fever and copiously perspired. Matters proceeded several days with a recurrence of the symptoms, and it created some little alarm. Finally the existence of the heater under the bench occurred to one of the officers, and it is hardly necessary to state that a plumber secured a job.

One would not, as a rule, expect to find anything like humor within the covers of a book of reports of decisions in law cases, but once in a while the grave judges indulge in wit. The case of Falkinburg vs. Lucy, reported in 35th Cal. 52, is rather humorous, so far as the decision is concerned. It was an action to recover damages for an alleged infringement of a trade mark of washing powders. The decision was written by the late Judge Silas W. Sanderson, and is quite elaborate. In the course of his opinion he describes the labels of the two parties, as follows: "The plaintiff's label commences with a highly colored picture, representing a washing room, with tubs, baskets, clothes lines, etc. There are two tubs painted yellow, at each of which stands a female of remarkably muscular development, with arms uncovered, and clad in a red dress, which is tucked up at the sides, exposing to view a red petticoat with three black stripes running around it near the lower extremity. Each is apparently actively engaged in washing, and clouds of steam are gracefully rolling from the tubs and dispersing along the ceiling. In the background is extended across the room a clothes line, upon which are suspended stockings, and other undergarments, which have evidently just been put to use in testing the cleansing properties of the plaintiff's washing powder. To the left of the washerwoman stands a lady in a yellow bonnet, red dress, green Congress gaiters, and hoops of ample circumference; upon her left arm is suspended a yellow basket; and in her left hand, which is encased in a red glove, is held a red parasol; while the right hand, which is encased in a green glove, is gracefully extended towards the nearest washerwoman in an attitude of earnest entreaty. In the immediate foreground is a yellow and green clothes basket, full of dirty linen, and a yellow and green soap packing box, upon which are printed in small capitals, the words: 'Standard Co's Soap.' Each wash tub is supported by a four-legged stool—some of the legs being yellow, some red, some green, and some all three. The floor of the room, as to color, is in part of a yellowish green, and in part of a greenish red, while the walls are of a grayish blue. This is but an imperfect description of the picture with which the plaintiff's label is adorned. The design is good, for it is eminently suggestive of the character of the plaintiff's goods. * * * The other label of the defendants is substantially the same, except that instead of the matter in type and script, the parallelogram incloses a picture representing an enthusiastic young man, with head uncovered and hair blown out behind by what one, judging of causes by their effects, might suppose to be a strong breeze. He is dressed in a blouse, tights, and top boots; in his right hand he bears a banner, upon whose folds, as they flutter in the breeze, appears, in large type, the word, 'Excelsior.' His left arm is extended upward and pointing toward the summit of a high and precipitous mountain, which towers in front of him, and which, as his bearing indicates, he proposed to climb."

NOTES.

There is a new and fashionable entertainment in the west, which are denominated "jug socials." The name would suggest the smacking of lips, etc., but they are not as interesting as the name might lead us to believe.

One of the simplest remedies for sleeplessness is to inhale slowly a series of deep breaths, counting them to keep the mind on it; when other means fail to obtain sleep try this. The severest attack of hiccoughs may be stopped in the same way.

The Boston girl insists on the old fashioned courtship. A young girl misses the sweetest thing in life, and a young man is defrauded of the dearest birthright in not having a courtship that courts. The old fashioned courtship has for its attributes the native purity and prudence of the girl, and the honor and chivalry of the young man. Marriages from such courtships are always happy.

The Chinese have a sort of rational theory of torture. By Chinese law no prisoner can be punished until he has confessed his guilt. Therefore, they first prove him guilty and then torture him until he confesses the accuracy of their verdict. The more you reflect on this logic the more surprising it becomes. To assist in its comprehension I procured, by the aid of the Consul and a couple of dollars, a complete set of instruments of torture—light bamboo, heavy bamboo, ankle-smasher, mouth slapper, thumb-squeezer, and sundry others.

Notwithstanding the concerted and strenuous efforts of some of our fellow-citizens to kill the Thirty-sixth Annual Fair, it has been a great success, and the prospects are brighter for the ensuing week. If these are some infractions of the gaming laws, consider that these laws have only slept during the contingency of the fair, to awaken at the conclusion with renewed vigor and force. Our good people cannot be corrupted by allowing a little sporting privileges to those inclined.

The address of Hon. N. Greene Curtis at the unveiling of the G. A. R. monument was a masterly effort. There was a departure from the usual oration upon such occasions. Judge Curtis advanced the sentiment that our late war was a necessity, and that the ultimate results were in fact blessings. The thunder storm and lightning which destroyed life and property, more than compensated for the loss by purifying the atmosphere for the rest of mankind. The weevil that kills the crop for a year, in fact protects the crops for a generation. This was an oration to be remembered, laden as it was with the wisest philosophy and brilliant thoughts, and filled with burning eloquence. It seems strange that there was no arrangement to perpetuate this splendid effort. Judge Curtis never reduces his addresses to writing, and in a great measure depends upon the inspiration of the moment. The address not having been reported by the stenographic reporter, is now lost to the world, save only such portions that are remembered by the audience.

Women have been made eligible to all school offices in California, Illinois, Iowa, Kansas, Louisiana, Maine, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, New York, Pennsylvania and Vermont, and in the Territories of Washington and Wyoming. In all these States and Territories, except California, Illinois, Louisiana, Maine and Michigan, they also vote in all school elections and in Michigan in district ones. It is obligatory in Massachusetts and Iowa that at least one member of the State Board of Education shall always be a woman. In Wisconsin and Dakota women are eligible to all school offices except the State superintendency, and in New Hampshire, Colorado, New Jersey, Rhode Island and Oregon to district or township offices, or both. In New Hampshire they also vote for all school offices, and in Dakota, Colorado, Oregon and New Jersey they vote in district meetings; in Oregon, however, both the eligibility and franchise are restricted to widows with children to educate and taxable property in the district.

State Fair Notes.

The result of the first week of the State Fair justifies the remark we made last week that the exposition this year would eclipse its predecessors. The weather has been unusually favorable; the races excellent; the exhibits well chosen and attractive, and the attendance large. Everybody is pleased.

The displays made by some of the firms are unusually elaborate and original. Huntington, Hopkins & Co. have a full sized locomotive constructed of goods from their establishment, and arranged by George R. Hansbrow, one of their employees. A. S. Hopkins & Bro. have filled a large space to fine advantage.

The county exhibits are now fully arranged, and excel anything in that line heretofore exhibited in the State.

Zeal vs. Good Government.

It seems that Sacramento is happy only when it poses before the world in a position of conspicuous absurdity. There are two disturbing elements here—the small band of impracticables who have undertaken the job of reforming the world, and opposed to them the gambling fraternity. The contentions they periodically raise are not particularly interesting to the general public, except that they result in disaster. Some months ago some gentlemen organized what they were pleased to term a "Law and Order League," upon the proposition doubtless that Sacramento was the Sodom and Gomorrah of the present age. Unlike Lot they did not leave town. Experience should have taught these gentlemen that they succeeded but in one direction—in defeating the very purposes they designed to accomplish. In the campaign of 1882 they pursued a policy which eventuated in wiping from the statute books of this State the Sunday law. Last spring they elected in this city a gentleman pledged against high license. If Sacramento does not lose the State Fair it will not be the fault of the reformers and the gamblers. The gambling fraternity were served right in that they have been restricted. They perhaps now appreciate the folly of the advice that the Federal Government would shield crime.

We have had a rather novel judicial experience in Sacramento in regard to the question of gambling during the State Fair. Sometime ago the United States Government purchased a site for the erection of the post office building at the corner of Seventh and K streets, where the Catholic church had been located. Parties interested in the prosecution of gambling games during the fair, as is generally understood without a lease from the Federal Government, located tents upon this ground in which gambling games were run; that they had taken legal advice as to the power of the State to interfere in cases of crime upon Federal ground is apparent. Arrests were made, and a local tribunal determined in effect that the property being that of the United States any person committing a criminal offense thereon could only be tried in the United States Courts. Law is presumed to be common sense; that this presumption is violent has been very often demonstrated; it has been in this case. The Federal authorities, when their attention was called to it, did not permit the shield of national protection to be thrown about criminals. It is not so much a question whether gambling should or should not under proper restrictions be carried on in this city during fair time as the legal aspect which this case presents. Were the principle followed out that is enunciated in the opinion of Judge Buckley, the gravest of crime could be committed on the governmental lot at Seventh and K streets, and the local authorities would be powerless to punish. Such a doctrine is certainly untenable.

Postal Cards.

The first issue of postal cards by the United States was in 1873. In the upper right corner was the head of Liberty in oval frame. On the frame were the words "U. S. Postage" above and "One cent" below. Along the top, in curved lines, are the words "United States postal card," and below them, in small type and a straight line, "Write the address only on this side—the message on the other." The whole was surrounded by a border and printed on buff card, water marked with the large monogram, "U. S. P. O. D." (United States Post Office Department). It was also issued the same year on a card which bore the water mark, small "U. S. P. O. D." and was printed in three shades—brown, light brown and dark brown. In 1875 appeared a card bearing a profile of Liberty in the upper right corner in a frame; to left of this was Postal Card on a ribbon which crossed in front of the monogram U. S. Below was the inscription, "Write the address on this side—the message on the other." It was printed in black on five shades of card—light buff, buff, dark buff, yellow buff and brownish buff. In 1881 appeared the same card with the inscription changed to "Write only the address on this side." This time it was printed on only two shades of card—buff and dark buff. In 1885 came the brown cards, with Jefferson's head; and on January 1, 1887, appeared those in use now. The denomination of all cards was one cent. There has been but one two cent card (for foreign communications) issued. That was in 1879. It bears the Liberty head in blue on a buff card.

"A strange and unaccountable story that comes from Texas," is the title of a newspaper letter telling about a rose bush, near Fort Worth, that when cut drips human blood; pronounced to be real and truly human blood by the best chemists that ever tended bar in Texas. We have read the letter and the affidavits of the apothecaries, but we can't see anything strange or unaccountable in it, even to the story of the skeletons found under the rose bush. All is explained when it is remembered that under an old law of 1852 all the liars in Texas were banished to Fort Worth.

BUSINESS NOTES.

Edwin K. Alsip & Co., real estate and insurance agents, 1015 Fourth street.
Gregory Bros. Co., commission merchants; packers and shippers of fruit and produce; 126 and 128 J street.
Anglo Nevada Assurance Corporation; Joseph St. Louis, manager; Howard Kimbrough, agent.
Hottel & Graffmiller, manufacturing jewelers, 1026 Sixth street.
B. Knhl, bookbinder and blank book manufacturer, 409 J street.
R. Davis, Notary Public; real estate and insurance agent; 1032 J street.
Restaurant de France; Faure & Becker, proprietors; 127 K street.
H. Wachsmuth, leading jeweler; sign town clock; 315 J street.
American Steam Laundry; white labor only; Nineteenth and I streets. Main office at Sawtelle's book store, 708 and 710 J street.
F. Kuehne & Co., carpenters and contractors, 906 Ninth street.
Western Hotel; leading hotel of Sacramento; Wm. Land, proprietor; 209 to 219 K street.
A. Caselli & Co., boot and shoe manufacturing, 216 J and 208 K street.
Klune & Floberg, watchmakers and jewelers; agents for Rockford Watch Company; 428 J street.
A. J. Johnston & Co., printers, 410 J street.
James G. Davis; furniture, carpets and wall paper; 411 and 413 K street. Branch: 315 K street.
Gensidea Bros.; high grade cigars and tobacco; 624 J street.
W. D. Comstock, furniture and bedding; large stock on exhibition, 501 to 507 K street, corner of Fifth.
Bell & Fountain, Plaza Cash Store, new store; new men; corner Tenth and J streets.
Baker & Hamilton, San Francisco and Sacramento, importers and jobbers in hardware, iron, steel, coal and agricultural implements.
Reeves & Long, undertakers; full stock of goods in this line; embalming; 609 J street.
W. R. Strong & Co., fruit packers and shippers; proprietors Capital nurseries.
Curtis Bros. & Co., wholesale and retail dealers in fruit, vegetables and general produce, 305 and 310 K street.
Capital Iron Works, engines, boilers, pumps, wind-mills, tanks and tank houses, 904 K street.
Fifth Avenue Saloon, E. Dieterle, proprietor; Philadelphia lager beer, 5 cents; 1015 Fifth street.
San Francisco Steam Dyeing Works, No. 524 K street, dye works, 2511 J street. John Stein, proprietor.
Charles J. Fredericks & Co., fashionable and practical hatters, 802 J street; importers and manufacturers.
R. W. Parker, groceries and provisions, corner Seventeenth and M streets; office of the Superintendent City Cemetery.
California State Bank, general banking business; exchange on all principal cities in the world.
Arpad Haraszthy & Co., fine table wines; Eclips champagne; 530 Washington street, San Francisco.
Perreir-Jonet, special champagne; W. B. Chapman, 123 California street, San Francisco; sole agent Pacific coast.
L. Radloff, ladies' tailor, 218 Post street, San Francisco.
James E. Mills, Notary Public and Commissioner of Deeds, 200 J street.
A. Aitken, premium marble and granite works, 423 J street.
O'Brien's, 607 J street, sweeping reduction in ladies' shoes; fine stock of boots and shoes.
A. J. Mnir, plumber and gas fitter, 810 K street.
Albert Grubbs, 1417 Fourth street; house cleaning, whitewashing, and everything in that line.
Jesse Slaughter, office 1217 Fifth street; plastering, whitewashing, cleaning cesspools, etc.
R. H. Pettit, wholesale and retail dealer in imported and domestic cigars, 225 K street.
Billy Groenvelde, Sutterville House and Riverside; fine beer, wine, lunch, etc.
Fred Futterer's saloon; cool beer, fine wines and cigars, pool and billiards; 1118 J street.
Sacramento Exchange, on Seventh street, by Robert Allen. "Bob" always has the best of everything.
Rhoads & Townsend House, on European plan, corner Second and J; Arthur Miller, proprietor.
The only place you can get Anheuser-Busch on draught is at John Grubler's, No. 522 J street; fine wines and imported cigars.
City Brewery, genuine Pilsener-Beck's beer; Frank Ruhstaller, proprietor; corner Twelfth and H streets.
Capital Brewery, Weiner lager beer; Louis Nicolaus, proprietor; corner Twelfth and I streets.
Columbus Brewery, Chris. Wahl, proprietor; corner Sixteenth and K streets.
Geo. Wisemann's Saloon, 1020 Fourth street; celebrated W. J. Lemp's St. Louis lager; families and saloons supplied by bottle or keg.
Dr. J. H. Shirley, 426 K street.

Butcher's Home, 1020 J street; fine beer, wines, etc.; Jacob Grubler, proprietor.
Capital Ale Vaults; hot lunch and clam chowder; best liquors and cigars; Nagle & Svenson, proprietors.
A. L. Hart, attorney-at-law, Sutter Building, Fifth and J streets.
W. A. Gett, Jr., attorney-at-law, Seventh and J streets.
W. A. Anderson, attorney-at-law, 209 J street.
F. F. Tebbets, dentist, 914 Sixth street.
Dr. H. H. Pierson, surgical and mechanical dentist, 511 J street.
Joseph Hahn & Co., pharmacists' choice perfumeries; S. W. cor. J and 5th streets.
A. C. Sweetser & Co., real estate and insurance brokers, 1012 Fourth street.
Bell & Co., general auctioneers' salesroom, 927 K street; attention given to all business in this line.
Barrett & Berkey, Pacific restaurant, Oyster house and wine parlors, 701 J street.
J. S. Ross, Fourth street restaurant; meals cooked to order; oysters in every style; 1023 Fourth street.
Earthquake and Fire Proof Buildings, constructed by G. E. Hawes, Twelfth and B streets.
Waterhouse & Lester, dealers in iron, steel, Cumberland coal, wagon lumber and carriage hardware, Sacramento.
James Longshore; Sacramento Trunk Factory; 530 K street.
King Bros.; State Capital Cash Grocery; 131 J street, corner Second.
Bainbridge Business College, 1017 J street; J. C. Bainbridge, principal.
Second-Hand "Remington" Typewriters, for rent and sale, at the Vost Agency, 1007 Fourth street.
Paul Graf, manufacturer and dealer in saddles, harness, etc., 1130 J street.
Osborn & Folger, dealers in ice, coal, hay and grain; new 10-ton Fairbank's hay scales; N. E. corner Fifth and I streets. Wood yard, 806 I street.
Friend & Terry Lumber Company; Main office, 1310 Second street; Branch yard, Twelfth and J streets. E. J. Holt, manager.

GENERAL NEWS ITEMS.

Winery at Petaluma destroyed by fire. Loss, $3,500.
Senator Dan Voorhies is dangerously ill at Washington.
Wallace, N. M., was destroyed by fire yesterday. No insurance. Caused by incendiary.
At Nevada last night David Steel shot and mortally wounded Peter Chappel. Woman the cause.
At San Francisco, James Jordan, a saloon keeper, shot John Haggerty because he refused to pay for a drink.
Serious charges are accumulating against the management of the Soldier's Home at Santa Monica. The vilest cruelty is reported.

Baseball.

There will be a contest to-morrow between the Sacramento and Oakland clubs, at Snowflake Park, commencing at 2 p. m. The playeys will be placed as follows:

Sacramento.	Position.	Oakland.
Lohman	Catcher	Stallings
Burke	Pitcher	Wehrle
Veach	First base	Dooley
O'Day	Second base	McDonald
McSorley	Third base	Smalley
McLaughlin	Shortstop	O'Neill
Roberts	Left field	Dailey
Goodenough	Center field	Long
Roxburg	Right field	Stockwell

Now is the time the hokey-pokey dealers are making a harvest. It seems there is no law to reach this game. All other games having been stopped make it lively for this class of gambling. Nearly every saloon in the business portion of the city has one or more of these games in full blast.

The Best Cosmetics.

A sensible girl will not keep a lot of cosmetics and drugs on her toilet table, but there are a few articles she should always have in a convenient place. She should have an array of glass stoppered bottles containing alcohol, alum, camphor, borax, ammonia and glycerine or vaseline. A little camphor and water may be used as a wash for the mouth or throat if the breath is not sweet. Powdered alum applied to a fever sore will prevent it from becoming unsightly and noticeable. Insect stings or eruptions on the skin are removed by alcohol. A few grains of alum in tepid water will relieve people whose hands perspire very freely, rendering them unpleasantly moist. A few drops of sulphuric acid in the water are also beneficial for this purpose and also desirable for those whose feet perspire freely. We should always recommend care in the use of scented soaps; in many cases the perfume is simply a disguise for poor quality. A good glycerine or honey soap is always preferable. Of course, one may rely on scented soaps from a high-class manufacturer, but it costs more than it is worth. In addition to the soap for bathing, white castile should be kept for washing the hair. Occasionally a little borax or ammonia may be used for this purpose, but it is usually too harsh in its effects.

FLASHES.

Colors are distinguishable by sight, but we can feel blue.

The pig was never known to wash, but we have seen the pig iron.

Those who have a deep sympathy for animals will bear watching.

When we are given to sober reflection we never get into a tight place.

No matter how smart or brave, there is one place you can find a match—in a box.

Shakespeare said that a tanner would last nine years. Our Tanner did not last a year.

"When you come to think of it," how strange it appears that other people are very much like you.

When you hear a fellow say that a girl has no heart, you can wager a dime she has a mortgage on his.

We often hear the expression: "The world owes us a living." It don't owe anything of the kind—we must earn it.

LOCAL BREVITIES.

The fire last night was at Mrs. Nichol's lodging house, corner Third and K streets. Explosion of coal oil lamp the cause. Very little damage.

Officer Frank Rider made two important captures this week, F. Laman, the Santa Rosa burglar, and Percy Douglass, the man who shot Brakeman Anson last March at Madera. Well done, Frank.

It is needless to warn the people that the city has many pickpockets, sneak-thieves and burglars within its limits at this time. Several cases of pocket-picking have been reported, and numerous small burglaries.

Judge Armstrong yesterday postponed his decision on defendant's motion for a new trial in the case of George Nelson, until next Friday. This is the case where Nelson was convicted recently for highway robbery. The defendant's counsel are zealous in pressing their grounds for a retrial of the case, insisting that the defendant is innocent.

At the race track yesterday among the patrons of the pool-box was a woman who had a goodly roll of bank bills, and through her spokesman, made many liberal purchases of pools. Singular to relate, her selections were the winners, and she must have realized a handsome sum as the result of her judicious investments.

One of the oldest firms of merchant tailors in the city is that of Anderson & Johnson, at 1014 Seventh street, between J and K. The work of this firm has been and will be always first-class. They use the best of material, and their workmanship cannot be discounted. That their trade has been constantly augmented is an indication that our local industries receive a deserved patronage.

M. L. Wallace, the old man who resisted the arrest made by Special Officer Glick, and in the contest stabbed the latter, was released on bail Thursday, and became despondent, ending his life by suicide. The old gentleman was given to drink at periods, and during these spells was violent. At other times he was quiet and harmless. He leaves a wife and three adult sons, all residing in this county.

The Weather.

The highest and lowest signal service temperature during the past week was 91° and 50°, while during the same time last year it was 106° and 58°. One year ago to-day and to-morrow—the 14th and 15th—there was heavy thunder and lightning storms, at which time there was a precipitation of .43 of an inch of rain; making sad havoc with the races and the exhibits at the Pavilion. The temperature at 5 o'clock this morning was for Portland, 46°; Roseburg, 38°; Red Bluff, 70°; Sacramento, 60°; San Francisco, 56°; Eureka, 44°; Salt Lake, 40°; Cheyenne, 40°; Denver, 46°; North Platte, 46°; Omaha, 60°; Des Moines, 70°; Davenport, 70°, and Chicago, 78°. The temperature and other climatic features of the weather during the fair so far has been the best during a period of ten years. It is all the most exacting growler could desire or wish to see.

Enterprise.

Sacramento merchants are enterprising. This is particularly exemplified with our younger ones. Few among us have a realization of the wholesale trade of the firm of Hall, Luhrs & Co. Their sales reach all parts of this State, the States adjoining, and the territories. Such houses help much to build up a country; their success is a matter of general gratification.

A Fine Improvement.

John Miller will soon have the most attractive farm in the county. It is located below Walnut Grove. More than a dozen men are employed in constructing tanks, laying pipes and raising mounds to beautify the place. It will be set off in ornamental lawns. Mr. Miller has in operation two dredgers raising the levee in front of his place.

SOCIAL. AND PERSONAL.

Senator John Boggs, of Colusa, was never known to miss a fair.

Not to see the tall form of Tom Williams at the races would be a novelty.

Congressman Jos. McKenna will be in attendance on the fair on Monday.

Ex. U. S. Surveyor General W. H. Brown is here backing his favorites in the races.

Ex-Congressman H. F. Page, now a resident of Washington, D. C., is visiting his former constituents of this city.

Congressman Thos. J. Clunie's robust form can be seen each day on the Quarter Stretch at the race track, where he keeps a sharp eye upon the main chance in the pools.

That old veteran sporting man, Col. Ned McGowan could not resist the temptation to visit the fair. Col. Ned McGowan is one of the important characters in the history of early California life.

The Wheel Not a Banking Game.

Major W. A. Anderson was not content to rest upon the order of the Police Judge, in holding Dan Donovan for gaming, in conducting a wheel game, and yesterday sued out a writ of habeas corpus in behalf of the prisoner, returnable before Hon. J. W. Armstrong this morning at 10 o'clock. At the appointed hour the case was called, and testimony, which had been reduced to writing by the shorthand reporter, read to the Court. From the evidence, the Court held that no banking game had been disclosed, and that the betting shown does not in any sense differ from any ordinary bet between individuals, or from the betting on horse-races. The Court held that there was nothing to show why the precedent set by this Court, and other Superior Courts in this State, should now be changed. District Attorney Bruner agreed with the Court, and the petitioner was discharged.

Death of J. R. Watson.

J. R. Watson was an old resident of this county. For many years he was a miner on Texas Hill, Granite Township. In 1863 he was elected a member of the Legislature to represent Sacramento county. He was water agent for the Natoma Water and Mining Company for a number of years, at that time residing at Alder Creek, also agent for the Sacramento Valley R. R. Co. Afterwards he was conductor, train dispatcher and purchasing agent, in the order named, for the Central Pacific railroad company. At the time of his death he was a director of the California State Bank. Mr. Watson was one of our leading citizens and whose judgment upon all public matters was excellent. For several years he has been of a decided retiring nature, not taking any conspicuous part in public affairs.

Accommodations for Visitors.

Sacramento can accommodate a large influx of people suddenly reaching here, better than any other city in the State. There has never been any difficulty in the matter of boarding and lodging our visitors. Barrett & Berkey of the Pacific Oyster House, at Seventh and J streets, made unusual preparations to accommodate the large number of their patrons from abroad this year. Their house is located conveniently to the leading hotels; its reputation is State wide.

Received yesterday from our Eastern manufacturers fifteen cases of gents' fine clothing, consisting of gents' suits, overcoats and pants. This lot presents the best value we have ever given our customers. Every garment is guaranteed a perfect fit. Suits from $5 to $25; overcoats from $2.50 to $27.50; pants from 75 cents to $8. Red House.

SNOWFLAKE PARK.

Twenty-eighth and R Streets.

BASEBALL—CALIFORNIA LEAGUE.

Sunday September 15, 1889
At 2 o'clock P. M., sharp,

Sacramento vs. Oakland.

Prices of admission: Men, 50 cents; ladies, 25 cents; small boys, 10 cents; reserved seats, 25 cents—can be obtained any time at C. S. Houghton's, J street, between Sixth and Seventh, or at Park before the game. Trains leave depot at 12:45, 1:05, 1:25, and 1:45 P. M.—stopping at Third, Tenth and Eighteenth streets. Fare, for round trip, 15 cents. Admission to Park (including fare both ways), 50 cents.

THE LAST OF THE SEASON!

GRAND PICNIC OF

Sacramento Lodge, No. 11

Order of Hermann Sons,

To-morrow, Sunday, Sept. 15th.

RICHMOND GROVE.

Admission 25 Cts. each. Fine Music and Games for young folks, with awarding of prizes.

Alpine Funerals.

A clue to the origin of the Irish wake and other funeral pomposities, which we are sometimes inclined to regard as relics of barbarism, may be found in the funeral customs of some of the Alpine regions. The circle of acquaintance of the more prosperous people of the villages often extends over miles of country; and the friends of a deceased proprietor will make long journeys to attend his funeral. The dictates of hospitality require that their physical wants be provided for; or, if not, they will meet at the inn and naturally have something very like a feast. In some districts, even before death occurs and the patient is in his last agonies, all around are informed of the fact, and expected to make a ceremonial last visit. They enter the sick room, take a long look at the dying man and go away. After death, when the body has been prepared for burial, a table is spread covered with refreshments, and open house is held till the funeral.

CHAS. J. FREDERICKS & CO.

Fashionable and Practical

HATTERS,

802 J STREET,

Importers and Manufacturers of

Fine Hats and Caps.

Latest Novelties on hand and constantly arriving. REPAIRING A SPECIALTY.

FIFTH AVENUE SALOON,

1015 Fifth Street, between J and K.

E. DIETERLE, Proprietor.

Philadelphia Lager Beer on draught, five cents a glass. Also, fine Wines, Liquors, Cigars, etc.

THE FINEST IN THE LAND.

SAN FRANCISCO

Steam Dyeing Works

Removed to 524 K Street.

Branch, 805 K St. Dye Works, 2511 J St.

All orders promptly attended to. Don't make a mistake—Main office at Capital Transfer Company.

JOHN STEEN, Proprietor Dye Works.

Trunks Removed, 25 Cents.

R. W. PARKER,

Dealer in Choice Family

GROCERIES and PROVISIONS

Sold at the Lowest Cash Price.

Give him a call and be convinced.

Corner of Seventeenth and N Streets.

Also, Office of the Superintendent of the City Cemetery.

O'BRIEN'S, 607 J.

SWEEPING REDUCTION IN LADIES' SHOES.

Best French Kid, hand turn, worth $7, reduced to $6. Ladies' French Kid Button, low heel, long vamp, worth $5, reduced to $4. Misses' and Children's Canvas Shoes reduced 25 per cent.

California State Bank

DOES A GENERAL BANKING BUSINESS.

Draws Exchange on all the Principal Cities of the World.

OFFICERS:

PRESIDENT.....N. D. RIDEOUT
VICE-PRESIDENT.....FRED'K COX
CASHIER.....A. ABBOTT
ASSISTANT CASHIER.....W. E. GERBER

DIRECTORS:

C. W. Clarke, Jos. Steffens, N. D. Rideout,
Geo. C. Perkins, J. R. Watson, Frederick Cox,
W. E. Gerber.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

THE CARS OF THE CENTRAL STREET RAILWAY COMPANY will only stop at the further crossings.

There will Always be Cars Waiting at the Close of Both Theaters.

THE NEW PAVILION

At South Sacramento will be open on SUNDAY, the 4th of August, and at all times thereafter.

Refreshments of all kinds always on hand.

Fine Table Wines

From our Celebrated Orleans Vineyard.

Good Humphrey & Co.
Producers of the
ECLIPSE
CHAMPAGNE,
530 Washington St.
SAN FRANCISCO.

CHAMPAGNE

W. B. CHAPMAN,
123 California St. San Francisco.
SOLE AGENT FOR THE PACIFIC COAST
To be sold by all first-Class Wine Merchants and Grocers.

Samples and Instructions for Self-measurement sent by mail on application.

L. RADLOFF,
LADIES' TAILOR,
218 POST STREET, SAN FRANCISCO.
Tailor Made Suits a Specialty.

A. AITKEN,

PREMIUM PIONEER MARBLE AND GRANITE WORKS

423 J Street, bet. 4th and 5th, Sacramento.

Costic Tile, etc. Cemetery lots enclosed with Granite. All kinds of work done in Italian and Vermont Marble. Direct importer of Scotch and Eastern Granite Monuments. Also, Marble, Slate, Wooden and Iron Mantels, direct from manufacturers, at Reduced Prices. Call and examine.

Gentility—As Some Understand It.

Gentle it is to have soft hands,
But not gentle to work on lands;
Gentle it is to lie in bed,
But not gentle to earn your bread;
Gentle it is to cringe and bow,
But not gentle to sow or plow;
Gentle it is to play the beau,
But not gentle to reap or mow;
Gentle it is to keep a jig,
But not gentle to hoe or dig;
Gentle it is in trade to fail,
But not gentle to swing a flail;
Gentle it is to play a fool,
But not gentle to keep a school;
Gentle it is to cheat your tailor,
But not gentle to be a sailor;
Gentle it is to fight a duel,
But not gentle to cut your fuel;
Gentle it is to eat rich cake,
But not gentle to cook or bake;
Gentle it is to have the blues,
But not gentle to wear thick shoes;
Gentle it is to roll in wealth,
But not gentle to have good health;
Gentle it is to "cut" a friend,
But not gentle your clothes to mend;
Gentle it is to make a show,
But not gentle poor folks to know;
Gentle it is to go away,
But not gentle at home to stay;
Gentle it is to smirk and smile,
But not gentle to shun all guile;
Gentle it is to be a knave,
But not gentle your cash to save;
Gentle it is to make a bet,
But not gentle to pay a debt;
Gentle it is to play at dice,
But not gentle to take advice;
Gentle it is to curse and swear,
But not gentle old clothes to wear;
Gentle it is to know a lord,
But not gentle to pay your board;
Gentle it is to skip and hop,
But not gentle to keep a shop.

Princess of Horseshoe Cove.

There is a little cove making in from the Atlantic ocean, called Horseshoe. The town, Horsford, is a mile down the coast; but right here, facing the cove, among a group of somber pine trees, stands an ancient stone house. It is gloomy and forbidding. There is a dearth of flowers, and the rooms, with the exception of one in the tower, are dark and cheerless. The one exception is the room of Lil Bradford, who, on the death of her father in India, was brought from boarding school here to reside with her great-aunt.

Of her father she has only a vague remembrance; she had not seen him for years. Her mother died at her birth, and this great-aunt is her only living relative.

In this gloomy old place she has lived for over a year, with her whole nature in rebellion. She goes nowhere; she does not see scarcely any one outside of the members of the household. Her aunt is a spinster of 75, who hates all men because of an early disappointment in love.

Lil has fixed up her little tower-chamber so that it is the only cozy room in the house. It has a magnificent outlook over the broad ocean. Here Lil sits and watches the passing sails, which never come into her shore, and sighs for something to break the terrible monotony of her life.

"If my fairy prince would only come to rescue me," she says, a smile curling her red lips at the quaint conceit.

She is a fairly pretty girl, with wavy golden-brown hair, and hazel eyes. To be sure her nose is the least bit "tip-tilted," and a few freckles have taken up their abode on the bridge. But there is something very charming about Lil; she has a delightful figure, and is sweet-tempered in spite of her wayward impulse.

Aunt Crofton's companion has been in the old house a little longer than Lil. She is a quiet young woman of 25. She expects to be married in another year. Lil envies her intensely, and gets such companionship from her as she can.

One day when the old madam is asleep they go down to the shore. Lil, who is idly picking up driftwood, suddenly utters a sharp little exclamation. Miss Craig looks for the cause, and Lil shows her a little wooden bottle. "Now," she exclaimed, with a willful toss of her head, "I will send a message to the prince." Down she sits, and takes her diary from her pocket. Tearing out a blank leaf, she writes with a gold-tipped pencil: "Will not the fairy prince come to the rescue of a forlorn and lovely maiden kept in an enchanted castle by an ogress at Horseshoe cove?" This extraordinary epistle she rolls up and slips into the little wooden vial, and with her penknife whittles a plug with which she stops the mouth. This done, with a flourish she consigns it to the dancing waves, and stands and watches it with dimpling smiles.

Miss Craig breaks the silence with this inquiry: "What if it goes ashore and is discovered by some one at Horsford?"

Lil gives a gasp. "I never thought of that," she says. "But it will not! Look, it is drifting straight out to sea! Farewell, little message!" She laughingly blows a kiss after it, then turns slowly to follow Miss Craig up the path.

Two weeks later Miss Craig climbs to the little sky chamber to summon Lil down stairs. "There is a gentleman in the parlor inquiring for Miss Crofton," she says. "I dare not disturb her, for she is having a nap. Will you go down?" "To be sure," replies Lil, straightening her collar, and smoothing her careless locks.

"Is the gentleman young and fine-looking?" "He is about 30, and not at all handsome," Lil makes a wry face at her reflection in the round mirror. "What a shame! Of course it is my fairy prince; but one cannot have everything in this world." Then, as she sees the grave disapproval in Miss Craig's eyes, she bursts into a merry, ringing laugh. She descends directly to the parlor, and meets Paul Crofton with the prettiest grace in the world. Miss Craig is right; he is not at all handsome. His skin is too dark, his nose too big, his shoulders are too high. But his eyes are magnificent, and there is something in his bearing which commands involuntary respect.

He is a cousin, distantly removed, of Miss Crofton's he tells Lil; and, being in the neighborhood, has taken the opportunity of paying his respects. He knows something about the old place, having visited here when a boy.

Lil passes a delightful half-hour with him, and is singing and playing on the cracked old piano, when a little maid makes her appearance at the door. "Please, Miss Lil, the gentleman is to come up to Miss Crofton's room." "To hear is to obey," laughs Lil, making an admonishing gesture to Paul as she runs away.

When she comes to the tea-table she is gratified to find Mr. Crofton, who has accepted his kinswoman's rather ungracious invitation to make her a visit.

That night Miss Crofton gives Lil a few sharp words of advice. "I am obliged to be civil to this man, because he rescued me from drowning when he was a boy in his teens, but I don't want any love affair to arise out of his visit here. He is only a poor lawyer, anyway, and for my part I think him much too ugly for any woman to fall in love with." "I quite agree with you, aunt," returns Lil, demurely.

She is looking out of the window down at Paul Crofton, who, as he meets her roguish eyes, is shaking with suppressed laughter, for he has overheard the conversation.

Despite her aunt's warning, Lil straightway does fall in love with their visitor, although for some time she does not realize it. How should it be otherwise? He is educated, traveled, manly, and noble. Lil has no knowledge of men, and soon even comes to consider him handsome! I am only too thankful that so true a man has come to my little heroine's castle.

When the September tides are washing dreamily on the shore he speaks of going away. A sudden anguish contracts Lil's heart. She has forgotten that he must go some day. All the grim loneliness of her previous life rises up to taunt her. What shall she do—what can she do when he is gone! She is fighting hard for self control. She cannot form commonplace words of regret. She drops one by one some tiny pebbles from her hand, and watches with wide-open eyes a fading sail across the brilliant expanse of ocean.

Paul looks at her in a sort of tender doubt. "I wish I might take you with me, little Lil." His gentle voice breaks down the last atom of her enforced calm. She drops her face into her hands and cries passionately. Paul takes her in his arms, much as if she were nine years old instead of nineteen. "Why, Lil, dear, don't cry. I love you so well it breaks my heart to see you cry. But if I were to marry you and take you away some other man would win you from me." "Never!" cries Lil, in passionate protest, as she springs to her feet and dashes away her tears to smile at him radiantly.

"Well, Lil, I must make you my wife and take the consequences. It is fate, I suppose. You have bewitched me. Do you know what brought me here?" "The desire to pay respects to Miss Crofton," replies Lil, maliciously. He smiles and takes from his pocket the little wooden vial, which Lil well knows.

"I was fishing twenty miles from here," he explains, "when this little bottle came dancing to the side of my boat. With some difficulty I opened it, and read the message it contained, which, though wet, was quite legible. I knew but one Horseshoe cove—the home of my relative. I wondered what foolish little princess she had taken captive and came hither to warn her to be more discreet in future. But alas! I have burned my fingers."

Lil is laughing, blushing, stammering excuses for her madcap prank. Her lover tips up the white chin and looks at her critically. "You called yourself a lovely maiden?" he declared. "Am I not?" with a charming saucy lift of her brows. "I have seen many handsomer women than you, Lil," he says with the utmost coolness; but he kisses her suddenly, nevertheless, on hair and eyes and lips, and Lil appears to be quite satisfied.

You may well imagine Miss Crofton's wrath and disgust when she hears their story. She can do nothing, however. They are married at once without any ceremony, and then Miss Crofton gives Lil the name and address of a prominent solicitor, who holds in trust a large sum of money left her by her father.

This is a surprise indeed to the newly wedded pair, for Lil has supposed herself dependent on Miss Crofton's charity, and Paul has never dreamed of marrying an heiress.

And so they leave the enchanted castle with flying colors, and live happily evermore, as a fairy prince and princess should.

People who hold to the opinion that the deterrent influences of imprisonment for life are just as powerful as those of capital punishment overlook one of the most familiar facts in the history of the ministration of justice. In nearly every instance the murderer condemned to expiate his crime upon the gallows seeks to obtain a commutation of the sentence to penal servitude. What is this but an acknowledgment that he prefers lifelong confinement in a prison to the terrors of the hangman's rope? In other words, there is a greater dread of the gallows than there is of the convict's cell, and therefore, so far as the fear of punishment is operative to prevent crime, capital punishment exerts the greater influence. But no device of which man's ingenuity is capable would obliterate the crime of murder from our calendar. Until human nature undergoes a general and radical change, until the passions which push reason from her stool have spent their force, until the race has had a new birth and a new baptism, and the bells of the millennium begin to chime, we shall need the machinery of law for the correction of human vices and the punishment of evil doers.—Brooklyn Eagle.

According to Professor Huxley in speaking of the oyster, "that when this slippery morsel glides along the palate few people imagine that they are swallowing a piece of machinery far more complicated than the watch." Complicated or not, the oyster must be swallowed.

FRIEND & TERRY

LUMBER CO.

Wholesale and Retail Lumber Dealers, Also Shakes, Bolts, Ties, Doors, Windows, Blinds and Screens. Main Yard and Office, No. 1310 Second Street. Branch Yard, corner Twelfth and J Sts. P. O. Box 233. E. J. HOLT, Manager. Sacramento

OSBORN & FOLGER

DEALERS IN
ICE and COAL, HAY and GRAIN.
New 10-ton Fairbanks' Hay Scales.
N. E. cor. Fifth and I Streets.
Wood Yard, 806 I Street.

PAUL GRAF,

Manufacturer of and dealer in Saddles, Harness, Robes, Collars, Whips, Spurs, Brushes, Currycombs, etc.
1130 J Street, near Twelfth
Repairing Neatly Done.
Harness Made to Order.

SECOND HAND

"REMINGTON" TYPE WRITERS

FOR RENT AND FOR SALE.

Type Writers' Supplies of All Kinds.

AT THE

YOST AGENCY, 1007 FOURTH STREET.

SCHOOL.

PUPILS of the Public Schools who wish to review during their vacation will find BAINBRIDGE COLLEGE the place. We make a specialty of Grammar School and High School Studies. No extra charge for Penmanship or Elocution drill. You can attend in the cool part of the day; hours, 8 A. M. to 1 P. M.
J. C. BAINBRIDGE, Principal.

No. 1017 J Street, Sacramento.

King Bros.

State Capitol Cash Grocery, 131 J Street, corner Second.

Goods sold on small margin, strictly for cash. Best Brands of Wines, Liquors and Cigars.

JAS. LONGSHORE,

SACRAMENTO TRUNK FACTORY,
530 K STREET.

Trunks, Valises & Bags Wholesale and Retail.

Waterhouse & Lester

DEALERS IN

IRON, STEEL, CUMBERLAND COAL,

Wagon Lumber and Carriage Hardware,
SACRAMENTO.

Earthquake and Fire Proof BUILDINGS

Constructed on my patent system. Perfect protection guaranteed. For estimates and particulars see
E. HAWES,
Twelfth and B streets, Sacramento.

A. L. HART,

ATTORNEY-AT-LAW

Sutter Building, cor. 5th and J.

W. A. ANDERSON,

ATTORNEY-AT-LAW,

No. 209 J Street,

Sacramento.

W. A. GETT, JR.,

Attorney at Law,

Southwest Corner of Seventh and J Streets,
SACRAMENTO, CAL.

F. F. TEBBETS, DENTIST.

No. 914 SIXTH STREET,

Bet. I and J, west side, opp. Congregational Church.

DR. H. H. PIERSON,

SURGICAL & AND & MECHANICAL & DENTIST

511 J Street, bet. 5th and 6th.

Gas administered for the painless extraction of teeth.

Joseph Hahn & Co., PHARMACISTS,

S. W. cor. Fifth and J Streets, Sacramento.
CHOICE PERFUMERIES, Etc.

Prescriptions carefully compounded, at all hours.

A. C. SWEETSER & CO.,

Real Estate & Insurance Brokers

Lands For Sale in all parts of the State.

Some Good Investments in School Lands.
Send for Catalogue.

Office, No. 1012 Fourth Street,

SACRAMENTO, CAL.

BELL & CO.,

GENERAL AUCTIONEERS.

Salesroom, 927 K Street, Sacramento, Cal.

Regular Salesdays—Wednesdays and Saturdays at 10 o'clock A. M.

Assistants—W. T. Crowell, Real Estate; J. Pulvermacher, Bookkeeper; J. Lambert, Furniture and Stock.

Particular attention paid to sales of real estate, house sales, and sales of farms, stock, etc.

Highest price paid for all kinds of household goods.

Barrett & Berkey

PACIFIC RESTAURANT,

OYSTER HOUSE AND

WINE PARLORS

701 J Street, cor. 7th.

J. S. ROSS'

Fourth-Street Restaurant

1023 FOURTH STREET,

Opposite Postoffice, SACRAMENTO.

OYSTERS IN EVERY STYLE.

Meals Cooked to Order,

And served in first-class manner.

NEW ORLEANS GUMBO SOUP THURSDAYS AND SUNDAYS.

I have had years of experience as a restaurateur, and feel confident that I can cater satisfactorily to the tastes of all who may favor me with their patronage.
J. S. ROSS, Proprietor.

CANCERS,

Ulcers, Wens, Lumps, Exerescences, etc.,
Positively Cured or no Pay.
No Knife Used.

As to the success of my treatment, I give the names of a few of the many cured. By addressing them they will give any information required—and it pays to investigate before being treated.

Mrs. O. C. Nelson, Grass Valley, cancer.
John Service, Auburn, lupus.
Patrick Lynch, Sacramento, cancer.
Mrs. Jno. Shaw, Grass Val., birthmark removed.
N. S. Peck, S. P. R. Sacramento, cancer.
J. L. Woods, Washington, Yolo county, cancer.
John W. Douglas, Rocklin, cancer.
Miss Mamie Lynch, Yolo, tumor removed.
Chas. McLaughlin, Sacramento, cancer.

I might give many more. Those afflicted are invited to call and investigate for themselves. Consultation at office free. Send for circular.

Office, 426 K Street, Sacramento.

DR. J. H. SHIRLEY.

RED HOUSE Millinery Department

This cut represents one of the most fashionable shapes for misses and young ladies.

Trimmed as above illustrated for.....$3 00@5 00
Felt Hats in all the new shades 70
Straw Toques and Turbans 50
Novelties in shaded Aigrettes 25
Birds 50

We have an extra force of trimmers employed, and are prepared to do order work for the State Fair within a few hours' notice.

RED HOUSE,
J Street, between Seventh and Eighth.

ALBERT GRUBBS,
No. 1417 Fourth Street,

Will do all kinds of House Cleaning, Lay Carpets, Whitewashing, and everything in that line.

He also has the only wagon for the REMOVAL OF DEAD ANIMALS, and any orders left at his place of business will receive prompt attention.

Remember the address!

No. 1417 Fourth Street, Sacramento, Cal.

JESSE SLAUGHTER,
Office, No. 1217 Fifth Street.

Plastering, Whitewashing, Cleaning of Cesspools, Etc.
Also, CITY SCAVENGER.

Burying of dead animals attended to at short notice.

Don't forget the number—1217 Fifth street, the old stand, where I have been for 25 years.

R. H. PETTIT,
Wholesale and Retail Dealer in

IMPORTED & DOMESTIC CIGARS

Smoke the "Lone Fisherman,"

The BEST FIVE-CENT CIGAR in the Market.

NO. 225 K STREET.

CALL AT 1118 J STREET,
—AT—

Fred Futterer's Saloon

And Get a Glass of Cool Beer.

The best Wines, Liquors and Cigars always on hand.

POOL AND BILLIARD TABLES.

FRED FUTTERER, 1118 J Street.

CHANGED HANDS.

SACRAMENTO EXCHANGE,

(Formerly Wm. Gamble's.)

1012 SEVENTH STREET.

Fine Wines. All the celebrated brands of Liquors and Cigars. ROBERT ALLEN, Formerly of Agricultural Park.

RHOADS & TOWNSEND HOUSE

On European Plan.

Cor. Second and J Streets, Sacramento.

ARTHUR MILLER, PROPRIETOR.

A Stranger in Town.

IT is safe to wager that this is a truthful portrait of the wonder and astonishment usually aroused by a stranger on entering a small country village. All stand with their mouths wide open, reminding the traveler of the Mammoth Cave, and they gaze on him as though beholding an apparition from another world. And, by the way, this is a forcible reminder of the fact that

Arcadian, the Ideal,

is creating just about as much commotion among the proprietors of competing brands as the appearance of the stranger does among the unsophisticated inhabitants of the rural village. Imagine the stranger in the above illustration to be

"Arcadian and Ideal,"

and the gawky, paralyzed spectators, competing drinks, and you have a very correct idea of the position occupied by Arcadian Sarsaparilla and Iron. A glass of IDEAL is, indeed, delightful. It is a great blood purifier, possesses valuable medicinal properties, and is warmly indorsed by eminent physicians in every part of England and America. It has long been a favorite drink among the English people, and is acquiring universal favor and popularity wherever introduced.

Ideal is prepared with pure Arcadian Mineral Water, and is bottled at Waukesha, Wis. It is a mild laxative, acts favorably in promoting the secretions of the kidneys, enriches the blood, and is of decided value in malarial diseases of every type. It imparts an invigorating tone to the entire system.

It is essentially a ladies' drink, and possesses rare merit.

ARCADIAN, THE IDEAL,

IS KEPT FOR SALE BY ALL FIRST-CLASS

Druggists, Grocers and Saloon Keepers.

ANHEUSER & BUSCH BEER

Can be found on draught only at

John Gruhler's Saloon

No. 522 J STREET.

The finest and best Wines, Liquors and Cigars constantly on hand.

Patronize Home Industry!

CITY & BREWERY

FRANK RUHSTALLER, Proprietor.

GENUINE

Pilsener Felsen Beer.

Corner Twelfth and H Streets,

Telephone 201.

SACRAMENTO.

CELEBRATED

WEINER LAGER BEER

CAPITAL BREWERY

LOUIS NICOLAUS,

Corner Twelfth and I Streets

SACRAMENTO.

COLUMBUS BREWERY

CHRIS. WAHL, Proprietor

Corner of Sixteenth and K Streets,

SACRAMENTO, CAL.

Agent for the Celebrated W. J. LEMP'S ST. LOUIS LAGER BEER

WISEMANN'S SALOON,

Klebetz & Green's Old Stand,

1020 Fourth St., bet. J and K, Sacramento.

GEO. WISEMANN, PROPRIETOR.

Families and Saloons supplied by bottle or keg.

Butchers' Home,

1020 J Street,

Between 10th and 11th, : Sacramento, Cal.

Fine Wines, Liquors and Cigars. Also, a

GOOD GLASS OF BEER.

JACOB GRUHLE, Prop'r.

CAPITAL ALE VAULTS.

Established in 1870, and still maintains the same reputation for keeping the best WINES, LIQUORS and Cigars in the city. The finest Hot Lunch in the city from 11 to 2. Clam Chowder a specialty every night.

NAGELE & SVENSSON, Prop'rs.

Telephone 38.

302 J and 1005 Third st.

W. R. STRONG & CO.
Founded 1852.

Fruit Packers
and Shippers.

PROPRIETORS OF
CAPITAL NURSERIES,
SACRAMENTO, CAL.

CURTIS BROS. & CO.

Wholesale and Retail Dealers in and Shippers of
all kinds of

Fruits, Vegetables
And GENERAL PRODUCE.

Careful attention paid to the selection and packing
of Choice Fruits and Vegetables for distant markets.
Goods delivered in city free.

308 and 310 K Street, - - Sacramento, Cal.

Capital Iron Works.

Vertical and Horizontal Engines
BOILERS,

STEAM AND POWER
PUMPS,
Deep Well Pumps,
Hand Pumps,
Stock Pumps,
PUMPMAKERS' SUPPLIES.

HORSE-POWERS, WIND MILLS,

Tanks and Tank Houses.

904 K Street, Sacramento.

A. J. MUIR,
PLUMBER,
Gas and Steam Fitter.

Being a practical plumber, I can guarantee all work.

810 K STREET, Telephone 226.
SACRAMENTO, CAL.

Take a Ride on the Riverside Road

AND BE SURE AND STOP AT
BILLY GROENVELD'S

Sutterville House

And get a glass of COOL BEER. Or if you want a bottle of CHAMPAGNE Billy has it on hand, or anything else you wish for in his line.

Always a FINE LUNCH on the Counter.
M. T. GROENVELD, Proprietor.

BAKER & HAMILTON,
San Francisco and Sacramento,
Importers and Jobbers of

Hardware, Iron, Steel, Coal, Powder,
MACHINERY

And Agricultural Implements.
Send for Catalogue.

F. KUEHNE & CO.,
NO. 906 NINTH STREET,
Between I and J, SACRAMENTO,

Carpenters and Contractors

Store and office work a specialty.
ICE BOXES for Breweries and Saloons always on hand and made to order.
Jobbing and Repairing promptly attended to.

H. WACHHORST
Leading Jeweler of Sacramento
SIGN OF THE TOWN CLOCK,
No. 315 J STREET, SACRAMENTO.

W. D. Comstock, 501 -- 507 K, cor. Fifth

On Exhibition, THE LARGEST AND BEST SELECTED STOCK.
FAIR DEALING! LOW PRICES!

GENSHLEA BROS. 624 J ST.
Strictly High Grade Goods in all Lines.
TRY THE LA ROSA ESPANOLA KEY WEST CIGAR.

JAS. G. DAVIS Furniture, Carpets and Wall Paper
411 AND 413 K STREET,
Branch, 315 K St. Send for Catalogue. Prices Lowest.

Wm. J. Hassett. A. J. Johnston.
A. J. Johnston & Co.
PRINTERS,
410 J Street, Sacramento

A. G. JOHNSON. CLAUD ANDERSON.
ANDERSON & JOHNSON,
The # Leading # Merchant # Tailors,
SUITS MADE TO ORDER AT REASONABLE RATES.
No. 1014 Seventh Street, : : : Sacramento.

Klune & Floberg, WATCHMAKERS and JEWELERS
Agents for Rockford Watch Co.
NO. 428 J STREET, SACRAMENTO.

Something New

NEW STORE. NEW MEN.

BELL & FOUNTAIN

HAVE OPENED THE

Plaza Cash Grocery
STORE,

Corner Tenth and J Streets,

And have stocked the same with all New and Fresh Goods, which they will sell for CASH at the smallest living margin.

All Goods Warranted as Represented.

Goods delivered to any part of the city.

Our Motto: "The nimble sixpence against the slow shilling!"

BELL & FOUNTAIN,
Plaza Cash Grocery Store,

REEVES & LONG, UNDERTAKERS,
609 J Street, bet. Sixth and Seventh.

WE KEEP ON HAND A COMPLETE
Stock of Coffins and Caskets; also,
Shrouds of every description. Orders from city or country receive prompt attention, day or night.
EMBALMING done in the best manner, and at reasonable rates.

BOOTS AND SHOES
made to order. Boots,
$6 to $11. Shoes, $4 to
$9. Ladies' Shoes, best quality French Kid, $5
to $7.

REPAIRING DONE
at lowest prices.

NONE BUT BEST
mechanics employed.
WE GUARANTEE
to make perfect fitting
to the worst of crooked
and crippled feet.

COMPLETE WITH
any shoes on the market.

216 J Street
—AND—
208 K Street,
SACRAMENTO.

A. CASELLI
& COMPANY.

WESTERN HOTEL

209 to 219 K Street.

The Leading Hotel of Sacramento, Cal.

FREE BUS TO AND FROM HOTEL.

Meals, 25 Cents. Rooms, according to Location.
WM. LAND, Proprietor.

American Steam Laundry

NINETEENTH AND I STS.—WHITE LABOR
only. Linen polished in the neatest manner.
We guarantee satisfaction. All ordinary mending, sewing on buttons, etc., free of charge. Washing
called for and delivered to any part of the city.
Main Office at Sawtelle's Book Store, 708 and 710 J
street. Branch offices at all the Hotels.

RAILROAD TIME TABLE.
Southern Pacific Company
PACIFIC SYSTEM.
July 28, 1889.
Trains LEAVE and are due to ARRIVE at
SACRAMENTO.

Lv.	Trains Run Daily.	Arr.
7.00 A	Calistoga and Napa	11.40 A
4.05 P	Calistoga and Napa	8.30 P
11.00 P	Ashland and Portland	3.40 A
5.05 P	Deming, El Paso and East	7.05 P
7.30 P	Knight's Landing	7.55 A
4.30 A	Marysville (Mixed)	4.25 P
9.00 A	Los Angeles	9.55 A
9.00 P	Second Class, Ogden and East	6.30 A
10.30 P	Central Atlantic Express	3.40 P
3.00 P	Ogden and East	9.50 A
3.00 P	Oroville	3.40 A
11.00 P	Oroville	9.50 A
3.00 P	Red Bluff via Marysville	4.05 P
10.40 A	Redding via Willows	10.40 P
4.00 A	San Francisco via Benicia	8.30 P
7.00 A	San Francisco via Benicia	10.10 P
4.05 P	San Francisco via Steamer	26.00 A
*10.00 A	San Francisco via Livermore	2.25 P
11.20 A	San Francisco via Benicia	11.40 A
3.05 P	San Jose	2.25 P
11.20 A	Santa Barbara	9.55 A
9.00 A	Santa Barbara	7.05 P
5.05 P	Santa Rosa	11.40 A
7.00 A	Santa Rosa	8.30 P
4.05 P	Stockton and Galt	7.05 P
9.00 A	Stockton and Galt	9.55 A
5.05 P	Truckee and Reno	6.30 A
9.00 P	Truckee and Reno	3.40 P
10.30 P	Colfax	5.00 P
8.30 A	Vallejo	11.40 A
7.00 A	Vallejo	15.30 P
4.05 P	Folsom and Placerville (Mixed)	*10.35 A
*12.15 P	Folsom and Placerville	*3.45 P
*7.15 A	Folsom	*6.50 A
*5.20 P	Folsom

*Sunday excepted. †Sunday only. ‡Monday ex-
cepted. A for morning. P for afternoon.
A. N. TOWNE, Gen'l Manager.
T. H. GOODMAN, Gen'l Pass. and Ticket Agent.

Edwin K. Alsip & Co.
ESTABLISHED 1860.

REAL ESTATE
AND INSURANCE AGENTS.

FARMING LANDS A SPECIALTY.

Catalogues issued monthly.

No. 1015 Fourth Street, Sacramento.

Gregory Bros. Co
Established 1852.

COMMISSION MERCHANTS,

Packers and Shippers of California Fruit and Produce,

126 and 128 J STREET,

San Francisco Office, 313 Davis St. SACRAMENTO.

ANGLO-NEVADA ASSURANCE CORPORATION
OF SAN FRANCISCO.

FIRE.—Cash Capital, $2,000,000—MARINE.
Sacramento Branch:

No. 1018 SECOND STREET.
JOSEPH STEFFENS, Manager. HOWARD KIMBROUGH,
Local Agent.

Hotfilter & Grafmiller,
MANUFACTURING JEWELERS,

Jewelry made to order. Watches, Clocks and Jewelry
Repaired and Warranted.

No. 1026 Sixth Street, Sacramento.

B. Ruhl Bookbinder, Paper Ruler and
Blank Book Manufacturer.

Periodicals, Magazines, Music, and all kinds of Binding neatly done at the lowest prices.

No. 409 J STREET, SACRAMENTO.

R. DAVIS,
NOTARY PUBLIC,
Real Estate and Insurance Agent.

Representing the following companies:
Manchester of England; Caledonian of Edinburgh,
Scotland; London and Lancaster, England.
1002 J Street, Sacramento.

Restaurant de France,
FAURE & BECKER, PROPRIETORS.
(Successors to L. Payen.)

No. 427 K Street, Near Metropolitan Theater.
Family Entrance on Fifth Street.
Catering to Families, Banquets and Wedding Parties
a specialty. Telephone 228.

NOTICE TO FRUITMEN!

Keep your trees free from scale and your apples
from being wormy by the use of

Warner's Scale & Insect Exterminator
FOR SALE BY

G. T. NOE, - - DRUGGIST,
AUBURN, CAL.

Put up in one-half gallon and quart cans.

THEMIS

Vol. I.

SACRAMENTO: SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 21, 1889.

No. 31.

THEMIS: published weekly, by A. J. Johnston & Co. Publication Office, 410 J Street. Subscription—One year, by mail, $3 00; six months, by mail, $1 50, in advance; per month, by carrier, 25 cents. (Entered at the Post Office at Sacramento as second-class matter.)

It is but due that an apology should be made to Senator Stanford on behalf of the people of this city who are not representative. That arrangements for an informal reception to him by a few gentlemen, who appointed themselves, were made in the very worst of taste, is universally conceded. A gentleman whose life record has been so conspicuous and meritorious as that of Mr. Stanford's, deserves and receives a dignified and appropriate appreciation from the people of this State and particularly from the citizens of Sacramento. That the people of the State have recognized his abilities and merits has been testified. He has occupied positions of distinction and was elected, by a vote that was very pronounced, the first Republican Governor of the State. His administration as our war Governor was creditable. Subsequently he was accorded the highest honor—and deservedly—that a State can accord to one of its citizens. His political course is without a blemish. He furnished the brains in the projection and accomplishment of one of the greatest enterprises in the history of the world, an enterprise which resulted in a large measure in preserving the unity of our States, and which has developed the Western possessions of the Union. These matters entitle him justly to respectful consideration.

It is, however, unfortunate that his political and business successes have given rise to the envy of the little and the conspicuous subserviency of the lesser. During this week this gentleman arrived in Sacramento, at a late hour, and evidently with no intention that he should be made the object of public display. The news of his arrival reached the press, and it would seem from the reports the next morning that the representative citizens of Sacramento gathered in the middle of the night to formulate a plan to make themselves ridiculous. Before sunlight a lengthy editorial had been prepared, the military called out, and arrangements made, doubtless, without consultation with the Senator, for a public reception at his private house, at which everybody and anybody were invited. Sandwiched between the two advertisements was the announcement that "Big Bertha, the Confidence Queen," would hold receptions on K street.

The fact that an invitation was extended to the general public to take possession of the private residence of a gentleman without consultation with him, was in the very worst of taste, and had the effect of deterring very many from attending, whom the distinguished visitor would doubtless been pleased to have met. It will be a matter of no surprise to us if Senator Stanford will hereafter be more cautious in placing himself in the way to witness displays of this kind, which must be offensive to a gentleman of his known character. Even the slight detail of using his presence to advertise a variety store was not omitted. It is a matter that the citizens of Sacramento who are not representative sincerely regret, and is but another illustration of the absurdity that never fails of successful accomplishment by our local society of admiration.

Of course, this is understood by the general public here, and our people naturally brace themselves back to withstand the fury of the gale, that comes with equal violence, be the subject that of the erection of a monument to a deceased President, the placing of an exhibit of the products of this great State at the Capital of Hindoostan, or the reception of a distinguished visitor. Abroad, however, this matter may not be understood. It is unfortunate that the Admiration Society should have made this exhibition of itself at this time, as it is liable to unfairly detract from the merits of one particular class of stock exhibited at the Park.

The people are doubtless gratified that the Neagle case has at last reached a formal judicial determination. We presume that now the newspapers will have to find some other subject about which to write. From the time that has been occupied in the consideration of this case in the Federal Court in San Francisco, one would have believed it was a matter that had not heretofore been determined. It may not be generally known, but the whole question was satisfactorily disposed of some time ago. A great daily said the morning after the rendition of the Judge's opinion:

On the morning after the killing of D. S. Terry by Deputy United States Marshal Neagle, the Record-Union said that the bare recital of the facts sapped the whole case.

[Then followed the able opinion of the learned editor.]

And a few days later the Record-Union having still more carefully weighed the facts and considered the law, said:

[Then followed the concurring opinion of the learned editor, he having taken time to revolve the matter over in his mind.]

Judge Sawyer will doubtless be gratified to know that other great minds that are calm had arrived at the same conclusion he did. The learned editor compliments the Judge in this kindly language:

The United States Circuit Court, having heard all the testimony in an examination held under a proceeding to inquire into the restraint of Neagle's liberty, has held substantially as this journal claimed in the outset the law to be. The citation is not made boastfully, but solely to illustrate the truth that calm reasoning and in accordance with the fundamental principles underlying all human rights, must lead the impartial mind to the same conclusion that the law reaches, which is the fount and essence of pure reason.

The Chronicle devotes a column editorial to the pernicious influence of the great American game of "poker." It is urged that this is more demoralizing than any of the interdicted games, yet there is no law against the game of "poker." It cannot be possible that the editor has become embittered because he could not make an "ace full," beat "four jacks." Such an expression is likely to make one feel like saying cuss words, such as the famous oath of Judge McFarland, "damn the world by quarter sections." No, Mr. Editor, don't abrogate the great American pastime. It might happen that you will hold the "top hand" at the next sitting and rake in the "jack pot." During the last session of the Legislature the Chronicle had a well digested and logical editorial favoring the licensing of gaming, and in a forcible and convincing manner, urged the attention of the law-makers to the consideration of the subject as something of an evil that could not be suppressed, therefore should be regulated under the law.

In these times we are not at all kindly to book agents. There is no more unwelcome visitor, and he is usually met with sharp rebuffs from nearly every person. This is perhaps why the poor book agent has become hardened and employs every possible means of securing our attention to his visit. It is not, however, generally known that some of the brightest lights and greatest men the world ever knew were at some period of their lives "book agents." Napoleon the Great, when only a lieutenant, procured subscriptions for a history of the Revolution. George Washington, while a youth, was a book agent. The work he canvassed for was Bydell's "The London of Stoke on Trent Square and American Savage; How he may be Tamed by the Weapons of Civilization." U. S. Grant, after his resignation from the army, before the rebellion, was a canvassing agent for Washington Irving's "Columbus." Rutherford B. Hayes footed it all over southern Ohio, in his early youth, securing subscriptions for "Baxter's Lives of the Saints." James G. Blaine had an early experience in soliciting in Washington county, Penn., for a "Life of Henry Clay." Daniel Webster earned part of his college tuition by acting as agent for "De Tocqueville's America." The poet Longfellow was an active book canvasser. The Iron Count, Bismarck, when at Heidelberg, was cut short in his allowance by his father, so he canvassed for one of Blumenbach's works in order to secure spending money. Jay Gould was also one time in his life a book agent. Mark Twain and Bret Harte were very unsuccessful book canvassers. There are thousands of men who have become eminent in after life who in their earlier career peddled books or papers for a living.

The City Trustees did a wise act when the order was made declaring a new charter necessary, and calling for an early election of fifteen freeholders to formulate an organic law abreast with the times. The next important step will be the selection of fifteen of our most representative and best informed citizens as freeholders to act upon this important legislative trust. It will not do to place men on this board who have hobbies—cranks on any particular subject, no matter what that may be, because such men are liable to secure the insertion of some wild measure or scheme that might endanger the good work of the more considerate. The men selected should strictly be non-partisans, in a political party sense. There are hundreds of the right kind of men in both parties who, if they can be induced to serve on this commission, would not fail to give us a model charter. It must be understood that the gentlemen who assume this trust do so without any compulsion, there being no provision of the law to remunerate the freeholders elected. The officers, secretaries, reporters, etc., will undoubtedly be allowed a reasonable compensation, but the members of the commission will have to render their services from patriotic principles. Prior to the time for an election, the Central Committee of each political party should act together, and select fifteen of our best citizens, irrespective of party predilections, and present their names for the action of the people. The unanimous choice of gentlemen for this position would be a compliment that none of them could decline. But by all means leave the cranks off this commission.

By an almost unanimous vote E. A. Bigler was nominated for State Treasurer—a result which has been generally anticipated for some time. He is a member of a well-known and reputable Pennsylvania family, his father, William Bigler, having served one term as Governor and one term as Senator in Congress. His uncle, John Bigler, was elected Governor of California at the same time his father was chosen to a similar position in this State. He is a gentleman of good ability, and recently filled the office of Internal Revenue in a western district. He was really not a candidate for the Treasurership, but since the nomination comes to him in so flattering a manner he has accepted it, although morally certain that defeat is inevitable.—Philadelphia Dispatch.

William Bigler was Governor of Pennsylvania from 1852 to 1855. John Bigler was a journalist and a lawyer. He arrived in Sacramento in 1849 and employed himself as an auctioneer and woodchopper. He represented this county in the Assembly in the first and second sessions and was Speaker of the House from February until April, 1850. He was elected Governor September 3, 1851; re-elected September 7, 1853; defeated for that office Sept. 5, 1855; served as U. S. Minister to Chili from 1857 to 1861; defeated for Congress in 1863; was a delegate to the National Democratic conventions of 1864 and 1868; appointed Assessor of Internal Revenue for this district in 1866; and edited the Daily State Capital Reporter from January, 1868, until his death, which occurred here November 29, 1871. His remains repose in the City Cemetery, and the plat is marked by an elaborate monument that was erected by the State. Governor Bigler was a gentleman much respected.

The Wyoming Constitutional Convention has decided that ability to read the constitution must be an electoral qualification. This indicates progress, and may be regarded as an entering wedge in the breaking up of the foolish theory that the freedom of American institutions is broad enough to admit to citizenship most anything in the shape of male humanity, regardless of intelligence. A similar provision, and one even stronger, could with wisdom be inserted in the constitutions of all the States. Perhaps it is that the naturalization laws are already broad enough. It is gratifying that they are so held by some of our more advanced judges, and it is gratifying that rejections of applicants for naturalization are of late becoming somewhat common. Speaking generally, much good would come from more rigid examinations, both into the character and educational qualifications of those who seek to become American citizens.

"IDEALS."

It has often occurred to mind that we are as much made up of ideals as of realities. Our myths, legends and ideals form the food which nourishes the imagination, and upon which is founded the choicest literature of the day. 'Tis the soul and life of poetry. In the fabulous realms, brilliant golden thoughts are called and garnered into beautiful truths to brighten the darker record of man. The myths and legends of the past have lingered with us, and cling to us through all time, and have endured when the tablets of marble upon which they were written have crumbled into dust; when nations and races have sunk like bubbles on the water. Without them we would be like the lonely walls of a ruined temple, bereft of its altars and shorn of its ivy clings—overgrown with weeds—harboring only the viper and the owl.

These creations of fancy have been handed down to us through succeeding generations for ages, and have become in fact the treasure house of literature—the hand-maid of poetry and art. Every educated or reading person is expected to know the story of the "Golden Fleece," and the Argonautic expedition in search thereof. So also of the more recent inventions in romance and fable, such as the "Quest of the Sangrad."

The magnificent creations of Homer in his description of the abduction of Helen—The Siege of Troy—the part taken by the Gods and Goddesses in this war, the wondrous exploits of Achilles, Ulysses, Agamemnon, Hector, and others, abounds in the liveliest interest to the reader of to-day, and has lived while the original scene of action has been obliterated, and no trace can now be discovered of the site of Ancient Troy.

How our minds are entertained and instructed at Maro's account of the trials and hardships of Æneas, who, after bearing upon his back his father, Anchises, from flaming Troy, obeyed the oracle, gathered his fellow-people together, and sought other climes whereat to perpetuate the Trojan race. What grandeur is associated with his descent into the regions of Pluto, in search of his father—the only living mortal that ever crossed the dark river, or admitted into the realms of the dead. His description of the wandering spirits that hover near the shore, seeking passage, but who are denied by old Charon, on account of never having received the rights of burial, in consequence of which are destined to wander there one hundred years before they can cross.

How Charon's boat creaked and groaned under the heavy weight of a mortal, having been accustomed only to disembodied spirits. The huge and hissing monsters that beset his way—the three-headed dog, Cerberus; the many classes of inhabitants he passed, such as those who died of their own hands, whose abode was dark and cheerless; those who died of unrequited love, theirs was a home of sadness. Here Æneas found the once beautiful Dido, who died of love for him—the fields where roamed those heroes who fell in battle. Then came the regions of the condemned, around which the fiery waters of Phlegethon rolls. Here Tesiphene keeps guard near the gates of Adamant, which neither gods nor man can break. From within is heard constant scourging and groans.

Rhadamanthas is ruler here, and brings to light crimes done in life which the perpetrator vainly thought securely hidden. Far below these walls is Tartarus, at the bottom of which the Titan race, who warred against the gods, lie prostrate. Among them is the vain imitator of Jove—Salmoneus, who built a bridge of brass, and drove his chariot over launching flaming torches to imitate the thunderbolts of Jupiter, who was taught the difference, by a real thunderbolt thrown by Jove himself. Here he found Tytus, Ixion and Tantalus. Then he was ushered into the abode of the happy and blessed, called the Elysian fields. Here dwelt those who fell in their country's cause, among whom he found many of his old companions in arms, who had fallen in defense of Troy. Here also are the poets who uttered great thoughts, and others who have accomplished some useful art or service to man. Through these fields the Lethean waters flow, from which they drink oblivion of all the past, and whose waters wash away all impurities. After a certain period the purified souls are sent back to life endowed with new bodies. There are, however, some who are so thoroughly corrupted that the Lethean waters will not cleanse them. These are not again trusted with human forms, but are sent back to life transformed into the lesser order of animals, cats, dogs, tigers, etc. This is the foundation of the doctrine of Metempsychosis.

From our readings and study of the character of the ancients, we find them of very lively imaginations, peopling all nature with invisible beings, and believing that all objects from the sun, to the smallest thing under the care of some divinity.

After Homer, Virgil and Ovid, we have, to considerable extent, their prototypes, in Ariosto and Dante. Still later on in Milton, who has given us some most beautiful myths, which, like those of old, will live when nations have crumbled into dust.

Take it as you will, those myths and fancies have become the pictures of manners and the means of directing thought itself. Our child-hood fables have become our manhood's instructor.

They constitute the Banyan tree of literature whose spreading branches extend over the world, whose boughs are as fresh and vigorous to-day as when first given.

A Life's Regret.

Turning the leaves in an idle way,
Of a book I was skimming the other day,
I found a line at the end of a song,
Which keeps on haunting me all day long
With its sweet and mournful melody—
"O love, my love, had you loved but me!"
Sadder a burden could never be
Than "love, my love, had you loved but me!"

Few words and simple; but, oh, how much
The singer has told in that little touch!
How hard a story of chances lost,
Of bright hopes blighted and true love crossed,
Is heard in the whispered melody,
"O love, my love, had you loved but me!"
To many a sorrow the key may be
That "love, my love, had you loved but me!"

The world rolls on and the years roll by,
Day-dreams vanish and memories die;
But it surges up with a restless pain,
That fond lost longing over again
Breathed in the passionate melody,
"O love, my love, had you loved but me!"
It might have been, but it cannot be;
Yet "love, my love, had you loved but me!"

HELD FOR RANSOM.

It was evening among the "olive-sandaed Apennines." The brilliant flowers were in the height of bloom, and softened the wild, rugged grandeur of the rocks and valleys. An Englishman and his valet had climbed the steep Via Crucis, and, seated upon a projecting rock, were entranced by the bewildering blue of the Mediterranean—such a blue as we see only in dreams. The breeze from the hills was ruffling the blue into purple, and further off, where the sea was silvery green, the distant mountains of Corsica rose gently from its breast. "Genoa the Superb," with its blazing white houses, looked like a living creature far away in the valley.

The fairy scene fairly overcame George Cathcart, and he involuntarily exclaimed:

Italy! Italy! Oh, thou to whom destiny
Gave the fatal gift of beauty.

"John," continued Cathcart, turning to his valet, "an hour hence it will be dark, and we have not reached the hospice of San Columbo, where we thought of spending the night."

"We are on the right path, sir," said the valet, "of that I am sure, but three good miles have yet to be done before we get shelter."

"Then we had better go on," said Cathcart, rising. "The shadows are beginning to darken the valleys with their gloom. Come."

"That is not our way," said the valet. "It is an unfrequented path. You see, sir, there are no foot-steps on it."

Cathcart examined the two paths, and after some thought, said: "You are right, I think."

The road selected led into a narrow gorge, overhung by frowning precipices. Twilight soon faded away and darkness gradually encompassed the travelers.

"Did you hear that?" asked Cathcart, as he turned round and peered into the darkness behind.

"Robbers, perhaps," said the frightened valet.

"There are no brigands here," said Cathcart. "So the innkeeper told me."

"Let us make off, sir," cried the valet.

"No," said Cathcart, firmly. "We must stand our ground. Here they come."

As he spoke two men of dark visage, and with eyes full of and fire determination, came up. They wore loose cloaks, reaching below the knees, and suspiciously slouched hats.

"We have lost our way," said Cathcart to the strangers. "Can you point out the path to San Columbo?"

"We can," answered both the voices. "This is the road."

All journeyed on together. Enrico, as one of the strangers called himself, beguiled the way with song, which he never left off until he reached a mountain cavern.

"We are at San Columbo," he said. "Giotto, handcuff these men!"

Around a bright wood fire were scattered a motley group in strange costumes. Four sinister ruffians were lounging on the grass. Two or three more were attending to the horses.

"We have really fallen into the hands of robbers, John," whispered Cathcart.

In an instant the prisoners were surrounded by the whole group.

"Art thou an Englishman?" asked Enrico.

"I am," said Cathcart.

"Then thou art rich, like all thy countrymen, and thou canst afford to pay a good price for thy ransom," replied Enrico, with a dramatic air. "Brothers," he added, "what's to be the ransom?"

"Five thousand crowns!" chorused the whole gang.

"Search him," said Enrico. "His watch and jewelry will not count to the ransom."

All Cathcart's valuables were taken from him; but he was allowed to keep a small portrait, which he earnestly begged he might be allowed to retain.

Three days were given to Cathcart wherein to pay his ransom, and he and his valet were left alone by the fire, while the brigands went to regale themselves upon the choicest Italian wines.

As the prisoners talked nervously over the situation, a pretty young girl appeared upon the scene, bearing them some food. There was an air of tenderness and compassion upon her face as she gazed on the captives, which inspired them with hope.

"How comes one so beautiful as you among these mountain wilds?" asked Cathcart.

"My father is the captain of our band," she answered, and I wait upon his fortune, though I little like our life."

"It seems ill-suited to you," said Cathcart.

"When I grow very weary of it," said Teresa, with a careless air, "I go to Rome and Naples; but fate always brings me back again to my mountains."

* * * * *

Three days passed alternately in hope and despair, Teresa becoming every hour more friendly with Cathcart. The ransom was not forthcoming, and threats of violence had been muttered more than once in menacing tones.

On the fifth night of his imprisonment he sat moodily at the fire, while his faithful servant slept soundly upon a truss of hay. His memory reverted to his dear wife, the pride of his heart, and he opened the locket containing her portrait.

While gazing at it, Teresa entered with a noiseless step, and touching Cathcart upon the shoulder, she said, her voice tremulous with sudden surprise, "Who is that beautiful lady? The face is not strange to me."

"That," he said, "is the portrait of my wife."

"Your wife!" she said, in a tone of astonishment.

"She was my best friend when I was ill in Rome. She tended me in the hospital, she supported me during the weary months of convalescence. She was more than a mother to me. You must not suffer for her sake alone. I shall not deliver you; but Conrado will not receive the gold he expects. I came to tell you that the government troops have been scouring the hills. Tomorrow, should they approach you might be made away with. You must fly to-night."

"Fly!" said Cathcart. "We are watched and guarded. How could we escape from here?"

"Fortune favors your escape to-night," she said. "This is my birthday, and before an hour passes there will be high carnival here. You will be asked to drink, do not refuse, but the wine of all the others shall be drugged. When they sleep as that youth there sleeps," she added, pointing to the handsome valet, "we shall set off. Will you put yourself in my hands?"

"Certainly," said Cathcart. "You are as noble as you are beautiful, and rest assured you shall lose nothing by your generous treatment of us."

"Be ready," said Teresa. "When I beckon follow me." And she hastily left the prisoners.

Amid the wild revel of the birth-night celebration, Cathcart's heart trembled within him. Release was promised, yet it was now long past midnight, and song and dance still held sway in the robber's cave. What was Teresa doing? Did she repent of her promise?

While these thoughts occupied Cathcart, Teresa reproached Conrado with not having toasted her health that evening. Indescribable enthusiasm followed as Conrado filled out a flagon of water. Tall goblets were demanded all around.

"To Teresa, our beauty!" they said, as they drank the insidious draught.

The deed was done. One by one the noisy brigands dropped to sleep, and Teresa muffled in cloak and shawl, beckoned to the prisoners to follow her. They journeyed on through the small hours of the morning over many rugged, treeless steppes and through many windings of the mountain, until they reached the spot at which they had been captured, and saw again in the morning sunlight Genoa with her crescent port, her domes and towers and palaces. There they rested and enjoyed some delicacies which Teresa had the forethought to provide.

The beautiful face of Teresa, her jubilant spirit and wild gayety, and the vein of generosity which appeared in her actions, captivated the heart of the valet. When they reached Genoa Mrs. Cathcart begged Teresa never again to return to her mountain life. And so it came to pass that the brigand's daughter became the faithful follower of Mrs. Cathcart, half dependent and half companion. Years did not stifle the affection of Mrs. Cathcart for her interesting charge, and the devotion of Teresa was of a piece with her generous conduct on the most memorable of her birthnights.

A Short Sermon.

Conversations between a man of genius and a nonentity is like the casual meeting of two travelers going the same way, the one mounted on a spirited steed, the other on foot. Both will soon get heartily tired of each other and be glad to part company.

Brainless pates are the rule, fairly furnished ones the exception, the brilliantly endowed very rare, genius a portentum. How otherwise can we account for the fact that out of upward of 800,000,000 of existing human beings, and after the chronicled experience of 6,000 years, so much should still remain to discover, to think out and be said.

What most directly and above everything else makes us happy is the cheerfulness of mind, for this excellent gift is its own reward. A man may be young, well-favored, rich, honored, fortunate, but if we would ascertain whether or no he would be happy we must first put the question: "Is he cheerful?" Cheerfulness is the current coin of happiness, and not like other possessions, merely its letter of credit.

Poverty is the scourge of the people, ennui of the better ranks. The boredom of Sabbatarianism is to the middle classes what week day penury is to the needy.

Could we prevent all villains from becoming fathers of families, shut up the dunnerheads in monasteries and provide every girl of spirit and intellect with a husband worthy of her, we might look for an age surpassing that of Pericles.

Thinkers, and especially men of true genius, without an exception, find noise unsupportable. This is no question of habit. I have ever been of the opinion that the amount of noise a man can support with equanimity is in inverse proportion to his mental powers, and may be taken as a measure of intellect generally. If I hear a dog barking for hours on the threshold of a house I know well enough what kind of brains I may expect from its inhabitants.

Mere clever men always appear exactly at the right time.

Genius produces no work of practical value. Music is composed, poetry conceived, pictures painted, but a work of genius is never a thing to use. Useless is its title of honor.

Mere acquired knowledge belongs to us only like a wooden leg or a wax nose. Knowledge attained by thinking resembles our natural limbs, and is the only kind that really belongs to us.

No sooner does evening come and lights are lit, than the understanding, like the eye, sees less clearly. For this reason, morning is the proper time for thought, as, without any exception, it is propitious to mental or bodily exercise. Morning is the youth of the day. All is then cheerful, fresh and easy; we feel strong and have our faculties at command. We are wrong to fritter away the morning in late rising, idle pursuits or chit-chat; rather we should regard it as the quintessence of life and hold it sacred. Night is the old age of the day, toward evening we are exhausted, disposed to idle conversation or amusement. Each day is a little life, each awakening and uprising a lesser birth, each morning a lesser youth, and every night's lying down to sleep a miniature death.

Only the few favored by fortune can scale the rock of fame; but there is plenty of other work to be done by the multitude, as good and true in its own way if not so enduring.

You cannot prevent the birds of sadness from flying over your head, but you may prevent them from stopping to build their nest there.

Avarice Punished.

A well-dressed man, of about 40, was trying to make his dog bathe in the Seine; but the animal appeared to have little taste for aquatic exercises. When, after much hesitation, it refused to enter the water, he seized it by the neck and threw it into the river.

The dog quickly swam to the shore, but as the bank was at that place bounded by a steep wall, all its efforts to get over it were in vain, and his master, in reaching over to help him, lost his balance and fell into the water. Two watermen hastened up, held out a pole to him, and succeeded in drawing out both master and dog safe and sound. No sooner on land, instead of manifesting his joy at being rescued from death, he showed marks of great despair.

On being asked the reason, he replied that when he was leaning over the wall to help his dog up his purse had fallen out of his coat pocket, and disappeared under the water. A boy offered to go in and find it. "Go!" said the gentleman; "you shall be well rewarded."

The boy took a header, dived several times, and at last, after having roused the anxiety of the bystanders by his long disappearance, he showed himself, dripping with water, holding in triumph the lost article, which he brought to its owner; but, before giving it to him, he stopped and held out the other hand.

The gentleman had confided to those present that his purse contained 850 francs. A murmur of indignation, therefore, arose when they saw him take one franc from his pocket and offer it to the lad. He might, perhaps, have accepted it, had not a bystander called out:

"He offers you twenty sous; I will give you forty if you will throw it back into the water!"

The owner of the purse darted forward, but before he could seize it the boy had thrown the purse back into the Seine.

"How much will you give now to have it picked up again?" the gentleman who owned it was asked.

"Five francs!"

"That is not enough. Give fifty!"

After some disputing the bargain was concluded. The boy dived again and brought back the purse, amid the shouts of laughter and cheers of all present. The miser, much vexed, had then to perform his part of the bargain, but not without many grimaces and much grumbling.—From the French.

The Stage.

[Under this caption will appear a fair and impartial criticism of the drama, actors, music, and all noteworthy matters pertaining to the stage.]

Frederick Warde is making a grand success in the East. He is the coming king of the stage.

The second week of Grismer-Davies company has proved a financial success to the worthy and deserving couple.

The fashion of women wearing the single eyeglass has been started in London. It is chiefly affected by theatrical people.

Mrs. Kendal tells us in her new book of "Recollections" that, having married an actor, she vowed that she would never play love scenes with any one but her husband.

A high sounding title was given a "picked up" company which showed to empty seats at the Clunie this week. It is true that the managers of such affairs cannot impose on the public.

Two violins formerly belonging to Alard have recently been sold, a Stradivarius for £2,000 and a Stainer for £260. A third violin by Quarnerius, the one Alard generally played on, was left by will to the Paris Conservatoire.

The New York Tribune heads a news item, "Mrs. James Brown-Potter Unable to Act." This is not news. What the Tribune intended to say was that Mrs. Potter will not appear on the American stage this season.

Paul Bourget, who is one of the most refined and artistic of modern French story writers, is engaged upon a play, in collaboration with the veteran dramatist, Meilhac. Their joint production will be given its baptism of fire the coming winter in Paris.

One of the big novelties of the present season will be "The Spider and the Fly," which M. B. Leavitt is sending on the road. It will be his only traveling company this season. "The Spider and the Fly" is a spectacular comedy-burlesque-pantomime, and will be presented by fifty people.

Both Ellen Terry and her young son, who has now definitely adopted the stage as a profession, will appear in the revival of The Dead Heart at the Lyceum in London. Mr. Irving's visit to Paris recently was for the purpose of making studies for the mounting of this play. Miss Terry has been spending a portion of the summer with her daughter in Germany, at a little place near Bayreuth.

Margaret Mather with a fine company will render to the Sacramento public her splendid impersonations of Juliet in Romeo and Juliet; Juliana, in the Honeymoon; Pauline, in the Lady of Lyons, and Leah. On Miss Mather's last visit to this city she captured our theater-going public and won that praise only accorded to artists of the highest order. Her engagement commences on Tuesday, September 24th, and concludes on Thursday, with a Wednesday matinee.

To-day, the 21st day of September, is the anniversary of the death of Vincenzo Bellini—on September 21st, 1835, he died. Bellini was one of the most celebrated operatic composers of the modern Italian school. His first opera, Adelson e Salvini, was performed at Naples, 1824; his next dramatic work, Bianca e Fernando, was the one that brought him into note. His third work, Il Pirata, was produced at Milan. Bellini was the author of those familiar and ever popular operas, La Sonnambula, Norma, I Puritani.

Book Chat.

Dr. Edward Everett Hale says the flaw in Edward Bellamy's "Looking Backward" is the assumption that method is to correct all social evils. It makes no provision for sin, hence will fail. Under the Utopian idea, there is no such contingency as sin. It is that condition of the world where all shall be peace and harmony. The Rev. Mr. Hale lost sight of the idea of the author.

On September 21st, 1832, Sir Walter Scott died. Just 57 years ago to-day. He was one of the greatest novelists and poets of his age. His works find place in every library, as well as in the heart of the reading world. There is not a grammar school pupil in the world who is not familiar with his historical novels, as well as his poems. The works of Scott can be classed with the modern classics. Scott was tendered the appointment of court poet of England, but declined, presumably on account of the disfavor attached to the office by Henry James Pye and Thomas Warton who were the predecessors.

It has for ages been the custom to commemorate great achievements in poetry, and thus the employment of the bard became necessary to render into verse the deeds of valor, or the great works sought to be honored. This gave rise to the poet laureate, which, since the time of Elizabeth, has been observed. Her court poet was Edmund Spenser, the author of the "Faery Queen." The first book made Elizabeth as "Clariana," which compliment gained the virgin queen's favor. Samuel Daniel was the voluntary poet laureate after Spenser's death, though not regularly appointed. Ben Jonson followed, who was said would rather lose a friend than a jest. Jonson died in 1637, and Sir William Davenant a politician poet, filled the place. John Dryden's dramatic writings secured him the appointment after Davenant. Dryden was removed on account of the revolution of 1688 and Thomas Shadwell, a comedy writer, substituted. He died in 1692 and the once famous Nahum Tate selected. Pope was very jealous of Tate and satirized him as follows:

"The bard whom pilfered pastorals renown;
Who turns a Persian tale for half a crown;
Just writes to make his barrenness appear
And strains, from hard-bound brains, eight lines a year.
He who, still wanting, though he lived on theft, Steals much, spends little, yet has nothing left."

Nicholas Rowe followed in 1715, but only lived three years. Lawrence Ennsden was the next, and was followed by Colley Cibber. Cibber was a dramatic author and was often the subject of Peg Woffington's keen wit and satire. He held the place until his death in 1757. The next who received the favor, was one William Whitehead, who had not the least qualification; in fact, no ability whatever, being selected because he had some powerful friends at court. He lasted until 1785 when he died. Dr. Thomas Warton wore the laurels for five years. Henry James Pye was the next who served until 1813. He was a very poor excuse of a laureate and was fearfully satirized by the poets and writers of his time. Bob Southey, who was one of the greatest of English poets, was then appointed to don the laurel. Southey continued until 1844, when William Wordsworth was named. He held the office until his death in 1850. Alfred Tennyson, the present court poet, followed Wordsworth. It is probable that the custom will end with the demise of Tennyson.

Professional Chat.

Lawyer Forest, the leader of the counsel for the defense in the Cronin trial, is, doubtless, the most strategic criminal lawyer in Chicago. At one time he was retained to defend a prisoner charged with highway robbery. The case was in a police justice court. The defense was an alibi, and nine witnesses, one by one, stepped up and swore that the accused, at the time the alleged robbery took place, was basking amid the refined delights of a dog fight three miles away from the scene of the robbery. The prisoner was discharged, but one by one as these witnesses stepped down from the stand they were "pinched" by a stern-faced minion of Chicago law and booked for the crime of participating in a dog fight. This result had quite evidently been foreseen by Mr. Forest, and he appeared even hilarious at the turn of affairs. He demanded a change of venue and an immediate trial. The nine were arraigned, pleaded not guilty, and in all the wide wastes of Chicago not a witness was to be found against them. Thus Lawyer Forest secured two cases and two fees. It is all fish which falls into a lawyer's net, anyway.

There never was a Judge any more endeared to the profession and the people than the late Judge R. C. Clark. Many anecdotes could be recounted of his administration of justice in his twenty years' term. We remember an incident that happened many years ago. A Chinaman was arraigned for burglary, and the Judge appointed Ed M. Martin, then a young attorney who had just been admitted to practice, to defend the heathen. Mr. Martin accepted the difficult trust, as he was bound to do so, because Judge Clark would admit of no excuse. Martin at once set to work in preparation for trial, it being his maiden effort, and he felt a just pride in acquitting his client, as well as himself with honor and credit. He called on several of the officers to ascertain the facts and the past history of the defendant. A couple of the officers, one who is now a prominent member of the Police Department, assured Martin that the defendant had a good character, and that it would only be necessary to put them on the stand to show that fact. The day of trial came; the prosecution closed with a pretty strong case, but Ed Martin, relying on the good character to be established by the officers, was confident of success. He called officer H—, who was duly sworn, and when asked if he knew the defendant's character, said "yes." "Well, sir, what is it?" asked Martin. "Very bad," said the witness, "he is a very hard case and has been—" "Stop," said the Judge, his eyes flashing, "how came you to put such a witness on the stand for the defense, Mr. Martin?" Martin was almost paralyzed at the answer, but arose and told the Judge what the officers had promised him, and how they had told him that they would give the defendant a good character. Judge Clark then said: "Gentlemen, this case is closed. The conduct of the officers is infamous in imposing upon this young attorney and trifling with the rights of the unfortunate and ignorant defendant." "Now," said the Judge, "gentlemen of jury, you are instructed to render a verdict of acquittal. As a matter of law, you are not bound to follow this instruction of the court, but if you do not I will set aside any other verdict and discharge the defendant." The jury followed the instruction, and Ed Martin has ever since been decidedly skeptical of police officers' testimony or promises.

NOTES.

Mississippi ideas of restoring order among the colored people seem to be on a parallel with the accepted rule for making good Indians. That is, kill your Indians.

Secretary Boruck gave us "The Life of the Plow," followed by such a harrowing and raking over the grounds that he planted ideas which ripened into a fruitful crop—of thoughts.

There is an accepted law among the Turks that no one of the Faithful shall be punished for any act against a Christian. It is about as uncomfortable in that country for a Christian as it is in Louisiana and Mississippi for a Republican negro.

A reverend gentleman in one of the Eastern cities gave utterance to the following: "If I knew a burglar was in my house at night I would go to him with a light, unarmed, and talk to him as I would to a friend whom I desired to help. If he then desired to take my goods, I would make no protest, nor would I cause his arrest. I would follow him to the door and invite him to call again." There is Christian tolerance for you. We doubt very much whether this gospel expounder would practice what he preaches.

Every farmer should keep a can of the following mixture: Kerosene, two quarts; linseed oil, one gill; resin, one ounce. Melt the resin in the linseed oil and add to the kerosene. Coat all steel or iron tools, wherever bright, with this when they are to lie idle, if only for a few days. It will not take half a minute or half a teaspoonful of the mixture to coat a plow when one has finished using it, and it will prevent all rust and save half a day's time in cleaning it when it is again needed, besides saving the team many thousands of pounds extra pulling. Coat the iron work of the mowers and reapers with it when they are put away for the winter. A little rust is only a little thing, but it makes much difference in the aggregate.

We note with appreciation that the movement for the restoration of Sutter's Fort is gaining ground and that the probabilities are that if the owners of the property will act with any sort of fairness the purchase will be made. The matter should have been attended to long ago, and while, as we have said, it is now very late to attempt a restoration of the fort as it originally stood, such a thing can be accomplished from the recollections of persons yet living who were familiar with the structure in the early days, and a reference to early time pictures and descriptions. We have devoted considerable attention to the collection of data regarding the old fort, which we will present to the public when we feel satisfied of its accuracy. The writings concerning this section by those who were here prior to the gold discovery are extremely meagre in their references to the establishment of Captain Sutter. We have heretofore fully digested them in articles which we have published. We have been unable to find a picture, although we have possession of very many that has been agreed upon by those who were familiar with the fort to be correct, and which will correspond with what little physical evidences that now remain. The answers we have received from the persons to whom we have submitted diagrams with printed questions will throw much light upon the subjects that will have to be considered and materially aid in their determination.

Death of Colonel Flournoy.

Colonel George Flournoy died at San Francisco Wednesday afternoon, at the age of 57 years. He was a native of Georgia, and was left an orphan early in life. Before becoming of age he engaged in mercantile pursuits, and then was admitted to the bar in Alabama. Subsequently he went to Texas, and from 1859 to 1861 served as Attorney-General of that State, under the administration of Gov. Sam. Houston. At the opening of the civil war he organized a regiment, served through the whole war, and took part in many important engagements. After the close of the war he engaged in law practice in the City of Mexico. He returned to Texas in 1856, and two years later located in San Francisco. During his residence in California he was engaged in very many prominent cases. Politically, he was a Democrat, and figured in about every State Convention of his party since he has resided among us. He was a gentleman whose abilities and bearing commanded respect.

Fall Millinery on Display.

Our stock in this department is now complete. Felt hats, in all the new shades, 70c. Buckram frames, 15c. Novelties in shaded feather pompons, $2.50. Aigrettes, 25c. a bunch. Stiff wings, 25c. Feather bands, consisting of twelve small tips, $2.65. Shaded Ostich tips, nine inches long, 85c. Lude or Stanley hats, 22c; trimmed, for 99c. Boys' plush and cloth skull caps, 45c. Children's sailors, 25c. At Red House.

LOCAL BREVITIES.

There will be no base ball game to-day or to-morrow. The cranks can have a rest for two days.

The County Board of Education held a regular monthly meeting to-day. No business of importance was transacted.

Everything is being done to properly entertain the National Grange in November next in this city. The railroad has granted reduced rates.

Officer Coffey captured one of the light fingered individuals who has been plying his particular line of business in picking pockets during the fair.

Col. Moulton, of Colusa county, met with a very painful accident this morning at the corner of Sixteenth and K streets, having one of his legs broken. We were unable to get the particulars.

Some fellow who signs himself "J. N. O.," says he is tired of life and intends to commit suicide because he cannot get anything to do and for the reason he has just been discharged from prison.

Railroad Superintendent J. B. Wright, Col. Crocker and Hon. W. C. Van Fleet and party visited Folsom yesterday. The party was escorted to the new dam by Warden Aull and P. A. Humbert.

F. W. Maslin has found a new grape among his sherry vines at Pino which has not yet been identified. It is of good size, of a handsome light red color, has small seeds and is very rich and sweet.

Miss Flora Batson, the greatest colored singer in the world, will appear in concert at the M. E. Church, Sixth street, between K and L, on Tuesday and Wednesday evenings, for the benefit of the A. M. E. Church.

A rounder named John Smith robbed a German granger of the sum of $15. They went on a spree together and Smith sobered up first and relieved his companion of his remaining wealth. Smith languishes in durance vile now.

Mrs. Gus Phillips was found dead in a house on Eighth street, between K and L, on Thursday forenoon. The Coroner telegraphed for her husband, who is traveling with a company playing One of the Bravest. The lady was aged about 25 years.

Several rich pockets have been revealed in the vicinity of Folsom and Clarksville. A miner at Clarksville made one valuable find. There are some very rich seams and pockets in and about the old Rhodes Diggings just waiting for some lucky fellow to stumble upon.

Philip F., only son of Henry C. and Kate F. Megerle, a native of California, aged 14 years and 7 months, died in this city September 20th. The funeral will take place at 10 A. M. to-morrow from the parents' residence, 827 Nineteenth street. Interment Private.

The State Fair.

The Annual State Fair will close to-night. It is a matter of congratulation that it has been successful beyond what could reasonably have been anticipated, considering the very general stagnation that has characterized this year. The county exhibits have been particularly creditable, and the little county of Amador astonished the State by her display, gotten up on so short a notice. A very general impression had prevailed that this county had little in the way of agricultural resources. The display it made of products of agriculture, and fruits and grapes, has very emphatically demonstrated that it can successfully compete with any of the other counties. Ten counties were represented, and from several the displays were elaborate.

The races are conceded to have eclipsed those at any former meeting in the State. They were appreciated, except by those who wagered on the wrong horses. We have in former numbers reviewed the fair. Its ending justifies the correctness of our predictions and assertions.

The Weather.

The highest and lowest Signal Service temperature for the past week was 96° and 50°, while for the same time last year it was 92° and 55°. The temperature at 5 o'clock this morning was as follows for the places named: Olympia, 50°; Portland, 50°; Roseburg, 54°; Red Bluff, 54°; Sacramento, 52°; San Francisco, 54°; Salt Lake, 56°; Cheyenne, 56°; Denver, 54°; North Platte, 56°; Omaha, 54°; Des Moines, 46°; Davenport, 44°; and Chicago, 40°. The weather in this city for the past few days has been of the finest character, and sufficient to please all visitors at the State Fair.

James W. Waters, one of the earliest of the California Pioneers, and a man widely known on the Pacific Coast, died at San Bernardino yesterday morning, after a short illness. He located in the valley on the site of the present city of San Bernardino in 1843, since which time he has been closely identified with the business progress of that city and county. He was 76 years of age.

Justice to Policemen.

It would in no sense be an abandonment of the principle contended for by the City Trustees to adjust the difficulties in the following manner: From August 1st last let the Board of Trustees make an order allowing the salaries of the officers up to the close of the present fiscal year. There is sufficient money in the Police Fund, under the official estimate, to pay the salaries of the whole twenty-five members of the department. This would leave the unpaid amounts for the first four months to be determined by the suits now pending. By paying out the money on hand in this manner no legal principle would be violated, and substantial justice would inure to the officers who are in good faith performing duties for the municipality. The amount realized under the official estimate is subject to the disposition of the Trustees beyond all question. The principal point of contention in this case is the fact that the Police Commissioners imposed burdens in excess of the estimate. Now, if there is sufficient money on hand to pay the salaries of all the officers for the remainder of the fiscal year, let this be done, and the legal contest can and will then only relate to the four months past due. If decided for the city, then these men will only be injured in that amount; and if it is decided against the city, the tax will have to be levied to make up this deficiency. Upon the question of the policy of having twenty-five officers in the department, that can and doubtless will be regulated at the next annual reorganization of the department. It is but fair to all that so far as the Police Fund is able, from this time to the close of the fiscal year, it should be devoted to the payment of these obligations. It must be understood that we do not approve of the methods employed in creating this obligation, and believe that several very important legal principles have been ignored in the passage of the amendatory act, and in incurring obligations in excess of the official estimate, but we believe also that equity should step in at this time to aid the innocent victims of this dilemma.

The History of a Painting.

Since the oil painting "Cromwell Viewing the Remains of King Charles I" came into the possession of A. Davenport, he has learned from intimate friends of the late Captain James Bailey and his family what he told them regarding the picture, where and how obtained, etc. No one at all intimate with Captain Bailey would for a moment think of doubting him or his word. About A. D. 1837, the ship Orient, Bailey, of Gardiner, Me., was lying at a dock in Havre, France, under charter for the United States, when a man came on board who shipped as a common sailor. Soon officers came to Captain Bailey who told him that a painting of great value had been wrenched from the frame at its place of deposit in England; that they had traced the suspected thief across the Channel and on board his ship, and asked permission to search the vessel. A most thorough search was made, Captain Bailey assisting, but without avail. From then until the ship left port she was closely guarded by the authorities, day and night. As the voyage was drawing to a close the new sailor confronted Captain Bailey and asked for a private audience when he confessed to him the fact that the picture was safely hidden on board the ship, and asked for advice and assistance. The captain refused any assistance and advised that the property be returned to the owner. Failing in this, Captain Bailey bought the picture, as he expressed it, for a few dollars, and brought it to his home, with the intention of restoring it, doubtless, and claiming the reward offered. But the ship was not then to return to Europe, but was chartered for a long voyage in a different direction and the picture was left behind. In those days communication with England required as many weeks as it does days now, and to wait with Capt. Bailey was not to be thought of. Time sped on; voyage after was made; family and business cares increased; names and events forgotten, and still the picture hung against the wall in Capt. Bailey's parlor, until death and other causes brought it once more into prominence and the above facts elucidated. Since learning the above facts, Mr. Davenport is confirmed in the belief he had before purchasing the painting, that it was an original painting by one of the old masters and the copies that are in existence were taken from this one.

The folk lore of Southern Russia can be partially imagined from a case which came before a Judge at Odessa. A man applied for a writ to compel his daughter to leave his house, because when she saluted her parents she did now bow to them. He said he would withdraw the application if she would ask pardon and make the regular obeisance. The girl agreed. She asked pardon, but when she bowed the father cried, "Lower! Down with your head; down below the girdle." She replied, "I won't bend as low as that, not if I have to leave the house." The Judge thereupon ordered her to leave, but she gave in finally and bowed her head to the girdle.

Some Popular Errors.

A very common error is to suppose that birds sleep with the head beneath the wing. No bird ever sleeps so; the head is turned round and laid upon the back, where it is often concealed by feathers.

That dogs are kept in health by the addition of brimstone to their drinking water. Seeing that stone brimstone is utterly insoluble in water, I fail to perceive what use it can possibly be to the dog.

That cows are fond of buttercups. Cows, as well as horses, in grazing carefully avoid these plants, which, like all the Ranunculaceae, are harsh, astringent, and somewhat poisonous.

That washing the face in morning dew improves the complexion. Dew is distilled water; but, being merely very pure water, it cannot exercise any special influence on the skin. I am unwilling, however, to dispel this pleasing illusion, and therefore say, "By all means, young ladies, wash your faces in the morning dew, in full belief of its efficacy. To do so you must rise early and breathe the pure morning air; this will benefit your health, and no doubt your complexion at the same time." This is undoubtedly the lesson intended to be inculcated.

That a fire is extinguished by the sun shining on it. The effect in this case is apparent, not real. A fairly good fire looks little better than a heap of white ashes under the powerful light of the sun's rays.

That there is economy in putting fire bricks or clay-balls into a fire. Considering that whatever heat they give out is derived from the fire itself, and that, being themselves utterly incombustible, they contribute nothing to the heat of the fire, there can be no economy in their use. Our method of using fuel is, however, terribly wasteful; a large percentage of combustible matter, as well as heat, goes up the flue, and is wasted.

That pipes are burst by a sudden thaw. The thaw merely finds out the bursting that has already been effected by the frost. It is the expansion of water when passing into the icy state that bursts water-pipes of whatever material.

That the bones are brittle in frosty weather. No doubt more bones are broken in winter than in summer, but this is due to the slippery state of the roads at that season, not to speak of accidents on the ice, and not to any abnormal condition of our bones.

That "thunderbolts" are tangible realities that can be handled and preserved as curiosities. The only thunderbolt is the flash of lightning, often no doubt very destructive, but never accompanied by any solid. The only solid bodies that ever fall to the earth from the sky are aerolites or bolides, bodies coming from outer space and having nothing to do with thunderstorms.

That mirrors attract lightning and should be covered or turned to the wall during a thunderstorm. This is a pure illusion, arising from the fact that mirrors reflect the lightning flash, and thus add to the terror and apparent danger of the storm.

The Clipper Gap Train Robbery.

After the train robber Gorton was convicted of robbing the express car at Clipper Gap and sent to San Quentin it will be remembered that he made a full confession of the robbery. He also described to the officers a place at Penryn where he had buried a lot of jewelry, which was a part of the proceeds of his robbery. This was worth $700 or $800, and with the aid of a diagram furnished by Gorton the officers made a thorough search. At last they found the place described, but the soil had been freshly dug up and the hidden treasure was gone. A few evenings before that a tall young lady alighted from the train at Penryn, and it is now remembered her features bore a strong resemblance to the Gorton Brothers, but it was not noticed at the time. She stated that she was an Eastern school teacher traveling for her health. She stopped at the hotel and that evening took a walk to the field where the officers afterward expected to find the stolen jewelry. The next day she disappeared. It is now thought that she was a sister of the Gorton boys, and secured the plunder before the officers found any trace of it.—Placer Republican.

The Ruling Passion.

The close man is not confined to any latitude; the worshiper of mammon pursues the almighty dollar in every clime. Here are two cases—one from New England, the other from Virginia. A neighbor borrowed a hoe from the close fisted one and returned it at evening with his thanks.

"Guess I sh'll have to charge you 'bout ten cents 't' that hoe 't' day," said the farmer.

A Washington lady was up in Virginia several summers ago. A neighbor dropped into the house where she was boarding and told of the prolific crop of crab apples which he had.

"There are so many," said he, "that I am just going to turn the hogs in to eat them up."

The lady thought it would be a good opportunity to get some cheap for preserving.

"What will you bring me down two bushels for?" she asked. Avarice and a sense of decency wrestled in his mind and avarice won.

"Reckon two dollars a bushel would be about right."—Washington Post.

FLASHES.

It is said that love levels all things—but the head.

Mosquitoes can beat policemen finding open bars at night.

The cool wave during the last few days has made life worth living.

It is not always wise to say what you think, but it is wisdom to think what you say.

Many young ladies should be careful about exposing themselves—they have to pay dear for their complexions—two dollars a bottle.

Mistress (to newly hired girl)—Don't you know that you ought to put the glass of water on the tray when you hand it to anybody?

Girl—Oh, yes, 'm. I've always been used to that, but I didn't think you had.

A good definition of a communist might be given thus: He is one who has a yearning for an equal division of unequal earnings. Idler or burglar he is willing to fork out his penny and pocket your shilling.

Some of the young women appear to have mastered the art of riding a bicycle man-fashion in a way that to the casual observer seems not only pleasing and graceful, but modest. But wait till we see one of them fall off.

The suicide season is opening. Statistics show that three-fourths of the suicides of the whole twelve months occur in September, October and November. And that is, also, despite the dog-day legend, the time to beware of mad dogs.

We always find ourselves refreshed by the presence of cheerful people. There are certain gentlemen of our acquaintance that bring with them in every place a sunny and cheerful atmosphere. There are others whose presence cast a gloom over all by their melancholy. Never allow yourself to say gloomy things, or to look like the last hope had fled.

Our Southern brethren denounce the visits of Northern Congressmen and orators to any of the Southern States to take part in their campaigns. It is a poor rule that does not work both ways. Why don't they keep their Grays, Blackburns, Carlises, Vests, Mills, and other statesmen at home during our northern political campaigns?

The Acocck Case.

This morning various motions, in the case of Thomas L. Acocck against his daughters, Salome Acocck and Mrs. Nellie Halsey, were heard before Judge Van Fleet. The suit concerned some grain raised on the Cosumnes river, on lands that had been the property of Mrs. Acocck, now deceased. Mr. Acocck was represented by Johnson, Johnson & Johnson, and the young ladies by Gen. A. L. Hart. The plaintiff had the suit dismissed in the Clerk's office before trial, but got possession of the grain in litigation and removed it. The first motion heard was as to the regularity of the dismissal in the Clerk's office. In that matter, the Court held that the dismissal was regular, as no cross-complaint had been filed. Affidavits were then read in the matter of the citations of Acocck and Treganza for contempt—one made by W. K. Lindsey, Jr., and another by Under Sheriff W. W. Coons. It is claimed that there had been an abuse of power by Treganza, who was keeper of the property, and that Mr. Acocck obtained possession of the property from the keeper by the practice of deceit on the Sheriff's office. Under Sheriff Coons' affidavit is quite pointed. The matter has resolved itself into a legal muddle, and it is apparent that before the ending comes there will be a shaking of dry bones. The case is in progress as we go to press.

Death of Ex-Senator Duffy.

James A. Duffy died at Adams' Springs, Lake county, this week. He was a native of Ireland and aged 56 years. Many years of his life were spent in Sacramento and for a long time he was chief clerk of the old California Steam Navigation Company. In 1869, with Isaac F. Freeman, M. S. Horan, John A. Odell and R. D. Stephens, he was elected to the State Assembly. Freeman is now a farmer near Elk Grove. Horan was afterward Police Judge of this city and is now practicing law in San Francisco. Odell died at Folsom, May 29, 1881. Stephens is now Postmaster. In 1871, Mr. Duffy was elected to the State Senate. In the first session in his term his colleague was A. Comte, Jr., now of San Francisco; and in the second term the late Henry Edgerton. Mr. Duffy was for a time a clerk in the office of Secretary of State, but of late years resided in San Francisco.

Baseball Notes.

The Sacramentos succeeded in winning one game out of ten; a showing they should not feel proud of.

Manigan, who pitched such good ball against the Stocktons, will twirl to-morrow's game in San Francisco.

The Lavensons will play the Our Tastes for $50 a side at Snowflake Park to-morrow afternoon at 2 o'clock. No admission fee will be charged.

SOCIAL. AND PERSONAL.

Eli Denison, of Oakland, returned home to-day.

Misses Flo and Allie Duden are visiting the fair.

Col. Lehe, of Stockton, was in attendance at the fair.

Major W. A. Anderson left for San Francisco to-day.

Geo. McKim, of Chico, is here blowing himself in at the fair.

Miss Rose Monahan, of Virginia City, is visiting Miss Rita Gillis.

Miss Bessie Parry, of Lincon, is spending fair with Miss Nellie Davis.

Miss Jeannie Starr, of Illinois, is in the city, visiting her uncle, Col. Henry Starr.

Misses Jennie and Anna McConnell, of McConnell's Station, are visiting friends in the city.

Marion Biggs, Jr., has been here during the fair, as usual backing his favorite on the track.

Hon. Henry Hook, of Contra Costa, has been a constant attendant at the race course this week.

F. P. Tuttle, District Attorney of Placer, and Grand Orator of the N. S. G. W., is attending the fair.

J. E. Blanchard, of Folsom, came down this morning to attend a meeting of the Board of Education.

Geo. Lorenz and R. D. Scriver, well-known former Sacramentans, but now of Los Angeles, are here for the fair and races.

Miss Maud Byrne, of San Francisco, who has been spending the fair with Mrs. Clara Byrne, returns to her home to-day.

Frank P. Milliken, an old time printer here, and lately of the Placer Republican, but now a gentle grauger, is down from his ranch.

Miss Eva Aull, of Sacramento, was the guest of her brother Captain Aull and his wife at Folsom the early part of the week.

Arthur Ayers, of Oakland, has been on a visit of a few days to his uncle, Went. T. Crowell, and will return home to-morrow.

Mr. Williams, of Chico, has been attending the fair. He speaks well of the exhibits, and also of his treatment while in the City of the Plains.

Jouas J. Morrison, the editor of the Citrus Bell, published at Loomis, and prominently engaged in the development of the resources of that locality, is in the city, and has been observing the Fair.

Hon. William M. Petrie and daughter Lottie start this evening for Washington, D. C., to attend the Grand Encampment of Knights Templar. Mr. Petrie is a Past Grand Commander of the Grand Commandary of California, and therefore a member of the Grand Encampment.

Invitations to attend the marriage of Miss Ella Granger, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Granger, of Grass Valley, to Clarence B. Clarke, of Sacramento, have been issued. The wedding will take place at Emmanuel Church, in that city, Wednesday evening, October 2d, at 8:30 o'clock.

Captain E. L. Hawk, of Placer county, made a magnificent display of grapes at the fair, and has been among us since the opening of the exposition. With the capacity that Placer county has in the way of production of fruit trees and vines, it is to be regretted that a more general showing was not made here.

Congratulation.

So much is said at the periodical occurrences of the State Fair concerning the prevalence of crime that the people almost look for the taking possession of the city by ex-convicts. The fair of this year is practically over. Beyond a few minor offenses there have been no indications of lawlessness. It is but just to our Police Department that they should be congratulated by the people on the efficiency they have displayed under circumstances peculiarly disheartening. As a rule, men who perform services for the benefit of the public, with an uncertainty of recompense, receive no consideration—not even praise.

The Courts.

We can expect a lively time in the Superior Courts in this section of the State during the balance of this year. In several counties adjoining or near us heavy calendars have been set, some of which contain important criminal cases. Next week both departments of the Superior Court of this county will be in session for the trial of cases, and from the outlook it can reasonably be expected that Court business will be booming for some time. It is understood that the Grand Jury will meet again next week—either to do some practical work or to demonstrate why they cannot.

General Boulanger became a grandfather recently, his favorite daughter, Mme. Driant, who was married last November, giving birth to a son.

DEATHS.

SCANIKER—In this city, September 20th, Eleanor Dney, wife of the late S. P. Scaniker, a native of Harrisburg, Pa., 52 years.

[Friends and acquaintances are respectfully invited to attend the funeral, from her late residence, 610 1/2 I street, between Sixth and Seventh, to-morrow (Sunday) afternoon at 4 o'clock. Interment private.]

J. O. MILLS,

High Art Crayon Portraits

Executed from Life or Tin-types or Photographs. Inquire or leave orders at

406 J STREET, or 413 K STREET.

San Francisco Studio, 12 Dehane street, between Sixteenth and Seventeenth, Church and Sanchez streets. References: Timothy Lee, Chief of Police, Col. Gnthrie, Capt. Fouratt.

AUCTION SALE

—OF—

City Real Estate

VALUABLE RESIDENCE PROPERTY FOR SALE AT AUCTION.

A Rare Opportunity for Investment and to Secure the Most Desirable Residence Property.

I will offer for sale, at Public Auction, at the premises to be sold, on Tuesday, Oct. 1, at 10 o'clock A. M.

That very desirable lot at the southwest corner of Tenth and O streets, being lot number four, between Ninth and Tenth and O and P streets, together with the double brick dwelling house thereon.

ALSO, that centrally located and very desirable lot, on which is situated a double two-story brick dwelling, and being the east half of lot three, between Eighth and Ninth, M and N streets.

These lots being so centrally and desirably located, and there being so few, if any, of such lots for sale, this affords a rare opportunity to obtain homes for two-thirds of what their value will be a year hence. Title perfect. For details inquire of

L. BELL, Auctioneer.

ADD. C. HINKSON, Attorney.

Headquarters for the Bartlett Springs Water on Draught.

THE OFFICE,

1008 Fourth Street, Next to Cal. State Bank

H. D. GAMBLE, Proprietor.

Telephone 199. Office Hours from A. M. to P. M.

SAN FRANCISCO

Steam Dyeing Works

Removed to 524 K Street.

Branch, 805 K St. Dye Works, 2511 J St.

All orders promptly attended to. Don't make a mistake—Main office at Capital Transfer Company.

JOHN STEEN, Proprietor Dye Works.

Trunks Removed, 25 Cents.

JAS. LONGSHORE,

SACRAMENTO TRUNK FACTORY,

530 K STREET.

Trunks, Valises & Bags Wholesale and Retail.

Waterhouse & Lester

DEALERS IN

IRON, STEEL, CUMBERLAND COAL,

Wagon Lumber and Carriage Hardware,

SACRAMENTO.

Earthquake and Fire Proof BUILDINGS

Constructed on my patent system. Perfect protection guaranteed. For estimates and particulars see

E. HAWES, Twelfth and B streets, Sacramento.

California State Bank

DOES A GENERAL BANKING BUSINESS.

Draws Exchange on all the Principal Cities of the World.

OFFICERS:

PRESIDENT.....N. D. RIDEOUT
VICE-PRESIDENT.....FRED'K COX
CASHIER.....A. ABBOTT
ASSISTANT CASHIER.....W. E. GERBER

DIRECTORS:

C. W. Clarke, Jos. Steffens, N. D. Rideout,
Geo. C. Perkins, J. R. Watson, Frederick Cox.
W. E. Gerber.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

THE CARS OF THE CENTRAL STREET RAILWAY COMPANY will only stop at the further crossings.

There will Always be Cars Waiting at the Close of Both Theaters.

THE NEW PAVILION

At South Sacramento will be open on SUNDAY, the 4th of August, and at all times thereafter.

Refreshments of all kinds always on hand.

Fine Table Wines
From our Celebrated Orleans Vineyard.

Producers of the
ECLIPSE
CHAMPAGNE,
530 Washington St.
SAN FRANCISCO.

CHAMPAGNE

W. B. CHAPMAN,
123 California St. San Francisco.
SOLE AGENT FOR THE PACIFIC COAST

For sale by all first-class Wine Merchants and Grocers.

Samples and Instructions for Self-measurement sent by mail on application.

L. RADLOFF,

LADIES' TAILOR.

218 POST STREET, SAN FRANCISCO.
Tailor Made Suits a Specialty.

A. AITKEN,

PREMIUM PIONEER MARBLE AND GRANITE WORKS

423 J Street, bet. 4th and 5th, Sacramento.

Costic Tile, etc. Cemetery lots enclosed with Granite. All kinds of work done in Italian and Vermont Marble. Direct importer of Scotch and Eastern Granite Monuments. Also, Marble, Slate, Wooden and Iron Mantels, direct from manufacturers, at Reduced Prices. Call and examine.

How a Tramp Ended.

The season at the White Mountains was at its height. The great hotels and the many cottages scattered in every direction were filled to overflowing with gay and joyous guests. No one location had a larger share of these "birds of passage" than Bethlehem, standing on its lofty hill, with the grand old mountains rising all about it. Every hotel, boarding house, and cottage was filled with guests, and every day and evening something was planned and carried out for their entertainment. One day it was a ride or tramp to one of the many points of interest lying in every direction, and in the evening a ball or hop or parlor theatricals at one house or the other. Pleasure for the few days or weeks reigned supreme.

One evening two young men were seated on the broad veranda of the Maplewood. The great hotel was filled to repletion, and gay promenaders passed and repassed before them to the sound of the music which came floating out on the evening air.

One of the men, the darker of the two, at length broke the silence which had for several minutes existed between them by saying: "I think we shall have a good day for our tramp to-morrow. It doesn't look now as though we should get rain again for some days." "I hope it will not be too hot, Thurlow. It's a long way up to the Black ravine, and for a part of the way we shall find no shade at all. I was up there two years ago, and found it no easy job."

"I guess we are good for it, Hartley. We didn't take a back seat for anybody when we were doing the Alps together. Englishmen pride themselves on their power of endurance on foot, but for once they had to give in to Americans."

"I remember the party very well. They were loth to give up, but they had to when we left them so far behind."

"Quite a little party are going up also to-morrow, I understand—ladies and gentlemen—some from here, and some from the Sinclair."

"Yes; but they will ride more than half the way, and that makes the difference. I thought you would like to go along with them."

"But I had no invitation. Did you?"

"No."

"Isn't that a good reason why we should tramp by ourselves?"

"Yes; but Maud Ashley is to be one of the party. I've seen the time when you would have moved heaven and earth that you might be one of the party."

"But I would not have to perform so small a job as that. I should surely have had a pressing invitation to go."

"Thurlow?"

"Well!"

"Why was it that you and Maud broke off with each other? At one time I would have wagered my life that you would have made a match of it."

"There was another who had more gold and more influence than I," he said, in a bitter tone. "God knows I loved that woman as I never shall another."

"Then I would have married her in spite of—"

"Hush! Here she comes!"

A small gay coterie passed by where they were sitting. They were laughing and chatting, and Maud Ashley seemed the gayest of the little group. If she saw Chester Thurlow she gave no sign that she did so. No look of recognition came athwart her beautiful face.

The next morning gave promise of a beautiful day to follow. Thurlow and Hartley were astir early. It was a long, hard tramp to the head of the Black ravine and the clamber to the summit of the great cliffs which overhang it. By starting in good time they would have the advantage of the cool of the day. An early breakfast had been ordered the night before, and as soon as it was dispatched, and a goodly lunch bestowed in their knapsacks, they started off before many of the guests had showed themselves out of their rooms.

Half of their upward tramp was over, when they came to a spot where a rude path branched off to the right from the rough wagon road they had been pursuing. High above them they could see the deep depression in the mountain which went by the name of the Black ravine. A hard, long tramp was before them yet, but they felt as though it would be boys' play, for they were used to this sort of climbing. A sparkling brook came out from under a rock, and here they quenched their thirst and rested for a short time. The sound of wagon wheels and the ring of happy voices down the road told them that the party was approaching. This was a signal for them to go on, for they did not wish to mingle or be in the way of those that had said plainly enough that their company was not wanted.

Thurlow knew that Hugh Tilden would be there, and that if he could help it he would not be five minutes away from the side of Maud. He knew something of him of old and felt that the girl was giving herself to a man with whom she could never be happy. People would have said that this was jealousy on his part, but it was not wholly so. If they were married, in due time it would be shown that they were not fitted for each other.

Upward they clambered, following a rude path which had been cut alongside one edge of the ravine. The sun beat down upon them, and there was hardly a breath of air. But this they did not mind, and in due time they reached the head of the ravine and rested in the shadow of the great rocks which towered above their heads. These they had yet to surmount, and then the end of their tramp would be reached. This a little later was accomplished, and they gazed around them upon the wild, half-savage scenery which lay upon every hand.

A little later, and again the sound of voices and of laughter was wafted upward to their ears. The party had reached the head of the ravine and was about to clamber up over the cliffs the way they had come. They knew that the ladies had no easy task before them, and that they had some little time to stay before they moved aside or farther on if they still wished to avoid them. So they lingered, taking in the view until the forms of the party appeared in sight only a short distance below them.

"Come, Hartley, there are some stunted trees out yonder where we can find shade. We will take refuge there until they are gone."

"I'll make the move for your sake, Thurlow; but mind, I won't do it again. We have as good a right here as they, and if Miss Maud Ashley doesn't want to meet you she can go in some other direction. If it were my case I should stay here, and if she wanted to cut me in the presence of the rest of the party she would be at liberty to do so. You can afford it if she can."

Thurlow made no answer, but started off in the direction he had indicated. He could not bear the thought of being slighted by the woman who in the past had been so dear to him. In the shade made by the gnarled and stunted trees they partook of the lunch they had brought, dividing their time between the wild scenery about them and watching the movements of the party on the brow of the cliff. In this way the time passed until Thurlow, looking at his watch, observed that it was nearly time for them to be starting homeward.

"Will you wait until they are gone?" said Hartley. "I think they are about starting. Their moving about looks like it."

Hardly had these words left his lips when a cry of mortal terror fell upon their ears. They sprang to their feet and gazed out toward the party of the cliffs. One of their number was missing. Horror-stricken, they gazed for an instant into each other's face, and then, with the utmost speed they could command, they flew in the direction of the spot.

"What has happened?" they cried to the awe-stricken group, each of whom had ventured as near to the edge of the cliff as they dared, and were looking down into the fearful abyss below.

"Maud Ashley has fallen over!" was the answer from pale lips.

Thurlow uttered a cry which came from the inmost recesses of his heart. Then, with a powerful effort he mastered himself, and sprang to the path leading down to the edge of the ravine.

"She has not gone to the bottom," said Hugh Tilden as he carefully made his way after him. She has fallen upon a shelf in the rocks, and we can hear her crying for help."

Thurlow turned for an instant and gave him a look which should have crushed him into the earth, and then sped on his downward way, followed close by Hartley, who almost thrust Tilden from the path as he passed him.

In a few moments he was opposite the spot where Maud was clinging for her life to the narrow shelf of rock on which she had fallen and which had saved her from instant death.

"Have courage, Maud, I will be with you in a moment. Here, Hartley, lend me your hand until I cross this slippery rock."

The latter did as requested, and with a bound Thurlow gained the shelf, and grasped Maud by the shoulder. For a moment it seemed that they would both lose their balance and go plunging down to the fearful depths below, but they held their footing and braced themselves up against the rock behind them.

"Are you much hurt, Miss Ashley?" he said.

"No, thanks to this bed of moss," she answered. "But why Miss Ashley? Why don't you call me Maud, as of old?"

"May I have the right to do so?"

"Yes, you always had."

"Maud, will you be my wife?"

"Yes, dearest, if we leave this place alive."

"And Hugh Tilden?"

"Do not mention his name to me. He has no claim upon me. I am yours, and yours alone, if you will take me."

"Thank God, my darling! Now let us make our escape from this place as soon as possible. If we are careful we can do it without harm to either."

Hartley and Tilden were looking on. They could not hear what passed between the two, but the former was satisfied that all had been made right at last.

"Take the wraps the ladies have and your coats, and tie them together, making as stout a rope as you can, and then throw one end to me," called out Thurlow.

This was soon done. The end was fastened about Maud, and Thurlow steadied her out as far as possible. Then, with a spring, she caught the outstretched hand of Hartley and was safe. A minute more and Thurlow stood by her side, and then a shout of joy went up from the throats of all at their deliverance.

There was a joy in Bethlehem that night. The Maplewood was thronged, until it seemed that all the town was there. Joy was in the hearts of all but one—Hugh Tilden. The day's tramp had an ending for him that he in no way relished.

CHAS. J. FREDERICKS & CO.

Fashionable and Practical

HATTERS,

802 J STREET,

Importers and Manufacturers of

Fine Hats and Caps.

Latest Novelties on hand and constantly arriving. REPAIRING A SPECIALTY.

O'BRIEN'S, 607 J.

SWEEPING REDUCTION IN LADIES' SHOES.

Best French Kid, hand turn, worth $7, reduced to $6. Ladies' French Kid Button, low heel, long vamp, worth $5, reduced to $4. Misses' and Children's Canvas Shoes reduced 25 per cent.

FRIEND & TERRY LUMBER CO.

Wholesale and Retail Lumber Dealers, Also Shakes, Bolts, Ties, Doors, Windows, Blinds and Screens. Main Yard and Office, No. 1310 Second Street. Branch Yard, corner Twelfth and J Sts. P. O. Box 233. E. J. HOLT, Manager. Sacramento

OSBORN & FOLGER

DEALERS IN ICE and COAL, HAY and GRAIN. New 10-ton Fairbanks' Hay Scales. N. E. cor. Fifth and I Streets. Wood Yard, 806 I Street.

PAUL GRAF,

Manufacturer of and dealer in Saddles, Harness, Robes, Collars, Whips, Spurs, Brushes, Currycombs, etc.

1130 J Street, near Twelfth
Repairing Neatly Done.
Harness Made to Order.

SECOND HAND

"REMINGTON" TYPE WRITERS

FOR RENT AND FOR SALE. Type Writers' Supplies of All Kinds. AT THE YOST AGENCY, 1007 FOURTH STREET.

SCHOOL.

PUPILS of the Public Schools who wish to review during their vacation will find BAINBRIDGE COLLEGE the place. We make a specialty of Grammar School and High School Studies. No extra charge for Penmanship or Elocution drill. You can attend in the cool part of the day; hours, 8 A. M. to 1 P. M. J. C. BAINBRIDGE, Principal.

No. 1017 J Street, Sacramento.

King Bros.

State Capitol Cash Grocery, 131 J Street, corner Second. Goods sold on small margin, strictly for cash. Best Brands of Wines, Liquors and Cigars.

A. L. HART,

ATTORNEY-AT-LAW

Sutter Building, cor. 5th and J.

W. A. ANDERSON,

ATTORNEY-AT-LAW,

No. 209 J Street, Sacramento.

W. A. GETT, JR.,

Attorney at Law,

Southwest Corner of Seventh and J Streets, SACRAMENTO, CAL.

F. F. TEBBETS, DENTIST.

No. 914 SIXTH STREET,

Bet. 1 and J, west side, opp. Congregational Church.

DR. H. H. PIERSON,

SURGICAL & AND MECHANICAL & DENTIST

511 J Street, bet. 5th and 6th.

Gas administered for the painless extraction of teeth.

Joseph Hahn & Co., PHARMACISTS,

S. W. cor. Fifth and J Streets, Sacramento.

CHOICE PERFUMERIES, Etc.

Prescriptions carefully compounded, at all hours.

A. C. SWEETSER & CO.,

Real Estate & Insurance Brokers

Lands For Sale in all parts of the State.

Some Good Investments in School Lands.

Send for Catalogue.

Office, No. 1012 Fourth Street,

SACRAMENTO, CAL.

R. W. PARKER,

Dealer in Choice Family

GROCERIES and PROVISIONS

Sold at the Lowest Cash Price.

Give him a call and be convinced.

Corner of Seventeenth and N Streets.

Also, Office of the Superintendent of the City Cemetery.

BELL & CO.,

GENERAL AUCTIONEERS.

Salesroom, 927 K Street, Sacramento, Cal.

Regular Salesdays—Wednesdays and Saturdays at 10 o'clock A. M.

Assistants—W. T. Crowell, Real Estate; J. Pulvermacher, Bookkeeper; J. Lambert, Furniture and Stock.

Particular attention paid to sales of real estate, house sales, and sales of farms, stock, etc.

Highest price paid for all kinds of household goods.

Barrett & Berkey

PACIFIC RESTAURANT,

OYSTER HOUSE AND

WINE PARLORS

701 J Street, cor. 7th.

CANCERS,

Ulcers, Wens, Lumps, Exerences, etc., Positively Cured or no Pay. No Knife Used.

As to the success of my treatment, I give the names of a few of the many cured. By addressing them they will give any information required—and it pays to investigate before being treated.

Mrs. O. C. Nielsen, Grass Valley, cancer. John Service, Auburn, lupus. Patrick Lynch, Sacramento, cancer. Mrs. Jno. Shaw, Grass Val., birthmark removed. N. S. Peck, S. P. R. R. Sacramento, cancer. J. L. Woods, Washington, Yolo county, cancer. John W. Douglas, Rocklin, cancer. Miss Mamie Lynch, Yolo, tumor removed. Chas. McLaughlin, Sacramento, cancer.

I might give many more. Those afflicted are invited to call and investigate for themselves. Consultation at office free. Send for circular.

Office, 426 K Street, Sacramento.

DR. J. H. SHIRLEY.

RED HOUSE Millinery Department

This cut represents one of the most fashionable shapes for misses and young ladies.

Trimmed as above illustrated for.....$3 00@ $5 00
Felt Hats in all the new shades.....70
Straw Toques and Turbans.....50
Novelties in shaded Aigrettes.....25
Birds.....50

We have an extra force of trimmers employed, and are prepared to do order work for the State Fair within a few hours' notice.

RED HOUSE,
J Street, between Seventh and Eighth.

ALBERT GRUBBS,

No. 1417 Fourth Street,

Will do all kinds of House Cleaning, Lay Carpets, Whitewashing, and everything in that line.

He also has the only wagon for the REMOVAL OF DEAD ANIMALS, and any orders left at his place of business will receive prompt attention.

[Remember the address!]

No. 1417 Fourth Street, Sacramento, Cal.

JESSE SLAUGHTER,

Office, No. 1217 Fifth Street.

Plastering, Whitewashing, Cleaning of Cesspools, Etc.

Also, CITY SCAVENGER.

Burying of dead animals attended to at short notice.

Don't forget the number—1217 Fifth street, the old stand, where I have been for 25 years.

R. H. PETTIT,

Wholesale and Retail Dealer in

IMPORTED & DOMESTIC CIGARS

Smoke the "Lone Fisherman,"

The BEST FIVE-CENT CIGAR in the Market.

NO. 225 K STREET.

CALL AT 1118 J STREET,

—AT—

Fred Futterer's Saloon

And Get a Glass of Cool Beer.

The best Wines, Liquors and Cigars always on hand.

POOL AND BILLIARD TABLES.

FRED FUTTERER, 1118 J Street.

CHANGED HANDS.

SACRAMENTO EXCHANGE,

(Formerly Wm. Gamble's.)

1012 SEVENTH STREET.

Fine Wines. All the celebrated brands of Liquors and Cigars. ROBERT ALLEN, Formerly of Agricultural Park.

RHOADS & TOWNSEND HOUSE

On European Plan.

Cor. Second and J Streets, Sacramento.

ARTHUR MILLER, PROPRIETOR.

A Stranger in Town.

IT is safe to wager that this is a truthful portrait of the wonder and astonishment usually aroused by a stranger on entering a small country village. All stand with their mouths wide open, reminding the traveler of the Mammoth Cave, and they gaze on him as though beholding an apparition from another world. And, by the way, this is a forcible reminder of the fact that

Arcadian, the Ideal,

is creating just about as much commotion among the proprietors of competing brands as the appearance of the stranger does among the unsophisticated inhabitants of the rural village. Imagine the stranger in the above illustration to be

"Arcadian and Ideal,"

and the gawky, paralyzed spectators, competing drinks, and you have a very correct idea of the position occupied by Arcadian Sarsaparilla and Iron. A glass of IDEAL is, indeed, delightful. It is a great blood purifier, possesses valuable medicinal properties, and is warmly indorsed by eminent physicians in every part of England and America. It has long been a favorite drink among the English people, and is acquiring universal favor and popularity wherever introduced.

Ideal is prepared with pure Arcadian Mineral Water, and is bottled at Waukesha, Wis. It is a mild laxative, acts favorably in promoting the secretions of the kidneys, enriches the blood, and is of decided value in malarial diseases of every type. It imparts an invigorating tone to the entire system.

It is essentially a ladies' drink, and possesses rare merit.

ARCADIAN, THE IDEAL,

IS KEPT FOR SALE BY ALL FIRST-CLASS

Druggists, Grocers and Saloon Keepers.

ANHEUSER & BUSCH BEER

Can be found on draught only at

John Gruhler's Saloon

No. 522 J STREET.

The finest and best Wines, Liquors and Cigars constantly on hand.

Patronize Home Industry!

CITY BREWERY

FRANK RUHSTALLER, Proprietor.

GENUINE

Pilsener Felsen Beer.

Corner Twelfth and H Streets,

Telephone 201. SACRAMENTO.

CELEBRATED

WEINER LAGER BEER

CAPITAL BREWERY

LOUIS NICOLAUS,

Corner Twelfth and I Streets

SACRAMENTO.

FIFTH AVENUE SALOON,

1015 Fifth Street, between J and K.

E. DIETERLE, Proprietor.

Philadelphia Lager Beer on draught, five cents a glass. Also, fine Wines, Liquors, Cigars, etc.

THE FINEST IN THE LAND.

Agent for the Celebrated W. J. LEMP'S St. LOUIS LAGER BEER

WISSEMAN'S SALOON,

Klebetz & Green's Old Stand,

1020 Fourth St., bet. J and K, Sacramento.

GEO. WISSEMAN, PROPRIETOR.

Families and Saloons supplied by bottle or keg.

Butchers' Home,

1020 J Street,

Between 10th and 11th, : Sacramento, Cal.

Fine Wines, Liquors and Cigars. Also, a

GOOD GLASS OF BEER.

JACOB GRUHLER, Prop'r.

CAPITAL ALE VAULTS.

Established in 1870, and still maintains the same reputation for keeping the best WINES, LIQUORS and Cigars in the city. The finest Hot Lunch in the city from 11 to 2. Clam Chowder a specialty every night.

NAGELE & SVENSSON, Prop'rs.

Telephone 38.

302 J and 1005 Third st.

W. R. STRONG & CO.

Founded 1852.

Fruit Packers
and Shippers.

PROPRIETORS OF

CAPITAL NURSERIES,
SACRAMENTO, CAL.

CURTIS BROS. & CO.

Wholesale and Retail Dealers in and Shippers of
all kinds of

Fruits, Vegetables
And GENERAL PRODUCE.

Careful attention paid to the selection and packing
of Choice Fruits and Vegetables for distant markets.
Goods delivered in city free.

308 and 310 K Street, - - Sacramento, Cal.

Capital Iron Works.

Vertical and Horizontal Engines
BOILERS,

STEAM AND POWER

PUMPS,

Deep Well Pumps,

Hand Pumps,

Stock Pumps,

PUMPMAKERS' SUPPLIES.

HORSE-POWERS, WIND MILLS,

Tanks and Tank Houses.

904 K Street, Sacramento.

A. J. MUIR,
PLUMBER,
—Gas and Steam Fitter.—

Being a practical plumber, I can guarantee all work.

810 K STREET, Telephone 226.
SACRAMENTO, CAL.

Take a Ride on the Riverside Road

AND BE SURE AND STOP AT

BILLY GROENVELD'S

Sutterville House

And get a glass of COOL BEER. Or if you want a bottle of CHAMPAGNE Billy has it on hand, or anything else you may wish for in his line.

Always a FINE LUNCH on the Counter.

M. T. GROENVELD, Proprietor.

BAKER & HAMILTON,
San Francisco and Sacramento,
Importers and Jobbers of

Hardware, Iron, Steel, Coal, Powder,
MACHINERY

And Agricultural Implements.
Send for Catalogue.

F. KUEHNE & CO.,
NO. 906 NINTH STREET,
Between I and J, SACRAMENTO,

Carpenters and Contractors

Store and office work a specialty.

ICE BOXES for Breweries and Saloons always on hand and made to order.

Jobbing and Repairing promptly attended to.

H. WACHHORST

Leading Jeweler of Sacramento

SIGN OF THE TOWN CLOCK,

No. 315 J STREET, SACRAMENTO.

W. D. Comstock, 501 -- 507 K, cor. Fifth

On Exhibition, THE LARGEST AND BEST SELECTED STOCK.

FAIR DEALING! LOW PRICES!

GENSHLEA BROS. 624 J ST.

Strictly High Grade Goods in all Lines.

TRY THE LA ROSA ESPANOLA KEY WEST CIGAR.

JAS. G. DAVIS

Furniture, Carpets and Wall Paper

411 AND 413 K STREET,

Branch, 315 K St. Send for Catalogue. Prices Lowest.

Wm. J. Hassett.

A. J. Johnston.

A. J. Johnston & Co.

PRINTERS,

410 J Street,

Sacramento

A. G. JOHNSON.

CLAUS ANDERSON.

ANDERSON & JOHNSON,

The * Leading * Merchant * Tailors,

SUITS MADE TO ORDER AT REASONABLE RATES.

No. 1014 Seventh Street, : : : Sacramento.

Klune & Floberg,

WATCHMAKERS and JEWELERS

Agents for Rockford Watch Co.

NO. 428 J STREET, SACRAMENTO.

Something New

NEW STORE. NEW MEN.

BELL & FOUNTAIN

HAVE OPENED THE

Plaza Cash Grocery
STORE,

Corner Tenth and J Streets,

And have stocked the same with all New and Fresh Goods, which they will sell for CASH at the smallest living margin.

All Goods Warranted as Represented.

Goods delivered to any part of the city.

Our Motto: "The nimble sixpence against the slow shilling!"

BELL & FOUNTAIN,

Plaza Cash Grocery Store,

REEVES & LONG, UNDERTAKERS,
609 J Street, bet. Sixth and Seventh.

WE KEEP ON HAND A COMPLETE
Stock of Coffins and Caskets; also,
Shrouds of every description. Orders from city or country receive prompt attention, day or night.
EMBALMING done in the best manner; and at reasonable rates.

BOOTS AND SHOES
made to order. Boots,
$5 to $11. Shoes, $4 to
$9. Ladies' Shoes, best quality French Kid, $5
to $7.

REPAIRING DONE
at lowest prices.

NONE BUT BEST
mechanics employed.

WE GUARANTEE
to make perfect fitting
to the worst of crooked
and crippled feet.

COMPETE WITH
any shoes on the market.

216 J Street

—AND—
208 K Street,

SACRAMENTO.

A. CASELLI
& COMPANY.

WESTERN HOTEL

209 to 219 K Street.

The Leading Hotel of Sacramento, Cal.

FREE BUS TO AND FROM HOTEL.

Meals, 25 Cents. Rooms, according to Location.

WM. LAND, Proprietor.

American Steam Laundry

NINETEENTH AND I STS.—WHITE LABOR
only. Linen polished in the neatest manner.
We guarantee satisfaction. All ordinary mending, sewing on buttons, etc., free of charge. Washing
called for and delivered to any part of the city.
Main Office at Sawtelle's Book Store, 708 and 710 J
street. Branch offices at all the Hotels.

RAILROAD TIME TABLE.

Southern Pacific Company

PACIFIC SYSTEM.

Sept. 9, 1889.

Trains LEAVE and are due to ARRIVE at
SACRAMENTO.

Lv.	Trains Run Daily.	Arr.
7.00 A	Calistoga and Napa	11.40 A
4.05 P	Calistoga and Napa	7.20 P
11.00 P	Ashland and Portland	3.40 A
5.05 P	Demiug, El Paso and East	7.05 P
7.30 P	Knight's Landing	7.55 A
4.30 A	Marysville (Mixed)	4.25 P
9.00 A	Los Angeles	9.55 A
8.00 P	Second Class, Ogden and East	6.30 A
10.30 P	Central Atlantic Express	3.40 P
3.00 P	Ogden and East	9.50 A
11.00 P	Oroville	3.40 A
3.00 P	Red Bluff via Marysville	9.50 A
10.40 A	Redding via Willows	4.05 P
6.20 A	San Francisco via Benicia	8.30 P
7.00 A	San Francisco via Benicia	7.20 P
4.05 P	San Francisco via Benicia	10.10 P
4.00 A	San Francisco via Benicia	10.40 P
*10.00 A	San Francisco via Steamer	26.00 A
11.20 A	San Francisco via Livermore	2.25 P
3.05 P	San Francisco via Benicia	11.40 A
11.20 A	San Jose	2.25 P
9.00 A	Santa Barbara	9.55 A
5.05 P	Santa Barbara	7.05 P
7.00 A	Santa Rosa	11.40 A
4.05 P	Santa Rosa	7.20 P
9.00 A	Stockton and Galt	7.05 P
5.05 P	Stockton and Galt	9.55 A
8.00 P	Truckee and Reno	6.30 A
10.30 P	Truckee and Reno	3.40 P
8.30 A	Colfax	8.00 P
7.00 A	Vallejo	11.40 A
4.05 P	Vallejo	11.30 P
*12.15 P	Folsom and Placerville (Mixed)	*10.25 A
*7.15 A	Folsom and Placerville	*2.40 P
*5.20 P	Folsom	*6.50 A

*Sunday excepted. †Sunday only. ‡Monday excepted. A for morning. P for afternoon.
A. N. TOWNE, Gen'l Manager.
T. H. GOODMAN, Gen'l Pass. and Ticket Agent.

Edwin K. Alsip & Co.

ESTABLISHED 1860.

REAL ESTATE

AND INSURANCE AGENTS.

FARMING LANDS A SPECIALTY.

Catalogues issued monthly.

No. 1015 Fourth Street, Sacramento.

Gregory Bros. Co

Established 1852.

COMMISSION MERCHANTS,

Packers and Shippers of California Fruit and Produce,

126 and 128 J STREET,

San Francisco Office, 313 Davis St. SACRAMENTO.

ANGLO-NEVADA ASSURANCE CORPORATION

OF SAN FRANCISCO.

FIRE.—Cash Capital, $2,000,000—MARINE.

Sacramento Branch:

No. 1018 SECOND STREET.

JOSEPH STEFFENS, Manager.

HOWARD KIMBROUGH, Local Agent.

Hotfilter & Grafmiller,

MANUFACTURING JEWELERS,

Jewelry made to order. Watches, Clocks and Jewelry

Repaired and Warranted.

No. 1026 Sixth Street, Sacramento.

B. Ruhl

Bookbinder, Paper Ruler and

Blank Book Manufacturer.

Periodicals, Magazines, Music, and all kinds of Binding neatly done at the lowest prices.

No. 409 J STREET, SACRAMENTO.

R. DAVIS,

NOTARY PUBLIC,

Real Estate and Insurance Agent.

Representing the following companies:

Manchester of England; Caledonian of Edinburgh;

Scotland; London and Lancashire, England.

1002 J Street, Sacramento.

Restaurant de France,

FAURE & BECKER, PROPRIETORS.

(Successors to L. Payen.)

No. 427 K Street, Near Metropolitan Theater.

Family Entrance on Fifth Street.

Catering to Families, Banquets and Wedding Parties

a specialty. Telephone 228.

NOTICE TO FRUITMEN!

Keep your trees free from scale and your apples
from being wormy by the use of

Warner's Scale & Insect Exterminator

FOR SALE BY

G. T. NOE, - - DRUGGIST,

AUBURN, CAL.

Put up in one-half gallon and quart cans.

THEMIS

Vol. I.

SACRAMENTO: SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 28, 1889.

No. 32.

THEMIS: published weekly, by A. J. Johnston & Co. Publication Office, 410 J Street. Subscription—One year, by mail, $3 00; six months, by mail, $1 50, in advance; per month, by carrier, 25 cents. (Entered at the Post Office at Sacramento as second-class matter.)

The recent discharge of the Grand Jury of this county by Judge Armstrong brings prominently before the public an important feature in the administration of the laws, and calls for some reflections from us upon the powers, duties and responsibilities of a Grand Jury as a body, and of its individual members. The institution of the Grand Jury is one of the oldest and most honored and revered in the administration of justice among English speaking people. Its powers once were much greater than they now are in many of the States. Until the adoption of the Constitution of 1879, all felonies could be prosecuted only upon the indictment of a Grand Jury. Article I, Section 8, of our Constitution provides:

Offenses heretofore required to be prosecuted by indictment, shall be prosecuted by information, after examination and commitment, by a magistrate, or by indictment with or without such examination and commitment, as may be prescribed by law. A Grand Jury shall be drawn and summoned at least once a year in each county.

At the present time Grand Juries in California have but little to do, as the District Attorneys prefer the more public and direct method of filing informations, after examination in open Court and commitment by the magistrate. Still, the Constitution requires that a Grand Jury shall be drawn and summoned at least once a year in each county, and this undoubtedly is a wise provision, for various reasons. It is not our purpose at this time, however, to more than notice them. The extraordinary powers conferred upon a Grand Jury have, from the earliest period, been commented upon by the greatest law writers and civilians. Its proceedings are secret, and during an examination no one is permitted to be present except the grand jurors, the witness and the District Attorney. When deliberating upon their verdict, no one can be present but members of their own body. No grand juror can be questioned for anything he may say or any vote he may give in the Grand Jury, except for a perjury of which he may have been guilty, in making an accusation or giving testimony to his fellow-jurors. So great is the opportunity for the exercise of private malice and prejudice, and so frequently has it been accomplished, that Bentham and other writers have condemned the Grand Jury "as deforming English judicial proceedings, whose publicity is their honest boast." As early as the reign of Edward III, it was enacted that "no man be put to answer without presentment before justices or matter of record, or by due process or writ original, according to the old law of the land."

The oath taken by them is probably the most stringent known to the law. Among other things, the following: "You will keep your own counsel and that of your fellows and the Government. * * * You will present no person through malice, hatred or ill-will, nor leave any unrepresented through fear, favor or affection, or for any reward or the promise or hope thereof, etc." They are also prohibited from taking any advice or counsel from any one except "the Court or a Judge thereof, or of the District Attorney." Prof. Fatt, in his able work on "Jury Trial," has the following on this subject:

Personal influence on a Grand Jury, has from the earliest period been recognized as an evil, and has been specially guarded against. The powers confided to a Grand Jury are very serious in their consequences; and the temptation to private malevolence or revenge to influence these powers is very great. To discourage and hinder such influence, so dangerous to individual liberty, has been a principal aim of the law which treats an attempt of this kind as criminal.

Justice Field, of the United States Supreme Court, some years since charged a Grand Jury in the United States Circuit Court of California: "I warn you not to allow private prosecutors to intrude themselves into your presence and present accusations. Generally such parties are actuated by private enmity, and seek merely the gratification of their personal malice. If they possess any information justifying the accusation of the person against whom they complain they should impart it to the District Attorney, who will seldom fail to act in a proper case. But if the District Attorney should refuse to act, they can make their complaint to a committing magistrate, before whom the matter can be investigated." Congress has made an attempt to influence a grand jury punishable by both fine and imprisonment. The obligation to keep the testimony before them and their proceedings secret, continues not only while they are Grand Jurors, but forever. This obligation was probably forgotten by certain members of the late Grand Jury, for it is an open secret that their opinions and proceedings became public property immediately after the adjournment of any of their sessions. Such an act was a violation of their oath and punishable by the laws of the land. We believe in the institution and that it cannot well be abolished, but feel certain that its usefulness and dignity can only be maintained by a strict compliance with their oath and the laws governing them.

It is stated that the Chinese Government intend as a matter of retaliation to expel the American merchants and missionaries now residing in China. They number something over a thousand. The report is entitled to no credence, in that the Chinese Government generally views matters of foreign relations from the standpoint of selfishness. There are perhaps 200,000 Chinese in the United States, most of whom reside in California. The largest immigration to the port of San Francisco was in 1852, when 20,026 arrived, and it was followed in the succeeding years by large numbers. In the mining era most of the Chinese engaged in mining, and beyond the cost of their meagre living the greater portion of their earnings was sent to China. There are no means of knowing the amount of gold and silver thus sent from this country. According to the report of the Treasury Department, during the year ending June 30, 1888, the total value of exports of coin and bullion to Hong Kong was $2,381,264. In 1873 there was the largest value of imports from China into this country, $27,191,759; in 1886 there was the largest value of domestic exports from the United States to China, $11,562,661. In 1888 there was a decrease in the value of our exports to China over those of 1887 of $1,665,543. In 1878 a committee of our State Senate, of which Hon. Creed Haymond was chairman, submitted an exhaustive report to the Legislature on the subject of Chinese immigration, and that committee reported that from the returns from County Assessors of property assessed to Chinese in the State at the then rate of taxation, if the whole tax were paid, the revenue the State would thus derive would not exceed $9,600, and that while the Chinese population was more than one-sixth of the whole in the State it paid less than one four-hundredth part of the revenue required to support the State Government. From figures verified by the committee as nearly as possible it appeared that up to that time the Chinese had earned in this State about $180,000,000, of which only a trifling percentage had been spent here. In June, 1876, of 545 foreigners confined in the State Prison 198 were Chinese, and the net cost to the State of keeping those Chinese prisoners was not less than $21,600 per annum—a sum very largely in excess of the whole amount of property tax collected from the Chinese population in the State. It will thus be seen that the balance-sheet has been and is largely in favor of China. There have been no inducements that have attracted any considerable number of our people to China for business purposes, and it is not at all likely that a people deriving the advantages the Chinese do from us will take the initiative in creating our antagonism. The remarks made by Bishop Fowler at Chicago recently, to the effect that China would retaliate because the exclusion of its people from our country are manifestly absurd and may as well be passed unnoticed.

That was something of a commentary when the rules framed by southern managers of the railroad from Washington to Norfolk, Virginia, would not permit the United States Minister to Hayti, Frederick Douglass, to ride in other compartments than those set apart for colored people, and that the diplomatic department at Washington had to provide special means of carriage for the Minister from Washington to Norfolk, in order to avoid the humiliating spectacle of an American ambassador denied the free carriage accorded to other citizens, because he was black. The southron cannot be brought to realize that the colored man is his equal before the law, and that old slaveholder disposition crops out where the authority happens to vest in the hands of that class. They do not, in their hatred of the race since slavery has been abolished, make any distinction in favor of the education, refinement and position of the colored man. The fact that he is colored is sufficient to cause the barrier to be erected, even on the public ways and with the common carriers for all other classes. The genteel and accomplished colored lady must take separate compartments in traveling, while the painted white scarlet woman is allowed to sit in first class coaches, to mingle with our wives and daughters. Such is some of the southern intolerance.

In the newspaper world some little amusement is created by the rough-and-tumble fight now in progress between the Newcastle News, of Placer county, and the Record-Union, of this county. It seems that the controversy grows out of the meeting of country editors recently held in this city. As in most fights between country papers, it is unique and interesting to outsiders. The Record-Union characterizes its opponent as a small sheet, doubtless with the idea that the mentality of a man is to be judged by the amount of paper he consumes in presenting his ideas to the public, and implying that a circus poster would be the most effective demonstration of intellect, because of the loudness of the type and the wealth of paper. The News gets back at its adversary, and intimates that its editors wear collars—an intimation, doubtless, that they are vain. As the two journals are about equally matched in points of ability and influence, they should be let alone and allowed to fight it out.

The President and party have abandoned Deer Park and returned to duty at Washington. Now look out for official scalps. It is evident that as soon as Congress assembles there will first be a struggle for organization, and then the claims of Republican office seekers will be attended to. There are many hungry applicants sitting on the White House steps.

The scheme of obtaining a supply of water from Lake Tahoe, for San Francisco and intermediate points, including Sacramento, Auburn and other places, is by no means of recent origin. A. W. von Schmidt has devoted a quarter of a century in making surveys and estimates of the probable cost of the enterprise, and the capacity of the project to furnish a sufficient supply of pure mountain water for the bay city as well as our people at the capital. The estimated cost of this enterprise is fifteen millions. The source of supply, is inexhaustible, and will furnish a supply for irrigating purposes along the route. The proposition is to tunnel through the mountain into the north fork of the American river, using the river bed as a canal for some distance. There will be large reservoirs established at convenient points to relieve the pressure from the pipes. The immense expense necessary to carry into execution this project has a tendency to prevent capital from the investment, but it is certain that at no distant day this enterprise will be consummated. At one time there seemed to be some obstacles in the way of an absolute use of the waters of Lake Tahoe, in as much as the State of Nevada might object to any interference with the lake that would possibly injure that body of water. From the reports made to the Supervisors of San Francisco, it seems that title and right in the premises is vested absolutely in the projectors of this great enterprise.

The danger attending the admission of dying declarations in cases of homicide has been forcibly illustrated in this city in a case where a man was shot, apparently through the heart, and could not survive. Under this impending crisis, and with death staring him in the face, the wounded man made an ante-mortem statement in all due solemnity and which was intended to be used as evidence against the accused. Fate, however, changed the course of the bullet and the man recovered. The charge against the accused was then made an assault with intent to commit murder. The writer of this was counsel for the defense, and elicited from the prosecuting witness the fact that the ante-mortem statement was absolutely false and recited matters that were damaging to the accused which were untrue. This experience develops what danger there is in placing so much credit to dying declarations. Had the wounded man died, and there been no eye-witnesses to the affray, then all the formal solemnities accorded by a long line of legal decisions and the learning of law-writers, to such ante-mortem statements would have been invoked and the accused become a victim to these false accusations. Too much credence is given these anti-mortem statements, which are often prompted by hate, revenge, love, malice, and a thousand other motives which control the mind and motives of men. There is another case now pending where a Chinaman stands committed for murder almost solely upon the alleged dying declaration of another Mongolian. And to show this absurdity of any fear "of what dreams may come after we have shuffled off this mortal coil," the dying man accused the defendant of the murderous act, and in the same breath rounded off his accusation with the vilest and filthiest oath. The idea of solemnity and immediate dissolution and being ushered into the presence of his Maker did not seem to affect this party. To say that the rule which governs in the admission of such evidence—the solemnity of the occasion—influenced such a statement is a travesty. By the way, in the case now under consideration, it also appeared that the dying man accused two men by name of the murder, neither of whom was the defendant. We quote these cases to show how dangerous and uncertain it is to rely so implicitly upon ante-mortem declarations. Such statements are taken without the rule of hearsay testimony because of the solemnity attending the same. We are by later experience admonished that courts and juries should weigh well all such statements before faith and credence is given them. The Chicago case, where Officer O'Brien identified on his death bed, one O'Grady, is another illustration of the danger attending such declarations. The books are full of cases where innocent men have been convicted on such statements. Great caution should be used in accepting any ante-mortem statement.

Life is not so short but that there is always time enough for courtesy.—Emerson.

INTERESTING HISTORY.

Inception of the Republican Party in California—Persecution of Its Early Leaders—Pacific Republic Scheme—Secession Resolutions and Speeches—Election of the First Republican Governor.

The attitude of California at the outbreak of the Civil War had much to do with the preservation of the Union. Until 1860, with the exception of the election of 1855, when the American ticket was successful, California had always been a Democratic State. On the evening of April 19, 1856, the first mass meeting of Republicans in the State was held at Sacramento. The late Judge E. B. Crocker opened the meeting and was granted a fair hearing. George C. Bates then began to speak, but there was a general disturbance raised by Democrats and Americans who were present, and his voice could not be heard. Ex-Governor Henry S. Foote of Mississippi then took the stand and begged the disturbers to desist and allow the meeting to proceed, but he was not heeded. The speakers again attempted to talk, when suddenly a rush was made for the stand by the crowd and it was overturned and the meeting broken up.

On April 30, 1856, the first Republican State Convention was held at Sacramento. Judge Crocker was the presiding officer. But thirteen counties were represented, and several by but one delegate. Of the 125 delegates present sixty-six were from San Francisco and Sacramento. That convention selected delegates to attend the National Convention. Among the delegates were C. P. Huntington, Dr. A. B. Nixon, E. H. Miller Jr., Mark Hopkins, O. C. Wheeler and Cornelius Cole.

Early in May following a public discussion was announced to take place in Sacramento between Bates and J. C. Zabriskie, but when the appointed time arrived no location could be procured on account of the expected disturbance, and the meeting was postponed until the evening of the 10th of that month. At that time the discussion was commenced. Rotten eggs were thrown and fire crackers burned to create confusion. Several arrests were made and order restored. After the adjournment of the meeting the stand was taken possession of by outsiders and a resolution adopted declaring "that the people of this city have been outraged by the discussion of treasonable doctrines by a public felon, and that we will not submit to such an outrage in the future." A few days later a prominent Sacramento daily, in referring to the meeting, said editorially:

The fact that a public discussion was permitted to take place in a public street in the heart of our city, in the presence of a large concourse of citizens, mostly all of whom disapprove of the doctrines advocated by the speakers, and this, too, when it is the firm conviction of a large majority of the persons assembled that the agitation of the slavery question as the basis of political party organization, is against the true interest of the State and the nation, speaks volumes in favor of the public morals in Sacramento.

The second Republican Convention held here was on August 27, 1856, at which nominations for Presidential electors and for some State officers were made. That year there were three Presidential tickets in the field and the Democratic ticket was carried in the State.

In 1857 the Republicans first nominated a full State ticket. The convention met on July 8th. Edward Stanly was nominated for Governor over Col. E. D. Baker, D. R. Ashley, Trenor W. Park and I. P. Rankin. Leland Stanford was nominated for State Treasurer, and A. A. Sargent for Attorney General. At the election held September 2d, the Democratic ticket was successful, and the Republicans came out third.

In 1858 the Democratic party split upon the question of the extension of slavery into Kansas, and the pro-slavery wing of the party was successful, over the Republicans and the Northern section of the Democracy.

In 1859 there were again three complete State tickets nominated. Leland Stanford was the nominee for Governor of the Republicans. John Curry of the Northern Democrats and Milton S. Latham of the Southern administration wing of the Democratic party. The campaign was the most bitter and exciting in the history of the State. Latham was elected, having received 62,255 votes, to 31,298 for Curry, and 10,110 for Stanford.

In 1860 there were four Presidential tickets presented, and the Republicans gained their first victory in California, the electors selected being in favor of Abraham Lincoln for President.

The Legislature elected at that election consisted in the Senate of nineteen Douglas Democrats, five Republicans and eleven Breckinridge Democrats; in the Assembly of thirty-eight Douglas members, nineteen Republicans and twenty-three Breckinridge members. An organization was not effected in the lower house until 109 ballots had been taken for Speaker.

At the time of the outbreak of the Civil War the national military in this department were under command of General Albert Sydney Johnston, a pronounced sympathizer with the South, and who was killed at the battle of Shiloh, April 6, 1862. The State administration was Democratic. Upon the announcement that the Southern States had seceded the scheme of forming a Pacific Republic in California was discussed. The delegation from the State in Congress were openly favorable to it. In January, 1861, Volney E. Howard published a lengthy open letter in the San Francisco Herald, addressed to Col. E. D. Baker, in which he maintained that the Legislature had no right to pledge the State to either side of the question of secession, and said in substance, "I know it to be impossible for you, the people of California, to join a Southern Confederacy, but I pray you not to join a Northern one, and to avoid the latter alternative I urge you to organize a Pacific Republic." Several of the prominent newspapers in San Francisco were equally bold in advising that course, and they pictured the advantages to flow from the new order of things. In some of the resolutions introduced in the Legislature, a Republic of this character was outlined. Early in that year the Chairman of the Breckinridge State Central Committee issued a call for a committee meeting "to consider the perilous crisis in our national affairs, and to arrange for the State Convention." In his call were contained the following remarkable series of questions and declarations:

Let us have Union, if we can; peaceable dissolution, if we must; but conflict, never.

If peaceable dissolution comes, why should not California remain with the free States?

If a bloody separation, why should she not establish a Pacific nationality?

Is she willing to be dragged into a war against a Southern confederation of her sisters, should such confederation be irrevocably established?

Ought not she to demand of the other free States to consent to a peaceable separation (if any must come), as an unyielding condition of her remaining with them?

Does not Lincoln's foreshadowed policy of executing the laws over seceded States, imply force, coercion, war?

Are our people ready to be plunged into anarchy, and suffer the ravages of such a war?

These are the momentous questions to be considered, and which, it is feared, will too soon require action.

In March, the same gentleman wrote a letter, in which he reconsidered that portion of his call that was adverse to the proposition of fusing the two wings of the Democratic party, and after admitting that a strong desire for such a Union existed, he intimated that by the 20th of March, when Lincoln's policy would be known, there would be little difficulty in effecting a union. His committee met on the 2d of April, and adopted an elaborate address to the members of the party. The test at the primaries was "Are you opposed to coercion? Are you in favor of amendments to the Constitution in accordance with the doctrine laid down by the Peace Convention?" The address opposed coercion and favored reconciliation and concession, and in it occurred this doleful picture of the horrors of civil war:

What will be the consequences of war? No mortal man can fully foretell. By the experience of nations, and the light of history, we can see conscript laws dragging the sons of toil into military service, families decimated, industry paralyzed, commerce destroyed, individuals and States bankrupted, ruin, gloom and desolation in the land—the civil yielding to the martial law—military spirit and military chiefs rising, millions of lives sacrificed, finally ending in despotism, with liberty lost forever. For what purpose are we to have war? Is it to preserve a Union by force? Will you make the South love the North at the point of the bayonet, and consent to live with her as a family of States? It is madness! madness!! madness!!! After a hundred victorious battles in favor of the North, she would need an immense standing army to hold her conquered possessions.

Later on in the same year, the convention thus called assembled, and a platform was adopted, which, among other things, recited:

That we are opposed to the employment of force by the General Government against the seceded States, for the purpose of compelling obedience and submission to Federal authority.

That we are in favor of the preservation of the Union upon constitutional guarantees which will be acceptable to both sections of the Confederacy; but if that desirable consummation be impossible, then we are in favor of the recognition of the independence of the Confederate States, and a treaty of amity and peace between them and the United States Government, as the only alternative which will terminate the horrors of civil war and bring back peace and happiness to our distracted country.

That the President of the United States (Lincoln) has been guilty of violation of the Constitution, and usurpation of power, in borrowing and appropriating money, raising armies and increasing the navy, without the authority of Congress, and that such acts are dangerous to liberty, and tend to convert the Government into a military despotism.

That convention nominated John R. McConnell for Governor, and a full State ticket. During the progress of the convention several secession speeches were made, the most remarkable of which was delivered by Edmund Randolph, who declined the nomination for Attorney-General, and announced that he was opposed to President Lincoln's policy and the war. In the course of his remarks he said:

If that be the Democratic party represented by yourselves, then I am with you (applause). If it be any other party, under any other name, represented by anybody else under God's heaven, then I am with them. My thoughts and my heart are not here to-night in this house. Far to the East, in the homes from which we came, tyranny and usurpation, with arms in its hands, is this night, perhaps, slaughtering our fathers, our brothers and our sisters, and outraging our homes in every conceivable way shocking to the heart of humanity and freedom. To me it seems a waste of time to talk. For God's sake tell me of battles fought and won. Tell me of usurpers overthrown; that Missouri is again a free State, no longer crushed under the armed heel of a reckless and odious despot. Tell me that the State of Maryland lives again; and, oh! let us hear at the first moment that not one hostile foot now treads the soil of Virginia (applause and cheers). If this be rebellion, then I am a rebel. Do you want a traitor, then am I a traitor. For God's sake, speed the ball; may the lead go quick to his heart, and may our country be free from this despot usurper that now claims the name of President of the United States (cheers).

The Republican Convention met on June 18th, and was presided over by Aaron A. Sargent. In its declaration of principles, the convention declared:

That the Union of all the States must be preserved, the Federal Constitution sustained, and the national flag respected wherever it waves.

That we heartily endorse and approve the firm, bold and energetic course of the present administration in its defense of the national territory and property from the attacks of rebels and traitors, and we pledge ourselves and all that we have, to sustain the Federal Government, in the use of all its powers, in maintaining the constitution, enforcing the laws, recapturing and preserving the national forts, arsenals and other property, punishing traitors, and in defending Union men in all parts of the country.

That the doctrine that a State is superior to the Federal Government, and that the former have a paramount claim to our allegiance, and the consequent assumption of the right of secession, is repugnant to the Constitution, and to every principle of our system of government, and can only result in the destruction of the Union and the establishment of a general anarchy.

That we point with pride to the general uprising of the people, of all classes and all parties, both native and foreign born, in support of the Federal administration, as giving assurance to the world that we have a government fixed in the hearts of the people, and which is able to withstand all shocks, whether from domestic traitors or foreign foes, and as giving further assurance of a speedy return of peace, by a thorough crushing out of rebellion.

That we invite all who love the Union and the Constitution, and who favor the enforcement of the laws, to unite with us in one great administration party, in the support of the Federal Government, and the defense and vindication of the national flag.

That convention nominated Leland Stanford for Governor and a full State ticket. The Union Democratic Convention met later on and nominated John Conness for Governor. The election was held September 4th, and resulted in a complete triumph for the Republican ticket. The campaign was attended with excitement, particularly in the city of San Francisco. The vote for Governor stood: Stanford, 56,036; Conness, 30,944; McConnell, 32,750. On January 10, 1862, Mr. Stanford was inaugurated Governor, and assumed the duties of his office at a critical period in State as well as national affairs. Speaking of this event, a writer intimate with the situation said:

The country was in the midst of an internal war, the magnitude of which startled the people and paralyzed the various industries of the land. There had been few daring enough to predict its inception—none farseeing enough to foretell how it would end. The mutterings of the impending conflict had been for a long time borne upon every breeze, and the shock of battle that followed the bursting storm was earnest and deadly. The election in California, the previous fall, had been watched with peculiar interest by both the contending parties. The secessionists of the South were sanguine that the democracy could not be driven from the stronghold they had occupied so long; while the loyal men of the North, hoping almost against hope itself, were earnest in their aspirations that California might declare herself on the side of justice and of right. Mr. Stanford had spent much time subsequent to Mr. Lincoln's inauguration at the National Capital, and had been cordially received as a leading and representative Republican of the Pacific Coast. Among the few who visited the President without special office at his hands, he very soon won Mr. Lincoln's regard, and became his principal adviser in the difficult task of distributing the official patronage in California. His nomination to the office of Governor, and his triumphant election, were hailed, therefore, with delight by all who were connected with the National Republican administration.

It is impossible in the limited scope of a single newspaper article to review the administration of the War Governor of California. At the close of his term, the Legislature bestowed upon him the unusual compliment of a concurrent resolution, passed by the unanimous vote of all parties, in which it was "Resolved, by the Assembly, the Senate concurring: That the thanks of the people of California are merited, and are hereby tendered to Leland Stanford, for the able, upright and faithful manner in which he has discharged the duties of Governor of the State of California for the past two years."

The Stage.

[Under this caption will appear a fair and impartial criticism of the drama, actors, music, and all noteworthy matters pertaining to the stage.]

Mrs. Langtry has the gout; her head has been swollen for several years.

The Slowaway will be produced here next week for the first time. It is said to be great.

Murray and Murphy's Irish Visitors has little to commend. There is not a new or original idea in the outfit.

Tom Keene played Richieu and Richard III at Minneapolis on the 17th and 18th of this month. He did an excellent business.

The Bobby Gaylor that Boucicault is writing an Irish drama for, gained his first notoriety in this city in eccentric Irish character, while engaged in a variety company.

Mile. Sophie Apineszela, the famous Norwegian songstress, is to become the wife of a rising Boston lawyer. We are bound to have the leading prima donnas if we have to furnish husbands for them.

Marcella Sembrich, next to Patti the most accomplished singer in the Italian school, has yielded to the pressure of German music and is studying the role of "Elsa" in Lohengrin, in the expectation of soon singing in it at Berlin.

Margaret Mather, with a well balanced company, has given us an enjoyable season of the legitimate drama. It is no fulsome adulation to say that Margaret Mather is one of the foremost actresses of the day. Her ability extends over a wide range, including the tragedy, emotional and comedy. Miss Mather has made the dramatic art a life study, and with genius and talent combined, has obtained a high place in the art divine.

Edwin Booth has not given up smoking, as has been reported. He was observed recently at a small railway station on the Connecticut shore of Long Island Sound dressed in gray and puffing a black, strong cigar with the air of an enthusiast. His face was pale, his eyes haggard, and he walked like an old man. One shoulder was at least two inches above the other. Those who saw him were astonished at his feeble appearance.

Last week George C. Staley, a young man who made his first start in this city, produced his new play, A Royal Pass, at Minneapolis to fine houses. The drama is said to possess strength and merit. The scenes are laid in Russia and Switzerland. George Staley assumes the dual role of "Ivan Zotoff," the Swiss guide, and "Andreas Hoffer," a Russian officer. As an old time Sacramentan and a good fellow, we are glad Mr. Staley is doing well.

The soldier in opera, drama and comedy seems to have the call, as the saying is, at present. We have in several of the theatres just now operas, dramas and comedies running to large houses in all of which the soldier is either the central figure or a prominent feature. Clover and Paola in opera, Bootie's Baby in comedy, Shenandoah and Ferdinande in drama, all have soldiers. And there's more to come with our old friends Paul Kaurar and The Drum Major.

Book Chat.

Brander Matthews will soon bring out a volume of short stories.

The czarina of Russia is studying modern Greek. She must find relief from Russian in some way.

Algernon Charles Swinburne has red hair. He doesn't care, however, so long as his poems are read.

Colonel George W. Williams, the well-known historian of the negro race in America, is about to visit the Congo Free State.

Robert Browning has thirty-two new poems ready for the press. It may require a little pressing to get anybody to read them.

Eliza Cook, a distinguished English writer and poetess, died at Wimbledon, England, on September 25th. She reached the ripe age of seventy-two.

Bret Harte's British popularity seems to retain more vitality than his popularity in America. Harte's next serial will appear in Pick-Me-Up, the London society journal.

Oliver Wendell Holmes is a most methodical worker, and when he has any task in hand makes it a rule to spend a certain number of hours at his desk every day, writing and re-writing with infinite care.

Julian Hawthorne declares that there is more wickedness to the square mile in London than any other place in the world. Hawthorne might modify this judgment if he would only visit Sacramento during fair time.

A Japanese romance, with the puzzling and odd title, "The Moon Shining Through a Cloud Rent on a Rainy Night," has been translated into English. The author's name is Bakin, and his style is said to resemble that of Rider Haggard.

According to report the world will get no more pleasant tales from the united pens of Breckmann and Chatrian. These Alsatian collaborators of years are said to have quarreled over a division of profits from the plays made out of their stories.

"Grisette," the sensational novel by "Lew Rosen," has reached its thirty-first thousand. Most of its characters are understood to be drawn from well-known local personages in New York, and this is perhaps one of the chief reasons for its "run."

William Black says that he never writes more than three hours a day—two after breakfast and one after dinner. During the rest of the day he walks or reads or writes letters. He writes rapidly, and makes few erasures. "I rarely attempt analysis," he says, "and I am never didactic. I write to please." Seldom has a writer more surely accomplished his object than has Mr. Black in this particular.

Editor Stone, of the New York Journal of Commerce, has not taken a day's rest from routine work for thirty years. He has not missed a day at his desk since the death of his wife. He has not been sick once since he began editorial work. He recently gave his recipe for retaining perfect health in journalistic labors. It ran thus: "Plenty of exercise, plenty of sleep, and plenty of religion." It is thought to be religion chiefly which sustains Mr. Stone and Colonel Shepard.

William Dean Howells is another of our authors who think they are at their best, mentally, in the quiet hours of early morning. He always endeavors to have the greatest part of his day's work done before dinner hour. He writes from 1,000 to 1,500 words daily, and after his pages have been copied on the typewriter he goes over the second draft, again and again, adding a word here and erasing a line there, as his nice sense of proportion dictates. Even after his manuscript has left his hands, he is never satisfied, and the way in which he lines and interlines his proof slips makes them the bngbear of the compositor.

Lamb's ideas of book marking are to be found in his correspondence with Coleridge, in which he states that a book reads the better when the topography of its plots and notes is thoroughly mastered, and when we "can trace the dirt on it, to having read it at tea with buttered muffins, or over a pipe." Lamb's library consisted for the most part of tattered volumes in a dreadful state of repair. Young, the poet, "dog-eared" his books to such an extent that many of them would hardly close at all; while Voltaire and Montaigne were never so happy as when scoring over the leaves with pen and ink; and this practice they followed even in the case of borrowed books.

Wilkie Collins was one of the modern masters of fiction writings. His works have a place in the literary world equal with any novelist. He never had the advantages of a thorough collegiate training, gaining his education at a private school. He commenced his literary career about 1850, and since that time has given the world very many popular novels, such as "After Dark," "The Dark Secret," "The Woman in White," "No Name," "Armada," "The Moonstone," "Man and Wife," "New Magdalen," "Hide and Seek," "Antoniana," "Basil," "Mr. Way's Cash Box," and a number of dramas and miscellaneous works. William Wilkie Collins was born in London in January, 1824, and died September 23, 1889.

Professional Chat.

The following episode occurred at Chicago: A German had got into a row with a quarrelsome Irishman, who had long been a terror in his neighborhood, and the Irishman had been left stone-dead on the field. A young and inexperienced lawyer undertook the defense of the German, and just before the case was to be tried, he found, to his dismay, that the jury was composed of eleven combative-looking countrymen of the murdered man, the twelfth man being a German. This, of course, would never do. A "defense fund" was immediately raised, and the German was approached with all due caution, and the promise that if he managed to get the accused off with a verdict of manslaughter, it would be worth $1,000 to him; all he had to do was to stick to that one word, "manslaughter." Well, the verdict came in "manslaughter" in great shape, and the joyful attorney for the defense couldn't get the $1,000 into the German's hands too quick. Shaking hands with him after the money was placed, he slapped him on the back and said: "You did nobly; you must have had an awful time making those Irishmen agree to simple manslaughter." "Veil, I should say so," replied Schmidt, "dey was all for acquittal."

No one will dispute the fact that General Hart has an exalted opinion of himself and his abilities. It was while he was Attorney-General of this State, there was some of the most important litigation, involving hundreds of thousands of dollars, as well as great principles of law. Among these suits were the noted railroad tax cases, which were carried on appeal to the Federal Supreme Court at Washington. The railroad company had secured some of the ablest counsel in the United States on that side of the case. Now, as said before, General Hart was very proud of his conduct of these cases, and was determined to see them through at Washington, and was somewhat boastful of how he was going to annihilate opposing counsel. One day, shortly before the time for the General to depart for Washington to argue the cases, he was in conversation with his brother, Tom Hart—who, by the way, is one of the sharpest wits in the country—and informed him, with an important and significant gesture of the body peculiar to him, how he was just going to paralyze the lawyers on the other side, when he argued the cases. "By the way," said Tom, "who are the attorneys for the railroad?" "Oh," said Gus, with an off hand, careless indifference, "Conkling, Edmunds, Sanderson and some others." "Well, Gus," said Tom, "I don't think you are doing right in this case." "Why," said the General, "what do you mean?" "Well," said Tom, "you should telegraph on to Conkling and Edmunds that you are coming, and not try to take advantage by this surprise." General Hart did, however, proceed to Washington, and made the great argument of his life.

There is a good story that Judge Van Fleet often tells on himself. A number of years ago, and long before he donned the ermine, "Van," as he was familiarly called, was retained in an important litigation involving the rights of minors in some valuable real estate. "Van's" client and retainer was an old Irish woman, and who, in fact, did not have any very clear title to the property in dispute. This fact was made known to the client, but lawyer-like "Van" concluded to take chances. A bargain was made that he was to have one half of the property secured. Even with this division, the old woman would, in fact, get more than she was entitled to. Shortly after this agreement some complications arose that frightened the old lady, and she called upon her counsel with much misgivings. "Van" saw that she was troubled, and divined what was in her mind; so in order to help her along, he suggested that perhaps she would like to secure assistant counsel in the case. The old lady at once brightened up, and admitted that she would like to do so, as the case was important. "Van" told her that, while he was satisfied that he could properly handle the case, still he thought she might be better satisfied if other counsel should be called in to assist. "I have no doubt of my ability to carry the case through successfully, but will accede to your wishes," said the attorney. The old lady spoke up in an earnest manner, saying, "I don't doubt your ability, Mr. Van Fleet, but I don't think you know enough." Van Fleet did not get angry at his client, because it was evidently one of her Hibernianisms, which really intended to convey the idea that he was young and lacked experience. In justice to the Judge, it should be stated that, while the old lady did secure assistant counsel, the case was managed and tried solely by Van Fleet, and he won it, much to the gratification of his client, who thought he did not know enough.

NOTES.

Five Congressmen have died since the last election, and who would have taken part in the organization of the next Congress had they lived.

A Michigan man saw his wife's foot sticking up above the lower end of the bed and mistook it for a burglar, and shot at it. His wife now limps.

A lawyer in one of the Southern cities was arguing a case in court when he was attacked by rheumatism of the heart and fell dead. It is something of an admission to concede that lawyers have hearts.

The flirtations between the young members of the Chinese Embassy and the silly girls at Washington became so marked that even the Chinese Minister had to issue orders to his attaches to desist. This is pretty tough on the Washington society girls.

The Louisiana people are excited because some one has scooped the treasury of a few hundred thousand dollars. There can be little sympathy for our creole brethren, for they have levied heavy bandit contributions on the people of the other States for many years through their lottery schemes.

The Turks are making it lively for Christians on the island of Crete. These followers of Mahomet can never be brought to respect the rights of any other people, and have little regard for the rights of each other. From the latest reports the Christians had been robbed of their cattle and property, and many were compelled to seek personal safety in flight to the mountains.

There are "Dogberrys" among doctors. Here is a diagnosis that will apply to any school of physicians: A man suffering with dropsy in one of his lower limbs was brought into a hospital. An elderly doctor examined the patient first, and then, by way of explaining the pathology of the case to several younger doctors present, he said: "Gentlemen, it is evident that this man is suffering from dropsy, because his legs hang down."

Mississippi Republicans have had the temerity to nominate a State ticket, whereupon the Democratic committee issued a circular which declares that "our own people who join this soulless band of plunderers are the enemies of our civilization," who "deserve all the obloquy and scorn due to conspirators in infamy." This kind of Democracy wouldn't go down in the North, but goes pretty generally in the South; it causes less trouble than the rifle, but is quite as effectual with the whites. For "the niggers" the old method is applied—the bullwhip and the tar bucket, and if necessary the shotgun.

Let the people understand that party politics should have nothing to do with the selection of fifteen freeholders to frame a new charter. Representative business men who are familiar with the needs of the people and conversant with legislation should be elected to this responsible trust. There is no provision in the constitutional amendment authorizing compensation for the freeholders in the performance of this labor, yet it is within the power of the trustees to fix a compensation if they so elect. It is altogether probable, however, that the gentlemen who may be selected could not accept any compensation, other than for the services of secretaries and officers of the Board of Freeholders.

Love That Kills.

While Sister Camille was walking alone in the hall of the Sacred Heart Convent in Emporia, a man supposed to be Frank Murray of Terre Haute, Ind., stepped behind her and choked and beat her until she was unconscious. He then jumped on and kicked Sister Camille's prostrate form until he supposed she was dead, and then left the convent, and has so far evaded the police. This is the third murderous assault made by Murray in the past two months, but the fact had been kept from the public heretofore. Murray was a railroad man of Terre Haute, and Sister Camille was one of the nurses in the Catholic Hospital there. Murray was taken to the hospital during an attack of sickness, and when he was convalescent he tried repeatedly to make love to the sister, and insisted that she should elope and go with him, forswearing her vows. She scorned his pleadings, and when he had recovered and been discharged from the hospital he continued his persecutions until she asked to be removed to some other place. Finally she was sent to Emporia, Kansas. In some way Murray learned of her whereabouts and followed her. Yesterday the sister stated that before attacking her he told her his love had turned to hatred, and that he would kill her if it cost him his life. Her condition is critical, her head and body being a mass of frightful bruises and lacerations.

Sutter's Fort.

The San Francisco Post, in criticism of an article in THEMIS relative to the purchase of Sutter's Fort, its restoration and maintenance, and of the intimation that the Legislature would "contribute with liberality to the acquisition and restoration of the property, were attention called to it at the next session," said in effect that Sacramento had been accustomed to expect much from the State Treasury to aid in the establishment of State improvements here, and that it had almost become dependent on State aid. The editor of the Post is evidently a new comer, not acquainted with the history of public buildings and grounds in this State. In the purchase of the lands now constituting the race grounds of the State Agricultural Society, and the Capital Park, in which are located the State Capitol, State Printing Office and the Exposition Building of the State Agricultural Society, the people of Sacramento taxed themselves, and in fact paid for them. When the proposition was made to erect a new pavilion for the State Agricultural Society, at a cost of $80,000, Sacramento city voted to pay one half of the cost, and promptly furnished the $40,000. Will the Post say that any other county has done as well? The people of this city have not been and are not now seeking aid from the State. We have done as much for the State, and more, than the State has done for us. Our condition, in the way of prosperity, places us beyond the small matter of asking favors. The Post assumes that the acquisition, restoration and maintenance of the Sutter Fort property affects Sacramento city only. It is of interest to the people of the State. As well might it have been said that the people of El Dorado county should have erected the monument to Marshall, in that the gold was discovered in that county in 1848. That event was an epoch in the history of this State, and related beyond the immediate locality where it transpired. Likewise, the founding of Sutter's Fort has become a matter of State interest. True it is that, being situated near Sacramento, the people of our city feel they should do more for its acquisition and restoration than those elsewhere in the State. They are willing to do that. We understand that the proposition to purchase, restore and care for this property originated with the Native Sons. That these young men take an interest in the preservation of prominent mementoes of the past history of the State, is to their credit; that the State should assist them in the preservation of its own history, will not be discreditable. Other States as advanced as this have stunted not to preserve their histories. With them the narrow question of locality has not been considered to the extent the Post intimates. We believe that the editor of the Post did not duly consider what he wrote.

Grand Jurors.

The following named citizens were drawn yesterday by Judge Armstrong, Clerk Hailton and Sheriff McMullen, to act as Grand Jurors. They will meet for organization Oct. 7th, at 10 A. M.: O. Lovdal, Oak Hall; T. C. May, Sr., city; Henry Keema, Franklin; B. Leonard, city; George W. Maxfield, Florin; W. D. Stalker, city; Arthur Miller, city; Charles Rippon, city; A. Wertheim, city; E. M. Leitch, city; C. W. Harvey, Galt; Wm. Gutenberg, city; David Coons, Elk Grove; John Brewster, Galt; J. J. Bailey, Howell's; P. Scheld, city; H. S. Putney, Hicksville; F. McFessel, city; S. Gottlieb, city; Francis E. Connor, Michigan Bar; N. Wilcox, Guthrie's; John Mackey, Couch's; N. Ewers, city; S. Wasserman, city; Thomas Dwyer, city; J. A. Elder, Howell's; C. S. Houghton, city; Charles Studarus, Patterson's; Charles Jolly, Folsom; John Beck, Guthrie's. The term for which the jury is called to serve extends till January next.

The October trial calendar was set in Judge Armstrong's Department yesterday. The ensuing term will evidently be a laborious one.

Judge Van Fleet rendered his decision on the merits in the case of J. R. Laine vs. G. G. Tyrrell in favor of ousting the latter and giving the office of member of the State Board of Health to the former.

Strenuous efforts are being made to secure from Governor Waterman a commutation of the sentence of Olsen and Drager, the Lowell murderers, from death to imprisonment for life. Counselors Carpenter and Irwin are untiring in their efforts in behalf of the unfortunates.

In the case of George Nelson, under conviction for robbery, some newly discovered evidence in support of his innocence was given yesterday as a ground for a new trial. The further hearing was postponed until next Friday. There is a strong impression that Nelson has been made the victim of circumstances.

Prophetic Admonition from Barwick.

EDITORS THEMIS: January 18, 1887, I wrote an article for the Record Union, calling attention to the recurring cycle of a dry season every thirteen years, and that the season of 1889-90 should be a very dry one, in fact the driest one since 1876-77. During the thirteen years after the first record of a dry season, which was 1850-51, there was a grand total of 241.47 inches, up to and including the second dry season, of 1863-64. The second thirteen years gave a grand total of 251.16 inches, which was 9.69 inches more than was precipitated during the first thirteen years. This data would lead one to believe that by cultivation, irrigation, and no doubt assisted by the construction of telegraph lines and railroad tracks, that our rainfall is gradually increasing, and that for the coming season (which in a record of forty years should be a dry one) there will be a greater rainfall than has previously fallen during any one of the dry years concluding the end of the thirteen year cycle, and if the thirteen years from the last dry season, of 1876-77, gives as much of an increase of precipitation over the second cycle of 13 years, as did the second over the first cycle, then the coming season of 1889-90 should give us between 11 and 12 inches of moisture; if there is that much rainfall, properly distributed, then we need not fear the dry seasons that we must necessarily expect every 13 years.

These deductions can be legitimately made on a scientific basis deduced from accurate data, which goes to show the constancy and unchangeability of climates not only in this State but throughout the entire world. A recapitulation in brief is as follows:

	INCHES.
First record of dry season, 1850-51, total rainfall	4.71
Total precipitation of first 13 years ending with a dry season	241.47
Total precipitation of second 13 years ending with a dry season	251.16
Increase of second cycle of 13 years over first	9.69
Total precipitation of 12 years from last cycle of 15 years	249.53
Total amount rain that should fall for 1889-90 to equal second cycle of 13 years	1.53
Total amount rain that should fall for 1889-90 to make the increase of this 13-year cycle's excess equal to the increase of second cycle over first	11.22

It will be seen that the 12 years of the present 13-year cycle has already had 8.16 inches more than the entire 13 years of first cycle, and within 1.53 inches as much as the entire second cycle of 13 years. Dry season of 1850-51 gave 4.71 inches. Dry season, end of first cycle of 13 years, gave 7.87 inches. Dry season, end of second cycle of 13 years, gave 8.96 inches, with an extra dry season in its midst of 8.47 inches in 1870-71. Season of 1889-90, end of third cycle of 13 years—guess it who can.

SERGEANT JAMES A. BARWICK, Observer Signal Corps.

A Thrifty Journal.

The Placer Republican has just closed its fifth volume, and its prosperity is marked. Early this year the Republican took a new departure and discarded all patent "outsides" and "boiler plates." The improvement has been recognized and approved by its constituency. People know the difference between patent circulars and a legitimate newspaper.

GENERAL NEWS ITEMS.

There are extensive floods in Mexico, which have caused great damage.

There is a great labor strike at Rotterdam. Collector Phelps holds the gates closed very tight against the admission of Mongolians.

Knowing ones predict that all the new States, except Montana, will go Republican.

The Governor of North Carolina does not want Geronimo and his band of murderous redskins.

Henry Irving has invoked the aid of the Lord Chamberlain to stop Leslie's burlesque of him in petticoats. Gaiety, the manager, says if obliged to suppress the caricature of Irving he will substitute that of Kyrle Bellew.

An Amador county man is suspected of poisoning his wife. His name is Bacigalupi.

It is understood that Chinamen are landing in Mexico at the seaport of Tampico, and thence make their way to Texas. The press demands that the Government shall forbid the admission into Mexico of Syrian and Turkish beggars.

Orders have been given to hold 50,000 troops in readiness to occupy the railway in case the Czar returns home directly from Berlin.

The forest fires are still raging in the Santa Cruz mountains, and in Sierra county.

Twenty ear loads of raisins were shipped to the Eastern market from Fresno yesterday.

There was a fatal stage accident at Fernalde yesterday. The stage upset killing the son of Charles Miller. Two other persons were injured.

SNOWFLAKE PARK.

Twenty-eighth and R Streets.

BASEBALL—CALIFORNIA LEAGUE.

Saturday, September 28th
At 3 o'clock P. M., sharp.

Oakland vs. Sacramento.

Men, 25 cents | Ladies, 25 cents
Boys, 10 cents | Reserved, 25 cents

Train leaves depot at 2:45 P. M. Fare, for the round trip, 15 cents.

SNOWFLAKE PARK.

Twenty-eighth and R Streets.

BASEBALL—CALIFORNIA LEAGUE.

Sunday, September 29, 1889
At 2 o'clock P. M., sharp.

Sacramento vs. San Francisco.

Prices of admission: Men, 50 cents; ladies, 25 cents; small boys, 10 cents; reserved seats, 25 cents—can be obtained any time at C. S. Houghton's, J street, between Sixth and Seventh, or at Park before the game. Trains leave depot at 12:45, 1:05, 1:25, and 1:45 P. M., stopping at Third, Tenth and Eighteenth streets. Fare, for round trip, 15 cents. Admission to Park (including fare both ways), 50 cents.

AUCTION SALE

—OF—

City Real Estate

VALUABLE RESIDENCE PROPERTY FOR SALE AT AUCTION.

A Rare Opportunity for Investment and to Secure the Most Desirable Residence Property.

I will offer for sale, at Public Auction, at the premises to be sold, on Tuesday, Oct. 1, at 10 o'clock A. M.

That very desirable lot at the southwest corner of Tenth and O streets, being lot number four, between Ninth and Tenth and O and P streets, together with the double brick dwelling house thereon.

Also, that centrally located and very desirable lot, on which is situated a double two-story brick dwelling, and being the east half of lot three, between Eighth and Ninth, M and N streets.

These lots being so centrally and desirably located, and there being so few, if any, of such lots for sale, this affords a rare opportunity to obtain homes for two-thirds of what their value will be a year hence. Title perfect. For details inquire of

L. BELL, Auctioneer.

ADD. C. HINKSON, Attorney.

Fine Table
Wines

From our Celebrated Orleans Vineyard.

Producers of the
ECLIPSE
CHAMPAGNE,
530 Washington St.
SAN FRANCISCO

CHAMPAGNE

PERRIER-JOUËT

W. B. CHAPMAN,
123 California St. San Francisco.
SOLE AGENT FOR THE PACIFIC COAST

To be sold by all first-class Wine Merchants and Grocers.

SOCIAL AND PERSONAL.

Edward Christy of Folsom is in the city.

Judge J. C. Ball of Woodland is in the city.

W. E. Doan, the shorthand reporter, went to Marysville yesterday.

Mrs. A. Foye, and Miss Carrie Stevenson are home from their summer vacation.

Bishop Manogue, in company with Vicar General Lynch, left for Virginia City yesterday.

The following Knights Templar will depart Monday for Washington to attend the National Conclave in October: General George A. Johnson, W. H. Colclough, Dr. W. W. Light, R. S. Frazee, Frank A. Grimes, Captain Thomas B. Hall and wife, Dr. Obed Harvey, Galt; Perrin Stanton, wife and daughter, Hon. Dwight Hollister, wife and daughter, A. Meister and wife, W. C. Sheldon, Mrs. Addie Carter, Mrs. Annie Zimmerman, Mrs. R. Kercheval and daughter, Miss Ingham, Placerville; W. B. Davis, Robert Allen, John Barrett, George F. Bronner, Cornelius Swain, wife and daughter, Stockton; George H. Ashley, J. P. Fortune, Stockton; Aaron Evans and wife, St. Johns.

LOCAL BREVITIES.

Grove L. Johnson and N. Greene Curtis are both engaged in a murder trial at Oroville. Johnson for the prosecution and Curtis for defense. It has been a long time since Judge Curtis, the Nestor of the bar, had on the harness in an important murder trial.

Our Chinese denizens have occupied the week in the exercise of their religious rites in ejecting the evil one from their midst. Unless his Satanic Majesty is case-hardened, the hideous noises made with tom toms and squeaky instruments was ample to frighten him away.

Stop at Nolan & Sons' boot and shoe store and see the beautiful goods they have on hand. Winter is nearly here and all in need of anything in their line will save money by buying goods from this firm.

Another young man gone right. C. E. Reese, one of our Sacramento born boys, has started into business at 1122 J street. He carries in stock a full line of staple and fancy groceries, grain, feed, hardware, etc. Call and see him.

Passing along J street this morning, looking in the show windows of our merchants, our attention was called to the beautiful display of goods shown by Moynihan Bros., 418 J street, consisting of a new line of goods in Bon Bonniers for the ladies. It is remarkable at the success of these young men in our city, but it is easily accounted for, for it is the only first class place in the city.

A New Enterprise.

The Sacramento Lounge and Mattress Factory has been opened by Mr. A. Dittmar, and J. R. Wheat. These gentlemen are both well and favorably known in this city where they have lived for years. They are both masters of their trade and any work that they do is sure to give satisfaction. Their place of business is 916 J street. See their advertisement in to-day's THEMIS.

Benefit for Fire Laddies.

The Sacramento Fire Department Relief Fund needs replenishing, and a benefit entertainment has been arranged to take place Wednesday, October 2d, at the Metropolitan Theater. The old-time minstrel, Billy Arlington, assisted by home talent, will constitute the programme. Virgie Burrell and Baby Arlington will also take part. The whole management is under Chief Engineer O'Meara. This charity fund should be swelled roundly by this enterprise.

Too Modest to be Honest.

"Are you the editor of the paper?"
"I am. What can I do for you?"
"Well, I just thought I'd step up and see how you are. My wife and I are going to Cape May to-morrow."
"Indeed?"
"Yes; but I wouldn't have anything said about it in print, of course. My name is Simpkins—Azariah Simpkins."

"Glad to meet you, Mr. Simpkins, I'm sure."

"Now, don't go to putting anything into the paper about our going away. We start at 4 o'clock, and I reckon we'll be gone pretty near a month. I need the rest, and Mrs. Simpkins was getting kind of run down. Of course I know how anxious you newspaper men always are for an item, but we're plain people, and don't want any notoriety. My wife always likes to see 'Simpkins' spelt without a 'p,' but the old-fashioned way is good enough for me. Well, I know an editor's time is valuable, so I'll say good day. If I come across any murders or anything while I'm gone I'll let you know about them."—Washington Critic.

[There are plenty of "Simpkins" in this community.—Eds.]

What Dreams May Come?

There is a philosophy of dreams. This mental action, bordering on the supernatural, has been the source of philosophical investigation from the earliest epoch of human existence. Brilliant poems have been inspired through the portents of dreams. Artists, by the manifestations of the soul in sleep, have portrayed on canvas the pictures originated in the mystery of dreams. The writer, a few nights ago, was visited by one of these strange and unprompted manifestations in sleep. The vision formed a remarkable picture, unlike anything he had ever seen or heard of. So deep was the impression that the mystic picture made upon his mind, that an outline is here given, it being impossible to portray it as it struck the dreaming fancy: There was a wide river with somewhat murky water, rippled by the current, so as not to present a smooth surface; it flowed from east to west, and over a plateau until it reached a deep fall, when it again ran on to the westward. Along the banks there was rich verdure, and all colors of beautiful flowers, but no trees, or shrubs, and no sign of animal life. At a distant point in the west this stream abruptly descended into a bottomless abyss, not even producing an echo of the vanishing waters. The setting sun cast its reflecting rays upon fleecy clouds in golden and purple hues, and creating weird and fantastic figures just above the horizon. On this stream, as it passed on to its western abyss, there floated a lifeless human body; it was perfect in form and mould, and the flesh seemed like it was in life; bore no marks of decay, seeming more like perfect wax statuary. The body floated with the current onward towards the setting sun, whose declining rays shed a strange light upon the stream and its mysterious freight. He watched the floating body until it passed into the unfathomable abyss, when the dream picture suggested the name ETERNITY. Has any artist ever spread upon canvas a like picture? Homer says that dreams are sent by the gods and goddesses to those they love and wish to warn. The Stoics, according to Cicero, reasoned that the gods disclose their purposes to man in his sleep. Plato, in his mystic scheme of knowledge, believed in divine manifestations to the soul in sleep. Here, then, is a picture of ETERNITY brought to us in our sleep; what is the interpretation?

Barbers and Statesmen.

Statesmen and all dignitaries must bend to the inexorable and autocratic rules and laws governing barber shops. No man however great or powerful can encroach upon the rights of the poorest mechanic in the barber shop. Each must await his turn. We witnessed a striking as well as comical illustration of the barber laws on last Sunday at a fashionable tonsorial headquarters in San Francisco, where many of the upper tondom and statesmen assemble to have their dignified faces scraped in a truly artistic manner. We fell in with this select crowd to have an artistic shave, and according to the custom on Sundays, when there is a general rush, each patron is "tagged" as he enters the "parlors"—that is, he is given a brass check containing a number showing his proper place in the line of preference. Our number was "14." Immediately following us was Hon. W. W. Morrow, Congressman, who was tagged "15." We were quite low down on the list and had to wait for a considerable time; finally "14" was called, and we quickly took the chair. At this point it was developed that even barbers, with their inexorable laws, can be guilty of committing an error. Congressman Morrow was quietly reading the morning paper, waiting for the much desired announcement of his number, "15." Presently he was aroused from his reverie by the call of number "18." The Congressman jumped to his feet and approached the head man of the shop with the ejaculation, "Hell, how is this, my number is '15'?" The barber saw that a mistake had been made, and was anxious to smooth matters over with such a distinguished patron as Congressman Morrow, and tried to explain the error, but Morrow was angry—all men in a barber shop who are waiting become angry when they lose their turn, statesmen are no exception—he held out his tag, number "15," and said, "You had better keep this damned thing, it is evidently no use to me." The "boss" barber finally mollified the irate statesman, and when the next chair was vacant called out "No. 15," running the risk, however, of having a clash with the fellow who held "No. 19."

Auction Sale.

Bell & Co., auctioneers, will sell Tuesday, October 1st, at 10 o'clock, the following described property: First, lot 4, corner of Tenth and O streets, with two story double brick house; immediately after the east half, lot 3, M and N, Eighth and Ninth streets. This is very desirable property and must be sold. A C. Hinkson is attorney for the above.

FLASHES.

The waiter girl is maid to order.

Lawyers should live in the sue-burbs.

A corn always feels big in a tight place.

A woman can scold with her mouth full of pins. Ask any married man.

Doctors are the most generous men. They are always treating somebody.

The only monopolies that are legitimately allowed to winter their stock are cattle men.

Brands of cigars are often named after actresses. This is a good way to get puffed.

When a married man has to button his trousers with a hair pin, it is a sure sign there has been a disappointment in love affairs.

A Swiss cheese was recently made which weighed 700 pounds. What a lively aroma must have attended the cutting of this monster.

Bats are dangerous. Numerous bats make some of us very shaky. An umpire was killed by a bat. A bat will drive a room full of women to the street.

Three girls agreed to let each other read the last love letters they had received. There was considerable consternation when it developed that they were all written by the same young man.

Do you love me, dear?" asked Cholly, softly. "Well, Cholly," said Molly, "to tell the truth, I am not quite sure; but I think perhaps I could love you enough to be your wife if I could only manage to get your salary raised."

Disqualified for Jury Duty.—Attorney—Have you formed or expressed any opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the accused in this case?

Man Drawn as a Juror—No, sir; but I have sometimes thought—

Attorney (rising indignantly)—Your Honor, this man acknowledges that he sometimes thinks. It is hardly necessary to say that we shall challenge him as a juror.—Chicago Tribune.

New Ball Manager.

Thomas F. Gleason has assumed the management of the Sacramento team, and we look for a better showing in the future. Mr. Gleason was the original Alta manager, and inaugurated the base ball league in this city. His experience and good judgment may yet extricate our unfortunate nine from the mire and give them a place of prominence in the league. If hard work and careful training and management counts for anything Tom Gleason will make his administration a success. He has commenced his system of reorganization which will soon be consummated.

There will be a trial of skill between the Oakland and Sacramentos to-day at Snowflake Park. Game will be called at 3 p. m. To-morrow the Sacramentos and San Franciscos will cross bats at the same place. Game called at 2 p. m. Trains as usual.

STABLE TO LET!

INQUIRE AT

No. 1713 G STREET.

GO TO

Nolan & Son's

FOR

FINE SHOES,

BRANCH OF SAN FRANCISCO.

603 J Street, Sacramento.

The Only Retail House in Sacramento that manufactures their own goods.

Try Our Famous $3 Shoes.

C. E. REESE & CO.,

Wholesale and Retail Dealers in

Staple and Fancy Groceries,

GRAIN, FEED AND HARDWARE.

1122 J Street, between 11th and 12th.

The place where you can get the best value for your money in the city. If you don't believe it call and be convinced. Remember the number,

1122 J STREET.

Samples and Instructions for Self-measurement sent by mail on application.

L. RADLOFF,
LADIES' TAILOR,
218 POST STREET, SAN FRANCISCO.
Tailor Made Suits a Specialty.

Take a Ride on the Riverside Road

AND BE SURE AND STOP AT

BILLY GROENVELD'S

Sutterville House

And get a glass of COOL BEER. Or if you want a bottle of CHAMPAGNE Billy has it on hand, or anything else you may wish for in his line.

Always a FINE LUNCH on the Counter.

M. T. GROENVELD, Proprietor.

ANGLO-NEVADA ASSURANCE CORPORATION

OF SAN FRANCISCO.

FIRE.—Cash Capital, $2,000,000—MARINE.

Sacramento Branch:

No. 1018 SECOND STREET.

JOSEPH STEFFENS,
Manager.HOWARD KIMBROUGH,
Local Agent.R. DAVIS,
NOTARY PUBLIC,
Real Estate and Insurance Agent.

Representing the following companies:
Manchester of England; Caledonian of Edinburgh, Scotland; London and Lancaster, England.

1002 J Street, Sacramento.

Restaurant de France,

FAURE & BECKER, PROPRIETORS.

(Successors to L. Payen.)

No. 427 K Street, Near Metropolitan Theater.

Family Entrance on Fifth Street.

Catering to Families, Banquets and Wedding Parties a specialty Telephone 228.

NOTICE TO FRUITMEN!

Keep your trees free from scale and your apples from being wormy by the use of

Warner's Scale & Insect Exterminator

FOR SALE BY

G. T. NOE, — DRUGGIST,

AUBURN, CAL.

Put up in one-half gallon and quart cans.

A. AITKEN,

PREMIUM PIONEER MARBLE AND GRANITE WORKS

423 J Street, bet. 4th and 5th, Sacramento.

Costic Tile, etc. Cemetery lots enclosed with Granite. All kinds of work done in Italian and Vermont Marble. Direct importer of Scotch and Eastern Granite Monuments. Also, Marble, Slate, Wooden and Iron Mantels, direct from manufacturers, at Reduced Prices. Call and examine.

American Steam Laundry

NINETEENTH AND I STS.—WHITE LABOR only. Linen polished in the neatest manner. We guarantee satisfaction. All ordinary mending, sewing on buttons, etc., free of charge. Washing called for and delivered to any part of the city.

Main Office at Sawtelle's Book Store, 708 and 710 J street. Branch offices at all the Hotels.

REEVES & LONG, UNDERTAKERS,

609 J Street, bet. Sixth and Seventh.

WE KEEP ON HAND A COMPLETE stock of Coffins and Caskets; also, Shrouds of every description. Orders from city or country receive prompt attention, day or night. EMBALMING done in the best manner, and at reasonable rates.

The Bowsters and House Cleaning.

Last fall Mr. Bowser undertook to do our fall house-cleaning in fifteen minutes, but got discouraged and went off for a fortnight while I finished up. As I wanted to overhaul things a little this month, and as I wanted him out of the way, I said to him the other evening:

"Being you have been home all summer I should think you would want to take a little trip this fall."

"H'm!" he replied, as he looked up from his paper.

"You don't look a bit well, Mr. Bowser. Your face is haggard, and I believe you have lost twenty pounds of flesh this summer."

"This time he didn't say anything as he looked at me."

"If you wanted to go down to New Hampshire and see your relatives," I continued, "I could get you all ready in one day."

"Oh, you could!" he replied. "Mrs. Bowser, I see through your little game, and it won't work. You want to get me away so you can rip and tear and scrub and clean and wipe and dust and damage and destroy four-fifths of the contents of this house!"

"I want to clean just a little."

"Well, go ahead."

"But you—you—"

"Oh, yes; it's always me! One would think you were afraid to breathe unless I gave my consent in writing. Have I said a word against house-cleaning? Don't I know that house-cleaning must be done? I was wondering the other day when you were going to begin."

"But last year you raised such a fuss."

"Can't remember that I said one single word. If I did it was only in fun."

"And may I clean?"

"Not only that, but I'll help."

"But you needn't. You just be patient and put up with the muss for a few days, and I'll get—"

"As I said, I will help, Mrs. Bowser. It will be a sort of vacation for me. Don't you worry about my finding any fault."

It was with fear and trembling that I saw him put on an old suit of clothes next morning, and heard him say:

"I'll begin on the parlor first. It's now 9 o'clock. We ought to be through with the whole house in two hours."

"I—I'm afraid we are not so smart as that. We must go slow and give the house a thorough going over."

"Oh, we'll have everything shining like a new pin before we let up. You boss, and I'll do the work. You know, of course, that there is everything in the planning. Some folks make a whole week's job of house-cleaning simply because they don't know how to plan. Mother and I used to clean house in half an hour, and you know how particular she is."

After breakfast the cook came in, and said she was ready, and she likewise announced that the two colored women were in waiting.

"Waiting for what?"

"To help us clean," I replied.

"Send them right home! Five of us to clean house! Who ever heard of the like! Do you want the neighbors to think we have been shoveling dirt into the house all summer? I'll start those colored women for home, and I don't want any help from the cook. Let her attend to affairs in the kitchen."

He went out and "started" the two women I had engaged for six weeks, and then returned with the announcement that he was ready to start in on the spare bedroom, having already taken down the curtains and removed the bedding.

"All right—I'll have it done in five minutes!" he replied, as he spit on his hands. "You clear out and give me room to work. I think I can give you and all other women a pointer on house-cleaning."

I went down stairs, and it wasn't over seven minutes before he called to me:

"All right, Mrs. Bowser, your room is cleaned! Come up and show me what to do next."

"What have you done?" I asked, as I found him seated on the window-sill, with a complacent smile on his face.

"Cleaned the room. Every picture has been taken down and dusted, the bedstead wiped off, and I have swept the carpet. Your three or four women would have been two days accomplishing the same task, I have completed in less than ten minutes. I tell you, Mrs. Bowser, it is all in the planning."

"But that bedstead must come down, Mr. Bowser."

"What for?"

"Because the carpet must come up. Every thing must be moved out of the room and the floor cleaned."

"Well, I should like to know what for? What's the matter of this room just as it is?"

"Dust, Mr. Bowser. It blows and we can't help it. Moths get in now and then. If we don't do our work thoroughly we might as well let it go entirely. Take the bedstead down first."

"I'll take it down, but I protest. It's all bosh hunting out every speck of dust. No one else does it. Get out of the way!"

He made a grab for the springs and lifted them out, but in getting them clear of the rail he fell over backward and the springs fell upon him. He made use of several vigorous exclamations, kicked out in an effort to demolish them, and, as I assisted him to get up he roared:

"I told you that these things ought to be left alone! The fool who invented them never intended they should be moved!"

I calmed him down after a bit and then asked him to take down the bedstead. He grabbed the foot-board and gave a pull. Then he grabbed the head-board and gave a wrench.

"Mr. Bowser, don't you know how to take a bedstead apart?" I asked.

"Don't I? Well, if I don't no one else does! I was taking bedsteads apart ten years before you were born! You always have to loosen the joints a bit. Now then—"

"But you don't bear down on the rail. You must lift up at the ends."

"I think I know my business, Mrs. Bowser," he replied, as he worked away.

"But you don't. You are locking the rails instead of loosening them. See here."

I pulled at the end of a rail and unlocked it. Mr. Bowser backed off, crossed his hands on the small of his back and said:

"Mrs. Bowser, that settles it. I clearly see your object. We will have no more house-cleaning this fall. I see what it would lead to. When a wife gets the idea that she knows more than her husband it is time to hoist the danger signal. Just drop things right here. That is, unless you have planned to bring about this very thing to force a legal separation."

He dressed and went off down town, and I have been cleaning house in a guarded manner for the last week. I think he knows it, too, but he pretends ignorance as the best way out of the affair. I shall be all through in the course of a couple of days or more, and inside of a week I expect to hear Mr. Bowser observe:

"I was just looking around and noticing how clean and tidy everything is. It was a good thing I suggested house-cleaning this fall, and I don't think any body could have planned it better than I did. When we get ready to clean house in the spring I'll give you two or three more valuable pointers."—Detroit Free Press.

How He Squared Himself.

Mr. Stayathome (handing his wife the paper)—There, my love, read that account of the terrible destruction along the coast, and you will understand why I did not take you to the seashore this summer.

Mrs. Stayathome—And you knew all the time this tidal wave was coming, George?

Mr. S.—Yes, my dear. I had made astronomical calculations to that effect, but for fear I might be mistaken, I said nothing about it. Still, so positive was I that I was right, that I could not trust my little love within reach of the cruel waves.

Mrs. S.—Oh, George, can you ever forgive me for reproaching you?

Mr. S. (with great condescension)—Certainly, dear, certainly. Think no more about it.

And George lit a cigar and walked out on the lawn with the air of a man who had forgotten more than Solomon ever knew, and Mrs. S. believed he actually had.—New York World.

"I love you, Emeline, with all the fervor at my command," he said, as they strolled out East avenue.

"Yes, George," she replied, "I know it, and yet I would that you had told me of your love in some other terms. I have been loved with fervor, oh! so many times, and I do want this match to amount to something."

Little Fred (to his nurse)—Marie, you're a dandy kisser.

Mamma (reprovingly)—Freddie, dear, you mustn't say that. It is slang.

Fred—Papa says it to her.

Mamma—I don't think he will, dear, after I speak to him about it.

Mrs. N. Peck—I ran across one of your letters, to-day, Nathan, where you said you would rather be in endless torment with me than be in bliss by yourself.

Mr. N. Peck—Well, I guess I got my wish.

The Dead Sea.

The Dead Sea is so named from the old belief that no living thing could dwell in it, and that its exhalations were so poisonous that even birds flying over it dropped down dead. This is now known to be a greatly exaggerated account, as a few fish are to be found in it. Chateaubriand, indeed, alludes to the noise made by "multitudes of small fish, which come out of the lake and leap about on the shore." The inhabitants of the adjacent country regard the Dead Sea with feelings of terror, owing to the tradition that its waters cover the engulfed cities of Sodom and Gomorrah. "Those waters of death stretched into the Southern desert, and all around as far as the eye could follow, blank hills piled over hills, pale, yellow and naked, walled up in her tomb forever the dead Gomorrah. No fly hummed in the forbidden air, no grass grew from the earth, no weed peered through the void sand, but in mockery of life there were trees bowed down by Jordan in some ancient flood, and those grotesquely planted upon the forlorn shore, spread out their grim, skeleton arms, all scorched and charred to blackness by the beats of the long, silent years.

CHAS. J. FREDERICKS & CO.

Fashionable and Practical

HATTERS,

802 J STREET,

Importers and Manufacturers of

Fine Hats and Caps.

Latest Novelties on hand and constantly arriving. REPAIRING A SPECIALTY.

J. O. MILLS,

High Art Crayon Portraits

Executed from Life or Tin-types or Photographs. Inquire or leave orders at

406 J STREET, or 413 K STREET.

San Francisco Studio, 12 Dehone street, between Sixteenth and Seventeenth, Church and Sanchez streets. References: Timothy Lee, Chief of Police, Col. Guthrie, Capt. Fouratt.

O'BRIEN'S, 607 J.

SWEETING REDUCTION IN LADIES' SHOES.

Best French Kid, hand turn, worth $7, reduced to $6. Ladies' French Kid Button, low heel, long vamp, worth $5, reduced to $4. Misses' and Children's Canvas Shoes reduced 25 per cent.

FRIEND & TERRY LUMBER CO.

Wholesale and Retail Lumber Dealers, Also Shakes, Bolts, Ties, Doors, Windows, Blinds and Screens. Main Yard and Office, No. 1310 Second Street. Branch Yard, corner Twelfth and J Sts. P. O. Box 233. E. J. HOLT, Manager. Sacramento

OSBORN & FOLGER

DEALERS IN ICE and COAL, HAY and GRAIN. New 10-ton Fairbanks' Hay Scales. N. E. cor. Fifth and I Streets. Wood Yard, 806 I Street.

PAUL GRAF,

Manufacturer of and dealer in Saddles, Harness, Robes, Collars, Whips, Spurs, Brushes, Currycombs, etc.

1130 J Street, near Twelfth

Repairing Neatly Done. Harness Made to Order.

SECOND HAND

"REMINGTON" TYPE WRITERS

FOR RENT AND FOR SALE.

Type Writers' Supplies of All Kinds.

AT THE

YOST AGENCY, 1007 FOURTH STREET.

SCHOOL.

PUPILS of the Public Schools who wish to review during their vacation will find BAINBRIDGE COLLEGE the place. We make a specialty of Grammar School and High School Studies. No extra charge for Penmanship or Elocution drill. You can attend in the cool part of the day; hours, 8 A. M. to 1 P. M. J. C. BAINBRIDGE, Principal.

No. 1017 J Street, Sacramento.

King Bros.

State Capitol Cash Grocery, 131 J Street, corner Second.

Goods sold on small margin, strictly for cash. Best Brands of Wines, Liquors and Cigars.

A. L. HART,

ATTORNEY-AT-LAW

Sutter Building, cor. 5th and J.

W. A. ANDERSON,

ATTORNEY-AT-LAW,

No. 209 J Street,

Sacramento.

W. A. GETT, JR.,

Attorney at Law,

Southwest Corner of Seventh and J Streets,

SACRAMENTO, CAL.

F. F. TEBBETS, DENTIST.

No. 914 SIXTH STREET,

Bet. I and J, west side, opp. Congregational Church.

DR. H. H. PIERSON,

SURGICAL & MECHANICAL DENTIST

511 J Street, bet. 5th and 6th.

Gas administered for the painless extraction of teeth.

Joseph Hahn & Co., PHARMACISTS,

S. W. cor. Fifth and J Streets, Sacramento.

CHOICE PERFUMERIES, ETC.

Prescriptions carefully compounded, at all hours.

A. C. SWEETSER & CO.,

Real Estate & Insurance Brokers

Lands For Sale in all parts of the State.

Some Good Investments in School Lands.

Send for Catalogue.

Office, No. 1012 Fourth Street,

SACRAMENTO, CAL.

R. W. PARKER,

Dealer in Choice Family

GROCERIES and PROVISIONS

Sold at the Lowest Cash Price.

Give him a call and be convinced.

Corner of Seventeenth and N Streets.

Also, Office of the Superintendent of the City Cemetery.

BELL & CO., GENERAL AUCTIONEERS.

Salesroom, 927 K Street, Sacramento, Cal.

Regular Salesdays—Wednesdays and Saturdays at 10 o'clock A. M.

Assistants—W. T. Crowell, Real Estate; J. Pulvermacher, Bookkeeper; J. Lambert, Furniture and Stock.

Particular attention paid to sales of real estate, house sales, and sales of farms, stock, etc.

Highest price paid for all kinds of household goods.

Barrett & Berkey

PACIFIC RESTAURANT,

OYSTER HOUSE AND

WINE PARLORS

701 J Street, cor. 7th.

CANCERS,

Ulcers, Wens, Lumps, Excesses, etc., Positively Cured or No Pay. No Knife Used.

As to the success of my treatment, I give the names of a few of the many cured. By addressing them they will give any information required—and it pays to investigate before being treated.

Mrs. O. C. Neilsen, Grass Valley, cancer. John Service, Auburn, lupus. Patrick Lynch, Sacramento, cancer. Mrs. Jno. Shaw, Grass Val., birthmark removed. N. S. Peck, S. P. R. R. Sacramento, cancer. J. L. Woods, Washington, Yolo county, cancer. John W. Douglas, Rocklin, cancer. Miss Mainie Lynch, Yolo, tumor removed. Chas. McLaughlin, Sacramento, cancer.

I might give many more. Those afflicted are invited to call and investigate for themselves. Consultation at office free. Send for circular.

Office, 426 K Street, Sacramento.

DR. J. H. SHIRLEY.

ANHEUSER & BUSCH

BEER

Can be found on draught only at

John Gruhler's Saloon

No. 522 J STREET.

The finest and best Wines, Liquors and Cigars constantly on hand.

Patronize Home Industry!

CITY BREWERY

FRANK RUHSTALLER, Proprietor.

GENUINE

Pilsener Felsen Beer.

Corner Twelfth and H Streets,

Telephone 201. SACRAMENTO.

CELEBRATED

WEINER LAGER BEER

CAPITAL BREWERY

LOUIS NICOLAUS,

Corner Twelfth and I Streets

SACRAMENTO.

FIFTH AVENUE SALOON,

1015 Fifth Street, between J and K,

E. DIETERLE, Proprietor.

Philadelphia Lager Beer on draught, five cents a glass. Also, fine Wines, Liquors, Cigars, etc.

THE FINEST IN THE LAND.

Agent for the Celebrated W. J. LEMP'S ST. LOUIS LAGER BEER

WISSEMAN'S SALOON,

Klebetz & Green's Old Stand,

1020 Fourth St., bet. J and K, Sacramento.

GEO. WISSEMAN, PROPRIETOR.

Families and Saloons supplied by bottle or keg.

Butchers' Home,

1020 J Street,

Between 10th and 11th, : Sacramento, Cal.

Fine Wines, Liquors and Cigars. Also,

BOCA BEER ON DRAUGHT.

JACOB GRUHLER, Prop'r.

CAPITAL ALE VAULTS.

Established in 1870, and still maintains the same reputation for keeping the best WINES, LIQUORS and Cigars in the city. The finest Hot Lunch in the city from 11 to 2. Clam Chowder a specialty every night.

NAGELE & SVENSSON, Prop'rs.

Telephone 38. 302 J and 1005 Third st.

H. WACHHORST

Leading Jeweler of Sacramento

SIGN OF THE TOWN CLOCK,

No. 315 J STREET, SACRAMENTO.

A. G. JOHNSON.

CLAUS ANDERSON.

ANDERSON & JOHNSON,

The Leading Merchant Tailors,

SUITS MADE TO ORDER AT REASONABLE RATES.

No. 1014 Seventh Street, : : : Sacramento.

J. R. Wheat.

DITTMAR & WHEAT,

A. Dittmar.

Sacramento Lounge & Mattress Factory

BEDDING.

FURNITURE

No. 916 J STREET.

BAKER & HAMILTON,

San Francisco and Sacramento,

Importers and Jobbers of

Hardware, Iron, Steel, Coal, Powder,

MACHINERY

And Agricultural Implements.

Send for Catalogue.

F. KUEHNE & CO.,

NO. 906 NINTH STREET,

Between I and J,

SACRAMENTO,

Carpenters and Contractors

Store and office work a specialty.

ICE BOXES for Breweries and Saloons always on hand and made to order.

Jobbing and Repairing promptly attended to.

CURTIS BROS. & CO.

Wholesale and Retail Dealers in and Shippers of all kinds of

Fruits, Vegetables

And GENERAL PRODUCE.

Careful attention paid to the selection and packing of Choice Fruits and Vegetables for distant markets.

Goods delivered in city free.

308 and 310 K Street, - - Sacramento, Cal.

B. Ruhl

Bookbinder, Paper Ruler and Blank Book Manufacturer.

Periodicals, Magazines, Music, and all kinds of Binding neatly done at the lowest prices.

No. 409 J STREET,

SACRAMENTO.

Klune & Floberg,

WATCHMAKERS and JEWELERS

Agents for Rockford Watch Co.

NO. 428 J STREET, SACRAMENTO.

J. A. MOYNIHAN.

G. E. MOYNIHAN.

Moynihan's

418 J STREET.

FOR THE LADIES:

Just received, direct from Manufacturers, an elegant line of Silver and Oxydized Boubonniere Boxes, Ladies' Cachou Flasks, and other Novelties.

Call and inspect them. THE ONLY FIRST-CLASS HOUSE IN THE CITY.

W. D. Comstock, 501 -- 507 K, cor. Fifth

Furniture

Bedding.

On Exhibition, THE LARGEST AND BEST SELECTED STOCK.

FAIR DEALING!

LOW PRICES!

JAS. G. DAVIS

Furniture, Carpets and Wall Paper

411 AND 413 K STREET,

Branch, 315 K St. Send for Catalogue. Prices Lowest

GENSHLEA BROS.

Strictly High Grade Goods in all Lines.

624 J ST.

TRY THE LA ROSA ESPANOLA KEY WEST CIGAR.

RED HOUSE

Millinery Department

This cut represents one of the most fashionable shapes for misses and young ladies.

Trimmed as above illustrated for	$3 00@5 00
Felt Hats in all the new shades	70
Straw Toques and Turbans	50
Novelties in shaded Aigrettes	25
Birds	50

We have an extra force of trimmers employed, and are prepared to do order work for the State Fair within a few hours' notice.

RED HOUSE,

J Street, between Seventh and Eighth.

ALBERT GRUBBS,

No. 1417 Fourth Street,

Will do all kinds of House Cleaning, Lay Carpets, Whitewashing, and everything in that line.

He also has the only wagon for the REMOVAL OF DEAD ANIMALS, and any orders left at his place of business will receive prompt attention.

Remember the address!

No. 1417 Fourth Street, Sacramento, Cal.

JESSE SLAUGHTER,

Office, No. 1217 Fifth Street.

Plastering, Whitewashing, Cleaning of Cesspools, Etc.

Also, CITY SCAVENGER.

Burying of dead animals attended to at short notice.

Don't forget the number—1217 Fifth street, the old stand, where I have been for 25 years.

R. H. PETTIT,

Wholesale and Retail Dealer in

IMPORTED & DOMESTIC CIGARS

Smoke the "Lone Fisherman,"

The BEST FIVE-CENT CIGAR in the Market.

NO. 225 K STREET.

CALL AT 1118 J STREET,

—AT—

Fred Futterer's Saloon

And Get a Glass of Cool Beer.

The best Wines, Liquors and Cigars always on hand.

POOL AND BILLIARD TABLES.

FRED FUTTERER, 1118 J Street.

CHANGED HANDS.

SACRAMENTO EXCHANGE,

(Formerly Wm. Gamble's.)

1012 SEVENTH STREET.

Fine Wines. All the celebrated brands of Liquors and Cigars. ROBERT ALLEN, Formerly of Agricultural Park.

RHOADS & TOWNSEND HOUSE

On European Plan.

Cor. Second and J Streets, Sacramento.

ARTHUR MILLER, PROPRIETOR.

The Watchers.

An hour ere daylight, when throug'd stars are wan,
And such a lonesome silence covers all
The world of sleep, which sleep still holds in thrall;
And such a shadow of night is yet upon
That old sea township, whence the light hath gone,
Save where the roadside lamps, symmetrical,
Glint by red roof and dimly bastioned wall,
In the dim valley, a long hour ere dawn;
Only you gleaming hill above the town,
And you gray sea, whose dying wave and lapse
Along the beach murmur unceasingly;
Only these twain would seem awake. Perhaps
They commune, and the mystery of the dawn
Is gathered to the secret of the sea.

Be a Woman.

Oft I've heard a gentle mother,
As the twilight hours began,
Pleading with a son on duty,
Urging him to be a man.
But unto her blue-eyed daughter,
Though with love's words quite as ready,
Points she out the other duty,
"Strive, my dear, to be a lady!"
What's a lady? Is it something
Made of hoops, and skirts, and airs,
Used to decorate the parlor,
Like the fancy rugs and chairs?
Is it one that wastes on novels
Every feeling that is human?
If 'tis this to be a lady
'Tis not this to be a woman.

Mother, then, unto your daughter
Speak of something higher far
Than to be mere fashion's lady—
"Woman" is the brightest star.
If ye, in your strong affection,
Urge your son to be a true man,
Urge your daughter no less strongly
To rise up and be a woman.

Yes, a woman! brightest model
Of that light and perfect beauty;
There the mind, and soul and body,
Blend to work out life's great duty—
Be a woman—naught is higher
On the gilded list of fame;
On the catalogue of virtue
There's no brighter, holier name.

Be a woman—on to duty,
Raise the world from all that's low,
Place high in the social heaven
Virtue's fair and radiant bow!
Lend thy influence to each effort
That shall raise our nature human;
Be not fashion's gilded lady,
Be a brave, true, whole-souled woman.

Honor Victis.

No need to sing of him who wielded well
The arms enchanted, and the charmed blade,
Wherewith he smote the dragon of the fell,
Far in a den of sun-forbidding shade—
His were the herded treasure, and the maid.
The task was mighty, and the need was high;
Inviolable of time, his glory shall not fade!
Yet what of all the fallen ere he came,
Who had no spell-wrought panoply to bear,
Who met the monster and the breathed flame,
In simple strength, taught of their souls to dare—
Their bones are whitening all the twilight lair!
For these, for these, the unremembered dead.
Are there no sighs to give? Are there no tears to shed?

Both men and women belie their nature when they are not kind.—Bailey.

Those who live on vanity must, not unreasonably, expect to die of mortification.—
Mrs. Ellis.

Of all the evil spirits abroad at this hour in the world, insincerity is the most dangerous.
—Froude.

That action is best which procures the greatest happiness to the greatest numbers.
—Hutchinson.

Our grand business is not to see what lies dimly at a distance, but to do what lies clearly at hand.—Carlyle.

He who comes up to his own idea of greatness must always have had a very low standard of it in his own mind.—Hazlitt.

The man whom heaven appoints, to govern others, should himself first learn to bend his passions to the sway of reason.—Thompson.

Only the refined and delicate pleasures that spring from research and education can build up barriers between different ranks—
Madame de Staël.

I think it must somewhere be written, that the virtues of mothers shall, occasionally, be visited on their children, as well as the sins of fathers.—Dickerson.

Of all the actions of a man's life, his marriage does least concern other people, yet of all actions of our life, 'tis most meddled with by other people.—Selden.

A Spanish Legend.

A certain young Spanish friar, a skillful painter, especially delighted in devising new aspects of blessedness and beauty for the Virgin and in setting forth the devil in the most repulsive and extravagant ugliness.
Satan bore this as best he could for some time, but at last he determined to be revenged. He assumed the disguise of a most lovely maiden, and the unhappy friar, being of an amorous disposition, fell into the trap.
She smiled sweetly on her shaven wooer, but would not surrender her beauty at a less price than the rich reliquaries and jewels of the treasury of the monastery. In an evil hour the poor painter admitted her at midnight within the convent walls, and she took from the antique cabinet the precious things she desired. Then, as they wound their way through the moonlit cloister, the sinful friar, clutching his booty with one arm and his beauty with the other, the demon lady suddenly cried out, "Thieves!" with diabolical energy.

Up started all the snoring monks and rushed in disorder from their cells, detecting the unlucky brother making off with the plate. Him they tied safe to a pillar, leaving him there till the next day should determine his punishment, while the brethren went back to their pillows or their prayers; and then the cruel devil appeared in his real shape to the poor painter, taunting and twitting him and making unmerciful mockery of his amorous overtures and his prayers, advising him now to appeal to the beauty he had so loved to delineate in his canvases. The penitent monk took the advice, and, lo! the radiant mother of mercy descended in all her heavenly loveliness, unbound his cords, bade him fasten the evil one in his place to the column and appear among the monks the next morning at matins, which he did, to the great surprise of the brethren. He voted for his own condemnation, but when they went to the sacristy and found every thing marvelously correct in its place, and when they went to the column and found the devil fast bound, they forgave the erring brother and administered a tremendous flogging to the devil. The monk became not only "a wiser and a better man," but a better artist; he was now able to paint the Virgin more serenely beautiful, the arch-enemy more appallingly ugly than ever.

A wealthy woman residing at Dorbish, near Kolin, in Bohemia, was buried in the family vault at the local cemetery. Four days afterwards her granddaughter was interred in the same place, but as the stone slab covering the aperture was raised the bystanders were horrified to see that the lid of the coffin below had been raised, and that the arm of the corpse was protruding. The unfortunate woman, who was supposed to have died of heart disease, had evidently regained consciousness for a few minutes and had found strength enough to burst open her coffin.
The authorities are taking measures of the utmost severity against those responsible.

Headquarters for the Bartlett Springs Water on Draught.

THE OFFICE,

1008 Fourth Street, Next to Cal. State Bank—
H. D. GAMBLE, Proprietor.

Telephone 199. Office Hours from A. M. to P. M.

SAN FRANCISCO

Steam & Dyeing Works

Removed to 524 K Street.

Branch, 805 K St. Dye Works, 2511 J St.

All orders promptly attended to. Don't make a mistake—Main office at Capital Transfer Company.

JOHN STEEN, Proprietor Dye Works.

Trunks Removed, 25 Cents.

JAS. LONGSHORE,

SACRAMENTO TRUNK FACTORY,

530 K STREET.

Trunks, Valises & Bags Wholesale and Retail.

Waterhouse & Lester

DEALERS IN

IRON, STEEL, CUMBERLAND COAL,

Wagon Lumber and Carriage Hardware,
SACRAMENTO.

Earthquake and Fire Proof
BUILDINGS

Constructed on my patent system. Perfect protection guaranteed. For estimates and particulars see
E. HAWES.
Twelfth and B streets, Sacramento.

RAILROAD TIME TABLE.

Southern Pacific Company
PACIFIC SYSTEM.

Sept. 9, 1889.

Trains LEAVE and are due to ARRIVE at
SACRAMENTO.

Lv.	Trains Run Daily.	Arr.
7 00 A	Calistoga and Napa	11 40 A
4 05 P	Calistoga and Napa	7 20 P
11 00 P	Ashland and Portland via Chico	3 40 A
5 05 P	Deming, El Paso and East	7 05 P
7 30 P	Knight's Landing	7 55 A
4 30 A	Marysville (Mixed)	4 25 P
9 00 A	Los Angeles and Mojave	9 55 A
8 00 P	Second Class, Ogden and East	6 30 A
10 30 P	Central Atlantic Express	3 40 P
3 00 P	Oroville	9 50 A
11 00 P	Oroville	3 40 A
3 00 P	Red Bluff via Marysville	9 50 A
10 40 A	Redding via Willows	4 05 P
7 00 A	San Francisco via Benicia	8 30 P
4 05 P	San Francisco via Benicia	10 10 P
4 00 A	San Francisco via Benicia	10 40 A
*10 00 A	San Francisco via Steamer	2 25 P
11 20 A	San Francisco via Livermore	11 40 A
3 05 P	San Francisco via Benicia	2 25 P
11 20 A	San Jose	9 55 A
9 00 A	Santa Barbara	7 05 P
5 05 P	Santa Barbara	11 40 A
7 00 A	Santa Rosa	7 20 P
4 05 P	Santa Rosa	7 05 P
9 00 A	Stockton and Galt	9 55 A
5 05 P	Stockton and Galt	6 30 A
8 00 P	Truckee and Reno	3 40 P
10 30 P	Truckee and Reno	6 00 P
8 30 A	Colfax	11 40 A
7 00 A	Vallejo	7 30 P
4 05 P	Vallejo	10 25 A
*12 15 P	Folsom and Placerville (Mixed)	*2 40 P
*7 15 A	Folsom and Placerville	*6 50 A
*5 20 P	Folsom

*Sunday excepted. †Sunday only. ‡Monday ex-
cepted. A for morning, P for afternoon.
A. N. TOWNE, Gen'l Manager.
T. H. GOODMAN, Gen'l Pass. and Ticket Agent.

Edwin K. Alsip & Co.

ESTABLISHED 1860.

REAL ESTATE

AND INSURANCE AGENTS.

FARMING LANDS A SPECIALTY.

Catalogues issued monthly.

No. 1015 Fourth Street, Sacramento.

Gregory Bros. Co

Established 1852.

COMMISSION MERCHANTS.

Packers and Shippers of California Fruit and Produce,

126 and 128 J STREET,

San Francisco Office, 313 Davis St. SACRAMENTO.

Hotfilter & Grafmiller,

MANUFACTURING JEWELERS,

Jewelry made to order. Watches, Clocks and Jewelry
Repaired and Warranted.

No. 1026 Sixth Street, Sacramento.

BOOTS AND SHOES
made to order. Boots,
$6 to $11. Shoes, $3 to
$9. Ladies' Shoes, best quality French Kid, $5
to $7.

REPAIRING DONE
at lowest prices.

NONE BUT BEST
mechanics employed.

WE GUARANTEE
to make perfect fitting
to the worst of crooked
and crippled feet.

COMPLETE WITH
any shoes on the market.

216 J Street

—AND—

208 K Street,

SACRAMENTO.

A. CASELLI

& COMPANY.

WESTERN HOTEL

209 to 219 K Street.

The Leading Hotel of Sacramento, Cal.

FREE BUS TO AND FROM HOTEL.

Meals, 25 Cents. Rooms, according to location.

WM. LAND, Proprietor.

California State Bank

DOES A GENERAL BANKING BUSINESS.

Draws Exchange on all the Principal Cities
of the World.

OFFICERS:

PRESIDENT.....N. D. RIDEOUT
VICE-PRESIDENT.....FRED'K COX
CASHIER.....A. ABBOTT
ASSISTANT CASHIER.....W. E. GERBER

DIRECTORS:

C. W. Clarke, Jos. Steffens, N. D. Rideout,
Geo. C. Perkins, J. R. Watson, Frederick Cox,
W. E. Gerber.

W. R. STRONG & CO.

Founded 1852.

Fruit Packers

and Shippers.

PROPRIETORS OF

CAPITAL NURSERIES,

SACRAMENTO, CAL.

Capital Iron Works.

Vertical and Horizontal Engines

BOILERS,

STEAM AND POWER

PUMPS,

Deep Well Pumps,

Hand Pumps,

Stock Pumps,

PUMPMAKERS' SUPPLIES.

HORSE-POWERS, WIND MILLS,

Tanks and Tank Houses.

904 K Street, Sacramento.

Something New

NEW STORE. NEW MEN.

BELL & FOUNTAIN

HAVE OPENED THE

Plaza Cash Grocery

STORE,

Corner Tenth and J Streets,

And have stocked the same with all New and Fresh Goods, which they will sell for CASH at the smallest living margin.

All Goods Warranted as Represented.

Goods delivered to any part of the city.

Our Motto: "The nimble sixpence against the slow shilling!"

BELL & FOUNTAIN,

Plaza Cash Grocery Store,

A. J. MUIR,

PLUMBER,

Gas and Steam Fitter.

Being a practical plumber, I can guarantee all work.

810 K STREET,

Telephone 226.

SACRAMENTO, CAL.

THEMIS

Vol. I.

SACRAMENTO: SATURDAY, OCTOBER 5, 1889.

No. 33.

THEMIS: published weekly, by A. J. Johnston & Co. Publication Office, 410 J Street. Subscription—One year, by mail, $3 00; six months, by mail, $1 50, in advance; per month, by carrier, 25 cents. (Entered at the Post Office at Sacramento as second-class matter.)

Poetry and science are never in accord, and are not akin to each other. That learned classical scholar, Coleridge, says, in an elaborate definition of poetry, that "it is the art of representing external nature and human thoughts, both relatively to human affections, so as to cause the production of the greatest immediate pleasure." This is an abstract way of putting the question; still it is incomplete, and does not give to the ordinary understanding a full comprehension of the subject-matter, for the reason that prose, philosophy and science, each, in its way, gives more or less pleasure to the votary of the respective subject. It would be more apropos to say that prose is the solid, substantial granite, while poetry is the hewn, cut and polished marble of literature. The former affords pleasure and instruction to the reason, while the latter appeals alike to the reason and enters the realms of the imagination, thus producing the greatest pleasurable emotions. In Midsummer Night's Dream we find this fine picture:

The poet's eye, in a fine frenzy rolling,
Doth glance from heaven to earth, from earth to heaven;
And, as imagination bodies forth
The forms of things unknown, the poet's pen
Turns them to shapes, and gives to airy nothing
A local habitation and a name.

Who is there that does not love the poetry of life? It is the food that prompts and nourishes the imagination, guides the brush of the artist, and silvers the tongue of the orator. The man who has no poetry or romance in his soul is like Richard of York:

Deform'd, unfinish'd, sent before my time
Into this breathing world, scarce half made up.

And like him:

Determined to prove a villain,
And hate the idle pleasure of the days.

In our comments on the poets and poetry of the Pacific we must not be considered a "Fadladeen." The name is Tom Moore's, and is used to typify one who always proposed a learned disquisition upon a subject he knew nothing about. All who have been regaled by the beauties of Lalla Rookh will call to mind old "Fadladeen," the King's chamberlain, to whom was intrusted the care of Lalla Rookh on her journey to the distant kingdom, where dwelt her affianced husband, whom she had never seen. On this journey was met a poor, wandering poet-minstrel, who lightened the monotony of the trip by enchanting verse, giving the history and legends of the various objects and scenes. To old "Fadladeen," who had no heart for the beautiful, nor sympathy with the muse, this young poet was exceedingly distasteful, and he lost no opportunity to brand his inspired verse as mere trash, and as the vaporings of a feeble mind. "Lalla," however, was deeply impressed with the bright genius of her welcome companion, and often, in her dreaming hours, wished her betrothed lover was such a man. When "Lalla" reached the palace of her intended husband, she found in waiting none other than this wandering poet, who had assumed the disguise to win her heart. It was then that the old hypocrite, "Fadladeen," began to praise the grandeur of his poems, and was loudest in their praise. Thus it is at the present day. The poor pilgrim for Parnassian fame is applauded or condemned, not in accord with his merits, but rather from the standpoint of his worldly position. Many times, too, he is permitted to float into public note or favor through some fortunate or sensational "hit" entirely independent of real merit.

The true artist and genius is a sensitive plant, and very often genuine worth has been crushed and driven from its just position by too keen a sense of the scoffs and jeers of the sometimes cold and heartless critic. Unjust criticism should be like the ocean's spray against the prow of the majestic steamer as she moves on her course through the deep, neither felt nor feared. There has in the past been a degree of adulation accorded the poets of the Pacific slope, or rather such of them who have acquired a notoriety abroad, that is wondrous and surprising to us, and doubtless as unaccountable to themselves. When we find these persons the subjects of ovations, and "lionized" by those who have bowed at the shrine of Avon's Bard, Byron, Milton, Tennyson, our wonderment increases. For our people, who are familiar with the scenes and subjects, to manifest a degree of pleasurable emotions at Kil Carson's Ride, The Heathen Chinese, and other of the wild Western lyrics, might not seem strange, for the same reason that prompts us to praise the efforts of a precocious child. The only rational theory for these pæans from the great fount of literature, exalting our muses among the literati of the world, must, per force, be attributed to the fact that the subject-matters and quaint style are entirely new to the old world, and the novelty alone of Bill Nye's experience at the little game of draw-poker with the childlike and bland Ah Sin, excited the interest and tickled the fancy, just as a new, trashy, sensational play will take precedence over the solid, legitimate drama.

Bret Harte and Joaquin Miller have ascended high upon the ladder of fame; yet can it be said that any production of either can rank with those of the old masters of song? We do not desire to detract from the just merits of our Pacific votaries of Apollo, but when they are exalted with the immortal bards, then we call a halt. None of the Pacific poets have ever pretended to any of the higher order of poetry, but utilized the local field by pleasing and novel pictures of early and "flush times" of our golden shore. With all the grandeur of nature with which we are blessed, this coast has never produced one good epic, pastoral or historical poem. For this there is no adequate reason. Here we sit enshrined beside the sunset sea with everything to bring out the divine inspiration—the grandeur of scenery, climate and surroundings, all to feed the imagination, to give zest to the intellect, power to mind and thought. The real poet is usually a modest fellow, who does not seek the laudation of the unsympathetic world. Thus, there are some efforts, of a retiring nature, which have been produced on this coast that are entitled to a place even above any of the productions of Harte or Miller. For elegant diction, Dan O'Connell, Ben Avery, E. R. Sill, L. E. Crane, L. H. Foote, Jo Goodman, Ina Coolbrith are their peers. But when we seek to dwell in the heart of poetry all these sink into naught as we call to mind the splendor of the grand old monarchs of poesy. This is too busy an era in the world for proper indulgence in divine inspiration. There is too much of practical nature to absorb the mind and thought to allow of the production of any great epic or historical poem. The rule now is to "boil down" everything, and to curtail the imagination and inspiration to their smallest proportions. This is the cause for no great poets or great poetical productions in this epoch of the world's history.

Joaquin Miller's poems always read as though there was considerable of the "digging" process in getting his inspiration into line. They remind us of Mark Twain's description of Judge Oliver, one of the "old time" characters of Nevada, whom he said was "always digging poetry out of himself—or blasting it out when it came hard." It occurs to our mind that there is much in all our Pacific poetry, that bears strong evidence of being "blasted out." It is said by a writer on the Atlantic side that there is something in the air of the Pacific slope that not only refines the intellect, but broadens human nature. That is true, but the fact is not appreciated. There is no necessity for us to journey to Italy to gain inspiration. Ours is the land of the fig tree, the olive, the orange and the vine. Our cedars are more ancient and loftier than those of Lebanon. The stones are silver and the rocks are gold—the land of realized hope. With all this inspiration surrounding us, there is no reason why we should not send forth our great poets to rival the old masters of song. There is a place—so Ariosto sings—a treasury of all good things, and our coast is that place. We have produced some of the greatest orators the world ever knew. There never was a superior to the old Gray Eagle, Col. E. D. Baker. It can be said of his eloquence, as was told of Pindar of old, that "bees lighted on his lips in infancy and left their honey there, and his lips dropped honey ever after." Henry Edgerton was a king of orators. But our poets are not so favored by the gods. As Artemus Ward used to say, the mantle of the immortal muse has not fallen on our Pacific poets "hard enough to hurt them." Charles A. Sumner, conjointly with his brother, produced a volume of poems, some lines of which are good. Whatever may be said of Bret Harte's poems, they possess the virtue of originality, and the field was entirely new. One of his brightest gems was Her Letter—should have been called The Lily of Poverty Flat—and which can never fail to impress the Californian's mind with the true spirit of poesy and romance. This little poem is replete with genuine life, and shows how the suddenly made rich young girl, who was taken from "the ditches and tunnels of Poverty Flat" to the great French capital, still clings to her "Joe." Joaquin Miller struck a somewhat different vein, and while in sunny Italy made a sensation as the eccentric poet from the wilds of California. His brightest effort, in our judgment, is The Ideal and the Real. Our fellow townsman, L. H. Foote, late United States Minister to Corea, is the author of a number of quiet little gems of characteristic poetry. We have not heard from his pen lately, and presume he has abandoned the muse. Dan O'Connell has much of real genius, and his verse has the ring of the true metal. The Dying Musician, written upon the death of a Bohemian friend, is replete with pathos and real life. There are many others of lesser note who have made many valuable contributions to literature, but none have ever reached the title of "great."

The dispatches announcing the prizes awarded at the Paris exhibition are especially gratifying to Californians. In the matter of wines, products of this State received three gold medals and one grand prize. There were thirty-three exhibits of wines and brandies sent from California, and but twenty from other States. It is stated that no one was in Paris in behalf of the California wine interest especially, and that judgment was passed by French experts, who compared our products with those of famous French vineyards. It is a matter of congratulation that citizens of this State have been able successfully to compete in this particular line of production at the capital of France. We have long been aware of the excellence of California wines, and had a full appreciation that it would take years to place them on anything like a footing with foreign products. It is a matter of astonishment that our wine men have secured this marked recognition at this early day, for it must be remembered that the viticultural interest in this State is comparatively in infancy when compared with its development in other wine producing countries. The first grape-vines were planted in this State about 1772 by the missionaries at San Gabriel, and were of the Spanish variety, known now as the Mission. This grape had little to recommend it for wine, and little was attempted in the way of producing wine from it. The fruit products of the few vineyards in the State in 1850 and 1851 sold at San Francisco from fifty to seventy-five cents a pound, and realized large profits to producers. As late as 1856 the common retail price at the metropolis was thirty-seven cents per pound. Most of the grapes were brought from Los Angeles packed in sawdust. As early as 1854 our pioneer grape growers imported cuttings from France and other foreign countries, and in 1858 quite a fever sprang up on the subject of the production of grapes. It was not, however, until after years of experimentation that there came a demonstration of the excellence of our wines. The attempt to make champagne from California grapes commenced as early as 1857. The experiments were carried on for years, but proved for a time expensive and discouraging. They have, however, resulted successfully, yet perhaps not so much so as in the production of wines of other varieties. The annual wine yield of California is variously estimated now from 15,000,000 to 20,000,000 gallons. Our foreign market, however, has been comparatively insignificant. Last year the value of all wine exported from the United States was $233,223, while in the same year the value of the imports of that commodity was $7,336,198, showing that the major portion of our wines are consumed in the United States. It can reasonably be expected that the recognition that we have received at the French capital will result in an increased exportation.

The condition of the public plaza of this city should receive the immediate attention of the authorities having it under control. The grass is dying out in patches, and the pavement through it is manifesting signs of dilapidation. The trees and shrubbery show careless attention. A few days ago a man was arrested and imprisoned for a time for having washed his hands in the public fountain there. It would, perhaps, be difficult to exactly determine the criminal offence he would be guilty of from having washed there; it is, however, clear that if he contemplated cleansing himself in the polluted water in the large central fountain basin he should have been committed for insanity, on anything like reasonable proof. Public parks of this character serve as the lungs of a great city, and conduce to healthfulness and ornamentation. With the start our plaza had, it seems hardly right to permit it in the smallest measure to fall into disorder and decay, and the effort that will be required to creditably maintain it will be insignificant. By all means let attention be given to it before it will be too late.

The Brooklyn Eagle says that an organization known as the Lafayette Female Mugwump Association challenges public attention by the passage of a resolution in which the members declare that they do not put a particle of faith in the story that Mrs. Cleveland recently killed a deer in the Adirondacks. They further allege that she "is a lady whose refinement of nature, gentleness of disposition and abhorrence of all cruelty, forbid that she would wantonly take the life of one of God's most innocent and beautiful creatures." The Eagle inquires: Is there any possibility that the example of the Lafayette ladies will popularize the practice of organizing female Mugwump associations? We do not believe it. Our observation of ladies has been that in the consideration of public matters they are generally sensible, and it would certainly be a reflection on the sex to class them with the political Mugwumps, particularly those in the State of New York.

The wonderful developments in the telephone and phonograph will make the whole world one sounding board and one gigantic ear. The scandal mongers will be at the mercy of this science, and will not give utterance to their usual batch of poisonous whispers, for fear of communication through some hidden telephone or phonograph. Such a halcyon condition would be welcomed with delight, because the good and true and generous souls would never give voice, even to a whisper to envenomed scandal, and those of indiscreet tongues would soon learn to put a bridle bit between their teeth to check their unguarded expressions. Those who so enjoy to indulge in malicious misrepresentations would, per force, be compelled, through the detective powers of these new inventions, to remain silent. Edward Bellamy, in the October Harper's Magazine, indulges in a humorous little reverie, entitled "With Eyes Shut," wherein he draws upon his fancy for a perfected action of the phonograph. He reads all the daily papers with his eyes shut, through the agency of an improved "indispensable," which notes all the contents of newspapers, books, dramas, and all the affairs of life necessary to communicate, and so arranged that at any and all times by the touch of a spring communicate the desired information, which has been previously registered in the phonograph. The little sketch is, of course, a fancy one, but not less improbable of realization than the telephone and phonograph, as well as a thousand other apparently improbable, not to say impossible events that have been realized by the means of science. Skeptics in this age are at a very great discount, and we are admonished, that whatever is necessary, that shall be.

The combination of several of the European powers to suppress France has a novel character, and makes the French alliance with Russia a greater novelty. While England is not openly a member of the powerful triumvirate of Germany, Austria and Italy, it is well understood that she is hand and glove in the league. The Republican advancement in France is not looked upon with favor by either Germany, England, Austria or Italy, and the ambitions of the Republic must be checked, if not suppressed. That Russia should be on the side of France is also a strange mixture, as there is but little in common between those two nations in customs or forms of government. The Russian is the opposite of the Frenchman in almost everything, and they are not made for any permanent alliance. One represents an active advance civilization, while the other clings to the despotism of the old world. A republic like France could not long exist on friendly terms with the oriental despotism which characterizes the Russian.

The impression is quite prevalent that a person is justified in shooting, without warning, a nocturnal intruder who is discovered in his house. The law, however, is, that a man should first reasonably satisfy himself that the motives of the stranger are designed against life or serious injury before extreme measures can be resorted to. In the case of the unknown burglar, who was shot and killed at the cannery, in this city, Sunday night, there was, perhaps, some shadow of justification for his slaying. It appears that some minor articles had been stolen from the building, and that on this night the watchman detected some men in the act of effecting an entrance to the building. He halted them; they ran; a shotgun was fired, and one was killed. As we say, the act of killing in this case may be justifiable, yet it is dangerous to regard it as a precedent, for the apparent intention of the intruders was to steal articles of insignificant value when compared to the price of a human life. When alarmed the parties attempted flight, and had they escaped arrest the damage they had done amounted to but little. There is always a liability of mistake in cases of this character. A short time since a man under the influence of liquor wandered innocently into a strange house in this city and was shot dead. Some years ago a young man, a stranger here, was tendered the use of the room of a friend and given the latch-key of the house. He became intoxicated, tried to open the door of the wrong house and was shot dead by an inmate, from the upper story, who mistook him for a burglar. These and similar instances that are of too frequent occurrence demonstrate the wisdom of the rule that deadly weapons should be used with caution under circumstances of suspicion.

SOME UNWRITTEN HISTORY.

Sacramento in Embryo—How Government was Established from Chaos.

PART IV.

The Russian possessions on the continent were projected by an enterprising merchant, G. J. Schelechoff, in 1789. He established a free economical society, afterwards called the Russian-American Company, which established itself on Kodiak island. The management of the affairs of that Company was given to Alexander Andreyvitch Baranoff, a merchant then doing a thriving business in Eastern Siberia. He was persuaded by Schelechoff to take the management of the affairs of his company, and, leaving his own business, he departed from Ochotsk for the new settlement in America, arriving April 19, 1790, on the "Galliot," then sailing under the command of its mate, Bogaroff, and after a disastrous shipwreck on the 6th of October, near Aon-alaska, and after wintering at that place, he, with his crew, embarked in their skin canoes, arriving at Kodiak June 27, 1791.

At that time the Russian possessions in America consisted of two islands, Kodiak and Afognak. Kodiak is of irregular shape, seventy-five miles long by fifty miles wide, southeast of the peninsula of Alaska, the harbor and station of St. Paul being on its north side. Baranoff was surely a man of enterprise, backed by a company with capital and encouraged by Czar Alexander I, who gave him a title of nobility. The Russian settlement extended from Kodiak to the continent. Baranoff found the Indians warlike and hostile. Sitka was established by him and destroyed by the Indians. It was recaptured by him October 26, 1804, at which time he transferred his headquarters to the continent, where he could have a better chance to extend his trade to Canton, Manilla, Boston, New York, San Francisco and Honolulu.

The Russian possession, thus established in America, became at once permanent under the administration of Baranoff, and he extended his trade to California, exchanging furs for groceries and other goods produced or brought here, and finally, with the consent of the Mexican authorities of California, he established a trading post on the coast, in what is now Marin county, at a place he called Count Rumyanzoff's Bay, but on the Spanish charts named Bodega. He constructed works of defense, which he called Fort Russ, afterwards by the Americans called Fort Ross, and also called Ross in the agreement made between the Russian-American Company and John A. Sutter, transferring to the latter the property of that company, December 12, 1841.

Baranoff named the river (now called Russian) Slav-yankr. But as the Mexican authorities of California viewed the Russian settlement with distrust, the Russian name did not attach to it, but was finally established as Russian river.

The establishment of the Russian-American Company at Bodega consisted of (1) Its defensive works, including the fort, guns, ammunition; etc.; (2) its marine appliances, including its marine stores, ships, guns, etc.; (3) Rancho Chillbrickoff; (4) Rancho Tschernick; (5) neat cattle, about 2,500; (6) horses.

By its contract with John A. Sutter the Russian-American Company ceded to Sutter all the establishments at the Port Bodega, and to the northward of Fort Ross, excepting the land according to the inventory duly signed by Kashometinoff on the part of the company and John A. Sutter.

The inventory mentioned in that act of sale has never been published, and if extant can only be found in the archives of that Russian company. But the property sold must have been large, as the sum paid ($30,000), would indicate.

The Russian-American Company undertook to assist Sutter to transport the moveable goods sold him, and so, early in 1842, Captain Sutter added to his possessions at New Helvetia the stock which had grazed on the ranches on Russian river, the agricultural implements used by the Russians at that post and such other goods and chattels as he choose to bring here.

Sutter, with a grant of eleven leagues of land without cattle or home, would have been of little importance in the country, but with $30,000 worth of the property of the country he became, and continued to be, an important factor in the development of Northern California.

Adventurers came to his establishments; hunters and trappers found with him a home. Settlers desiring to become residents were welcomed to his department of the North. Indians, seeing his power and importance, readily yielded to him supremacy sought his place for employment and food, and by his sagacity and perseverance Sutter found himself in a short time strong enough to suppress all Indian depredations and assert himself against the local government of California, which came to view him with distrust.

But whilst Sutter had, by a bold stroke of policy, become practically a ruler over his department, he had incurred an obligation to pay the Russian-American Company $30,000 in wheat, peas, beans, soap, lard and $10,000 in cash, pledging for its payment the ranches of Chelebrickoff and Tschernick, received of the Russians, as well as his establishments at New Helvetia. Accordingly he constructed fences for two fields, which he afterwards cultivated. These fences were ditches made by Indian labor. One fence had its southeast corner near what is now J and Twenty-sixth streets; one line running north to the jungle bordering the American river; another extending west and north to a slough connecting with the American river, the jungle bordering the American fence constituted the other side.

The other enclosure, called by Sutter his "Tivoli Field," commenced at the American river, on the west side of the Norris ferry, on what is now the ranch of D. McCarthy, thence south along the west side of the road from Norris' ferry to a point near J street, extended thence west nearly along the line of J street, extending to the sheep corral on the high ground, near where there is now a school house; thence still west to a point near Clark's pottery; thence north to the American river. These fields were cultivated mainly by Indian labor, until the year 1848. Oxen were mainly used to till the land; using plows obtained from the Russians, and afterwards from trading vessels at San Francisco.

The Russian-American Company reserved from the sale to Sutter all its artillery, but gave him one brass piece, which has a history. It was cast at a foundry of the Russian government at St. Petersburg in 1804. It is forty inches long, three and a half inch bore, cast with two handles, so that two men can handle or carry it. This gun was presented by the czar to the Russian-American company and by that company to Captain Sutter in December, 1841. It was one of the guns first mounted in the southeast bastion of Sutter's fort, and it was used by Captain Sutter in firing a salute to the American flag hoisted over his fort at sunrise, July 12, 1846.

It was taken from the fort, placed in the hands of Commodore Stockton, used by him as a field piece by his command in his advance from San Pedro to Los Angeles, did good service in the battle of San Pasquale, December 6, 1846, and again at Los Angeles, January 8 and 9, 1847. The gun was then transferred to Colonel Mason's command, First United States Dragoons, and was by him returned to Captain Sutter after the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, and Captain Sutter presented it to the California Pioneers, at San Francisco, in the archives of which society it still remains. The gun has a chamber running to a point at the vent and used a charge of eight ounce powder.

The Stage.

[Under this caption will appear a fair and impartial criticism of the drama, actors, music, and all noteworthy matters pertaining to the stage.]

Little Lord Fauntleroy will be the attraction next week at the Metropolitan.

Lew Dockstader is now giving the best minstrel show that the country has seen for years.

Rebecca Warren, the beautiful young girl who plays the part of "Hattie" in Fencliffe, is a native of Kentucky, and has been on the stage but two seasons.

The fifteen-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Kendal will make her first appearance on the stage in London immediately after her parents' return thither from their American tour.

Evelyn Wentworth, wife of David L. Murray, the actor, has recently returned from Europe, where she completed her play Remorse, which will be produced in America the coming season with magnificent scenery.

It is understood that William Winter, the critic, will enter the Lyceum course this winter with a lecture entitled "The Dear Old Graveyards of England." There will be, of course, incidental references to Shakespeare.

"Don't you think," said the youth, after working his vocal cords with intense vigor beside the hotel piano, "that I ought to go on the stage?" "Yes," replied Miss Pepperton, who doesn't like him very much anyway, "I certainly do. There is one that leaves for the station just an hour and a half from now."

Sweet charity, what wondrous things are done in thy name? We have witnessed many benefit entertainments, and always feel like throwing the mantle of charity over the shortcomings. But the last "entertainment" was taken clear beyond the pale of even a charitable judgment. The professional part was simply vile. The only redeeming features came from the amateurs, who, despite the bad stage management, did tolerably well. There was plenty of local talent, but the "entertainment" was of the "left handed" order.

The Prince Regent of Bavaria has showered down a rain of orders upon the musicians who took part in the last Bayreuth festival. Felix Mottl, the opera director at Carlsruhe, and Musical-Director Kniese, of Breslau, received the Order of Merit of St. Michael of the fourth class, the same as that awarded to Director Stanton some time ago. Frau Sucher, who sung the Isolde, received the Ludwig medal for Science and Art. General Music Director Levi, of Munich, received from the Prince Regent a baton of ivory set with precious stones and lapis-lazuli. Frau Malten, of the Dresden opera, received a golden brooch set with brilliants in a crown. Kaiser Wilhelm, after his visit to Bayreuth, sent the Prussian Order of the Crown to the three musical directors, Levi, Mottl and Richter.

Mrs. E. L. Davenport relates an anecdote of Charles Kean, which has never found its way into print. It was at Brighton, and Mrs. Davenport, (then Fanny Vinney), was playing Lady Anne. Kean had a huge Newfoundland dog, which accompanied him always to the theatre. Upon that evening his dresser had forgotten to have the white ready for Gloucester's pallor, and rushed hastily to Mr. Kean's room to procure it. In his haste he forgot to latch the door, and the dog, hearing his master's angry tones, flew upon the stage, knocking down Miss Vinney in the wing, and seizing Richmond by the throat, shook him so fiercely that they were obliged to ring down the curtain on a tableau of Richmond kicking wildly and shrieking, "For the Lord's sake, take off that dog!" while King Richard vainly tried to beat off the dog with his sword.—N. Y. World.

Thirty years ago the prettiest woman in Paris was Blanche Pierson; now it is Mlle. Depoix, says a Dublin paper. The first was fair, the second is dark; the first, even in her youth, had the dimpled plumpness, which unluckily became vexatious obesity; the second is slender and thin, all muscle, without a suspicion of fatness—just a due covering of flesh on her bones.

The fact is, she is pretty, distinctly and charmingly pretty, with dark hair clinging to her forehead, clear deep eyes, black eyebrows drawn with a single stroke of a master's hand; and a long oval face, and something sweet and maidenly and yet sensual in her whole person, and, above all, the distinction which promises a woman of the world. There is no sign of the free-and-easy airiness which stamps the common actress; everything about her is close-fitting, close-buttoned, neat, and in good taste; nothing to catch the eye or divert the attention from that charming head on which we gaze with restful pleasure.

This beauty, this aristocratic witchery, needs no frills or furbelows. It has found its proper setting—a stamp of reserve, almost of disdain. That is what we see on the boards when she plays, where she is to be seen, for that is all that is required of her; she need not speak.

There isn't a prettier song under the sun than "Home, Sweet Home," but there are times when, as in "Clover" is sung, "twere better not to dwell on," when home does not seem so sweet.

A HOME BALLAD.

When you're sick and sorry of worldly things,
When figures affright, or writing palls,
When pride and desire have got them wings,
Home is a heaven within four walls.
But when it is a home that sharply calls
On the lover to see his lass no more,
The chain of affection chafes and galls,
And home, sweet home is an awful bore.

When cheerily high the dinner bell rings,
And childish voices are heard in the halls,
When slippers the wife of your bosom brings
Then home is a heaven within four walls.
But whenever the butcher calls and calls,
And duns by the dozens beset your door,
The vision of happiness faints and falls,
And home, sweet home is an awful bore.

When drear and deserted are shores and springs,
When the crowds return as the red leaf falls,
Unto some of their hearts a sweet voice sings
That home is a heaven within four walls.
But the end of the holidays some appalls,
And the man who serves in a drygoods store
'Neath the stare of his late love humbly crawls—
Ah! home, sweet home is an awful bore.

ENVOI.

Whenever a man tires of earthly brawls
Then home is a heaven within four walls.
But the days may come, as I've said before,
When home, sweet home is an awful bore.

Tastes differ in the play as with other things. Certain classes of play-goers like comedy, others opera, while another class are given to tragedy. There is another element of society that find merit only in the substantial, blood and thunder order of plays. This week we heard one of this class of plays, in the production of The Slowaway. In such presentations literary merit and artistic work form no component part and The Slowaway was sufficiently "Bowery" to suit the most ardent taste in that line. There were no good actors in the play—none were necessary. The situations and scenery were enough to capture the elements that look upon such dramas as the perfection of art. Those people who like such productions can never see anything to commend in the brilliant opera, or splendid personations of the legitimate drama. But as we are made up of all kinds of people with all kinds of tastes, we suppose that managers are compelled to cater to each in turn. This is about the only excuse that can be offered for the existence of such dramas as The Slowaway.

Book Chat.

R. H. Stoddard says: "Books are not necessarily literature. The majority of books, indeed, are not literature at all."

Aspiring poets are reminded that Tennyson takes a walk of three miles every day. In other words, the poets are invited to take a walk.

Alexander Dumas is 66 years old. He began to write at 17, and when 26 produced that "Dame aux Camellias," which first caused his countrymen to admire him.

General Butler will publish his memoirs, and Amelia Rives will collaborate a novel with a French writer. And yet some people think that the literary outlook is not exciting.

Mr. Herbert Spencer has for a time abandoned his old residence in London and has taken a house in St. John's Wood, where he is as hard at work as his uncertain health permits.

The citizens of Philadelphia have decided very appropriately to present the new government cruiser Philadelphia with a suitable library as a mark of appreciation of the ship's being named after their city.

An exceedingly interesting work by Madame Carotte (lady of honor to the Empress Eugenie), entitled "Recollections of the Court of the Tuileries," has been one of the successes of Paris this season.

"Erik Brighteyes," the hero of Mr. Rider Haggard's new romance, is an Icelandic chieftain of the ancient days, and a performer of many glittering deeds. The author went to Iceland last year to study color for this story.

The Pace That Kills, a villainously immoral story by Edgar Saltus, is the life of a man without either conscience or moral turpitude. He is pictured as devoting his time to licentious love-making and the execution of the most repulsive villainy. Yet this book is sought after more than any other.

Lugwig Pietsch, the celebrated German critic and author, has written long articles to the periodicals of his native land in praise of the exhibition of American artists in the Paris Exposition. Herr Pietsch is surprised at the general excellence of the paintings, and considers them equal to any in the exhibition.

An essayist in the current number of the Fortnightly Review says: "Unfortunately, there are no contemporary English novelists who have sufficient genius and hold upon the public to enable them to drive out the rabble of trash-mongers. All the greatest writers of fiction in our time are foreigners, and with few exceptions, it is to them we must look for a faithful picture of life as it really is in its most essential and cogent relations. In the works of such students of humanity as Turgeneff, Tolstoi, Freytag, Bourget, de Maupassant and Daudet lies the best chance of diverting attention from the 'rubbish' at home."

The late librarian of the Lenox Library, Dr. Samuel Austin Allibone, probably gained his most enduring fame through his "Dictionary of English Literature and British and American Authors." This work, which has taken its place as a standard everywhere, occupied eighteen years of close work in preparation, and contains notices of over 46,000 authors. Dr. Allibone also published a number of theological treatises, tracts, handbooks of literature, and "An Alphabetical Index to the New Testament." He held his post at the Lenox Library for ten years, but was forced to give it up on account of ill-health.

Walt Whitman, who is called "The Good Gray Poet," was, in his youthful days, a prominent New York Bohemian, a frequenter of Pfaff's, a noted Bohemian resort on Broadway, whose atmosphere was redolent of lager beer and tobacco smoke. Here might be seen nearly every night, from 12 o'clock to daylight, some thirty years ago, Henry Clapp Jr., the King of Bohemia, with George Arnold, Fitz-James O'Brien, William Winter, "Miles O'Reilly," Walt Whitman, etc. Whitman wrote his "Leaves of Grass," and not finding any publisher bold enough to print it, he set up the matter himself in a Brooklyn printing office, and Fowler & Wells, out of compassion, kept the book for sale at their store on Broadway.

A highly sensational story was running in one of the daily papers, and the chief had a few installments on hand, when the brilliant young author took into his head to go off and get married. Then he set out on a wedding tour, which was to last a week. The installments were soon used up, and another member of the staff was directed to wind up the story. He sent the heroine to a watery grave in the river Seine; he poisoned the hero; slew the abbe, who was the sole witness of the marriage, and closed the tale in a most tragic and harrowing manner. It was a dark and weird success, you may believe. At the end of the week the author showed up. He had with him several installments, which he tendered to his chief.

"Your story is finished, M—," said the editor.

"Pardon me," returned the undaunted novelist, "it is not finished. I have here the continuation, and there is more to come. Indeed, the best part of it is here."

"Tchut," exclaimed the chief; "why insist? I say that it is finished. M—, had to do it in your absence."

"I am aware that he wrote several chapters," said the unblushing romancer, "but if you will kindly read this manuscript, I am sure you will agree with me that I am right."

"The manuscript was passed over, and to the chief's surprise, it was a remarkably dramatic sequel to the story. The heroine, instead of being drowned, was rescued by some fishermen in the river below Paris; the hero was saved by a medical friend, who applied the stomach pump in time, and the abbe recovered from his wounds and was on hand to bless the nuptials of the happy pair."

Professional Chat.

A number of years ago, while Ab C. Freeman was a young attorney, Tom Clunie—then plain Tom—now Congressman Clunie, told the following laughable story on Freeman: Both Clunie and Freeman were invited to a dinner party—neither of them were at that time very familiar with fashionable dinner parties. Clunie and Freeman were seated next to each other. The dinner was served and eaten with a relish. At length came the desert. A nice choice piece of mince pie was passed to each plate, with the customary fork. Clunie ate his and noticed that Freeman had not partaken of the rich delicacy. Said Clunie, "What is the matter, Ab, why don't you eat your pie?" Freeman replied: "How do they expect me to eat pie with a fork?" That was many years ago. He can eat pie with a fork now.

While Alex Anderson, as he is familiarly known, was a student and devoting much attention to mathematics at that time with a view of becoming a civil engineer, he came to his home, near Polson, to spend his vacation during the summer months. He had an idea he was considerable of a surveyor, and impressed his father strongly that he could do almost any kind of practical surveying just as well as a professional civil engineer. His father was about to lay out a tunnel, some fifteen hundred feet long, to reach from the American river to a point at his mine, where he desired to have that end of the tunnel to tap the mine about fifty feet below the surface of the ground. This appeared to the self-confident embryo engineer no very difficult task, so he went to work with his level and figures and made an elaborate survey of the tunnel. The survey was completed and workmen set to work to run the tunnel, on the plan and grade fixed by Alex Anderson's survey. After working several months, and when there was about four hundred feet of the tunnel completed, which was less than one-third of the desired distance, the startling discovery was made that the tunnel was near the top of the ground, and that upon the grade fixed by the embryo engineer, the "tunnel" would have been a hundred feet in the air before the point of destination would be reached. This experience of engineering skill cost his father $1,500 and a new tunnel had to be run, but not on any plans or surveys of Alex's. This experience cured him of the engineering fever, which he abandoned for the study and practice of the law. While the experience of Hartford Anderson, Alex's father, was very costly, the old gentleman enjoys recounting the experience as a good joke on himself as well as on his son.

PIONEERS IN NEW ENGLAND.

The First White Woman Who Settled in the Sacramento Valley.

It appears that there has been a split in the Society of California Pioneers in Boston, and that there are now two representative bodies. A letter was received recently by the Sacramento Society of California Pioneers from "The New England Associated California Pioneers of 1849," as follows:

Boston, Sept. 12, 1889.

JOHN S. MILLER, Secretary—My Dear Sir: In introducing this association to your society I beg leave to submit the following statement of facts for consideration. This association is the result of a split in the Society of California Pioneers of New England, W. H. Thomes, president. We became dissatisfied with the working of its constitution, which allows men to join who acquired a residence in California as late as 1860.

It was organized last June and began its career with a membership of thirty, which has nearly doubled that number since that date. The members are mostly business men doing business in this city. Among them there are men of wealth, men occupying high positions of trust and men of character and influence. As old forty-niners, they believe that if the term "pioneer" meant anything, then it meant just what it was said to mean, and no man or society could pervert its meaning without corrupting its sense.

This is our bedrock. It was the rock we built upon and it is the rock we propose standing on as long as we can keep up an organization. We have allowed no man to join who failed to reach California prior to 1850 and we never shall while we continue a society. Therefore let it be said that with peace in our hearts and good will towards all men, we claim for this society the following facts which cannot be contradicted:

First, we claim to be the only society of California Pioneers east of the Sierra Nevada whose memberships composed squarely of "forty-niners," and again that we are the only society of the kind on the Atlantic seaboard who are in complete harmony with the parent society of San Francisco. It is because we are a society of California Pioneers, pure and simple; that we wish to become known, and our name and flag recognized all over the world.

I will mail to your address a copy of our constitution for examination. I also enclose a circular call for September 9th, and a slip cut from one of our local papers showing the result of that meeting. I wish to call your attention to the first name among those who joined our society that night, that of Mrs. Sinclair Davis, who arrived at Sutter's Fort in 1843, and shortly after married John Sinclair, the first alcalde and owner up to April, 1849, of the Rancho Del Paso, a couple of miles above Sutter's Fort. The Rancho Del Paso was for years the grand rendezvous for all the prominent men of the day. Both she and her husband were personal friends of Captain Sutter. On his way from Sutter mill to the fort James W. Marshall had to pass the Rancho Del Paso, and it was while on his way there with his precious discovery that he stopped at the Rancho and showed to the Sinclairs the first gold.

Trusting that we may be added to the sisterhood of Pioneer societies and that you will accept us in the light of a new made friend.

I am, dear sir, very truly yours,
GEORGE G. SPURR.
Secretary.

The Mrs. Sinclair referred to was the wife of John Sinclair, who was as early as 1847 the alcalde of the district of Sacramento. He was re-commissioned to that office by the military Governor, Colonel R. B. Mason, November 28, 1848. His official report of the sufferings of the Donner party, is well written and of historical interest. Fremont, in his narrative of his expedition, after describing the sufferings of his party in crossing the mountains and his descent down the American river, speaks of passing the house of Mr. Sinclair, a few miles above Sutter's Fort, on the left bank of that river. In his interesting description in "What I Saw in California," Edwin Bryant, writing under date of September 1, 1846, said:

We took a south course down the valley, and at 4 o'clock P. M., reached the residence of John Sinclair, Esq., on the Rio de Los Americanos, about two miles east of Sutter's Fort. * * * Mr. Sinclair, with a number of horses and Indians, was engaged in threshing wheat. His crop this year, he informed me, would be about 3,000 bushels. The soil of his rancho, situated in the bottom of the Rio de Los Americanos, just above its junction with the Sacramento, is highly fertile. His wheat fields are secured against the numerous herds of cattle and horses, which constitute the largest item in the husbandry of this country, by ditches about five feet in depth and four or five feet over at the surface. The dwelling house and out-houses of Mr. Sinclair are all constructed after American models, and present a most comfortable and neat appearance. It was a pleasant scene, after having travelled many months in the wilderness, to survey this abode of apparent thrift and enjoyment, resembling so nearly those we had left in the far-off country behind us.

In searching for the ford over the Rio de Los Americanos, in order to proceed on to Sutter's Fort, I saw a lady of a graceful, though fragile figure, dressed in the costume of our own countrywomen. She was giving some directions to her female servants, and did not discover me until I spoke to her and inquired the position of the ford. Her pale and delicate, but handsome and expressive countenance, indicated much surprise, produced by my sudden and unexpected salutation. But, collecting herself, she replied to my inquiry in vernacular English, and the sounds of her voice, speaking our own language, and her civilized appearance, were highly pleasing. This lady, I presume, was Mrs. Sinclair, but I never saw her afterwards.

NOTES.

In Topeka, Kan., men who sell tobacco to boys under 16 years of age are arrested and fined. No wonder they raise Republicans out that way. Democrats never thrive where there is a scarcity of whisky and tobacco.

A Baptist preacher has declared that there is no devil, and that he is an entirely imaginary and fictitious personage. Coming from so orthodox a source as a Baptist, there must be a little consternation in the ranks of that faith when a preacher can abolish the devil. Bob Ingersoll must have made an impression on that Baptist clergyman.

That was an apropos sentiment expressed about Tanner the other day at Washington, that "he had a hair trigger tongue with a flint lock brain." Tanner possesses, to a remarkable degree, the attributes of the proverbial parrot, which, in its bedraggled condition after the fight, exclaimed "Polly, you always did talk too much."

Kansas City has a society of authors who meet once a year and read to each other their rejected contributions to magazines. What a cold literary feast this must be. It must be cheering, indeed, to listen to the reading of any article that a modern magazine or "great daily" would reject. It cannot be that impending change of Missouri from benighted democracy to progressive republicanism has anything to do with the creation of this novelty in literary circles. One of the rejected manuscripts was entitled The Great American Novel—What Is It? and was alleged to be the work of a modern Macaulay. There must be kind of grim satisfaction in reflecting their failures upon each other, and be compelled to listen to the crude vaporings.

The Bee was the first paper to ventilate the swindling endowment schemes of the Occidental and other robbing concerns. We were personally cognizant of the fact that when the Bee came out nearly a year ago with its expose in a two column article, the managers of the now defunct concerns were loud in their threats of prosecution for libel. The Bee did not scare worth a cent, but added a little more fuel to the flame, that ultimately consumed the bare-faced robbing schemes. There never were any libel suits, either. It was a long time after the Bee exposed the affairs before the San Francisco papers could be induced to say a word of warning to the poor dupes who were pouring their assessments into the hands of the schemers.

The State Democratic Convention of Massachusetts has declared against the enactment of a national election law. Such a resolution is in consonance with the ideas of that party. A strict federal law governing the conduct of general State elections could result but in good. Of course, such a law would apply to elections at which officers were to be chosen in which the Federal government would be directly or indirectly concerned. In this State, it would apply to all of our general elections, for at them we choose representatives to Congress, at each alternate one Presidential Electors, and at each members of the Legislature, who may vote to elect a United States Senator for a full or an unexpired term. The San Francisco Call, in speaking of this subject, expresses a doubt whether the vote of this State was honestly given for Cleveland in 1884, and a belief that all of the members of the Legislature who voted for Hearst for United States Senator were honestly chosen. We can add that there is no reasonable doubt but that Mr. Swift was squarely elected Governor in 1886, but that he was counted out in San Francisco. A stringent national election law would have a salutary effect. Our State laws in relation to elections are sufficiently stringent; they are, however, disregarded in the larger cities. As it is, in a State so close as this, the political bosses in San Francisco can, and as a general thing do, control the important selections. The history of the past, so far as the city of San Francisco is concerned, amply justifies this remark.

GENERAL NEWS ITEMS.

Black Bart has left America, so say the detectives.

The Charles Crocker estate, of $24,000,000, has been distributed to the various heirs and legatees.

The Eastern market is overstocked with California grapes, and prices are correspondingly low.

There was a grand reception given to Senator and Mrs. Stanford by the citizens of Redding last evening.

A money panic is threatened in the Stock Exchange of New York. Large shipments of gold to Europe is the cause.

The Grand Jury of San Joaquin protests against the assumption of jurisdiction by the Federal Court in the Naegle case.

During the twelve months ending March 31st, 1,558,000,000 letters were delivered in the United Kingdom of Great Britain.

Woman suffrage was defeated in Washington. While it was a territory the people approved of women ruling, but when the dignity of statehood is conferred, then the right is denied.

During August 26,968 emigrants of British origin left the kingdom, being 11,889 English, 2,221 Scotch, and 460 Irish. 18,716 went to the United States, 3,413 to British North America, 2,408 to Australasia, and 2,431 to other places. During the last eight months the number of British emigrants has been 181,997. The emigration to the United States was during the year less by some 22,000; to British North America, by nearly 6,000; to Australasia, less by about 1,300, and to other places greater by some 7,500 than that of a corresponding period of last year. About 57,000 Germans landed in America during the months of January and July, inclusive.

The transatlantic steamer "Geographico," of the Bossiere line, Captain Pauset, from Montreal to Southampton, with cattle, sheep and a cargo of general merchandise, which left Sydney, C. B., Tuesday, collided with the Nova Scotian sailing vessel "Minnie Swift" forty miles off St. Pierre, Wednesday morning. The "Minnie Swift" sank within two minutes, drowning two women, three children and ten men. The others, with part of the crew of a Norwegian vessel, who had been picked up, got on board the steamer, which also sank. Two boats, containing about thirty-five persons, which put off from the steamer early in the morning, are missing. The third boat, with the Captain and fifteen others, was picked up by the schooner "Sister Belle."

Professor Huxley asserts that the proper weight of a man is 154 pounds, made up as follows: Muscles and their appendages, 68 pounds; skeleton, 24 pounds; skin, 10½ pounds; fat, 28 pounds; brain, 3 pounds; thoracic viscera, 3½ pounds; abdominal viscera, 11 pounds; blood which would drain from the body, 7 pounds. The heart of such a man should breathe fifteen times a minute. In twenty-four hours he should vitiate 1,750 cubic feet of pure air to the extent of 1 per cent. A man, therefore, of the weight mentioned, should have 800 cubic feet of well ventilated space. He should throw off, by the skin, 18 ounces of water, 300 grains of solid matter, and 300 grains of carbonic acid every twenty-four hours, and his total loss during that period would be 6 pounds of water and a little more than 2 pounds of other matter.

A Pittsburg physician, named Cooper, has recently applied for a patent on a process to preserve human bodies by compression. By curious combinations of steel presses and hot rollers, he excludes all the moisture and reduces a full-grown body to a very small size, 12x15 inches, rendering it as hard and imperishable as marble. It is thought that the process will supercede cremation, as bodies thus preserved are not only not offensive, but can be made to assume various ornamental shapes, and can be kept in the parlor or elsewhere as constant reminders of the departed. The doctor has on his centre-table the remains of a child pressed into the form of a cross. It resembles the purest marble; is highly ornamental, and is perfectly odorless. It is fair to suppose that if the ruling passion survives death, ladies will prefer this squeezing process to all others.

A few weeks ago, while a little black and tan dog was being washed, one of the ladies of the household discovered in a corner of the parlor a bone, which the dog had evidently hidden there. She threw the bone out of the window. When the dog came from his bath he went straight to the spot where the bone had lain. Either he was hungry or he was suspicious. There was no doubt about his feelings when he discovered that the bone had been removed. As he turned and looked about the room his anger was shown by every part of him. It happened that the lady who had thrown the bone away entered the room at this moment with a domestic. The dog looked at both of them intently, and apparently read the guilty secret of one of them aright, for he flew at her the next moment with great savageness, and tried very hard to bite her. He was repulsed happily. Surely, the ability to reason is shown in the conduct of this dog.

Fall Millinery!

The above cut represents a POPULAR SHAPE for young ladies. Untrimmed in felt, 70 cts. Stylishly trimmed with ribbon and fancy feathers, for $2.75 and $4.00.

New Goods for this Department are placed in stock daily. Note the following prices: Rough and Ready Straw Turbans, 45 cts. Milan Braid Turbans, $1.00. Soft Felt Cigarette Hats, trimmed with cord, 69 cts. Aigrettes, 25 and 35 cts. a bunch. Blackbirds, 40 and 50 cts. Children's Trimmed Straw School Hats, 25c. Felts, neatly trimmed with ribbon, 95 cts.

Millinery Department
RED HOUSE

J Street, between Seventh and Eighth.

Fine Table
Wines

From our Celebrated Orleans Vineyard.

Produce of the
ECLIPSE
CHAMPAGNE,
530 Washington St.
SAN FRANCISCO.

CHAMPAGNE

PERRIER-JOUËT

W. B. CHAPMAN,
123 California St. San Francisco.
SOLE AGENT FOR THE PACIFIC COAST

Sold by all first-class Wine Merchants and Grocers.

STABLE TO LET!

INQUIRE AT

No. 1713 G STREET.

Earthquake and Fire Proof
BUILDINGS

Constructed on my patent system. Perfect protection guaranteed. For estimates and particulars see
E. HAWES,
Twelfth and B streets, Sacramento.

RHOADS & TOWNSEND HOUSE

On European Plan.

Cor. Second and J Streets, Sacramento.

ARTHUR MILLER, PROPRIETOR.

LOCAL BREVITIES.

H. W. Byington has been commissioned Internal Revenue Collector for this district.

A brakeman was killed near Cascade, yesterday; his name was Collius. Low shed and high car was the cause.

It has been officially ascertained that there are no cod banks on the Oregon coast, and that the rumor thereof was false.

The trial of Andy Woodson, charged with the rape of little Edith Keru, is still in progress before Judge Van Fleet in Department 2 of the Superior Court.

The thoughtless acts of some young men on the Riverside road on Thursday night, in firing off pistols and making loud noises, caused the horse of Charles W. Swilling to become frightened, which resulted in his killing and the serious injury of his young lady companion, Miss Anna Fuller.

To-day is the Jewish holiday Yom Kippur, and no business will be transacted by the descendants of Israel. This Jewish custom antedates all anniversaries observed among civilized people; it originated at the cradle of the human race, and is full of meaning and solemnity to those who commemorate the event. The great law-giver of Israel instituted the sacred rites of fasting, worship and atonement so religiously followed by his descendants.

There was a Mistake Somewhere.

A young man was ambitious of being a hero; he was a member of the Athletic Club. His dulcinea also worships the hero who could throw himself in the breach at the night time, either in defense of the weak or to save a fellow being from the flames or waves, or a runaway team. She often descended largely upon manly prowess, and like Desdemona, she "wished that heaven had made her such a man." Our hero was moved by such an exalted opinion of manly power, and resolved to win the highest place in this lovely girl's heart. It was during the late State Fair that our hero conceived and proceeded to execute a plan to make himself a hero in the eyes of his best girl. The scheme he evolved in his mind was not attended with any danger to himself. It was this: He engaged one of the down-town "toughs" for the consideration of $5, to attend a certain place of amusement, where a large crowd always gathers, and it was arranged with the "tough" that he was to enact the role of an abusive bully, and insult him as he advanced to the place. Immediately our hero was to spring forward, and with one powerful blow from his strong right arm fell the "tough" brute to the earth. The "tough" was to fall, of course, and then slunk away, while our hero was to receive the plaudits of the assembled and outraged crowd. The girl was to throw herself upon her protector with emotional tears of gratitude for her safe deliverance from the burly brute. All this was arranged for the said consideration of $5, which had been paid in advance. The ruffian was on hand at the appointed time and place, but as a matter of fortitude had imbibed several cups that cheer, and was in consequence of the too numerous libations, a little oblivious, as the sequel shows, of just what part he was to play in this little sensational drama. Anyway, he remembered that there was to be a fight of some kind and he was to take a part. Our hero, with his best girl upon his manly left arm, approached, and the ruffian saw him and at once made the brutal insult and assault. According to programme, our hero sprang forward and dealt the ruffian the supposed stunning blow. Ruffian did not go down; another fierce blow was planted upon the hardened face of the ruffian, still he did not "fall like an ox," or fall at all; but, forgetful of the arrangement, he simply turned on the hero, and was in the act of mopping the ground with him, when it took the combined efforts of a dozen or more of the bystanders to keep him from literally annihilating our hero. There was no prosecution in the Police Court, but a young man with bandages over his optics, with a large hickory stick, was searching the river front to find the "ruffian" who had so deceived him. The girl will not know until she reads this but what the whole affair was genuine. While her lover was not victorious, she was proud of his spunk, even though he got thumped roundly. Her opinion will probably change when she reads this.

Baseball.

There will be a contest to-morrow between the Sacramento and Oakland clubs, at Snowflake Park, commencing at 2 P. M. The batting order will be as follows:

Oakland.	Sacramento.
Long.....Center field	Goodenough.....Center field
Daley.....Left field	Roberts.....Left field
Hardie.....Catcher	Veach.....First base
Smalley.....Third base	Roxburgh.....Catcher
O'Neill.....Shortstop	Newbert.....Shortstop
Dooley.....First base	O'Day.....Second base
McDonald.....Second base	Gagnis.....Right field
Stallings.....Right field	Zeigler.....Pitcher
Coughlan.....Pitcher	Lohman.....Third base

SOCIAL AND PERSONAL.

Jos. W. Houston, of Courtland, visited the city this week.

Mrs. Thad. J. McFarland and children, of Folsom, are visiting friends in Wheatland.

A. Casselli and wife have returned from an extended Eastern and continental pleasure trip.

Governor Waterman is at San Bernardino with the Commission to select a site for the branch insane asylum.

A pleasant party occurred at the new residence of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Jackson at Florin on Tuesday last.

Elisha Platt was married to Hattie M. Richards at Evergreen farm, Thursday evening. John Platt and family with a number of friends of this city attended the happy union of the young couple. There were the usual wedding presents and an enjoyable time generally.

R. N. Murphy, editor and proprietor of the Graphic, and Mrs. Miss Langdon were married at Wheatland on Wednesday evening, by Rev. T. H. Stephens. The groom is well known in this city, is the head of an enterprising journal, and we extend our congratulations to the new partnership.

A pleasant surprise party was tendered Miss Celia Ryan, daughter of ex-Trustee John Ryan, at the residence of the latter, on Thursday evening. A large number of the young friends of the recipient were present and the evening was enjoyably spent in music, song and dance. The elegant residence of Mr. Ryan was handsomely decorated for the occasion.

Public Health.

Dr. W. R. Cluness makes the following mortality report for the State to the Occidental Medical Times: The deaths registered in 101 town districts of the State during the past month in a population of 829,615, correspond to an annual rate of 11.71 a thousand, the total mortality having been 310. 89 deaths were due to zymotic diseases, giving an annual death rate of 1.28 a thousand. Of these, 24 were due to typhoid fever, 21 to diphtheria, 13 to cholera infantum, 10 to whooping cough, 6 each to diarrhea and dysentery and cerebrospinal fever, 5 to remittent fever, and 2 each to scarlet fever and erysipelas. 191 deaths were attributed to diseases of the respiratory organs, giving an annual rate of 2.76. Of these, 139 were due to consumption, 39 to pneumonia, 9 to acute bronchitis, and 4 to pulmonary congestion. 67 deaths resulted from diseases of the heart. The average annual death rate from all causes, occurring in the ten largest cities and towns in the State, and representing a population of 613,000 was 11.98. The highest rate for the month, occurring in cities having a population of 10,000 or more inhabitants, was reported from San Francisco, the lowest from San Diego.

The Weather.

The highest and lowest signal service temperature during the past week was 94 and 54, while for the same time last year it was 86 and 50. Yesterday was the hottest day for October since 1885, when the temperature recorded was 98 as against 94 yesterday. The two hottest days for October in a record of thirteen years occurred in 1885 and 1889. The highest as above was recorded viz., 98 and 94 respectively. The outlook for fine, cloudless autumn days are good for some time to come, judging by the action of the different meteorological instruments in use for recording the ever and varying changes of the weather.

A good story is told of Governor Tom Beuett, now a citizen of Richmond, Ind., who presided over the destinies of Idaho more than a decade ago. A member of the Legislature, who had been annoyed by his neighbor's hog, introduced a bill compelling the owner to keep the prescribed animal in a pen. The bill passed and went up to Governor Bennett for his approval. To the surprise of the members and the chagrin of its sponsor, it was returned with his veto. When asked the reason, he exclaimed: "I don't believe in the bill in the first place, and if I did, I wouldn't sign a bill that spelled hog with a big H and Governor with a little g."

Says the Kentucky State Journal: "A river is the queerest thing out; its head isn't near as big as its mouth." Yes, and it never lies still in its bed, has plenty of sand and often undermines its own bank. It is a good deal like a politician, barring the fact that it is not perpetually dry.

Senator Evarts, of New York, is visiting among the English nobility. Any member of the nobility who has not provided himself with an unabridged dictionary will find himself in a bad fix when he rubs up against the senator.

Avoid shame, but do not seek glory. Nothing so expensive as glory. — Sidney Smith.

God makes the glow worm as well as the star; the light in both is divine. — George McDonald.

The tale-bearer and the tale-hearer should both be hung up back to back, one by the tongue and the other by the ear. — South.

All of us who are worth anything spend our manhood in unlearning the follies or expiating the mistakes of youth. — Shelley.

The woman who really wishes to refuse contents herself with saying so. She who explains wants to be convinced. — Alfred de Musset.

No one can ask honestly or hopefully to be delivered from temptation unless he has himself honestly and firmly determined to do the best he can to keep out of it. — Ruskin.

Look not mournfully into the past; it comes not back again. Wisely improve the present; it is thine. Go forth to meet the shadowy future without fear and with a unanly heart. — Longfellow.

Be not slow in common and usual acts of devotion and quick at singularities; but, having first done what thou art bound to, proceed to the extraordinary of religion as you see cause. — Jeremy Taylor.

There is a way out of every difficulty that meets us in life. It may not be the way we like, or the way that promises great glory, honor, pleasure or reward, but it is the way of deliverance, and we are bound to consider it God's way. — Joseph Owen.

There is a peculiar and appropriate reward for every act, only remember that the reward is not for the merit of the act, but follows on it inevitably in the spiritual kingdom, as wheat springs from the grain and barley from its grain in the natural world. — F. W. Robertson.

Whenever we yield ourselves to the true law, a higher principle of order enters into our life; we rise out of childish weakness, out of animalism and evil; we are renewed and transformed into children of light; we become conscious of a steady upward tendency, and of a god-like and immortal quality. — C. G. Ames.

Tea came into use almost by accident. Some Buddhist priests going on a missionary expedition from Northern India to China, took with them the dried leaves, and also some cuttings of an indigenous shrub which was said to have the power of correcting any injurious properties in the brackish water they might meet with on the way. The decoction thus made pleased the missionaries so well that they continued, as a matter of taste, to drink it after they reached China, and introduced it to their converts.

They also set about planting the precious shrub, and, although it did not thrive so well in China as in its native Assam, becoming smaller both in stem and leaf, it was so well liked that it soon formed the foundation of the favorite beverage of all China. Thence it was brought to Europe, to be drunk and desired by Englishmen of every degree. And it is only of late years that Assam tea has come into the European market, to be looked upon rather suspiciously as the rival of its own degenerated Chinese daughter.

"I don't know," said St. Peter shaking his head dubiously. "I don't know. You look as if you had been dissipating—all the buttons off your shirt, your coat all frayed at the wrists, your collar unironed,—no, I'm afraid I'll have to put you on the elevator when it is going down."

"But, St. Peter—" "Well?" "I married a woman with a mission." "You did?" "Yes, sir." "Excuse me, my dear sir. Come right in. The gate's wide open for such as you." So he went right in to have his buttocks sewed on and so forth.

The discovery that Sunset Cox lived at No. 13 East Twelfth street; that he was a member of the Thirteen Club; that he was buried on September 13th, and was five times thirteen years of age, is published as "a morsel for the superstitious." The last fact should convey the instructing conclusion that it took a good deal of the thirteen nonsense to kill him.

SNOWFLAKE PARK.

Twenty-eighth and R Streets.

BASEBALL—CALIFORNIA LEAGUE.

Sunday.....October 6, 1889
At 2 o'clock P. M., sharp.

Oakland vs. Sacramento.

Prices of admission: Men, 50 cents; Ladies, 25 cents; small boys, 10 cents; reserved seats, 25 cents—can be obtained any time at C. S. Houghton's, J street, between Sixth and Seventh, or at Park before the game. Trains leave depot at 12:45, 1:05, 1:25, and 1:45 P. M.—stopping at Third, Tenth and Eighteenth streets. Fare, for round trip, 15 cents. Admission to Park (including fare both ways), 50 cents.

C. E. REESE & CO.,

Wholesale and Retail Dealers in

Staple and Fancy Groceries,

GRAIN, FEED AND HARDWARE.

1122 J Street, between 11th and 12th.

The place where you can get the best value for your money in the city. If you don't believe it call and be convinced. Remember the number,

1122 J STREET.

Samples and Instructions for Self-measurement sent by mail on application.

L. RADLOFF,

LADIES' TAILOR,

218 POST STREET, SAN FRANCISCO.

Tailor Made Suits a Specialty.

Take a Ride on the Riverside Road

AND BE SURE AND STOP AT

BILLY GROENVELD'S

Sutterville House

And get a glass of COOL BEER. Or if you want a bottle of CHAMPAGNE Billy has it on hand, or anything else you may wish for in his line.

Always a FINE LUNCH on the Counter.

M. T. GROENVELD, Proprietor.

ANGLO-NEVADA ASSURANCE CORPORATION

OF SAN FRANCISCO.

FIRE.—Cash Capital, $2,000,000—MARINE.

Sacramento Branch:

No. 1018 SECOND STREET.

JOSEPH STEFFENS,
Manager.

HOWARD KIMBROUGH,
Local Agent.

R. DAVIS,
NOTARY PUBLIC,
Real Estate and Insurance Agent.

Representing the following companies:

Manchester of England; Caledonian of Edinburgh, Scotland; London and Lancaster, England.

1002 J Street, Sacramento.

Restaurant de France,

FAURE & BECKER, PROPRIETORS.

(Successors to L. Payen.)

No. 427 K Street, Near Metropolitan Theater.
Family Entrance on Fifth Street.

Catering to Families, Banquets and Wedding Parties
a specialty Telephone 228.

NOTICE TO FRUITMEN!

Keep your trees free from scale and your apples from being wormy by the use of

Warner's Scale & Insect Exterminator

FOR SALE BY

G. T. NOE, — — DRUGGIST,
AUBURN, CAL.

Put up in one-half gallon and quart cans.

A. AITKEN,

PREMIUM PIONEER MARBLE AND GRANITE WORKS

423 J Street, bet. 4th and 5th, Sacramento.

Costic Tile, etc. Cemetery lots enclosed with Granite. All kinds of work done in Italian and Vermont Marble. Direct importer of Scotch and Eastern Granite Monuments. Also, Marble, Slate, Wooden and Iron Mantels, direct from manufacturers, at Reduced Prices. Call and examine.

American Steam Laundry

NINETEENTH AND I STS.—WHITE LABOR only. Linen polished in the neatest manner. We guarantee satisfaction. All ordinary mending, sewing on buttons, etc., free of charge. Washing called for and delivered to any part of the city.

Main Office at Sawtelle's Book Store, 708 and 710 J street. Branch offices at all the Hotels.

REEVES & LONG, UNDERTAKERS,

609 J Street, bet. Sixth and Seventh.

WE KEEP ON HAND A COMPLETE Stock of Coffins and Caskets; also, Shrouds of every description. Orders from city or country receive prompt attention, day or night. EMBALMING done in the best manner; and at reasonable rates.

The South-bound Train.

It was 9 o'clock, and Mabel Claire, the pretty young telegraph operator, sat at the instrument, her hand on the key, waiting to send the last message before quitting the office for the night.

Mabel was very seldom detained as late, but an excursion train had gone down the road that morning and was now waiting at Ewing's, below the turnout, till it received the signal that the way was clear. The South-bound express was due in twenty minutes. When that passed Mabel would signal the excursionists to come on.

It was a responsible and confining position for one so young and inexperienced, but Mabel, during the ten months she held the place, had proven herself bright and efficient, and not the slightest accident, due to the neglect on her part, had ever occurred.

Now she kept looking at the clock, thinking that the hands never moved so slowly before. She was weary, sitting in the close little office all the long hot hours of that summer day, and she wished for the train to come. Besides, there was some one on the train she wanted particularly to see.

"Frank will be on the lookout for me," she said, "and will waive his hand—perhaps kiss it in the darkness."

The thought made her smile and blush. She hardly knew whether to be glad or sorry at young Frank Ray's recent promotion to the responsible post of engineer on the South-bound. Every other day she saw him for just two seconds as the train whizzed by; the South-bound never stopped at the insignificant little station of Redding.

They had been engaged a long time, and now this promotion of the young man enabled them to see in the near future the consummation of their hopes.

At half-past nine the station master would come in, and the office would close for the night.

How still everything was; it had never seemed so lonely before. It was a quiet, peaceful little station in among the Bald Hills, as they were called, and though often feeling the loneliness of the position, Mabel had never had the least fear.

Mabel at last stopped looking at the clock, and with her finger idly moving the key, became lost in one of those rosy dreams which youth, especially when in love, is prone to.

Not a sound broke the silence of the summer night but the rustle of a leaf in the breeze, or the distant call of the whip-poor-will.

Presently a slight noise behind her made the girl start and look around. There, just within the door, stood a tall, gaunt man, with wild, bloodshot eyes, long matted beard and hair, and torn, disordered garments, glaring wildly at her.

The scream froze upon Mabel's lips, and the blood seem to congeal in her veins. Before she could utter a sound, the apparition, without moving his eyes from her face, advanced toward her.

"Sit still," he commanded, as Mabel attempted to rise. "Move at your peril, utter a sound, and these hands will choke the breath out of you."

And he extended long, horny tipped talons, which looked if they could well execute such a threat.

Paralyzed with fright, Mabel did not stir, but gazed with terrible fascination at the intruder. He drew up a chair close to her's, in front of the instrument.

"Move your hand, girl," he said, "I shall manage this instrument to-night. It is a long time since I felt the key, but my right hand has not forgot its cunning. No, nor my ear its quickness."

And his bony fingers commenced to manipulate the key.

All at once Mabel realized that she was in the presence of a madman, and personal fear was for the moment swallowed up in the still greater terror of the mischief which would be wrought by his control of the instrument. She withdrew her hand and found voice to expostulate.

"Do not touch the key, I entreat you," she said. "It is not time to signal Ewing's, and if a wrong message were sent a fearful collision might ensue."

The maniac laughed delightedly.

"Hurrah!" he cried. "This very thing I want to see! A grand, glorious sight, girls, to see these iron beasts lock horns, pawing and tearing up the earth, bellowing forth smoke and fire; see them rush through these long trains, scalding, burning, mashing the silly, simple folks that trusted in them. Hurrah! what a holocaust we'll witness! What rivers of blood will flow!"

His eyes glared at Mabel's with the expression of a demon's, and his large white teeth gleamed through his matted mustache. The poor girl almost fainted as he drew the horrible picture.

"But he will not know how to call the station," she said to herself; "they will not heed him."

He turned to her with sudden intelligence. "What is Ewing's call?" he asked, "and your signature? Quick!—give it to me quick!"

A gleam of hope flashed over Mabel. "Ewing's is 'Z,'" she said, at random, "and I sign 'T. P.'"

But even as she spoke she saw the madman reading the station calls, which she had forgotten hung right over the instrument.

"Do you dare to tell me a lie?" he cried. "The call is 'B,' and Redding's is 'S,' and calling up the station, he quickly clicked off the message.

"Come on, come on, the track is clear," he cried, as he ticked the words.

He had cunning enough to stop there. Mabel glanced at the clock. The message had been sent ten minutes too soon. Oh! if they would only suspect something, and beg to have it repeated; but no—the answer came back, "O. K."

The train had left the turnout now, and if the South-bound was on time, a disaster of some kind was inevitable.

Oh, if she could only rush out and call some one, or give one loud shriek. Oh, why did not the station master drop in?

At her least movement the maniac, like the ancient mariner, fixed her with his glittering eyes, and she became cold and rigid as stone, and could only dumbly pray. But stealthily, each time he turned away those fearful eyes, she moved her chair slightly, getting more to his back and nearer the door. Once outside the door, she might lose herself in the darkness while she ran for aid.

For the train must be warned. Oh, heavens! some one must be found, and quickly, quickly, to fly up the track and with waving lantern stop the engine from rushing to its fate.

And who was on that engine? Oh, God! she had actually forgotten till that moment, so benumbed with a general feeling of horror were all her faculties.

Suddenly her acute ear caught the low rumble in the distance. The madman's was equally keen.

"They're coming!" he shouted. "They're coming! Come on! Come on! On to the grand battle of the steel steeds! Hurrah! Hurrah!"

And as he spoke the key clicked out the words. His eyes were turned away; his ear bent to the instrument.

Swifter than the wind, sudden as the lightning stroke, Mabel darted out the door. She did not run towards the station house to seek help, but straight up the railroad track she flew, right in the direction of the incoming train. She did not cry aloud; that would attract the madman to her; but on through the darkness, white, breathless, trembling in every nerve, she fled like a young deer; and as she ran she tore, with frantic hands, breadth after breadth of the light summer dress she wore.

"It is so dark they will not be able to see me till they are nearly on me," she thought, "not till I get in the blaze of the headlight; but if only they do see me in time. Oh, Frank, Frank, look out for me!"

Round a curve, a couple of hundred yards away, the light of the bull's eye streamed. It seemed horrible, this frail girl rushing on so desperately to meet this fiery-eyed monster. But on, on she flew, waving above her head the torn white dress.

Once she glanced behind. Gracious heavens! In the dim light she saw a tall, gigantic figure pursuing her with giant strides.

"I am lost!" she moaned. "But oh! let the train be saved—let Frank be saved and I am willing to die."

She stands still in the middle of the track as the glare of the head-light strikes her, enveloping girl and waving banner in a lurid light.

Frank has seen her. A shrill whistle to down brakes wakes the mountain echoes. The watchful engineer, with his hand upon the throttle and his head leaning far out, motions frantically for the girl to leave the track. She turns to do so. They have seen her. They are saved—they are saved! Thank God!

But, as she turns, a grip like a lion's claw seizes her arm; she struggles madly to wrench herself free, or to drag her captor with her off the track. Her foot stumbles against the iron rail and both man and girl fall prostrate before the advancing engine.

As though the infernal regions had opened to engulf them, a glare, a scorching heat, a rush of escaping steam, one thrill of keenest pain, and Mabel knew no more.

Before the engine had fairly stopped Frank Ray was on the ground. He had recognized Mabel and seen her fall in the grasp of the fierce-looking man.

Springing from the engine, he dashed up to her as the pilot passed over the white, huddled heap. A shriek that might have waked the dead burst from his pallid lips.

"I have murdered her!" he moaned. And with frantic hands he seized her white dress. It was wedged in the wheels.

All was darkness and confusion. The men brought their lanterns. Then they saw the streams of blood flowing from under the engines, saturating the white dress, forming a rivulet by the side of the road. Strong men turned sick. Frank's brain reeled.

"Back the engine!" he called wildly; then staggered up to obey his own order.

Slowly the wheels made two revolutions, and again the engineer leaped down where his victims lay. The man had fallen nearest the engine. A wheel had passed over him. He was quite dead, and horribly mangled.

Mabel—was she dead? Was she injured? The engineer seized her with trembling hands, while his heart stood still.

"She breathes! She is not dead!" he cried, as, kneeling on the track, he clasped the blood-stained form to his bosom. "Some water! Quick!"

And as in a twinkling the water was brought, he bathed her face and held it to her lips.

With a low moan of pain Mabel opened her eyes. The strange faces around, the lurid light from the engine, her own bloody garments would have sent her back to unconsciousness, but the loved face bending so anxiously over her called her back to life.

"Are you hurt, my darling?" asked the agonized lover. "Oh, God! to think I came so near killing you!"

"My arm, Frank. I think it is broken; but, oh, you are saved! You all are saved, thank God!" looking around at the crowd of passengers.

"My little heroine!" murmured Frank; and taking her in his arms, he carried her into the sleeping-car.

The remains of the poor madman were gathered up and cared for, and the track being cleared of its horrible obstruction, the excursion train, just arrived, had been stopped.

The unfortunate man was recognized as a lunatic who had escaped some days before from a neighboring asylum. He had once been an expert telegrapher, and it was thought that over-application and an unusually responsible and confining position had unsettled his mind.

"Mabel, you shall quit this business from this time forth forevermore," said Frank, when this man's history had been told them. "It might produce the same effect upon you and I don't want a lunatic for a wife."

And Mabel—poor, wounded, unmurdered little thing—readily promised.

At the wedding which took place as soon as Mabel could take her arm out of a sling, the young couple were made happy by a check for five thousand dollars, presented by the directors of the road; also a remembrance from the passengers on the South-bound train that ever memorable night.

FRIEND & TERRY LUMBER CO.

Wholesale and Retail Lumber Dealers. Also Shakes, Bolts, Ties, Doors, Windows, Blinds and Screens. Main Yard and Office, No. 1310 Second Street. Branch Yard, corner Twelfth and J Sts. P. O. Box 233. E. J. HOLT, Manager. Sacramento

OSBORN & FOLGER

DEALERS IN
ICE and COAL, HAY and GRAIN.
New 10-ton Fairbanks' Hay Scales.
N. E. cor. Fifth and I Streets.
Wood Yard, 806 I Street.

PAUL GRAF,

Manufacturer of and dealer in Saddles, Harnesses, Robes, Collars, Whips, Spurs, Brushes, Currycombs, etc.

1130 J Street, near Twelfth

Repairing Neatly Done.
Harness Made to Order.

SECOND HAND "REMINGTON" TYPE WRITERS

FOR RENT AND FOR SALE.
Type Writers' Supplies of All Kinds.
AT THE
POST AGENCY, 1007 FOURTH STREET.

SCHOOL.

PUPILS of the Public Schools who wish to review during their vacation will find BAINBRIDGE COLLEGE the place. We make a specialty of Grammar School and High School Studies. No extra charge for Penmanship or Elocution drill. You can attend in the cool part of the day; hours, 8 A. M. to 1 P. M.
J. C. BAINBRIDGE, Principal.

No. 1017 J Street, Sacramento.

R. H. PETTIT,

Wholesale and Retail Dealer in

IMPORTED & DOMESTIC CIGARS

Smoke the "Lone Fisherman,"
The BEST FIVE-CENT CIGAR in the Market.
NO. 225 K STREET.

King Bros.

State Capitol Cash Grocery, 131 J Street, corner Second.

Goods sold on small margin, strictly for cash. Best Brands of Wines, Liquors and Cigars.

A. L. HART,
ATTORNEY-AT-LAW
Sutter Building, cor. 5th and J.

W. A. ANDERSON,
ATTORNEY-AT-LAW,
No. 209 J Street, Sacramento

W. A. GETT, JR.,
Attorney at Law,
Southwest Corner of Seventh and J Streets,
SACRAMENTO, CAL.

F. F. TEBBETS, DENTIST.

No. 914 SIXTH STREET,
Bet. I and J, west side, opp. Congregational Church.

DR. H. H. PIERSON, SURGICAL & AND MECHANICAL & DENTIST

511 J Street, bet. 5th and 6th.
Gas administered for the painless extraction of teeth.

Joseph Hahn & Co., PHARMACISTS,

S. W. cor. Fifth and J Streets, Sacramento.
CHOICE PERFUMERIES, ETC.
Prescriptions carefully compounded, at all hours.

A. C. SWEETSER & CO.,

Real Estate & Insurance Brokers

Lands For Sale in all parts of the State.
Some Good Investments in School Lands.
Send for Catalogue.

Office, No. 1012 Fourth Street,
SACRAMENTO, CAL.

R. W. PARKER,

Dealer in Choice Family

GROCERIES and PROVISIONS

Sold at the Lowest Cash Price.
Give him a call and be convinced.

Corner of Seventeenth and N Streets.

Also, Office of the Superintendent of the City Cemetery.

BELL & CO., GENERAL AUCTIONEERS.

Salesroom, 927 K Street, Sacramento, Cal.
Regular Salesdays—Wednesdays and Saturdays at 10 o'clock A. M.

Assistants—W. T. Crowell, Real Estate; J. Pulvermacher, Bookkeeper; J. Lambert, Furniture and Stock.

Particular attention paid to sales of real estate, house sales, and sales of farms, stock, etc.

Highest price paid for all kinds of household goods.

Barrett & Berkey

PACIFIC RESTAURANT,

OYSTER HOUSE AND

WINE PARLORS

701 J Street, cor. 7th.

CANCERS,

Ulcers, Wens, Lumps, Excrescences, etc.,
Positively Cured or No Pay.

No Knife Used.

As to the success of my treatment, I give the names of a few of the many cured. By addressing them they will give any information required—and it pays to investigate before being treated.

Mrs. O. C. Neilsen, Grass Valley, cancer.
John Service, Auburn, lupus.
Patrick Lynch, Sacramento, cancer.

Mrs. Jno. Shaw, Grass Val., birthmark removed.
N. S. Peck, S. P. R. R. Sacramento, cancer.
J. L. Woods, Washington, Yolo county, cancer.
John W. Douglas, Rocklin, cancer.

Miss Mamie Lynch, Yolo, tumor removed.
Chas. McLaughlin, Sacramento, cancer.
I might give many more. Those afflicted are invited to call and investigate for themselves. Consultation at office free. Send for circular.

Office, 426 K Street, Sacramento.

DR. J. H. SHIRLEY.

London imports 1,000,000 eggs annually from Russia.

Names are deceptive—Don't play with a game dog.

Mourning goods—The merchant who finds his store burglarized.

After man came woman, and she has been after him ever since.

The owner breaks the racehorse, then the racehorse proceeds to break him.

Liquor works much evil, which accounts for the dealers wanting to rectify it.

Of course the devil is not so black as he is painted, or there would be no sense in painting him.

A member of Parliament from Ireland recently remarked that "Balfour ought to have twenty years' penal servitude for life."

"Where would you advise me to go, Doctor? I suffer so much from insomnia."
"You had better go to sleep."

A London dispatch of September 20th says the steamer Florence foundered in the Irish Sea while en route from Garstou to Belfast. Nine persons were drowned.

A shoemaker hung out a new sign, and wondered what passersby found so amusing. His sign ran as follows: "Don't go elsewhere to be cheated. Walk in here."

Terre Haute Express: Rejoice, O young man, in the days of thy youth, but remember that, big as he is, the whale does not blow much until he reaches the top.

Inevitability is not a vice of the soul, but the effect of several vices—of vanity, ignorance of duty, laziness, stupidity, distraction, contempt of others and jealousy—De La Bruyere.

Doctor—You should enter a business in which personal encounters are not a factor. Western Editor—All right. I'll become a professional pugilist.

Baltimore American: After hearing the college graduates discuss the problems of life, and solve them so easily, we wonder that the problems still remain to perplex so many of us.

Says a physician: "Good health demands that the mouth be kept closed while asleep." We have known instances where a man's health would have been materially improved if he had kept his mouth closed awake.

"I can't understand all this fuss about using electricity for executions," remarked Judge Lynch of Kansas, reflectively. "Out in our section we have used the telegraph pole for years."

The sole essentials of seaside society are sand, ships, sailors, slander, shingle, sunshine, saltwater, sweethearts, shells, shrimps, steamers, sentiment, seaweed, scenery swimming, suitors, and last, but not least, smells.

A Vision of Heaven That Comforted a Dying Child.

They sat together on the warm sparkling sand, the mother and the child. The tiny golden head nestled against the protecting breast; the wan face was lit by the evening sun; the eyes were closed, and a smile parted the bloodless lips. The maiden slept.

The mother watched beside her sleeping child, and she—scarce more than a child herself—murmured a mother's prayer, "Lord Jesus, save my little girl." Again and again she repeated it, "Save my little girl." That was all.

O God! why are the poor born to be so unhappy?

Softly she drew the threadbare tartan shawl round the slender frame. Gentle as was the motion it roused the sleeper. The great blue eyes opened.

"Did I wake ye, Jeannie?"

"No, no, mither, ye dinna wake me; I woke my ainsel. I had a bonnie dream, mither."

"Ay, dearie, what was it?"

The mother looked down anxiously.

"Afore I went to sleep I was watchin' the ships wi' their white sails flittin' ower the water, an' I wondered whar they were a' gaun. I looked, an' looked, an' looked, an' then I thought I was in a wee boatie, wi' white sails, too, mither. They said it was gaun to heav'n. The sky was black ower my heid, an' great waves tossed my boatie to an' fro. But far away the sun was glintin' on the water, an' there were steps of gowd gaun up, up, up. They said that was the way to heav'n. Is't uo, mither? Are ye list'nin'?"

The mother's face was turned away.

"Aye, aye, Jeannie, I'm list'nin' to ye."

"I sailed a lang, lang time. I was tired; but I came nearer an' nearer the steps. I was a'most there, mither. They said, 'Gae, Jeannie an' ye'll no be tired ony mair.' I was gaun, but they said again, 'No the noo, Jeannie, the next time.' Then I awoke. Was't no a bonnie dream, mither?"

The sun set in crimson glory over the sands and sea; heavy purple night-clouds overshadowed the earth. Ere the glory faded the little maiden was far away on her journey up the golden steps. Still the mother watched and prayed, "Lord Jesus, save my little girl."

God help those who awake from sleep.

H. WACHHORST

Leading Jeweler of Sacramento

SIGN OF THE TOWN CLOCK,

No. 315 J STREET, SACRAMENTO.

A. G. JOHNSON.

CLAUS ANDERSON.

ANDERSON & JOHNSON, The Leading Merchant Tailors,

SUITS MADE TO ORDER AT REASONABLE RATES.

No. 1014 Seventh Street, : : : Sacramento.

J. R. Wheat.

DITTMAR & WHEAT,

A. Dittmar.

Sacramento Lounge & Mattress Factory

No. 916 J STREET.

BAKER & HAMILTON,

San Francisco and Sacramento,

Importers and Jobbers of

Hardware, Iron, Steel, Coal, Powder,

MACHINERY

And Agricultural Implements.

Send for Catalogue.

F. KUEHNE & CO.,

NO. 906 NINTH STREET,

Between I and J, SACRAMENTO,

Carpenters and Contractors

Store and office work a specialty.

ICE BOXES for Breweries and Saloons always on hand and made to order.

Jobbing and Repairing promptly attended to.

CURTIS BROS. & CO.

Wholesale and Retail Dealers in and Shippers of all kinds of

Fruits, Vegetables

And GENERAL PRODUCE.

Careful attention paid to the selection and packing of Choice Fruits and Vegetables for distant markets. Goods delivered in city free.

308 and 310 K Street, - - Sacramento, Cal.

B. Ruhl

Bookbinder, Paper Ruler and

Blank Book Manufacturer.

Periodicals, Magazines, Music, and all kinds of Binding neatly done at the lowest prices.

No. 409 J STREET, SACRAMENTO.

Klune & Floberg, WATCHMAKERS and JEWELERS

Agents for Rockford Watch Co.

NO. 428 J STREET, SACRAMENTO.

J. A. MOYNIHAN.

G. E. MOYNIHAN.

Moynihan's

418 J STREET.

FOR THE LADIES:

Just received, direct from Manufacturers, an elegant line of Silver and Oxydized Bonbonniere Boxes, Ladies' Cachou Flasks, and other Novelties.

Call and inspect them. THE ONLY FIRST-CLASS HOUSE IN THE CITY.

W. D. Comstock, 501 -- 507 K, cor. Fifth

Furniture

Bedding.

On Exhibition, THE LARGEST AND BEST SELECTED STOCK.

FAIR DEALING!

LOW PRICES!

JAS. G. DAVIS

Furniture, Carpets and Wall Paper

411 AND 413 K STREET,

Branch, 315 K St. Send for Catalogue. Prices Lowest.

GENSHLEA BROS.

Strictly High Grade Goods in all Lines. 624 J ST.

TRY THE LA ROSA ESPANOLA KEY WEST CIGAR.

ANHEUSER & BUSCH

BEER

Can be found on draught only at

John Gruhler's Saloon

No. 522 J STREET.

The finest and best Wines, Liquors and Cigars constantly on hand.

Patronize Home Industry!

CITY BREWERY

FRANK RUHSTALLER, Proprietor.

GENUINE

Pilsener Felsen Beer.

Corner Twelfth and H Streets,

Telephone 201. SACRAMENTO.

CELEBRATED

WEINER LAGER BEER

CAPITAL BREWERY

LOUIS NICOLAUS,

Corner Twelfth and I Streets

SACRAMENTO.

FIFTH AVENUE SALOON,

1015 Fifth Street, between J and K.

E. DIETERLE, Proprietor.

Philadelphia Lager Beer on draught, five cents a glass. Also, fine Wines, Liquors, Cigars, etc.

THE FINEST IN THE LAND.

Agent for the Celebrated W. J. LEMP'S ST. LOUIS LAGER BEER

WISSEMAN'S SALOON,

Klebetz & Green's Old Stand,

1020 Fourth St., bet. J and K, Sacramento.

GEO. WISSEMAN, PROPRIETOR.

Families and Saloons supplied by bottle or keg.

Butchers' Home,

1020 J Street,

Between 10th and 11th, : Sacramento, Cal.

Fine Wines, Liquors and Cigars. Also,

BOCA BEER ON DRAUGHT.

JACOB GRUHLER, Prop'r.

CAPITAL ALE VAULTS.

Established in 1870, and still maintains the same reputation for keeping the best WINES, LIQUORS and Cigars in the city. The finest Hot Lunch in the city from 11 to 2. Clam Chowder a specialty every night.

NAGELE & SVENSSON, Prop'rs.

Telephone 38.

302 J and 1005 Third st.

FLASHES.

The author of harmless mirth is a public benefactor.

A man cannot be said to take water when he liquidates his debts.

The more a critic roasts an author or actor the rarer he feels.

A trust that all thieves are particularly interested in—"steal trust."

Whipping a boy, it is said, makes him stupid. It makes him smart also.

The Czar of Russia plays the cornet. There is some excuse for Nihilism there.

Among the new fall shades is antelope. It ought to be fast colors—it will run, however.

It is a sure sign that the sick man is not out of danger while the doctor continues his visits.

If a bald-headed man has no lock on his head, that is no reason to think there is nothing in it.

According to Divine teachings, most men have a mission. Under the present administration it is difficult to get even the promise of a Consulate.

Do not, good friend, for any sake,
Be green enough to think
That you can beat the fakir's fake
Or win the fakir's chink.
He is not giving wealth away
As free as mud or air,
And if he could not make it pay
Would not attend the Fair.

A railroad conductor wanted to teach a new brakeman his duties, told him to go to the other end of the car and when he, the conductor, called out the names of the stations along the route that he should say the same at that end of the car. When they came to the first station the conductor called out "Ma-wash-in-e-ta!" which is a small town between Indianapolis and Elkhart, Ind., and the brakeman yelled out with all the might his lungs would permit him, "the same at this end!"

GO TO

Nolan & Son's

FINE SHOES,

BRANCH OF SAN FRANCISCO.

603 J Street, Sacramento.

The Only Retail House in Sacramento that manufactures their own goods.

Try Our Famous $3 Shoes.

ALBERT GRUBBS,
No. 1417 Fourth Street,

Will do all kinds of House Cleaning, Lay Carpets, Whitewashing, and everything in that line.

He also has the only wagon for the REMOVAL OF DEAD ANIMALS, and any orders left at his place of business will receive prompt attention.

Remember the address!

No. 1417 Fourth Street, Sacramento, Cal.

JESSE SLAUGHTER,
Office, No. 1217 Fifth Street.

Plastering, Whitewashing, Cleaning of Cesspools, Etc.

Also, CITY SCAVENGER.

Burying of dead animals attended to at short notice.

Don't forget the number—1217 Fifth Street, the old stand, where I have been for 25 years.

CHANGED HANDS.
SACRAMENTO EXCHANGE.
(Formerly Wm. Gamble's.)

1012 SEVENTH STREET.

Fine Wines All the celebrated brands of Liquors and Cigars. ROBERT ALLEN, Formerly of Agricultural Park.

CHAS. J. FREDERICKS & CO.

Fashionable and Practical

HATTERS,

802 J STREET,

Importers and Manufacturers of

Fine Hats and Caps.

Latest Novelties on hand and constantly arriving. REPAIRING A SPECIALTY.

J. O. MILLS,

High Art Crayon Portraits

Executed from Life or Tin-types or Photographs. Inquire or leave orders at

406 J STREET, or 413 K STREET.

San Francisco Studio, 12 Dehane street, between Sixteenth and Seventeenth, Church and Sanchez streets. References: Timothy Lee, Chief of Police, Col. Gnthrie, Capt. Pouratt.

O'BRIEN'S, 607 J.

SWEEPING REDUCTION IN LADIES' SHOES.

Best French Kid, hand turn, worth $7, reduced to $6. Ladies' French Kid Button, low heel, long vamp, worth $5, reduced to $4. Misses' and Children's Canvas Shoes reduced 25 per cent.

Headquarters for the Bartlett Springs Water on Draught.

THE OFFICE,

1008 Fourth Street, Next to Cal. State Bank.

H. D. GAMBLE, Proprietor.

Telephone 199. Office Hours from A. M. to P. M.

SAN FRANCISCO

Steam Dyeing Works

Removed to 524 K Street.

Branch, 805 K St. Dye Works, 2511 J St.

All orders promptly attended to. Don't make a mistake—Main office at Capital Transfer Company.

JOHN STEEN, Proprietor Dye Works.

Trunks Removed, 25 Cents.

JAS. LONGSHORE,

SACRAMENTO TRUNK FACTORY,
530 K STREET.

Trunks, Valises & Bags Wholesale and Retail.

Waterhouse & Lester

DEALERS IN

IRON, STEEL, CUMBERLAND COAL,

Wagon Lumber and Carriage Hardware,

SACRAMENTO.

CALL AT 1118 J STREET,

—AT—

Fred Futterer's Saloon

And Get a Glass of Cool Beer.

The best Wines, Liquors and Cigars always on hand.

POOL AND BILLIARD TABLES.

FRED FUTTERER, 1118 J Street.

RAILROAD TIME TABLE. Southern Pacific Company PACIFIC SYSTEM. Sept. 9, 1889. Trains LEAVE and are due to ARRIVE at SACRAMENTO.

Lv.	Trains Run Daily.	Arr.
7:00 A	Calistoga and Napa	11:40 A
4:05 P	Calistoga and Napa	7:20 P
11:00 P	Ashland and Portland via Chico	3:40 A
5:05 P	Deming, El Paso and East	7:05 P
7:30 P	Knight's Landing	7:55 A
4:30 A	Marysville (Mixed)	4:25 P
9:00 A	Los Angeles and Mojave	9:55 A
8:00 P	Second Class, Ogden and East	6:30 A
10:30 P	Central Atlantic Express	3:40 P
3:00 P	Ogden and East	9:50 A
11:00 P	Oroville	3:40 A
3:00 P	Red Bluff via Marysville	9:50 A
10:40 A	Redding via Willows	4:05 P
7:00 A	San Francisco via Benicia	8:30 P
4:05 P	San Francisco via Benicia	10:10 P
4:00 A	San Francisco via Benicia	10:40 A
*10:00 A	San Francisco via Steamer	26:00 A
11:20 A	San Francisco via Livermore	2:25 P
3:05 P	San Francisco via Benicia	11:40 A
11:20 A	San Jose	2:25 P
9:00 A	Santa Barbara	9:55 A
5:05 P	Santa Barbara	7:05 P
7:00 A	Santa Rosa	11:40 A
4:05 P	Santa Rosa	7:20 P
9:00 A	Stockton and Galt	7:05 P
5:05 P	Stockton and Galt	9:55 A
8:00 P	Truckee and Reno	6:30 A
10:30 P	Truckee and Reno	3:40 P
8:30 A	Colfax	6:00 P
7:00 A	Vallejo	11:40 A
4:05 P	Vallejo	18:30 P
*12:15 P	Folsom and Placerville (Mixed)	*10:25 A
*7:15 A	Folsom and Placerville	*2:40 P
*5:20 P	Folsom	*6:50 A

*Sunday excepted. †Sunday only. ‡Monday excepted. A for morning, P for afternoon.
A. N. TOWNE, Gen'l Manager.
T. H. GOODMAN, Gen'l Pass. and Ticket Agent.

Edwin K. Alsip & Co.

ESTABLISHED 1860.

REAL ESTATE

AND INSURANCE AGENTS.

FARMING LANDS A SPECIALTY.

Catalogues issued monthly.

No. 1015 Fourth Street, Sacramento.

Gregory Bros. Co

Established 1852.

COMMISSION MERCHANTS,

Packers and Shippers of California Fruit and Produce,

126 and 128 J STREET,

San Francisco Office, 313 Davis St. SACRAMENTO.

Hotfilter & Grafmiller,

MANUFACTURING JEWELERS,

Jewelry made to order. Watches, Clocks and Jewelry Repaired and Warranted.

No. 1026 Sixth Street, Sacramento.

BOOTS AND SHOES made to order. Boots, $6 to $11. Shoes, $4 to $9. Ladies' Shoes, best quality French Kid, $5 to $7.

REPAIRING DONE at lowest prices.

NONE BUT BEST mechanics employed.

WE GUARANTEE to make perfect fitting to the worst of crooked and crippled feet.

COMPETE WITH any shoes on the market.

216 J Street

—AND—

208 K Street,

SACRAMENTO.

A. CASELLI

& COMPANY.

WESTERN HOTEL

209 to 219 K Street.

The Leading Hotel of Sacramento, Cal.

FREE BUS TO AND FROM HOTEL.

Meals, 25 Cents. Rooms, according to Location.

WM. LAND, Proprietor.

California State Bank

DOES A GENERAL BANKING BUSINESS.

Draws Exchange on all the Principal Cities of the World.

OFFICERS:

PRESIDENT.....N. D. RIDEOUT
VICE-PRESIDENT.....FRED'K COX
CASHIER.....A. ABBOTT
ASSISTANT CASHIER.....W. E. GERBER

DIRECTORS:

C. W. Clarke, Jos. Steffens, N. D. Rideout,
Geo. C. Perkins, J. R. Watson, Frederick Cox,
W. E. Gerber.

W. R. STRONG & CO.

Founded 1852.

Fruit Packers

and Shippers.

PROPRIETORS OF

CAPITAL NURSERIES.

SACRAMENTO, CAL.

Capital Iron Works.

Vertical and Horizontal Engines

BOILERS,

STEAM AND POWER

PUMPS,

Deep Well Pumps,

Hand Pumps,

Stock Pumps,

PUMPMAKERS' SUPPLIES.

HORSE-POWERS, WIND MILLS,

Tanks and Tank Houses.

904 K Street, Sacramento.

Something New

NEW STORE. NEW MEN.

BELL & FOUNTAIN

HAVE OPENED THE

Plaza Cash Grocery

STORE,

Corner Tenth and J Streets,

And have stocked the same with all New and Fresh Goods, which they will sell for CASH at the smallest living margin.

All Goods Warranted as Represented.

Goods delivered to any part of the city.

Our Motto: "The nimble sixpence against the slow shifting!"

BELL & FOUNTAIN,

Plaza Cash Grocery Store.

A. J. MUIR,

PLUMBER,

Gas and Steam Fitter.

Being a practical plumber, I can guarantee all work.

810 K STREET,

Telephone 226.

SACRAMENTO, CAL.

THEMIS

Vol. I.

SACRAMENTO: SATURDAY, OCTOBER 12, 1889.

No. 34.

THEMIS: published weekly, by A. J. Johnston & Co. Publication Office, 410 J Street. Subscription—One year, by mail, $3 00; six months, by mail, $1 50, in advance; per month, by carrier, 25 cents. (Entered at the Post Office at Sacramento as second-class matter.)

As the season of storms and floods approaches those of our residents who have had experience in times of overflow in our city, naturally inquire as to the condition of our levees. Within a few days we have made a careful examination of those important safeguards, with the following results, which we lay before our readers: From Brighton Junction (the eastern terminus) to Burns' Slough the levee is in size and height abundantly sufficient to withstand any flood at all likely to come against it, being eight or nine feet above high water mark, but it is covered with a great mass of dry weeds and grass, and in many places honeycombed with squirrel and gopher holes. To what depth or in what direction they go it is impossible to say. In the vicinity of Mrs. Conner's hop house is this particularly the case. It has been customary heretofore in the fall of the year to burn off the rubbish, poison the animals and fill up their holes. This the Trustees have not done this fall. The section men of the railroad, in order to protect their cars that oftentimes stand on the levee, from fire, have cleaned off the grass and weeds in many places from the track and the ends of the ties, and have thrown them in winrows on the slopes of the levee, where they now serve as a hiding place for the vermin.

It will be remembered that a few years ago a rather heated controversy arose in the papers over a proposition, submitted by the Trustees, to expend certain amounts of money on certain portions of the levees. Among those was one to expend several thousand dollars in hauling sediment from the river to cover the red earth on the outer slope of the levee from Burns' Slough to Brighton, and to plant it with Bermuda grass. This proposition was carried by a two-thirds majority, and the work was done, but, unfortunately for the success of the scheme, the contract for the work required that the fence on the top of the outer slope, that had been placed there by the adjoining land owners, should be replaced, if taken down, by the contractors. This was done, and the great herds of stock that are kept on the alfalfa outside of and adjoining the levee, were thus allowed to trample the grass out and create paths in the soft sediment, thus rendering the work done worthless. That fence, although several times ordered taken away by our Board of City Trustees, is still there. The levee from Burns Slough to the American river railroad bridge, except for the weeds and gophers, is abundantly high and strong; from the bridge to Front and I street is the same. From this point to O street the height of the levee is that of the street next to the sidewalk, and has not been raised since it was first established in 1863. Should as much water be precipitated into this valley as there was in the flood of '61 and '62, with the river bed, the sloughs and low places filled up as they have been in all these years, and the immense area of underbrush that has grown up to obstruct the flow of the water, it is safe to say that the water would be higher than any portion of Front street named above. At such a height it would come slow, no doubt, giving time to temporarily check it from overflow.

From O street to Y, the levee has been raised, and in fact, is the only part of the whole system that was raised in height with the large amount raised at the election, referred to above. At Y street our city levee joins the district levee that continues on down the river and over which the city has no control, and from appearances no attention has been given it by any one. One protection on the south is intended to be the Y street levee, should the district levee give way, which it has twice in the last ten years. The Y street levee was built, or rather begun, after the flood of '78, but has never been completed. It is some six to eight feet lower than the front levee which it adjoins, and is some three or four feet lower than the district levee, against the breaking of which it is supposed to protect us. It is but one foot higher than the water was at that point in 1878 when the Lovdal break occurred. Had it been there at that time, the storm of south wind that occurred would have thrown the water clear over it. Should a break again occur in the district levee near the city, the water would, in a few hours, be about as high at the Y street levee as in the river opposite, and in our opinion, expressed above, the same amount of water in the valley as there was in 1861 and 1862 would be several feet above the present height of Y street, leaving the railroad embankment on R street the only protection to the city north of that street. Those of our citizens who assisted in the struggle at that point during the high wind of 1878 can imagine the result with several feet higher water than occurred at that time.

To sum up the situation at this time: All the levees should be cleared of all rubbish, fences and telegraph poles, the squirrels, gophers and other animals in them should be destroyed, their holes carefully tamped with wet clay. The Y street levee should at the earliest practical moment be raised at least four feet. When these things have been done we can confidently defy any flood that is likely to come. One of those extraordinary floods may not come in our time, but it may come within the ensuing six months; therefore it is not wisdom to leave the back door partially open, as seems to us to be the case now.

The State Grange of Patrons of Husbandry concluded its annual meeting in this city recently. Several very sensible and progressive resolutions were adopted. One petitions Congress "to give protection to American labor by the most practicable and efficient means, namely: by the imposition of such a tax on immigration as will effectually stay the tide of pauper and criminal labor that is pouring in on our shores like a poisoned flood and crowding American labor from the mine, the shop, the factory and the field, and from every other branch of industry." We are gratified that the representatives of so prominent an industry have declared against objectional immigration into this country. The idea that America should be made the home of the poor and oppressed from all climes may have been a good one in the early days in the history of this country; we now should be more select in accepting those who seek our shores. The sentiment is steadily growing, particularly among our younger citizens, against the reception of the scruff element from foreign lands—the class of people who never work, and who, in a large measure, populate our jails, or spend their time inciting anarchy and general disorder. To the industrious immigrant who comes among us with the determination to assimilate with our people, and to make his way along without assistance, hearty welcome is extended. The growing feeling of Americanism is not directed against him, but against the element that is worse than useless to any country. The hold of the American party is becoming stronger each day, and the time is not far distant when a liberal American doctrine will have to be adopted by the old political parties if they hope to continue to exist. The time is about past when political conventions will be justified in putting on their tickets representatives of foreign lands "to catch the vote" of the Irish, the Germans, the Italians, the Portuguese, or some other faction. The intelligent naturalized citizens condemn the transplanting of foreign ideas into American politics more vigorously than the native born, and recognize that it is regarded quite universally with disfavor. Men who accept the benefits of American citizenship and swear that they will forever renounce and abjure all allegiance to any foreign power should do so in good faith or depart for whence they came.

Another subject that has received attention from the State Grange is that of the inadequacy of compensation of witnesses in criminal cases and jurors generally in Courts. That body declared that,

WHEREAS, Under the statutes now in force, the compensation of jurors in all cases, and witnesses in criminal cases, is not sufficient to properly remunerate the services rendered in such capacities; and that in the rural districts such services fall upon the farmers and agricultural laborers and entail the loss of hours of time and money upon them; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we request our next Legislature to amend the law by allowing such mileage as will fairly reimburse witnesses in criminal cases, and jurors in all cases, the necessary expenses incurred by witnesses and jurors in attending courts and in traveling thereto, and such per diem as will fairly recompense the time occupied in giving such service.

This is a matter that deserves serious attention. In criminal cases a witness is forced to obey a subpoena, perhaps travel a distance of thirty or forty miles, and attend on a court for several days, without compensation. He is told that what knowledge he possesses concerning the stealing of a cow, or the burglary of a barn, is the property of the public, and that his time must be donated pro bono publico. If he lives in the country he must come to the county seat and remain until the trial is over, and for his loss of time and expenses he is not compensated. Witnesses in criminal cases should be paid a reasonable compensation. The trial of Woodson, charged with outraging a little girl at Brighton, consumed a week and a half in the Superior Court of this county. Many witnesses from without this city, and from other counties, were in attendance. During the eight days that the jury was being impaneled and the testimony taken these men were compelled to be in the corridors of the Court-house daily from 10 o'clock till 5 o'clock; an absence during the hours of the Court sessions would have to be satisfactorily explained or a fine would have to be paid. This case had been called for trial before, the army of witnesses had driven into the city, but the trial had been postponed because of some other engagement of an attorney. Too little respect is paid to those who are so unfortunate as to have some knowledge in our criminal cases. Whatever be the inconveniences to the witness he would be ridiculed if he asked for a continuance, and if he suggests that his attendance on a subsequent day to which a case is continued will be disastrous to him, he is told that he must put in an appearance or the Sheriff will bring him in and a fine assessed against him. It is a matter of no infrequent occurrence that a number of witnesses from Galt or Folsom, or from some other distant part of the county, have answered subpoenas at Sacramento, and have been ordered to return on a subsequent day because "the leading attorney," on one side or the other, was engaged elsewhere. We do not understand that the lawyer who takes more business than he can attend to is entitled to any more consideration than a farmer, a mechanic, or a merchant, or that he should be specially accommodated in his engagements to enable him to earn a few dollars more. As a rule, professional men, when called as witnesses, find some way of collecting compensation.

In relation to the suggestion that jury duty involves a great loss of time and money to farmers who are summoned, we can say there is much truth in it. A farmer rarely falls under the exempted classes. With men in cities, outside of mechanics, a very large number have exemptions which they can claim. To our mind all exemptions from jury duty should be wiped from our statute books. The legal exemptions have been so enlarged that the burden of jury service falls upon but few of our citizens who are actively engaged in business and results in a strong temptation to place upon the lists a large number of the names of those who are not engaged in business and to whom the two dollars a day fee is an object.

There has been of late considerable discussion in the press of the subject of the composition of juries and their compensation. The suggestion has been made that the number of jurors for the trial of cases be decreased, and that the compensation be increased. We believe that if a lesser number of names of trial jurors were selected and if they were selected by the concurrent action of the Board of Supervisors and the Judiciary, if fewer challenges were allowed, a compensation paid that was liberal, and the number of trial jurors reduced to three or five, that better results would be obtained. The tendency has been, and we think wisely, to reduce the number of men constituting a jury. In Athens, of old, a large body of men, numbering some thousands, were selected from among the freemen. From this large body a smaller number was selected for the trial of each particular case. In this there was much resemblance to the juries of to-day, except that then as many as five hundred sat upon a case. The judicial system of Rome was to a great extent derived from that of Athens. In England the number of the traverse jury was early fixed at twelve, and in this country that number has always been required in a criminal case and their unanimous approval to a verdict. Until recently that rule prevailed in this State in all cases, but the new constitution very wisely provides that,

The right of trial by jury shall be secured to all, and remain inviolate; but in civil actions three-fourths of the jury may render a verdict. A trial by jury may be waived in all criminal cases, not amounting to felony, by the consent of both parties expressed in open court, and in civil actions by the consent of the parties, signified in such manner as may be prescribed by law. In civil actions, and cases of misdemeanor, the jury may consist of twelve or of any number less than twelve upon which the parties may agree in open court.

The result of this constitutional provision has been that largely juries have been waived in civil cases, and that in such as have been tried before juries disagreements have been infrequent. In serious criminal cases this system would perhaps not be entirely safe, though we believe that good would result were the rule established to take the verdict from three-fourths.

In New York it seems that the leaders of both the Republican and Democratic parties are identified with what is known in politics as the "spoils system." This would seem somewhat remarkable after the efforts of the Mugwump press of that State to bring about what they were pleased to term "civil service reform." Mr. Cleveland was elected by them upon this theory. It was but a theory; he rewarded his political friends. Such civil service reform is not likely to become popular under our system of government. The people are asked to aid, as partisans, to elect the nominees of conventions; in these matters everything is party, and to say that the dominating party is to permit the vanquished to retain the minor offices, has and will never obtain. Experience has demonstrated that each party contains men fully qualified to fill the positions to be dispensed. The rule that has been established by the successive national administrations, of not making hasty changes, is about correct. In this State, the appointees of President Cleveland have not, except in a few instances, been removed; it is likely they will be permitted to serve out their terms; that their successors will be Republicans is reasonably expected.

There is a manifest opposition by the minority of Congress to any enactment for a new apportionment of Congressional Districts, based on the census of 1890, because the control of the Senate and House is under Republicans. The electoral college, with the addition of the four votes from South Dakota, and three votes each from North Dakota, Washington and Montana, will make four hundred and fourteen. With this number, there is a possibility of a tie vote in the electoral college, which event would throw the election of a President in the House of Representatives. It is the policy of Congress to have an odd number of electors, in order to avoid a tie that might bring the contest in the House. If each party should receive 207 votes in the electoral college in 1892, this would cause the election of President to devolve on the Fifty-second Congress. To show how easily this might occur, we will suppose that the Republicans lose New York and gain the two Dakotas and Washington, this would make just 207 each. In 1888 Harrison had 233 and Cleveland 168. Now, add this thirty-six from New York with the three from Montana, and we have just 207—leaving 207 for the Republicans. As soon as the census of 1890 can be obtained, the Fifty-first Congress should see to it that a new congressional apportionment be made. This would avert the contingency, as the electoral college would then have a different number.

If we could only be brought to realize the fact, the world is bubbling over with fun. When there is no sunshine in the heavens there is plenty of the warm sunlight in our temperaments, if we could just extract it. It has always, from our earliest infancy, been a source of wonderment why ministers of God's holy word should eternally wear that woe-begone, solemn look and manner when preaching the light of heaven to their flocks. If there is any vocation in the world that should afford the true sunlight of existence, it is the minister of the Gospel. But we said that there is real, genuine fun in everything, if we only look at it in the right light. To be amused, to be happy, is the great object in life. Where is there the man, woman or child that would not prefer to read the humorous volumes of our literature, to the cold, abstract principles of science of government. The latter we read only from necessity and for instruction, and is a task, while the emotions created by the others are pleasurable and amusing. There are, however, times that it might be difficult to arouse to the sense of fun. The poor, ancient "Triplet" found it hard to write "Peg Wofington's" comedy while his little ones were crying for bread, and hunger was gnawing at his vitals, but even with this scene, the light-hearted "Peg" could, and did turn it into fun and rollicking. Even if we are poor and the lowering clouds of adversity fall around us, there is plenty of room for fun, if we only take a friendly view of nature and our surroundings. There is fun on the street, in the courts, in the cars, in the stores and shops—every place. The only secret is knowing how to extract it at the proper time. Why, one light-hearted, witty fellow can make your troubles and labors as light as airy nothings.

There is quite a contest among some of our Northern neighbors with regard to the place for holding the next Citrus Fair. Sacramento has no claim whatever for the honor, and has so proclaimed through the Board of Trade. Heretofore, the place whereat the citrus exhibitions have been held have contributed all the funds necessary to carry out the project. Oroville has the distinction of having originated this idea, and the citizens of that town and of Butte county paid the expenses out of their own individual pockets. It has developed that such exhibitions as those of our citrus fruits and productions are of immense importance, and other places are ambitious to secure the exhibition, particularly since the State has made an appropriation to meet the obligations attendant upon such exhibitions. Now, while Marysville is a central locality, we do not think that Oroville should be deprived of the honor of holding the Citrus Fair, since the State has deemed it wise to aid in paying the expenses. When it was a matter of local contribution there was not much of a contest for the honor; now that the State stands sponsor for the costs, there are many aspirants. We think Oroville should have the preference, having been the father and mother of Citrus Fairs. We vote for the home of the orange—Oroville.

A CURIOUS LOVE SCENE.

Moonlight over the terrace of the Czar's country palace at Peterhof. A tall, handsome young officer, in the uniform of the Russian Imperial guard, and a girl in a costly ball dress leaning over the carved balustrades of the terrace hand in hand, or gazing silently into each other's eyes.

"Will you not tell me your name, even now?" asked the young man at length, in a tone of tender entreaty.

"Oh, no, no—not yet!" answered the girl, tremulously. "Let us be happy while we can—it will not be for long!"

"Not for long!" echoed the young officer, wonderingly. "Why, what possible harm can come to us from my simply knowing who you are, dearest? Tell me what all this means?"

"I can not tell you, I must not tell you," she replied, despairingly. "Ever since that day when we first met in the woods—"

"The happiest day of my life."

"Ever since then," she continued, "I have been dreading that each meeting would be our last; for if any living soul were even to suspect that we have met and spoken thus—"

But just then there came a strange and startling interruption.

A vast black shadow fell athwart the moonlight, and a towering figure in the gorgeous uniform of a Russian cuirassier came striding toward them along the terrace.

There were few men who would not have recognized at a glance that massive head and gigantic form, and those cold, piercing eyes which no touch of human feeling had ever softened.

"Daughter," said he in a cold, measured tone, more ominous of evil than the noisiest anger, "they are looking for you in the ballroom; go quickly!"

At the word "daughter" the young guardsman started as if he had been shot. He had no difficulty now in guessing who his mysterious lady love was, when her father stood before him in the person of Nicholas, emperor of Russia.

The czar waited till the young grand duchess had disappeared, and then, turning to her lover, asked in the deepest tones of his commanding voice:

"Who are you?"

In a clear, unflinching tone, the doomed man told his name and rank. Nicholas started slightly, as if the name were familiar to him, and then he said coldly:

"Follow me!"

So saying, he led the young subaltern (who followed with as firm a step as if he were going to a court ball instead of to apparently certain death) away from the main front of the palace through a side door and up a winding stair into a small room which seemed to have no furniture beyond a chair, a writing table, and a lamp suspended above it.

The czar seated himself, and, looking keenly at the young Russian, said, in the deepest tones of his commanding voice:

"Now, what have you to say?"

"Nothing," answered the guardsman, with the reckless courage of despair. "I might say, indeed—and truly—that I knew not who her imperial highness was, but I will not even plead that excuse. My life is in your majesty's hands—do with it as you will."

Their eyes met and for a moment the two men gazed fixedly at each other in silence. Then the Czar turned round to the table and began to write.

Was it a death sentence that was being written so quickly and coolly?

Suddenly Nicholas rose and handed him a sealed letter, addressed to the viceroy of the Caucasus.

"Take this letter," said he, "and stop not day or night till you deliver it."

The young officer bowed and departed without a word upon a journey of several thousand miles which might very possibly have a violent and shameful death at the end of it.

Meanwhile Nicholas went back to the ball room, with the very ghost of a smile playing upon his marble features like moonlight upon a statue. He thought that he had merely got rid of a presumptuous lad, and was doubtless well pleased to have done so. What he had really done (though he himself never knew it) was to decide the event of a mighty war and to open a new chapter in the history of Russia.

Twenty years had passed since that night, and all St. Petersburg was in a fever of joy and triumph. The long war with the Caucasian mountaineers of the Caucasus was ended at last and the terrible mountain chief, Schamyl, the life and soul of that desperate struggle, was entering the Russian capital as a prisoner, side by side with his conqueror, the great Prince Bariatin-ski. And Prince Bariatin-ski was no other than the Grand Duchess' former lover, the young officer of the Imperial Guard.

Many changes had occurred since he left St. Petersburg on that memorable night, expecting to see it no more. The Czar Nicholas had died by his own hand, with his iron heart broken by the disasters of the Crimean war. His daughter was far away, reigning over a loveless home and a crumbling kingdom; while her lover, the unknown subaltern of the guard, was now Governor-General of all southeastern Russia, Knight of the Order of St. Alexander Nevski, and for the moment at least, the most famous man in the whole Russian Empire.

"H. Eagle!" cried a familiar voice in French, calling him by his regiment nickname, "how goes it, old comrade? We could never find out why Nikolai Palyovitch (Nicholas, the son of Paul) sent thee to the Caucasus in such a hurry; but, anyhow, it was the luckiest event of thy life!"

"So it seems," answered Prince Bariatinski, with a momentary cloud upon his handsome face, "but I can tell thee at the time I thought otherwise."

And probably the Grand Duchess had thought otherwise, too; although she and Bariatinski met never more, it is whispered that she never wholly forgot the handsome young officer who had come so strangely into her life, and had been so suddenly taken out of it.

Men are equally misunderstood from their speech as well as from their silence, but with this difference: their silence does not represent them; their speech misrepresents them.

Votes should not be counted, but weighed.

The Stage.

[Under this caption will appear a fair and impartial criticism of the drama, actors, music, and all noteworthy matters pertaining to the stage.]

Gilbert & Sullivan have a new opera, which they will produce in London next month. They have not yet given it a name.

Julia Marlowe is not intending, so far as known, to repeat the Perditi dance under the strain of which Mary Anderson broke down.

Violet Cameron, once an acquaintance of Lord Lonsdale, is in London trying to earn a living as a concert-hall star. Violet has become a "little faded flower."

Miss Elizabeth Balch, the author of An Author's Love, the answers of Prosper Merrimee's Inconnue, has adapted a play from the French which will soon be produced upon the stage.

The McKee-Rankin Company will, on the 17th, 18th and 19th of October, present in this city The Runaway Wife, New Danies, and the new play, Canuck, with L. R. Stockwell in the original character of "Cyrus."

Says an American tourist, writing from Rome: "We went to St. Peter's twice on Sunday to hear the choir. They are all men, and there is one among them who has a phenomenal soprano voice. He is called 'The Angel of St. Peter's.' If I had not looked right at him when he was singing I should not have believed that the voice was a man's."

Nellie McHeury, with a company of clever artists, produced For Sweet Charity's Sake on Thursday night. The little sketch is full of bright gems and in excellent hands. W. H. Lytell is a fine comedian. Felix Haney, Miss Blanche Mortimer and Charles Slackford are clever performers. John Webster is a good actor. Miss Francis Herbert is a very modest, yet pleasing songstress.

Nellie McHeury, our "Nellie," has lost none of her old time vivacity, and is a whole team in herself. Those who have ever had anything to do with amateur charity entertainments could realize the quiet little satire comedy For Sweet Charity's Sake. The company might avoid the very ancient wit that occasionally crops out in the sketch. Last night The Humming Bird was given to a full house. To-night that sprightly comedy, The Wild Flower, will be presented.

Herr Bötzel, a wonderful tenor, is fascinating the audiences at the Krall Gardens, Berlin. He was a coachman not long ago, and his rise to fame has been romantic in its details. He must find opera-singing more remunerative and agreeable than driving horses. At a recent Sunday night rendition of a popular opera he was recalled six times after one song, and masses of flowers were showered upon him. He is ambitious to come to America, and will doubtless have a chance to gratify his ambition before long.

Boucicault, in his last contribution to the North American Review of October, says that he invented the word auditorium to express that portion of a theater occupied by the audience, and being in front of the footlights. He says that he was subjected to much ridicule for this piece of pedantic presumption; but the name and title stuck and is still used. He now proposes to call that portion of the theater occupied by the stage from the curtain backward the scenarium. That portion in front of the curtain, and between it and the footlights, is the proscenium. This space belongs to the scenarium when the curtain is up, and to the auditorium when the curtain is down.

Fanny Davenport and Melbourne McDowell, with their fine dramatic company, will present La Tosca on Monday and Tuesday evenings. So much has been said and written of this great creation of Sardou's that there is really nothing remaining to say further than the fact that Fanny Davenport is the ideal La Tosca, and McDowell the incarnation of hellishness as "Scarpia." Not to witness the artistic work of La Tosca in this great sensation is to miss a genuine feast of dramatic art. Apropos of Miss Davenport's visit, the extravagantly sensational report that she and her husband had a personal encounter on Saturday last is denied, and the facts are that Miss Davenport was seriously ill and not able to play at the Baldwin on Saturday night. Miss Davenport and Melbourne McDowell, her husband, are indignant at this false and scandalous rumor.

M. Marquet, a young comedian of the Odeon Theater, has been very strange in his manner lately. Since his recent journey to London with Mme. Sarah Bernhardt, he began to wear all sorts of ribbons as decorations, to which he had no right. After M. Damala's death he gave out that he was about to marry Mme. Sarah Bernhardt, as he was the only actor capable of performing by her side. On Sunday last he rushed on the stage, his face chalked with ochre, and attired as one of Buffalo Bill's Redskins; and on the night of the revival of "Tosca," at the Porte Saint-Martin, he appeared in the stalls in the uniform of an infantry officer, wearing an aigrette in his kepi like the Shah of Persia. M.

Marquet has since been confined in the Asylum of Saint-Anne, and his case excites great commiseration.

Charles B. Bishop, the best low comedian on the stage, died suddenly in New York on Tuesday night during the performance of Lord Chumley. After the first scene, Mr. Bishop retired to his dressing-room, where he was attacked with heart disease, and almost instantly fell and expired. Charles B. Bishop had no equal in his line on any stage. He was an educated and accomplished gentleman. In addition to his histrionic abilities, he was learned in the science and practice of medicine. His last engagement in Sacramento was in May last, as "Adam Butterworth" in Lord Chumley, and "Bonham Chevoit" in The Highest Bidder. He was the very life and soul of both plays, notwithstanding the "star" was E. H. Sothern. There is no artist on the American stage, or any stage, that can fill the place made vacant by the sudden demise of Charles B. Bishop.

The following is what Gullia Valda writes the New York World about American girls studying abroad: "I have so often been asked my opinion as to American girls studying abroad, the advisability of sending young girls over to Italy for their musical education that, though I am far from wishing to preach a sermon on the subject, I should like to say in conclusion of these few remarks, that I think the moral dangers, and also the moral lapses under such circumstances, are greatly exaggerated. Everything depends primarily, of course, on the girl's natural character, but also, to a very great extent, on the amount of talent she possesses. If a girl can boast a really fine voice she is almost certain to work hard, and to be too ambitious of her own future to fritter away her time in foolish pleasures. On the other hand, a large number of girls persuade their parents to send them over to Europe when their only stock in trade is a pretty face and a quite mediocre voice, while they regard an artistic career in the light of an agreeable passé-temps. That a certain number of these giddy-headed young women should make undesirable connections, and get themselves into trouble, is no more than their friends might have foreseen. It is quite easy nowadays for girls working at a bona fide profession to live by themselves anywhere; the simple fact of their work is the best protection they can have."

Book Chat.

Mr. Henrik Ibsen, whose works are a popular fad in London just now, is a man of solitary life. For twenty-five years he has lived in self-imposed exile from his native Norway. No lands call him master; no household calls him its head. In his wanderings over Europe he goes in no society, and in his many temporary abodes he takes nothing with him that he calls his own.

We have received from Senator Leland Stanford the "Report of the Commission of Labor," which contains some valuable statistics and information. There is a brief history of every labor disturbance from the organization of the government down to the time of the publication of this report, a year ago. In addition to the investigations, there is an epitome of the Court decisions concerning strikes, combinations, conspiracies and boycotts; also the State legislation of the States that have considered these questions. It is only comparatively recently that legislation has been directed to the question of labor disturbances, boycotts and conspiracies.

A new novel, entitled "Two Coronets," by Mary Agnes Tucker, author of "Signor Monaldini's Niece," "By the Tiber," "The Jewel in the Lotus" and other stories, is just out from the Houghton press, and is a story that can hardly fail to excite much interest. Miss Tucker herself is a very interesting personality. She is a New England woman, born in Maine in 1833. She became a Catholic and gave to her religion that intense zeal which sometimes marks the convert rather than those born and bred in the faith. At the age of about thirty-five she went to Rome, drawn partly, may be, by religious feeling, and has since that time made the Eternal City her home. In "Signor Monaldini's Niece" Miss Tucker produced a notably fine novel. The story is well told, and there was a story to tell.

Ouida has always boasted that she was above the weakness of love, saying that "marriage is like mirage, distance lends enchantment to the view; those who are in the institution want to get out, and those who are out want to get in." A few years since she met the Marquis de Stufa, an Italian nobleman of ancient family, who possessed many fascinating qualities, and the fair damsel of forty-two summers fell in love with him. The Marquis admired her talents, enjoyed her society, and was a frequent visitor at her villa near Florence. Ouida was prepared to become the Marchesa de Stufa, but she was never asked. She made her lover ridiculous in a book. Those who have read "Friendship" will probably remember that the hero is a weak, fickle sort of character, that does not know his own mind for a week at a time, but who is full of vanity and possessed of a high idea of his own importance. This hero was intended for the Marquis de Stufa.

Fred. M. Somers, one of the founders of the Argonaut, and who more recently was one of the progenitors of Current Literature, which has taken such a hold on the literary world, has contributed to Harper's Magazine for October a choice bit of descriptive literature, concerning "Forests of the California Coast Range." Mr. Somers, being an old Californian who has visited and basked amid the grandeur of California scenery, knows what he is talking about, and knows how to paint the picture. We give some brief extracts of his description. * * * Looked at from Shasta or the peaks of the Sierras, the tract of which we write is almost continually shrouded in an amethyst haze, that turns at times into garments of purple, and shreds out into all the hues of crimson and gold. Beneath the ever-hanging haze is a spine of miniature mountains, flanked by rounded hills and smooth-sided cañons, with thousands of little valleys dimpling the entire area, and nursing in their snug warm bosoms a luxuriance that is something more than semi-tropical. Here can be found the extremes of tree growth. The hardy species of the North are not only neighborly, but familiar, and even intimate, with the delicate representatives of the South. The resinous breath of the pine and hemlock, juniper and fir, mingles on the same hill-side with the spicy fragrance of the bay-tree and the perfume of the balm. The evergreen redwood rises, straight as an arrow, to a height of from two to three hundred feet. There are whole tribes of the conifers, dozens of specimens of cypress and cedar, a variety and relationship of the oaks that drives the botanist wild, ravines filled with the flowering dogwood, sweeps of glistening manzanita, spattered patches of the red-berried buckthorn, rifts of the pink-petaled rhododendron, sanguinary patches where stands the Judas-tree. In this favored country also bloom and bear the pomegranate, fig, olive, almond, apricot, lemon, orange, and the nectarine. The camellia is a tree, the heliotrope a stout shrub; geraniums are used for scarlet hedges; the calla-lily is a weed. And to round out this riot of luxuriance—this saturnalia of foliage, fruit and flower—Nature sows every spring, in and through it all, a crop of wild oats such as was never even dreamed of by the original prodigal son. * * * There is a listlessness and languor sufficient to the requirements thereof, and an atmosphere, especially in the early morning, that draws into the human system like draughts of extra dry champagne. Here, then, is the home of the habitat of one of Nature's masterpieces, the redwood tree. A stranger almost to the botanist, this Apollo of the woods. Belonging to the tribe of the giant pines, which stand in groups of proud exclusiveness in the foot-hills of the Sierras, these stalwart children of virtually the same progenitors, in the years long gone by, came in seed form from the paternal location to root and grow where they could look out upon the heaving sea, and revel in the relish of its moist and salty exhalation. For the redwood loves the fog. Where the mist hangs dense and lingers the longest, there this giant stem stands the thickest and straightest. They colonize in the upper parts of all the ravines sloping to the Pacific, occupy the valley of the Russian river, and the narrow gulches of the smaller streams, and from the Clear Lake country to the region of San Francisco bay, the tall plumes of their handsome tops can be seen standing clear and straight above the vapor clouds that toss and tumble across the mountain outline for more than a hundred miles. Fairly in the presence of these trees, the human pigmy is conscious of his littleness. Like the great pines, the redwoods stand in family groups or groves, the trunk straight as the plummet's fall, with oftentimes a hundred and fifty feet to the light hemlock-green foliage of the first limb. "The tall pine of the Northern forest," over which the chief Red Jacket used so eloquently to rave, was a stripping beside this Hercules of an evergreen. Its height is from two to three hundred and fifty feet. It is as round as a cylinder, tapering from root to tip like a finely finished mast. Its girth is so great that ten men could not compass the circumference of many of them, clasping their outstretched hands. Its bark is brown and clean, and beautifully seamed; its wood soft and straight-grained, the color more of a maroon than red. It is as fragrant as the cedar, its cone long and round, and the silver of its double under-leaf is a choice tint of the moonlight. Felled to the earth, one of the monsters will furnish the material to frame and board and shingle—in fact entirely build—a large country villa. It will do more; it will finish the interior, supply with furniture, and fit dining-room and library with beautifully polished shelves.

Professional Chat.

"What do you understand by a mortgagee?" asked the examiner of a youthful aspirant for legal honors. "Isn't it the feminine for mortgager?" replied the youth diffidently.

A celebrated lawyer is stated to have once made the remark, "State your proposition and I will find you a legal decision to sustain it." This statement is in a certain sense true; conflicting decisions are frequently rendered by the leading courts. The conscientious lawyer, though, who carefully examines these decisions finds that the conflict is only apparent, not real; that back of both is the same general and fundamental principle of law, and that the apparent conflict is occasioned by a variation in the facts of the cases.

The editor of the Christian Advocate, Rev. J. M. Buckley, says that many years ago when he was a hero worshipper, he saw the poet Tennyson, who was accompanied by a lady and two children, at the South Kensington Museum. He was not acquainted personally, but he followed the poet around for two hours and a half hoping to hear him give expression upon something; at last the poet showed some indications of speaking, and hoping to hear some criticism of a painting or some inspired thought, he listened intently and heard these memorable words: "You take care of the children while I go and get some beer."

A newly elected Justice of the Peace delivered the following charge to the jury the other day: "Gentlemen of the Jury, charging a jury is a new business to me, as this is my first case. You have heard all evidence in the case as well as myself; you have also heard what the learned counsel have said. If you believe what the counsel for the plaintiff has told you, your verdict will be for the plaintiff; but if, on the other hand, you believe what the defendant's counsel has told you, then you will give a verdict for the defendant. But if you are like me, and don't believe what either of them said, then I'll be d—d if I know what you will do. Constable, take charge of the jury."

Judge John W. Armstrong is not particularly favorable to flights of fancy, romance, or emotional and sentimental effusions in arguments to juries. He becomes a little restless on the bench when counsel work themselves into oratorical frenzy for the purpose of affecting the minds of susceptible jurors. We remember, however, a number of years ago, when the Judge was engaged in a great legal battle which involved the home of a gentleman who resided in the southern part of this county, and who had devoted many years of his life in securing and beautifying that home, and who by some missing link in his title was about to be divested of that home through a cold question of law. There was a jury trial, and Judge Armstrong was on his mettle, and had the ablest and most polished and accomplished lawyer in the State to contend with. The Judge did not then think there was no virtue in emotion—in sentiment—in oratorical flights, because he was moved to the highest pitch of poetic fancy. He was driven to the only recourse—influencing that jury in the favor of his client. His glowing picture of the injustice that would follow a verdict against him, his picture of that old man who had labored for a lifetime in obtaining his home. In fact, the Judge fairly lost himself in his eloquent and poetic fancy. After he had made this splendid argument, probably he never did the like before or since, he was in the act of sitting down when he looked around and saw his client weeping most bitterly and not realizing that it was the result of his fervid argument, remarked to the writer who was sitting at the bar, "What is that damn'd old fool crying about?" The rest of the audience and the jury knew what he was crying about, for the jury rendered a verdict in his favor without leaving their seats. We tell this little anecdote to remind Judge that he must be more charitable towards poetic fancy and emotional oratory at the bar in the future. The Judge ought to take a little of the medicine he used to administer.

NOTES.

In China one can always borrow money on the strength of having a son, but nobody would advance him a cent if he had a dozen daughters. The reason of this distinction is the fact that under Chinese laws the son is responsible for the debts of his father for three generations. The daughter is only responsible for the debts of her husband.

The Grand Lodge of Good Templars have proclaimed that they will not vote for any one for public office who is not a total abstainer and for absolute prohibition. Several days ago in their deliberations this same body prohibited any dancing in the subordinate lodges on lodge nights. Great reformations can never be accomplished by such ultra actions.

The well-known detection of a crime, in Diplomacy, through the perfume of a woman's glove, was reproduced by a recent occurrence in Paris. A man who found his room robbed of all his jewelry perceived a peculiar perfume, and a few days later noticed it again when passing two well-dressed women in the street. They were arrested and found to be the thieves.

There is a novel society, called "The Order of the Mystic Circle," which has just been organized in Philadelphia. Its objects are the protection and relief of unfortunate husbands, and only those men are eligible for membership who have wives who make their lives unhappy. There are now 300 members, but the number will soon increase to 5,000. There is a chance for such a society here; the membership would be quite large.

There was a time when our friends, the Democrats, howled that "the national debt will never be paid," and now they are loud in complaint against the Republican administration because the bonds are being redeemed before they are due, thus tightening the money market. It has always been a favorite idea among political economists that it is a good thing for the money market to buy bonds. It is a very difficult thing for Democracy to be consistent. This political party can be said to be consistent only in inconsistency.

Some marvelous advances have been made in surgical and medical science. A few years ago no surgeon dared open with a knife either the head or abdomen of the human body before death. Now it is considered the duty of the surgeon to operate by incision either region for the removal of tumors or any other ailment, even to the extent of closing punctures in the intestines. Our eminent surgeons do not hesitate to venture into any part of the human body. They can remove the wall of the skull and treat an abscess in the brain. The spine, the most delicate of human mechanism, does not defy them, and the lungs are easy subjects of exploration. All these advance steps in the great science of surgery are the means of saving and prolonging human life. There are greater triumphs in this department of human knowledge yet to come.

There is considerable complaint of the noise and confusion occasioned by that crazy band of people who call themselves the "Salvation Army," at the present headquarters on J street, near Fourth. It seems that a crowd of half-drunken loafers congregate around the doors of the place, and by their rough and ribald jests and utterances annoy the neighbors as well as the passers-by on the street. While there is no objection to foolish creatures indulging in their insane antics and mocking of religion, still they should not annoy, or be the cause of annoying, others. It is one of the mysteries of the times what possible good can emanate from their ignorant and semi-savage demonstrations? Certainly the good name of religion is not benefited by the ravings of these women, assisted by drunken bunnies picked up from the streets, whom they designate soldiers of the Army of the Lord. If the Lord is dependent upon such soldiers, the result of a pitched battle with the devil would be decidedly disastrous for the hosts of the Lord. It is a certain thing, however, that the headquarters will have to be removed where the clashing of cymbals and the thumping of the big drum, and the hysterical screeches of crazy women cannot become a nuisance to the neighbors and the public.

The Weather.

The highest and lowest signal service temperature for the past week was 92° and 44°, while for the same time last year it was 92° and 52°. The rainfall during the week just passed was .66 of an inch as against nothing last year. The rainfall last season began in September, giving .55 of an inch. There was no rainfall during the entire month of October of last year. The first rain of this season began in October, a month later than the beginning last year. The weather this morning along the Pacific slope was cloudless with northerly winds and a pleasant, agreeable and bracing temperature.

A SUMMER JAUNT.

The Home of "Gabriel and Evangeline."

BOSTON, Mass., September 27, 1889.

EDITORS THEMIS: While wandering about this summer our journeyings took us to Halifax and through Acadia. We took the ferry from Quebec to Levis, and there boarded the train for Halifax. I see there is a proposal on foot to bridge the St. Lawrence at Quebec. It is certainly a good project, for traveling in that district now is not particularly comfortable. In Quebec we seemed to be in a foreign country, so few, comparatively, spoke English; but as we approached Nova Scotia we met a strictly English set of people; yet there are some foreigners through here—by foreigners I mean others than those who speak the mother tongue. As we whirled along in the train we naturally endeavored to take in all the sights on the way. We were all somewhat surprised to see numbers of WOMEN EMPLOYED AS FARM HANDS.

They appeared to be doing all kinds of work, cutting and raking hay, and busy in various ways. I know in Uncle Sam's country there are many women who assist in the farm work, but I do not imagine they go out in the fields and regularly toil all day. Along through this country we passed many houses where old ladies sat spinning. A fellow traveler told us there was a great deal of homespun cloth used. In the White mountains last summer I saw two old ladies spinning. It was a rare sight to us, for in our day we do not see the spinning-wheel except in the parlor, and there placed as an old relic. On the way to Halifax we passed through many flourishing towns, Moncton among the number. We particularly noticed how the tide rises and falls through this region. The Bay of Fundy makes up into the land all along here, and at times there will be quite a body of water, and in a little while nothing but a slimy, dirty hole—a most forbidding spectacle. These streams, that run first one way, then the other, are confusing to one unaccustomed to the country. One hour, a river rushing in, another hour, a river rushing out, until it has vanished entirely. When the tide is out the spaces look like great ugly gashes cut in the earth—that will not heal until the flowing tide comes in again.

The journey to Halifax from Quebec is rather tedious. Twenty-four hours over a rough road is not the pleasantest thing in the world. In flying around the country experiences are many and varied. The Intercolonial Railroad is one link in our chain of experiences. The cars are not any too comfortable, any way, and sweet repose is an impossibility, for it seems as though you would be ignominiously hurled out of your berth. It is a wonder folks don't go rolling out of their traveling bunks sometimes. Well, it is a long lane that has no turning, and finally we reached

THE CAPITAL OF NOVA SCOTIA.

Our tour of inspection led us first to the water front, to obtain a view of the "finest harbor on the North Atlantic;" and it certainly was a pretty sight. The day was lovely, and Chebucto Bay was full of white-winged vessels and other craft. We drove along the shore and out to Point Pleasant Park. Haligonians may well feel proud of the drives about their city. I think in most places when driving it is customary to turn to the right when meeting another vehicle. In Halifax it is not so. The custom is to turn to the left, and oftentimes the driver sits on the left side of the turnout instead of on the right, as is our custom.

To return to the Park. It is not under cultivation to a great extent, and herein lies its chief beauty. The naturalness of it makes it all the more attractive, and it appears to be a great primeval forest. The roads are kept in fine condition. The drive extends along the coast, and there is always a beautiful view to be had of the seashore and the vast expanse of water beyond. Getting back into the city, we visited

THE PUBLIC GARDEN AND THE CITADEL.

At the latter place we saw a "Heathen Chinee," dressed in European costume. He is called Long John, and was the first Chinaman that ventured into Halifax. Unlike his brethren who have come to the East, he is not a laundryman, strange to say. He follows the more aristocratic business of peddling cigars and cigarettes, and he is said to be very wealthy. The sight of a Mongolian took us far across the country. John Chinaman is gradually wending his way to this side, but there are not many disciples of the Flowery Kingdom to be seen strolling idly about, as we are accustomed to seeing them out home. The streets of Halifax seemed very lively. There are great numbers of British soldiers at the Citadel and Wellington Barracks. The bright red coats and jaunty caps are as frequent on the thoroughfares as the more sedate costume of the business man.

One thing we noticed particularly: the predominance of frame dwellings. A big fire and a high wind would make an ash pile of Halifax in a short space of time. The streets are not paved, and, as a matter of course, are dusty. Watering carts remedy this defect to some extent. Shade trees are abundant, and there are numbers of very handsome private residences and fine gardens. There seemed also to be any amount of public institutions and all having nice grounds. I think we saw more pretty flowers in Halifax than anywhere else in our wanderings. All through our trip we were very fortunate in having pleasant weather. When the days are bright and beautiful we are all more inclined to look on the bright side, so we were always ready to say a good word for the various places we visited. Still, in our journeyings we did not see any place we would care to remain. They were all nice to see, and many things were of great interest to us—but we are faithful to the Star Spangled Banner. It did our hearts good to see the stars and stripes in another country. When flying side by side with other banners, we always looked tenderly at the red, white and blue.

Our visit to Halifax ended, we started one morning for

ACADIA AND THE VALLEY OF ANNAPOLIS, The land of "Gabriel and Evangeline." When I wrote you once before, I told you of the Quaker City and the inspiration that came to Longfellow when he saw Old Christ Church. I little thought then I would soon visit in reality the Acadian land where lived the poet's hero and heroine. Since then I have gazed at the meadows, and looked across toward the Basin of Minas and at the white sails as they floated out to the sea. From Halifax to Annapolis, this land of poetry and song is dotted with pretty little towns and villages, one of the principal ones being Windsor. Through here runs the Avon river, but it does not "flow gently," as the old song tells of the other Avon. It is dependent on the friendly tide. It is undeniably a case of now you see it; now you don't. Moving on, we come to Grand Pré. There is scarcely a vestige of the old village left. There are no houses "such as the peasants of Normandy built," yet there are a number of buildings probably more than a century old. "The site of the smithy of Basil, the blacksmith, is a little knoll somewhat back from the street, and guarded by a single pine tree." While this land is beautiful and abounding in little forests, pretty lakes, and picturesque hills and valleys, there is no doubt but that the imaginative spirit of the author of the "Acadian Idyl" has had much to do in alluring visitors to this land of peace and beauty. The Acadians are a quiet, orderly set of people, and have great faith that some day, though they know not when or how, they will attain their old time eminence. Mineralogists and sportsmen haunt these regions, and come over and over again to the same spot. There is always a chance to glean ideas from fellow-travelers, and we were interested listeners to the history of Acadia. While we all do not possess poetical natures, we are, nevertheless, capable of realizing how this pretty rolling country, the winding brooks, the simplicity of the people, and their trials and tribulations awakened in the heart of Longfellow the desire to immortalize these simple folk. There is a charm about the place, and a quaintness about the people. There are other lands and other people equally as interesting, but the native-born American is nothing if not patriotic, and for the sake of our legendary poet we gaze admiringly and reverently upon these scenes, and lavish our sympathy on the youth and maiden who finally found an imaginary resting place in our land; as the poet tells us, "among the children of Penn."

Bidding adieu to the green fields, we pass onward and finally come to Annapolis—and in sight of that awful Bay of Fundy. Having ventured once before on this tempestuous water I had no desire to go again, but I didn't want to be left alone in my glory and retrace my steps by land, so I plucked up courage and followed the crowd into the steamer—and a ramshackle old tub it looked, too. The bay did not prove particularly rebellious this time and though I sat up in the bow in fear and trembling, nothing happened and we reached St. John, N. B., in safety. Fortunately it was not one of the days when the dishes had to be tied to the table, and strolling about impossible, so I managed very well.

At Digby, just beyond Annapolis, is a lighthouse which the keeper deserted last winter because of the extreme rough weather. We reached St. John about 6 p. m., but only tarried over night. Many tales have been told of

THE TIDES

In this part of the country and fabulous stories have found believers. Nevertheless, to the uninitiated, this rising and falling water is a wonderful sight in spite of exaggerated stories. Sometimes the tide comes in with a mighty roar and with such velocity as to drown cattle that cannot escape the swift water as it comes rolling in. But these tides are a matter of history, so I will desist. We were all glad to have had the opportunity of seeing this natural phenomenon.

St. John more nearly resembles a city of the United States than any other we visited in Canada. It is now recovering from the effect of a big blaze some years ago. There are some good public buildings and several places of interest and to crown all "The Salvation Army" reigns supreme. With all due respect for religion, I must confess that these Salvationists made a great deal of unnecessary noise and clatter. While at home they are but a handful so to speak, there are droves of them through here, and their processions attract great crowds. They have a large band and the music, such as it is, can be heard constantly.

Having visited St. John last summer, our stay this time was brief and we came down by rail into our own country and are finally settled here in the Hub—but more anon.

Very Truly,
LEILA J. LINDLEY.

Fall Millinery!

The above cut represents a POPULAR SHAPE for young ladies. Trimmed in felt, 70 cts. Stylishly trimmed with ribbon and fancy feathers, for $2.75 and $4.00.

New Goods for this Department are placed in stock daily. Note the following prices: Rough and Ready Straw Turbans, 45 cts. Milan Braid Turbans, $1.00. Soft Felt Cigarette Hats, trimmed with cord, 60 cts. Aigrettes, 25 and 35 cts. a bunch. Blackbirds, 40 and 50 cts. Children's Trimmed Straw School Hats, 25c. Felts, neatly trimmed with ribbon, 95 cts.

Millinery Department
RED HOUSE

J Street, between Seventh and Eighth.

Fine Table
Wines

From our Celebrated Orleans Vineyard.

Producers of the
ECLIPSE
CHAMPAGNE,
530 Washington St.
SAN FRANCISCO

CHAMPAGNE

W. B. CHAPMAN,
123 California St. San Francisco.
SOLE AGENT FOR THE PACIFIC COAST

Also sale by all first-class Wine Merchants and Grocers.

LOCAL BREVITIES.

The Grand Jury has taken a recess for one week.

There is a great amount of property improvement going on in the city.

There is said to be fine quail shooting in the foot hills since the late rain.

The Grand Army veterans of this city visited their comrades at Galt on Thursday night.

J. O. Funston denies the soft impeachment of being an aspirant for School Superintendent. No one was ever authorized to use his name.

Fred Marty lost his barn and other property, near the Catholic Cemetery, last night by fire. His loss is about $2,000. The origin of the fire is a mystery.

Good prices are now being paid for real estate in the city. Yesterday Bell & Co. sold the F. A. Jones residence for $4,905 to Mrs. Captain Rigney. Every one said that it was well sold, but in less than one year it will be worth a great deal more.

Bell & Co., auctioneers, will sell on Tuesday next, at 11 o'clock, the west forty-five feet of lot 4, M and N, Ninth and Tenth streets, with improvements, consisting of frame house with nine rooms. This is one of the finest pieces of property in the city. Sale positive.

Coy and Plant met this morning, and hostilities were commenced between the two parties. Plant attempted to draw a pistol, but serious results were averted by the timely interference of Val. McClatchy, who seized the pistol before it was drawn.

Judge Armstrong denied the motion for a new trial in the case of George Nelson yesterday, and sentenced him to State Prison for a period of ten years. Nelson protested his innocence, and desires his counsel to appeal the case. The charge upon which Nelson was convicted was highway robbery, committed near the American river bridge some months ago.

Our colored fellow citizens adopted last night resolutions of condemnation of the outrages perpetrated against their people in the South, agreeing to aid the movements on foot in the Eastern States working to secure to the colored man his constitutional rights in the South. forcible and logical addresses were delivered by Rev. O. Summers, Ernest Small, Captain Fletcher, Isaiah Dunlap and others.

Judge Armstrong rendered a lengthy and logical opinion upon the law of prescription, with regard to roads and highways, in the case of Samuel Dowden vs. D. W. Taylor, holding that in the case at bar there was no prescriptive right shown. The injunction was dissolved, and the Court suggested that the plaintiff has the right to an egress from his land over the land of the defendant, but the defendant has the right to select the course and location of the way.

The petition of George Cordano, for the custody of his twelve year old niece, Flora Segalla, the daughter of Mary Palladana, was heard before Judge Van Fleet to-day. A number of witnesses testified to cruel acts by the mother against the child. The girl, however, testified that the witnesses for the petitioner were wrong, and that she was well cared for. The petitioner, after the statement of the girl, withdrew his application, and the matter was dismissed.

The New Revenue Collector.

The first appointment made by President Harrison affecting this portion of the State is that of H. W. Byington, of Sonoma, to be Collector of Internal Revenue in the place of Hon. Robert Barnett. Mr. Byington was born in Litchfield county, Conn., December 1, 1828, and from the age of twelve had to depend upon his own resources. In 1842 he was apprenticed to a clockmaker, learned that business and carried it on until 1849. In that year he became one of a party that purchased a bark and sailed around the horn for California. They arrived at San Francisco January 1, 1850. At first he served in the office of the County Surveyor of San Francisco. Later he was senior member of the mercantile firm of Byington, Clark & Co. in Sacramento. Returning to San Francisco, he conducted a wood and coal yard until 1860, and from that time until 1875 engaged there in the livery business. In that year he removed to Santa Rosa. In 1869, when a citizen of San Francisco, he was a Republican nominee for the Legislature, but was defeated. In Sonoma county he took an active interest in politics as a Republican. In 1884 he received his party's nomination for Senator, but was defeated. In the spring of 1888 Mr. Byington was elected Mayor of Santa Rosa, and in the same year was chosen a delegate to the National Republican Convention which nominated General Harrison for President. Mr. Byington has been identified with prominent matters of State development, and while having been for years a conspicuous member of the Republican party, has not held an elective office except that of Mayor. There is no doubt, however, that the recognition he has received from the Executive is deserving.

Increase in the Tax Levy.

We have just passed through the season when the Boards of Supervisors of the various counties fix the tax levy. So far as we have learned, the rate of taxation has been increased generally in the State. In the county of Yolo, the rate has been fixed twenty-five cents higher on the one hundred dollars than that of last year. In this county there has been a very considerable increase. This increase is very largely due to the excessive rate of taxation for the support of the State government, consequent from the very liberal appropriations made by the legislature of last winter. In would seem that in a State, growing as California is, that the increased revenue necessary to maintain its government and public institutions would not be felt, in that the augmentation of property values would keep the rate of taxation down. It seems, however, that this idea is erroneous. That there has been a very pronounced addition to our property wealth in the last year will be admitted; that either the appropriations made by the legislature last winter have been grossly improvident or that our assessment system is entirely defective, is quite apparent. The rule usually would be that with a marked increase of property valuation the rate of taxation should be decreased; it should cost less for general governmental support as population and wealth increases. It is very evident that the trouble we now encounter is not so much due to the fact that our State is growing, as it is to the circumstance that the people do not exercise proper care in the selection of their representatives in the legislature. The compensation of legislators is so meagre, and the election expenses so heavy, that few men feel like taking the offices. To accept a nomination amounts to a sacrifice; to be elected and to serve is a costly luxury to any man who acts faithfully and honestly. The result of the present system is, that while the people apparently save in the matter of legislative salaries, they have to pay for it very dearly when they come to foot the bills that are incurred by irresponsible representatives. An increase of twenty-two cents on the one hundred dollars in the rate of State taxation over that of last year should be an intimation to the people that a screw is loose somewhere. It should either be that members of the legislature should receive nothing, or that their compensation should be adequate enough to command the requisite ability. We believe it would be very much better if, instead of paying legislators a per diem, they were paid an annual salary, as are the Senators and Representatives in Congress. They could then sit as long as they pleased. If the number of Senators and Assemblymen were reduced, say one-half, and the salary system adopted, we feel confident that the State would make money by it indirectly.

Executions by Electricity.

The New York courts have decided that the law passed by the last legislature of that State providing for the infliction of the death penalty by electricity is constitutional. While it is believed that death thus inflicted will be instantaneous and painless, yet there has been no demonstration of it except in cases that have happened of accident. That the infliction of death can be made painless and instantaneous through the agency of electricity we do not doubt; that it will be more humane than the present system of inflicting death by hanging will hardly be questioned. We have no doubt that with most men convicted of high crime, were the choice given to die upon the scaffold or from a shock of electricity, the latter mode would be preferred. Hanging is barbarous; it is made the more so in that so often it is bungled. Recently in Oakland in the case of an execution the rope cut almost through the neck of the victim. In Martinez a few years ago in the case of an execution the head of the unfortunate was severed from the body by the fall and a revolting spectacle was presented beneath the scaffold. When John D. Lee was convicted in Utah he was permitted to choose one of three methods of death—hanging, beheading or to be shot. He naturally preferred death from bullets. We look with some little curiosity for the results under the New York law. It is very certain that if the system works, as can reasonably be expected, hanging will become a matter of the past and with the guillotine, the gallows and the noose will be regarded only as relics of barbarism.

Baseball.

The Sacramentos and San Franciscos will meet at Snowflake Park this afternoon. Knell, the new pitcher, will occupy the box, with Lohman as catcher. Game will be called at 3 o'clock sharp. A lively contest is anticipated.

The Cabinet at Washington had a conference, and seem disposed to coin the full maximum of silver—four millions. The gold bugs are opposed to this action.

Small-pox is raging in the Government of Oppela, Prussian Silesia. Thousands have died.

SOCIAL AND PERSONAL.

Hartford Anderson, of Folsom, was in the city yesterday.

Judge Spencer, of Lassen, is in the city on legal business.

Warden Aull, of the Folsom prison, was a visitor here yesterday.

Burt J. Kendrick, manager for McKee Rauku Company, is in the city.

Mrs. D. A. Lindley gave a very enjoyable whist party on Wednesday evening.

William Johnston, of Courtland, has been elected Deputy Grand Master of Masons for the State. Mr. Johnston was an aspirant for Grand Master, but the honor fell to M. M. Estee.

No Jurisdiction on Habeas Corpus.

In the case of ex parte Charles Turner on habeas corpus, made returnable by the Supreme Court before Judge Van Fleet, the case was heard yesterday, and the Judge declined to consider the jurisdictional facts raised in the petition and on the showing, on the ground that he could not go behind the judgment of the Superior Court of Modoc county, it being a Court of competent jurisdiction, and the question of jurisdiction having been one of fact before that Court, and passed upon, that he was not authorized to review any such judgment on habeas corpus; that there appeared to be an adequate remedy at law by an appeal in the case, which would preclude the consideration on habeas corpus. The Judge therefore dismissed the writ and remanded the prisoner to the custody of the Warden. The Judge did not consider the question as to the jurisdiction of Judge Harris over the Indian tribes, or for any offense committed among themselves, that question not being before him. As we understand the law, however, as laid down by the Courts of States like Kansas, Tennessee and Nevada, where they have tribes of Indians, it has been pretty nearly uniformly held that the jurisdiction and control of all matters, criminal and otherwise among Indian tribes, is left for adjustment by those tribes. We recollect of an important case in Nevada in 1883, which was a mandamus against one of the District Judges of that State to compel him to assume jurisdiction of a case where one Indian murdered another. The Supreme Court, Leonard, Judge, declared the law in an exhaustive opinion, and declined to grant the writ, allowing that the jurisdiction was in the tribes themselves. The same was held in Tennessee, Kansas and other States, and in the Territory of Idaho.

AUCTION SALE

—OF—

—REAL ESTATE.—

TUESDAY, -----October 15th

At 11 o'clock, on premises,

BELL & CO. -----Auctioneers

—WILL SELL—

THE FINE RESIDENCE PROPERTY OF MR. HENRY ORTH, Deceased,

M STREET, BETWEEN NINTH AND TENTH,

Being the west 45x160 feet of Lot No. 4, in the block bounded by M and N, Ninth and Tenth streets, with all the improvements. House contains nine rooms, and rents for $42 per month. Also, choice flowers, fruit trees and shrubbery.

Sale Positive, and Without Reserve.

Ten per cent on fall of hammer, balance when deed is made. Title Perfect.

BELL & CO., Auctioneers.

TAYLOR & HOLL, Attorneys for Estate.

STABLE TO LET!

INQUIRE AT

No. 1713 G STREET.

Earthquake and Fire Proof BUILDINGS

Constructed on my patent system. Perfect protection guaranteed. For estimates and particulars see E. HAWES, Twelfth and B streets, Sacramento.

RHOADS & TOWNSEND HOUSE

On European Plan.

Cor. Second and J Streets, Sacramento.

ARTHUR MILLER, PROPRIETOR.

C. E. REESE & CO.,

Wholesale and Retail Dealers in

Staple and Fancy Groceries,

GRAIN, FEED AND HARDWARE.

1122 J Street, between 11th and 12th.

The place where you can get the best value for your money in the city. If you don't believe it call and be convinced. Remember the number,

1122 J STREET.

Samples and Instructions for Self-measurement sent by mail on application.

L. RADLOFF,
LADIES' TAILOR,
218 POST STREET, SAN FRANCISCO.
Tailor Made Suits a Specialty.

Take a Ride on the Riverside Road

AND BE SURE AND STOP AT

BILLY GROENVELD'S

Sutterville House

And get a glass of COOL BEER. Or if you want a bottle of CHAMPAGNE Billy has it on hand, or anything else you may wish for in his line.

Always a FINE LUNCH on the Counter.

M. T. GROENVELD, Proprietor.

ANGLO-NEVADA ASSURANCE CORPORATION

OF SAN FRANCISCO.

FIRE.—Cash Capital, $2,000,000—MARINE.

Sacramento Branch:

No. 1018 SECOND STREET.

JOSEPH STEFFENS,
Manager.HOWARD KIMBROUGH,
Local Agent.R. DAVIS,
NOTARY PUBLIC,
Real Estate and Insurance Agent.

Representing the following companies:

Manchester of England; Caledonian of Edinburgh, Scotland; London and Lancaster, England.

1002 J Street, Sacramento.

Restaurant de France,

FAURE & BECKER, PROPRIETORS.

(Successors to L. Payen.)

No. 427 K Street, Near Metropolitan Theater.

Family Entrance on Fifth Street.

Catering to Families, Banquets and Wedding Parties a specialty. Telephone 228.

NOTICE TO FRUITMEN!

Keep your trees free from scale and your apples from being wormy by the use of

Warner's Scale & Insect Exterminator

FOR SALE BY

G. T. NOE, — DRUGGIST,
AUBURN, CAL.

Put up in one-half gallon and quart cans.

A. AITKEN,

PREMIUM PIONEER MARBLE AND GRANITE WORKS

423 J Street, bet. 4th and 5th, Sacramento.

Costic Tile, etc. Cemetery lots enclosed with Granite. All kinds of work done in Italian and Vermont Marble. Direct importer of Scotch and Eastern Granite Monuments. Also, Marble, Slate, Wooden and Iron Mantels, direct from manufacturers, at Reduced Prices. Call and examine.

American Steam Laundry

NINETEENTH AND I STS.—WHITE LABOR only. Linen polished in the neatest manner. We guarantee satisfaction. All ordinary mending, sewing on buttons, etc., free of charge. Washing called for and delivered to any part of the city.

Main Office at Sawtelle's Book Store, 708 and 710 J street. Branch offices at all the Hotels.

REEVES & LONG, UNDERTAKERS,

609 J Street, bet. Sixth and Seventh.

WE KEEP ON HAND A COMPLETE Stock of Coffins and Caskets; also, Shrouds of every description. Orders from city or country receive prompt attention, day or night. EMBALMING done in the best manner; and at reasonable rates.

[Written for THEMIS.]

Dame Gossip.

Dame Gossip is a busybody,
As every one doth know;
She calls upon her neighbors all,
Be they of high degree or low.
She gathers up each bit of news,
With eagerness unsurpassed;
In vain her victims seek redress,
When once within her grasp.

With wily tongue she hurls slander's dart
At friend and foe alike;
Its poisoned shaft attains the mark,
At which she aims to strike.
She cares not for the mischief done,
Her soul is steeped in sin;
Her guilty breast feels no remorse,
Naught but base calumny lurks within.

Where sorrow finds an abiding place,
She slyly sneaks around,
With subtle words she entrance gains,
When, lo! the "skeleton" is found;
For "there is one in every house,"
As the old adage goes;
Dame Gossip soon has it unearthed,
With secrets all exposed.

She never rests while on her rounds
Of circulating scandalous tales,
Each venomous word is clothed in friend-
ship's guise,
As each victim she assails;
Unpitifully she looks upon
The heart-ache, pain and woe
That her base scandal-loving tongue
Hath wrought, as she goes to and fro.

—MRS. NELLIE BLOOM.

West Oakland, Sept. 17, 1889.

Jonas' Wedding-Trip.

"I never thought to come to this," said Mrs. Aikin, dolefully, as she looked around the disordered kitchen. "And the cream all spilling for lack of some one to churn, and the young turkeys all down with the pip, and the white calf ailing, and me tied, hand and foot, like this!"

"Don't fret, mother," said Jonas, who, after a most clumsy and man-like fashion, was frying potatoes over the stove. "It'll all come right."

"It can't all come right," said Mrs. Aikin, jerking out the words between the spasms of rheumatism. "Everything will go to rack and ruin. Oh, dear, Jonas, you'll have to hire help. The men are coming next week to cut down the grass in the forty-acre meadow, four of 'em, and all expecting to be boarded here, and the doctor says it'll be a chance if I get back my strength in six weeks."

"I can put 'em off, mother," suggested Jonas, cheerfully.

"And spoil the finest hay-crop we've ever grown," said Mrs. Aikin. "That will never do. Hired help is the only way out of it."

"I don't know of any one to be hired," said Jonas, dishing up his potatoes in a way that struck a chill to his mother's heart. "There's Phebe Potter, but she asks two dollars a week."

"She must be crazy," said Mrs. Aikin. "What does she take people for, I wonder? Twelve shillings is an exorbitant price for any girl to expect. No one can earn it."

"Enretta Clay."

"Mrs. Hopkins had her once. She's as slow as old time, and untidy at that."

Jonas was silent; his resources had evidently reached their limit. He began to cut the bread in big, irregular chunks.

"Thinner, Jonas, thinner!" cried his mother. "Oh, dear, what a squealing them pigs keep up; they know it's past their regular feedin' time, as well as though they were Christians."

"I guess the pigs'll keep," observed philosophic Jonas, trudging slowly down cellar after a pat of butter. Mrs. Aikin moved uneasily in her chair, and uttered a groan.

"Oh, dear! oh, dear! we never can get along this way," mused she. "Something has to be done. Jonas!"

"Yes."

The curly head and sunburned face appeared at the top of the cellar stairs, like the good genii coming up through the stage floor in the pantomime.

"Look here, Jonas—you must get married!"

Jonas set the butter-plate down on the table with a bang.

"Me!" said he. "Good Lord, mother!" he exclaimed, "what are you thinking of?"

"Why, I don't see any better arrangement," said Mrs. Aikin. "You're twenty-six, and I'm gettin' feeble and more good-for-nothin' every day. There ain't no gal we can hire short of twelve shillings a week. A wife would come a great deal cheaper, Jonas—and she wouldn't want no clothes for a year, at least—and she'd sort o' take an interest, and do lots of things a hired help wouldn't undertake! There's Letty Hooper, Jonas, she's a right smart, stirring gal, and as pretty as a picture."

Jonas whistled! the idea commended itself to him, on further reflection, as eminently practicable. "It might be better economy," remarked he.

"Of course it would," said Mrs. Aikin. "There's the new rag carpet ready for the loom, and the spring house-cleanin' not attended to yet, and all the milk and butter, and the turkeys and goslings, and the young calves, and the vegetable garden—I sold $3 worth of green peas out of the garden last year; and there's no sense in hiring a man to make garden when any smart woman can look arter it, odd times; and your old clothes need attending to, and my new alpaca dress ain't made yet, and—why la me! there's work for three women, at least, about the place! Go and see Letitia Hooper this very afternoon, before Nat Pellett gets the start of you!" she added.

Jonas Aikin came home at 10 o'clock that night and told his mother that Letty Hooper had accepted him.

"Good!" said Mrs. Aikin. "Now we'll get something done about the premises. Hurry up the wedding as soon as ever you can, my son; it's an awful inconvenient time of year to get married in!"

"Are you sure you're doing a wise thing, Letty?" said old Eben Hooper, when his daughter showed him her wedding dress with blushing pride.

"Why not, father?"

"Those Aikins have the name of being very hard. And Mrs. Green, their neighbor, says Jonas is only getting married to save the expense of a hired girl."

"I think he likes me," says Letty, shyly, and I'm awfully sorry for his poor rheumatic mother."

"I guess you'd better keep your pity for yourself," observed Mr. Hooper, shrewdly. "By all accounts, you'll need it! Going to Uncle Prickett's for your wedding trip, eh? Well, it's a pleasant part of the country. I dare say you'll like it."

Uncle Prickett was a leather-complexioned old man, with keen black eyes, and sharp, yellow teeth, like those of an elderly monkey. He gave them a cordial welcome.

"That's a pretty little wife o' yours, Mr. Aikin," said he. "And as smart as steel, too, though she is my niece!"

"Yes," said Jonas, with modest exultation. "I calculate she'll be helpful like around the farm. We need a stirring woman at home."

"Not too helpful, I hope," said Uncle Prickett.

"Eh?" said Jonas.

"Look here," said Uncle Prickett.

"Sir," stammered Jonas.

"Fond of her, eh?" questioned Uncle Prickett.

"You bet I am!" Jonas promptly responded.

"Then don't murder her!"

"Murder her!"

"Look here again." And Uncle Prickett drew Jonas toward the window. "D'ye see the churchyard over there on the hill?"

Jonas shivered a little.

"Yes," said he. "I see it. Them white stones gleamin' through the trees, ain't it?"

"My wife lies there," said Uncle Prickett.

"Indeed!" said Jonas, a little uneasily.

"I killed her!" said Uncle Prickett.

Jonas started back.

"Eh!" he exclaimed a second time.

"Don't look at me that way," said Uncle Prickett. "I didn't stab her, nor poison her. I loved her, young man, just as well as you love your wife. And yet—I killed her. Do you want to know how it was done?"

Jonas stared at him. Had the man gone crazy?

"Work!" said Uncle Prickett. "Hard work!" We were proud of the farm and of the dairy. We liked to take premiums at the county fairs. We added up our bank account every night. Jenny was as anxious to save money as I was. She rose at 3 o'clock in the morning and sat up sewing until 11 at night. Well, here's the farm, and there's the bank account; but Jenny lies buried under the biggest gray shaft on yonder side hill. She died the day before her 29th birthday, and I knew just as well as if a coroner's inquest had said so that I had been her death."

"No, no!" pleaded Jonas. "Don't say that!"

"As true as I stand here," said Uncle Prickett. "I should have been careful of her. A woman ain't a machine. I should have cherished her—ain't that what the 'marriage service' says?—instead of letting her work herself into a decline. What sort o' good do you suppose all that money does me now? She ain't here to share it with me. Now you know what I mean, young man."

And Uncle Prickett turned on his heel and went out of the room.

"Letty," he said to his niece, who was gathering the first ripe raspberries that grew on the sunny garden wall, "I've been giving your husband a word of advice. I've been telling him he mustn't let you work yourself to death, like your Aunt Jenny did."

"Do you think he needs advice, Uncle Prickett?"

"All young men do at one period or another of their lives," said Mr. Prickett.

It was of a Saturday night when Jonas brought his bride home. Mrs. Green, the nearest neighbor, had been helping around the house, and had prepared a savory supper. The evening meal was scarcely concluded when a wagon drove up to the door, and out stepped a stout Welsh girl, with a bundle under her arm and a yellow cotton umbrella.

"Who's this?" said Mrs. Aikin, viewing the new arrival with disfavor.

"It's the hired help," Jonas answered.

"The hired help! Why, I thought you'd got married to—"

"The fact is, mother," said Jonas, kindly, "I've sort o' changed my mind about some things. You've most killed yourself with hard work. You never would have got this rheumatism fastened on you if you hadn't stuck to it you'd whitewash the cellar yourself that damp spell in May, and I mean Letty shall start on a different platform. We ain't rich, but we can afford to live comfortable, and I don't mean my wife shall lose her round cheeks and fresh color. She'll find enough to do without turning into a drudge, and so I've hired Joan Llanis for a year."

Mrs. Aikin uttered a hollow groan. "I do believe you've gone crazy," said she. "We shall all go to the poorhouse together."

But they did not. Joan Llanis proved a domestic treasure, especially as nurse-in-chief to the poor old rheumatic invalid. Letty was an excellent manager, and Mrs. Aikin was unwillingly forced to confess that everything thrived under her administration, and that the hired girl's wages was the best investment Jonas had ever made.

At the year's end Jonas celebrated the anniversary of his wedding day by taking Letty up to Prickett falls again.

"Look at her, Uncle Prickett!" said he. "See her red cheeks and her dimples. Haven't I taken your advice?"

"You have," said Uncle Prickett, "and I'm glad of it. And I often think of two lines I once read in one of Jenny's old poetry books:

"'Tis wrought by want of thought,
As well as want of heart!"

"That's as true as gospel," said Jonas Aikin.

Illusions.

Illusions wrap us still, whate'er befall;
The child's illusions, like the gold of dawn,
Fade in the strengthening day, but youth and age

Find fresh illusions at each sequent stage
Of life to fill the lack of those outworn.
Illusions wrap us still, whate'er befall,
Till death, that last illusion, ends them all.

—Century.

FRIEND & TERRY

LUMBER CO.

Wholesale and Retail Lumber Dealers, Also Shakes, Bolts, Ties, Doors, Windows, Blinds and Screens. Main Yard and Office, No. 1310 Second Street. Branch Yard, corner Twelfth and J Sts. P. O. Box 233. E. J. HOLT, Manager. Sacramento

OSBORN & FOLGER

DEALERS IN
ICE and COAL, HAY and GRAIN.
New 10-ton Fairbanks' Hay Scales.
N. E. cor. Fifth and I Streets.
Wood Yard, 806 I Street.

PAUL GRAF,

Manufacturer of and dealer in Saddles, Harness, Robes, Collars, Whips, Spurs, Brushes, Currycombs, etc.

1130 J Street, near Twelfth

Repairing Neatly Done.
Harness Made to Order.

SECOND HAND

"REMINGTON" TYPE WRITERS

FOR RENT AND FOR SALE.
Type Writers' Supplies of All Kinds.
AT THE
YOST AGENCY, 1007 FOURTH STREET.

SCHOOL.

PUPILS of the Public Schools who wish to review during their vacation will find BAINBRIDGE COLLEGE the place. We make a specialty of Grammar School and High School Studies. No extra charge for Penmanship or Elocution drill. You can attend in the cool part of the day; hours, 8 A. M. to 1 P. M. J. C. BAINBRIDGE, Principal.

No. 1017 J Street, Sacramento.

R. H. PETTIT.

Wholesale and Retail Dealer in
IMPORTED & DOMESTIC CIGARS

Smoke the "Lone Fisherman,"
The BEST FIVE-CENT CIGAR in the Market.

NO. 225 K STREET.

King Bros.

State Capitol Cash Grocery, 131 J Street, corner Second.

Goods sold on small margin, strictly for cash. Best Brands of Wines, Liquors and Cigars.

A. L. HART,
ATTORNEY-AT-LAW
Sutter Building, cor. 5th and J.

W. A. ANDERSON,
ATTORNEY-AT-LAW,
No. 209 J Street, Sacramento.

W. A. GETT, JR.,
Attorney at Law,
Southwest Corner of Seventh and J Streets,
SACRAMENTO, CAL.

F. F. TEBBETS, DENTIST.
No. 914 SIXTH STREET,
Bet. I and J, west side, opp. Congregational Church.

DR. H. H. PIERSON,
SURGICAL & MECHANICAL & DENTIST
511 J Street, bet. 5th and 6th.
Gas administered for the painless extraction of teeth.

Joseph Hahn & Co.,
PHARMACISTS,
S. W. cor. Fifth and J Streets, Sacramento.
CHOICE PERFUMERIES, Etc.
Prescriptions carefully compounded, at all hours.

A. C. SWEETSER & CO.,
Real Estate & Insurance Brokers

Lands For Sale in all parts of the State.
Some Good Investments in School Lands.
Send for Catalogue.

Office, No. 1012 Fourth Street,
SACRAMENTO, CAL.

R. W. PARKER,
Dealer in Choice Family

GROCERIES and PROVISIONS
Sold at the Lowest Cash Price.
Give him a call and be convinced.

Corner of Seventeenth and N Streets.
Also, Office of the Superintendent of the City Cemetery.

BELL & CO.,
GENERAL AUCTIONEERS.
Salesroom, 927 K Street, Sacramento, Cal.
Regular Salesdays—Wednesdays and Saturdays at 10 o'clock A. M.

Assistants—W. T. Crowell, Real Estate; J. Pulvermacher, Bookkeeper; J. Lambert, Furniture and Stock.

Particular attention paid to sales of real estate, house sales, and sales of farms, stock, etc.
Highest price paid for all kinds of household goods.

Barrett & Berkey

PACIFIC RESTAURANT,
OYSTER HOUSE AND
WINE PARLORS

701 J Street, cor. 7th.

CANCERS,
Ulcers, Wens, Lumps, Excesses, etc.,
Positively Cured or no Pay.
No Knife Used.

As to the success of my treatment, I give the names of a few of the many cured. By addressing them they will give any information required—and it pays to investigate before being treated.

Mrs. O. C. Neilsen, Grass Valley, cancer.
John Service, Auburn, lupus.
Patrick Lynch, Sacramento, cancer.
Mrs. Jno. Shaw, Grass Val., birthmark removed.
N. S. Peck, S. P. R. R. Sacramento, cancer.
J. L. Woods, Washington, Yolo county, cancer.
John W. Douglas, Rocklin, cancer.
Miss Mamie Lynch, Yolo, tumor removed.
Chas. McLaughlin, Sacramento, cancer.
I might give many more. Those afflicted are invited to call and investigate for themselves. Consultation at office free. Send for circular.
Office, 426 K Street, Sacramento.

DR. J. H. SHIRLEY.

Antidotes for Poisons.

For carbolic acid, give flour and water or glutinous drinks.

For carbonate of soda, copperas and cobalt, give a prompt emetic-soap or mucilaginous drinks.

For strychnine and nux vomica, give an emetic of mustard or sulphate of zinc, aided by warm water.

For caustic soda, caustic potash, and volatile alkali, give freely of water with lemon juice or vinegar in it.

For chloroform and chloral hydrate, pour cold water over the head and face, with artificial respiration, galvanic battery.

For blue vitriol, corrosive sublimate, salt-peter, sugar of lead and bedbug poison, give milk or white of eggs in large-sized quantities.

For oil of vitriol, hartshorn, ammonia, muriatic and oxalic acids, give magnesia or soap, dissolved in water, every two minutes.

For Fowler's solution and arsenic, give emetic of mustard and salt, a tablespoonful of each, and follow with sweet oil, butter or milk.

For antimonial wine or tartar emetic, give warm water to encourage vomiting. If vomiting does not stop give a grain of opium in water.

For laudanum, morphine and opium, give strong coffee, followed by ground mustard or grease in warm water to produce vomiting. Keep patient in constant motion.

A Plea for Boys.

I am sorry to say that boys are not generally understood. Between six and fourteen years of age the masculine nature is a mixture of mischief, and sensitiveness, and spunk, and fun, and trouble, and pugnacity, which the chemistry of the world fails to analyze. A little girl is definable. She laughs when she is pleased, cries when she feels badly, pouts when she is cross and eats when she is hungry. Not so with a boy. He would rather go a nutting than to eat, forgets at the fish pond he has not had his dinner, often laughs when he feels badly, and looks submissive to an imposition practiced upon till he gets the perpetrator alone in the middle of the road, and tumbles him into the dirt, till eyes and mouth and nose are so full that the fellow imagines that before his time he has turned to dust. A boy under a calm exterior may have twenty emotions struggling for ascendancy. Especially do I feel for a boy that has more fun aboard than he can master. How well I remember the country schoolhouse where we all had to be sedate, though one boy would make a face enough to put the whole school in danger of running over with giggle. It is an awful thing for a child not to dare to laugh when the merriment rises and swells up till the jacket gets tight and the body is a ball of fun, and he knows that if out of one of the corners of his compressed lips a snicker should escape all the boys would go off in explosion. I remember times when I had at school such responsibility of repression resting on me and proved unfaithful.—Talmage.

The finest thing the late George D. Prentice wrote is this inimitable passage: "It cannot be that earth is man's only abiding place. It cannot be that our life is a bubble cast up by the ocean of eternity to float a moment upon its waves, and sink into nothingness. Else why is it the high and glorious aspirations, which leap like angels from the temple of our hearts, are forever wandering unsatisfied? Why is it that the rainbow and cloud come over us with a beauty that is not of earth, and then pass off to leave us to muse on their loveliness? Why is it that the stars which 'hold their festival around the midnight throne,' are set above the grasp of our limited faculties, forever mocking us with unapproachable glory? And, finally, why is it that bright forms of human beauty are presented to our view and taken from us, leaving the thousand streams of our affection to flow back in an Alpine torrent upon our hearts? We are born for a higher destiny than that of earth. There is a realm where the rainbow never fades; where the stars will be spread out before us like the islands that slumber on the ocean, and where the beautiful beings which pass before us, like shadows, will stay forever in our presence."

The suicide of a Baltimore man the other day is fully explained by the statement that he was a woman hater. For years had his aversion been so great that he would step from the sidewalk to avoid passing one too closely, and he would not sit at the same table with one. That the existence of this man must have been wretched beyond expression no one can doubt, and perhaps the strangest part of his horrible romance is that he did not end his wretched life long ago. Disappointment in love in his youth is said to have been the cause of his hatred for women. Like many another fool, he was ready to judge all women by the one who had played him false. By doing so he committed a wrong to womankind for which no good woman can forgive him, and he inflicted a fitting punishment on himself by spending the rest of his life of nearly a half a century in misery and mental torture. The man who hates womankind may never hope for happiness this side of the grave, and perhaps not beyond it.

H. WACHHORST

Leading Jeweler of Sacramento
SIGN OF THE TOWN CLOCK,
No. 315 J STREET, SACRAMENTO.

A. G. JOHNSON.

CLAUS ANDERSON.

ANDERSON & JOHNSON, The Leading Merchant Tailors,

SUITS MADE TO ORDER AT REASONABLE RATES.

No. 1014 Seventh Street, : : : Sacramento.

J. R. Wheat.

DITTMAR & WHEAT,

A. Dittmar.

Sacramento Lounge & Mattress Factory

No. 916 J STREET.

BAKER & HAMILTON,

San Francisco and Sacramento,

Importers and Jobbers of

Hardware, Iron, Steel, Coal, Powder,

MACHINERY

And Agricultural Implements.

Send for Catalogue.

F. KUEHNE & CO.,

NO. 906 NINTH STREET,

Between I and J,

SACRAMENTO,

Carpenters and Contractors

Store and office work a specialty.

ICE BOXES for Breweries and Saloons always on hand and made to order.

Jobbing and Repairing promptly attended to.

CURTIS BROS. & CO.

Wholesale and Retail Dealers in and Shippers of all kinds of

Fruits, Vegetables

And GENERAL PRODUCE.

Careful attention paid to the selection and packing of Choice Fruits and Vegetables for distant markets. Goods delivered in city free.

308 and 310 K Street, - - Sacramento, Cal.

B. Ruhl

Bookbinder, Paper Ruler and Blank Book Manufacturer.

Periodicals, Magazines, Music, and all kinds of Binding neatly done at the lowest prices.

No. 409 J STREET,

SACRAMENTO.

Klune & Floberg,

WATCHMAKERS and JEWELERS
Agents for Rockford Watch Co.
NO. 428 J STREET, SACRAMENTO.

J. A. MOYNIHAN.

G. E. MOYNIHAN.

Moynihan's

418 J STREET.

FOR THE LADIES:

Just received, direct from Manufacturers, an elegant line of Silver and Oxidized Bonbonniere Boxes, Ladies' Cachou Flasks, and other Novelties.

Call and inspect them. THE ONLY FIRST-CLASS HOUSE IN THE CITY.

Wm. J. Hassett.

A. J. Johnston.

A. J. Johnston & Co. PRINTERS,

410 J Street,

Sacramento

W. D. Comstock, 501 -- 507 K, cor. Fifth

Furniture

Bedding.

On Exhibition, THE LARGEST AND BEST SELECTED STOCK.
FAIR DEALING! LOW PRICES!

JAS. G. DAVIS

Furniture, Carpets and Wall Paper
411 AND 413 K STREET,
Branch, 315 K St. Send for Catalogue. Prices Lowest.

ANHEUSER & BUSCH

BEER

Can be found on draught only at

John Gruhler's Saloon

No. 522 J STREET.

The finest and best Wines, Liquors and Cigars constantly on hand.

Patronize Home Industry!

CITY BREWERY

FRANK RUHSTALLER, Proprietor.

GENUINE

Pilsener Felsen Beer.

Corner Twelfth and H Streets,

Telephone 201.

SACRAMENTO.

CELEBRATED

WEINER LAGER BEER

CAPITAL BREWERY

LOUIS NICOLAUS,

Corner Twelfth and I Streets

SACRAMENTO.

FIFTH AVENUE SALOON,

1015 Fifth Street, between J and K.

E. DIETERLE, Proprietor.

Philadelphia Lager Beer on draught, five cents a glass. Also, fine Wines, Liquors, Cigars, etc.

THE FINEST IN THE LAND.

Agent for the Celebrated W. J. LEMP'S ST. LOUIS LAGER BEER

WISSEMAN'S SALOON,

Klebetz & Green's Old Stand,

1020 Fourth St., bet. J and K, Sacramento.

GEO. WISSEMAN, PROPRIETOR.

Families and Saloons supplied by bottle or keg.

Butchers' Home,

1020 J Street,

Between 10th and 11th, : Sacramento, Cal.

Fine Wines, Liquors and Cigars. Also,

BOCA BEER ON DRAUGHT.

JACOB GRUHLER, Prop'r.

CAPITAL ALE VAULTS.

Established in 1870, and still maintains the same reputation for keeping the best WINES, LIQUORS and Cigars in the city. The finest Hot Lunch in the city from 11 to 2. Clam Chowder a specialty every night.

NAGELE & SVENSSON, Prop'rs.

Telephone 38.

302 J and 1005 Third st.

FLASHES.

Near-sighted persons are eye-dull.
If all men were brilliant all men would be alike.

The good die young—this also is true of chickens.

If all men were rich where would be the distinction from that point of view.

"Listen to Our Tale of Woe," is the song the Grand Jurymen have to listen to.

This is the season of the year that makes the stovefitter contented—he is always sooted.

A river is unlike Corporal Tanner, it can continue to run to its mouth without losing its place—See!

Homely people make the best friends. That is the reason you can never have a homely girl for a friend.

A girl is never so much flattered as when you ask her about her victims; every girl likes to think she has victims.

Congressman Allen, representative from Mississippi, tells the following: While practicing law in his native State, the case of a man whose dog had been shot by a neighbor, and who wished to obtain damages for him, was brought before the court. Among the witnesses summoned to testify to the qualities of the dead animal was a slow-talking old darkey, familiarly known as "Uncle Sam." "Did you know anything about this dog, Sam?" asked the counsel for the plaintiff. "I reckon I did," replied Uncle Sam, "I've knowed him ever since he were a pup." "Well, what sort of a dog was he?" asked the lawyer. "He was a big yaller dog," replied Sam. "Oh," said the lawyer, somewhat impatiently, "I don't mean how did he look. I mean what sort of a dog was he—could he hunt, was he a guard?" "He couldn't do nothin' as I knowed on," replied Sam, slowly, "cept eat an' sleep, an' lay roun' an' holler an' make a fuss. Dat's what made 'em call 'im what dey did." "And what did they call him?" asked the lawyer. "Why, sah," replied Sam, "folks called 'im Lawyer."—Drake's Magazine.

Commodore Vanderbilt made $100,000,000, beginning with no money and very little education. He could write his name, and that was about the extent of his scholastic acquirements. His name, which was good for any amount on a check, was not much to look at. He could not pronounce the letter V, and always called himself Wanderbilt. A new clerk at the Postoffice greatly annoyed him by looking for his letters under the W's. "Don't look among the W's; look among the Wees," said the millionaire. At the age of 80 Commodore was a match for the whole street. He opened all his own letters, dictated his answers on the margin, spent an hour in transacting business involving many millions and then went to his stables. He was very proud of his horses, and liked to lead the road—and he generally did.

GO TO

Nolan & Son's
FOR FINE SHOES,

BRANCH OF SAN FRANCISCO.

603 J Street, Sacramento.

The Only Retail House in Sacramento
that manufactures their own goods.

Try Our Famous $3 Shoes.

W. R. STRONG & CO.
Founded 1852.

Fruit Packers
and Shippers.

PROPRIETORS OF

CAPITAL NURSERIES,
SACRAMENTO, CAL.

CHAS. J. FREDERICKS & CO.

Fashionable and Practical

HATTERS,
802 J STREET,

Importers and Manufacturers of

Fine Hats and Caps.

Latest Novelties on hand and constantly arriving. REPAIRING A SPECIALTY.

J. O. MILLS,

High Art Crayon Portraits

Executed from Life or Tin-types or Photographs.
Inquire or leave orders at

406 J STREET, or 413 K STREET.

San Francisco Studio, 12 Dehone street, between Sixteenth and Seventeenth, Church and Sanchez streets. References: Timothy Lee, Chief of Police, Col. Guthrie, Capt. Fouratt.

O'BRIEN'S, 607 J.

SWEEPING REDUCTION IN LADIES' SHOES.

Best French Kid, hand turn, worth $7, reduced to $6.
Ladies' French Kid Button, low heel, long vamp, worth $5, reduced to $4.
Misses' and Children's Canvas Shoes reduced 25 per cent.

Headquarters for the Bartlett Springs Water on Draught.

THE OFFICE,

1008 Fourth Street, Next to Cal. State Bank.

H. D. GAMBLE, Proprietor.

Telephone 199. Office Hours from A. M. to P. M.

SAN FRANCISCO

Steam & Dyeing Works

Removed to 524 K Street.

Branch, 805 K St. Dye Works, 2511 J St.

All orders promptly attended to. Don't make a mistake—Main office at Capital Transfer Company.

JOHN STEEN, Proprietor Dye Works.

Trunks Removed, 25 Cents.

JAS. LONGSHORE,

SACRAMENTO TRUNK FACTORY,

530 K STREET.

Trunks, Valises & Bags Wholesale and Retail.

Waterhouse & Lester

DEALERS IN

IRON, STEEL, CUMBERLAND COAL,

Wagon Lumber and Carriage Hardware,
SACRAMENTO.

CALL AT 1118 J STREET,

—AT—

Fred Futterer's Saloon

And Get a Glass of Cool Beer.

The best Wines, Liquors and Cigars always on hand.

POOL AND BILLIARD TABLES.

FRED FUTTERER, 1118 J Street.

RAILROAD TIME TABLE.
Southern Pacific Company
PACIFIC SYSTEM.
Sept. 9, 1889.

Trains LEAVE and are due to ARRIVE at SACRAMENTO.

Lv.	Trains Run Daily.	Arr.
7-00 A	Calistoga and Napa	11-40 A
4-05 P	Calistoga and Napa	7-20 P
11-00 P	Ashland and Portland via Chico	3-40 A
5-05 P	Denning, El Paso and East	7-05 P
7-30 P	Knight's Landing	7-55 A
4-30 A	Marysville (Mixed)	4-25 P
9-00 A	Los Angeles and Mojave	9-55 A
8-00 P	Second Class, Ogden and East	6-30 A
10-30 P	Central Atlantic Express	3-40 P
3-00 P	Ogden and East	9-50 A
11-00 P	Oroville	3-40 A
3-00 P	Red Bluff via Marysville	9-50 A
10-40 A	Redding via Willows	4-05 P
7-00 A	San Francisco via Benicia	5-30 P
4-05 P	San Francisco via Benicia	10-10 P
4-00 A	San Francisco via Benicia	10-40 A
*10-00 A	San Francisco via Steamer	$6.00 A
11-20 A	San Francisco via Livermore	2-25 P
3-05 P	San Francisco via Benicia	11-40 A
11-20 A	San Jose	2-25 P
9-00 A	Santa Barbara	9-55 A
5-05 P	Santa Barbara	7-05 P
7-00 A	Santa Rosa	11-40 A
4-05 P	Santa Rosa	7-20 P
9-00 A	Stockton and Galt	7-05 P
5-05 P	Stockton and Galt	9-55 A
8-00 P	Truckee and Reno	6-30 A
10-30 P	Truckee and Reno	3-40 P
7-30 A	Colfax	6-00 P
4-05 P	Vallejo	11-40 A
*12-15 P	Folsom and Placerville (Mixed)	*10-25 A
*7-15 A	Folsom and Placerville	*2-40 P
*5-20 P	Folsom	*6-50 A

*Sunday excepted. †Sunday only. ‡Monday excepted.
A for morning, P for afternoon.
A. N. TOWNE, Gen'l Manager.
T. H. GOODMAN, Gen'l Pass. and Ticket Agent.

Edwin K. Alsip & Co.
ESTABLISHED 1860.

REAL ESTATE

AND INSURANCE AGENTS.

FARMING LANDS A SPECIALTY.

Catalogues issued monthly.

No. 1015 Fourth Street, Sacramento.

Gregory Bros. Co
Established 1852.

COMMISSION MERCHANTS.

Packers and Shippers of California
Fruit and Produce,

126 and 128 J STREET.

San Francisco Office, 313 Davis St. SACRAMENTO.

Hotfilter & Grafmiller,

MANUFACTURING JEWELERS.

Jewelry made to order. Watches, Clocks and Jewelry
Repaired and Warranted.

No. 1026 Sixth Street, Sacramento.

BOOTS AND SHOES
made to order. Boots, $6 to $11. Shoes, $4 to $9. Ladies' Shoes, best quality French Kid, $5 to $7.

REPAIRING DONE
at lowest prices.

NONE BUT BEST
mechanics employed.

WE GUARANTEE
to make perfect fitting
to the worst of crooked
and crippled feet.

COMPLETE WITH
any shoes on the market.

216 J Street

—AND—

208 K Street,

SACRAMENTO.

A. CASELLI
& COMPANY.

WESTERN HOTEL

209 to 219 K Street.

The Leading Hotel of Sacramento, Cal.

FREE BUS TO AND FROM HOTEL.

Meals, 25 Cents. Rooms, according to Location.

WM. LAND, Proprietor.

California State Bank
DOES A GENERAL BANKING BUSINESS.

Draws Exchange on all the Principal Cities
of the World.

OFFICERS:

PRESIDENT.....N. D. RIDEOUT
VICE-PRESIDENT.....FRED K. COX
CASHIER.....A. ABBOTT
ASSISTANT CASHIER.....W. E. GERBER

DIRECTORS:

C. W. Clarke, Jos. Steffens, N. D. Rideout,
Geo. C. Perkins, J. R. Watson, Frederick Cox,
W. E. Gerber.

Capital Iron Works.

Vertical and Horizontal Engines

BOILERS,

STEAM AND POWER

PUMPS,

Deep Well Pumps,

Hand Pumps,

Stock Pumps,

PUMPMAKERS' SUPPLIES.

HORSE-POWERS, WIND MILLS,

Tanks and Tank Houses.

904 K Street, Sacramento.

BELL & FOUNTAIN

HAVE OPENED THE

Plaza Cash Grocery
STORE,

Corner Tenth and J Streets,

And have stocked the same with all New and Fresh Goods, which they will sell for CASH at
the smallest living margin.

All Goods Warranted as Represented.

Goods delivered to any part of the city.

Our Motto: "The nimble sixpence against the slow shilling!"

A. J. MUIR,

PLUMBER,

—Gas and Steam Fitter.—

Being a practical plumber, I can guarantee all work.

810 K STREET,

Telephone 226.

SACRAMENTO, CAL.

CHANGED HANDS.

SACRAMENTO EXCHANGE,

(Formerly Wm. Gamble's.)

1012 SEVENTH STREET.

Fine Wines. All the celebrated brands of Liquors
and Cigars. ROBERT ALLEN
Formerly of Agricultural Park.

ALBERT GRUBBS,

No. 1417 Fourth Street,

Will do all kinds of House Cleaning, Lay Carpets,
Whitewashing, and everything in that line.

He also has the only wagon for the REMOVAL
OF DEAD ANIMALS, and any orders left at his place of business will receive prompt attention.

Remember the address!

No. 1417 Fourth Street, Sacramento, Cal.

JESSE SLAUGHTER,

Office, No. 1217 Fifth Street.

Plastering, Whitewashing, Cleaning of Cesspools, Etc.

Also, CITY SCAVENGER.

Burying of dead animals attended to at short notice.

Don't forget the number—1217 Fifth street, the old stand, where I have been for 25 years.

THEMIS

Vol. I.

SACRAMENTO: SATURDAY, OCTOBER 19, 1889.

No. 35.

THEMIS: published weekly, by A. J. Johnston & Co. Publication Office, 410 J Street. Subscription—One year, by mail, $3 00; six months, by mail, $1 50, in advance; per month, by carrier, 25 cents. (Entered at the Post Office at Sacramento as second-class matter.)

The people of this city deserve a very lively stirring up so far as regards the almost criminal inattention they pay to important matters of municipal politics. The cold fact is that the selections of important city officers and the planning of our campaigns are arranged in San Francisco, and the voters here but ratify the wish of the financiers of the Bay city, who are interested in the disposition of the revenues we annually raise. Under the present system of electing one member of our governing board annually, the slightest reflection should convince any reasoning mind that with the apathy and credulity of our people, so far as regards matters of city politics, a very little money and energy will enable those interested to nominate and elect whomsoever they may choose. Has it ever occurred to our property-holding citizens that some invisible powers are systematically securing the election of incompetent men to most important municipal positions? It is very certain that unless the people of this city wake up and intelligently interest themselves in matters of local politics, Sacramento will continue to be a pauper among the cities of the country, and her people will continue to stagger under an ever increasing and onerous indebtedness until the sounding of the trump of Gabriel. We have not yet been advised who will be the next First Trustee of this city; word has not so far reached us from San Francisco. If the choice falls upon a Democrat, we can expect the familiar shout of "a divorce-ment of municipal affairs from politics," and for reform. A hall will then be hired, a meeting engineered by a few well-paid politicians, and a few dupes will be sprinkled on a reform committee. The democratic convention will be controlled, the selected men nominated, and the conscientious Republicans who believe all that they see in the newspapers, will turn in and help to elect the ticket. The vicious element in politics—and to the disgrace of Sacramento we must say that it is numerous—of course can be reached by coin to favor or disfavor any proposition. They complacently stand the abuse of the reform element, take the coin and vote for the same general end designed by the money bags below. At the end of the campaign the good citizens mop off their brows, and felicitate that they have stricken a powerful blow for reform and purity, while the down town element quietly laugh in their sleeves and divide the cash.

It is not to be presumed that with the massing of the indebtedness of this city in the hands of a few sharks in San Francisco they are to permit such important events as our annual municipal elections to transpire without attention. We do not charge that the object is to elect corrupt men to important city offices, but the history of the past very clearly indicates a design to choose men who have not the mental capacity to deal with the great questions that should receive their attention. The financial situation of Sacramento City is indeed deplorable, and it would seem that our people as much dread light as the cave dwellers of Kosekin. We are in the same situation as a merchant who finds himself almost hopelessly embarrassed and has not the sagacity to pull himself through. We need in our governing board and its legal advisers the very highest order of financial ability; we need there men of absolute independence and integrity. With a board and advisers such as that, in a few years this city will awake from its sleep of Rip Van Winkle, our rate of taxation will be reduced and capital will come to instead of depart from us. We can never hope to advance appreciably and to keep pace with other cities in this State unless we pay more attention to our business. Under the present system, as we have indicated, the owners of the city indebtedness are the absolute controllers of our municipal election through the influence of money on the corrupt and the exercise of sophistry on the conscientious of our people. We speak of these matters with knowledge. Some years ago the power of this bond syndicate was developed in the defeat of one who had a thorough knowledge of the city finances because he would not accede to their dictation in the management of the same. It would not be difficult to ascertain approximately the amount of money that was sent up here to in part accomplish that result.

Our people should not rest on the assumption that the creditors of Sacramento are sitting idly in their offices in San Francisco, indifferent as to the selection of our important officers. The fact must be considered that the rule generally has been that democratic municipal conventions are selected by the members of the Central Committee and that no opportunity is afforded for an expression of the will of the body of the party. It will thus be seen how easy it is to secure the nomination of any man who may be desired, and to effect his election over an undesirable Republican through the means we have indicated.

The new jury law in New York went into effect on the 7th inst. Under its provisions any person asking to be excused from jury duty must make application in open court. It is also made a misdemeanor for any attaché of the court to use his influence to have a juror let off without a legal excuse. If the law is rigidly enforced it ought to result in securing a better class of jurors as well as facilitating the business of the courts. If this change works well in New York it should be adopted in this State and some radical reforms in defining the qualifications of jurors inaugurated. We discussed the necessity for jury reform in our last issue.

In the cases of Drager and Olsen, who were executed at Placerville on Wednesday, there should have been an exercise of executive clemency. We suspect that Governor Waterman pays more attention to his private interests than to those incumbent upon him because of his official position. A Governor of a State should spend a reasonable amount of his time in his office in the capitol, and should give his personal attention to citizens who have grave business with the Executive. Matters affecting human life are entitled to a patient consideration. It seems very evident that the present Governor is permitting his office to be conducted by his secretaries and clerks, and it is extremely unsatisfactory that important executive business should be conducted through clerical channels. In the cases of these unfortunate men, who were hanged, it is extremely doubtful if the application for the commutation of their sentences ever fell under the Executive eye; and, if it be that the Governor of California has permitted matters of such concern as to involve the destruction of two human lives to be passed upon by the subordinates in his outer office, it is best that it be so understood. We cannot believe, from our knowledge of the testimony in these cases, that the Executive gave to them the slightest examination, and it is very apparent that he never wrote the letter announcing the reasons for his declination to accord with the ordinary dictates of humanity. Had it been understood that the Governor had personally inspected the records in these cases, and from such an inspection had arrived at a conclusion, the matter would, perhaps, be satisfactory to the people; but his conduct in making important State matters secondary to his private interests, and of relegating the conduct of the affairs of his office to subordinates, is open to censure. It is extremely unfortunate that the mantle of this important office should have fallen upon one whose private interests are so large that he cannot properly attend to the business of the State. The Governor is ex-officio a member of several important boards. At their meetings his absence has been conspicuous.

Largely, our political system is at fault in the internal management of our parties. The custom has been to repose important powers in central committees, and to compose those bodies of men, very many of whom have proved so small minded as to entirely disregard considerations of general public welfare, and regard only the petty and temporary advantages that are deemed so important by the small-brained politicians. As a rule, committeemen seem to feel that all depends on whether things can be so arranged that some particular candidate will be nominated; the question whether he will be elected by the people is very often lost sight of, and it very frequently happens, particularly in nominations made by committees, that the candidate of a dominant party is defeated. We have had many illustrations of this in the school elections. The rule has been for the two committeemen from each ward to name the candidate of the party in that ward, and for the superintendent to be nominated by a majority vote of the whole committee. We will have a school election in December; the city is strongly republican; it is hardly necessary to say that if the Republican Committee make reckless nominations some of the American or democratic candidates will be successful. If the Republican City Committee desire to exhibit a proper spirit of advancement they will do well to call a large convention to nominate candidates for school officers. The nominees of such a convention will be elected beyond a doubt.

The death of General Thomas B. Van Buren at San Francisco, last Sunday, recalls memories of prominent early Californians. The General was a member of the State Senates of 1851 and 1852. Among his fellow Senators were Elcan Heydenfeldt, a brother of ex-Supreme Justice Solomon Heydenfeldt, and for a time a District Judge in San Francisco; David F. Douglass, a prominent politician and Secretary of State under Governor Johnson; Benjamin S. Lippincott, who held several important offices, and who died at Red Bank, New Jersey, November 22, 1870; E. O. Crosby, a member of the first Constitutional Convention, and who now lives in Alameda; George B. Tingley, a talented lawyer, who died at San Francisco, August 3, 1862; the ill-fated David C. Broderick, who was slain by Judge Terry; Martin E. Cooke, a well-known lawyer, who died at San Francisco, April 14, 1857; General T. J. Green, who afterward distinguished himself in the civil war, and who died in North Carolina, December 13, 1863; Commodore Selim E. Woodworth, son of the author of "The Old Oaken Bucket," and who died in San Francisco, January 29, 1871; Pablo de la Guerra, afterward a District Judge and for a time acting Lieutenant-Governor, who died at Santa Barbara, February 5, 1874; Henry E. Robinson, who figured in the early history of this city, afterward became prominent in Oakland, and who died at Norwalk, Connecticut, January 9, 1880; Stephen C. Foster, a member also of the first Constitutional Convention; J. E. N. Lewis, a prominent lawyer and politician, who died at Oroville, June 26, 1869; the late Colonel Philip A. Roach, for many years editor of the San Francisco Examiner; Frank Soule, editor of the old San Francisco Chronicle, who died in that city, July 3, 1882; Major Jacob R. Snyder, member of the first Constitutional Convention, United States Sub-Treasurer, and a pioneer vine grower in Sonoma county, who died April 29, 1878; Alexander Anderson, afterward a Supreme Court Justice; Paul K. Hubbs, the second State School Superintendent, who died at Vallejo, November 17, 1874; Judge James H. Ralston, who perished in a snow storm near Austin, Nevada, in May, 1864; Dr. B. F. Keene, who died at Placerville, September 5, 1856; P. W. Keyser, now Superior Judge of Yuba and Sutter counties; J. C. McKibben, afterward a member of Congress; Judge Charles F. Lott, now of Oroville; General James M. Estill, a noted politician and editor, who died at San Francisco, April 26, 1859; General James W. Denver, afterward Secretary of State, the man after whom the city of Denver was called, and now a prominent citizen of Washington; Royal T. Sprague, who died in this city February 24, 1872, while a Justice of the Supreme Court; Colonel J. J. Warner, one of the earliest of the pioneers of Southern California; and Antonio M. de la Guerra, who died at Santa Barbara, November 28, 1881. The seat of Senator Van Buren was unsuccessfully contested by William D. Fair, the husband of Laura D. Fair. Fair killed himself in San Francisco, December 27, 1861. The other members of the two Senates referred to were Alonzo W. Adams, Jacob Frye, A. W. Hope, John Y. Lind, James Miller, James Walsh, John Walton and M. M. Wombough.

There is no limit to the power and achievements of the human intellect; it is not circumscribed. There are things undiscovered—things to come which have not passed under the crucial test and fire of man's genius. Electricity, until a few days ago, was a demon which man feared. Steam, a devil; the dread of all until reduced to servitude. There is nothing but what can be made man's servant—nothing he cannot make his carrier. When necessity calls, then whatever is necessary, that shall be. To the God every chip is a chariot and every leaf a winged steed to obey his behests. Do what we may, think what we please, there exists a hidden mysterious power which only has to be invoked at the proper time to control and guide the thoughts and powers of man. There is nothing impossible. The history of the great achievements of science has taught us that science is but in its infancy. Old age, aye, death itself, may be arrested. It may seem that the recent discovery to rejuvenate the aged and decrepit is improbable, and contrary to the laws of nature. But who can say this in the face of the wonders that have been brought to light and utilized as man's servant? The teachings of Anchises to Æneas, respecting the nature of the human soul, was in conformity with the doctrines of the Pythagorians. Pythagoras taught the priests of Egypt, Persia and Brahma, under the pledge of secrecy, the doctrine of metempsychosis, or the transmigration of souls. Souls never die, but on quitting one abode pass to another; pass from the body of a beast to a man, and to a beast again. Might not this recently-discovered elixir from animals be a step toward the perfection in modern times of the doctrines of metempsychosis, and the transmission of animal fluid into human bodies be the transition of the soul and spirit back into human shape, form and existence, and a practical bathing in Lethean waters? We ask, who knows? Who dares say, authoritatively, that it is not? It is said that the life-giving organs are utilized to produce these wonders, which are in full accord with the ancient doctrine. The book of Holy Writ might be invoked as authority for the consummation of the wondrous powers of rejuvenating man. We say again, there is no knowing what degree of perfection may come from these recent developments in giving new life and new strength to the human body. Scientific power has accomplished what in former times was attributed to divine influence, or supernatural aid. A few years ago one who would have urged that men could talk to each other hundreds of miles apart, and recognize each other's voices, would have been denounced as a madman. In Dean Swift's splendid satires, we find the idea of perpetuating life for thousands of years, in a class of people whom he denominates Struldbrugs, who were born exempt from that universal calamity of human nature, and who had their minds free and disengaged from the weight and depression of spirits by the apprehension of death. In all ages of the world the idea has prevailed that there was and is some mysterious power that can perpetuate human life. Rider Haggard seizes upon this idea in his creation of "She." The sacred writings develop the power to bring the dead to life. The Persian priests are firm believers in this doctrine, and teach their followers in the faith. Perhaps the doctrine of Pythagoras was the true one, after all, and we are just beginning to realize the fact in our recent discoveries in science. For ages this life-giving power has been sought. At one age the vital organs of the wolf and skunk were used to preserve life. The time is fast approaching when we will not be surprised at the consummation of this wonderful power. When it becomes necessary, then some power will develop it. Emerson said: "Let us build to the Beautiful Necessity, which makes man brave in believing that he cannot shun a danger that is appointed, nor incur one that is not; to the Necessity which rudely or softly educates him to the perception that there are no contingencies; that Law rules throughout existence; a Law that is not intelligent, but intelligence; not personal nor impersonal—it disdains words and passes understanding; it dissolves persons; it vivifies nature; yet solicits the pure in heart to draw on all its omnipotence." It was that necessity that chained a few ounces of steam to the mountains of iron and coal and drew them to the sea. It was the need of man that subdued the lightning and made it the bearer of his messages, as well as the carrier of his burdens and person around the world. It was the same necessity that prompted and completed the great trans-continental railway. That necessity will some day develop man's genius to the extent of controlling age, and even death itself. It is no answer or argument to tilt your nose and say that he who advances such notions is an idiot. That was said fifty years ago of many of the so-called impossibilities which have developed. The beautiful theory and belief of the immortality of the soul is but an evidence of the consummation of man's genius, under divine inspiration. Some have contended that we are too rapidly reaching perfection, and are about to declare our mastery over age and death. But we are only in the babyhood of knowledge. We don't yet know the mystery or origin of our being, and we do not know the end. But, all in all, our destiny is hedged in by necessity.

Time's Funeral March.

Addison felt the irresponsible yearnings of immortality, and with prophetic eye looked forward to the closing of Time's great drama, as consummated in the wreck of matter and the crash of worlds. "Passing away is written upon the proudest monument of earth's born grandeur, and everything points to the time when nature shall die, and God and angels shall come and lay her in the grave. The whole earth is one vast mausoleum of buried greatness, and we are daily treading over the graves of thirty generations. The glory and greatness of man, as developed under the most favorable auspices, seem to be transitory and evanescent in their character, and in some parts of the earth the lights of civilization, learning and refinement are paling their ineffetual fires before the baleful shadows of ignorance, idolatry and superstition. In Asia Minor the traveler treads upon a soil rich in historic lore, and the recollection of a glorious past, while the present population is degraded by ignorance and slavery. The glory of twenty different nations that rose and flourished there has been extinguished, and the star of their former greatness has set in the gloom of a starless night, on which no morrow shall arise. The herdsman's flock and the wild beasts of the wilderness now wander over the tombs of Achilles and Hector, and the throne of Mithridates and the Antiochuses and the once splendid palaces of Priam and Cræsus are now masses of shapeless ruin, over which the destroyer, Time, has driven his ruthless and desolating plowshare. The wealthy merchants and crafty tradesmen of Smyrna do not stop to inquire where Homer was born, and the rich yellow sky of ancient and once proud Iona no longer inspires orators, painters or poets, or lights the warming fires of a zealous and devoted patriotism. The same dark and terrible doom hangs like the gloomy pall of death over the banks of Jordan and Euphrates.

The Republic of Moses is blotted from the maps of nations, the golden lyres of David and Isaiah are no longer swept by living hands, and the voiceless silence of death reigns supreme where music once ravished the happy hearts of busy thousands. The wandering Arab, without a home or a country, now comes in different and unmoved, to rest the poles of his tent against the shattered columns of Palmyra and make his bed upon crumbling fragments of thrones and crowns. Babylon, the peerless Queen of Empires, has not escaped the common fate, and has also fallen beneath the crushing stroke of an inevitable destiny, and that proud city, which swayed the scepter of supreme power over the oppressed tribes of Asia's teeming millions, has scarcely left behind it a trace of its former greatness, or a crumbling pillar to show where the ramparts of Semiramis once stood.

Good-bye.

Good-bye, proud world, I'm going home!
Thou art not my friend and I'm not thine;
Long through thy weary crowds I roam—
A river ark on the ocean brine.
Long I've been tossed like the driven foam;
But now, proud world, I'm going home.

Good-bye to flattery's fawning face;
To grandeur with his wise grimace;
To upstart wealth's averted eye;
To supple office, low and high;
To crowded halls, to court and street;
To frozen hearts and lasting feet;
To those who go and those who come—
Good-bye, proud world, I'm going home.

I am going to my own hearthstone,
Bosomed in yon green hills alone;
A secret nook in a pleasant land,
Whose groves the frolic fairies planned;
Where arches green, the livelong day.
Echo the blackbird's roundelay;
And vulgar feet have never trod—
A spot that is sacred to thought and God.

O, when I am safe in my sylvan home,
I tread on the pride of Greece and Rome;
And when I am stretched beneath the pines,
Where the evening star so holy shines,
I laugh at the lore and the pride of man,
At the sophist school and the learned clan;
For what are they all, in their high conceit,
When man in the bush with God may meet?

—Emerson.

SMALL SAVINGS.

"I don't see how Holmes does it," said John Stetson, with a puzzled expression.

"Does what?" asked his wife, looking up from her sewing.

"Why, save so much money from his salary, to be sure."

"Then he does save, does he?"

"You know the half-acre lot adjoining his house?"

"Yes."

"Well, he has just bought it for $100, and what is more, paid for it out of money saved from his salary this year."

"How does his salary compare with yours?"

"He has only $700 a year, while I have $800. Then our families are the same; each of us has two children."

"Yet I am afraid you don't save near that amount."

"No; I guess not. The fact is, if I find myself square at the end of the year, I think myself lucky."

"And yet, John," said his wife gravely, "it seems to me as if we ought to lay by something."

"It is easy enough to say that, but the question is, 'How are we going to do it?' There's Mary's music lessons at $10 a quarter. That's the only way I can think of, and I shouldn't like to stop those."

"No, to be sure not; isn't there any other way?"

"Not that I know of."

"Don't you think, John, the little incidental expenses cost more than you think for?"

"Such as what?"

"Cigars, ice-cream, oysters, the theater, and so on."

John Stetson winced a little. "They are mere trifles," said he, carelessly. "A few cents each time. Pooh! they would make precious little difference at the end of the year."

"You know there's an old proverb, 'Many a little makes a mickle.'"

"Pshaw! I hate proverbs. Besides, these little things are really very little account. A man doesn't feel the sum he pays out, and if it didn't go in one way it would in another."

"How many cigars do you smoke daily?" pursued his wife.

"Three."

"How much do you pay for them?"

"Four cents a piece."

"That would make twelve cents."

"And what's twelve cents?"

"Not much in itself, but multiplied by a large number it amounts to something."

"What are you driving at, wife?"

"I am going to make a proposition to you."

"I'm all attention."

"You say you don't mind a few cents a day."

"Of course not."

"Then I propose that a small box be obtained, with a slit in the lid, just like the children's tin saving boxes, in short, only larger, and that for every cent you spend for cigars, ice cream, theaters, or any such little luxury, you drop an equal sum in the box."

John Stetson laughed. "I dare say," he remarked, "it would bring me out a perfect Cæsus at the end of the year."

"Do you agree?" asked his wife, with some appearance of anxiety.

"Yes; I have no objection, if you desire it; though I acknowledge it seems a little foolish and childish."

"Never mind about that. I have your promise, and we will try the experiment one year. If it doesn't amount to enough to make it an object, then it will be time to give it up."

"You must take all the trouble of it. I can't engage to do anything about it, except to furnish the money when it is called for."

"That is all I shall require of you. But I shall expect you to give an account every night of all that you have disbursed in the ways I have spoken of, and be prepared with an equal amount of change for deposit."

"Very well; I'll try."

This conversation took place at the breakfast table. Having drained his second cup of coffee, John Stetson put on his overcoat and took his way to his place of business. I may as well mention, in this connection, that he was cashier of a bank, and as his duties occupied him only a few hours in the day he was more likely, from the leisure which he enjoyed, to indulge in small expenses.

"My wife is enthusiastic," thought he, as he was walking down town. "However, her hobby won't cost much, so I might as well indulge her in it." He stepped into a store and obtained his daily allowance of cigars.

Meanwhile Mrs. Stetson proceeded to the shop of a cabinet-maker. "I want you," said she, "to make me a mahogany box twelve inches long, the other dimensions being four inches each. In the center of which is to be a slit, large enough to admit the largest silver coin."

"A money-box?" said the cabinet-maker.

"Yes."

"Pretty large for that, isn't it?"

"Rather," said Mrs. Stetson, smiling; "but better too large than too small."

John Stetson fell in with a companion in the afternoon, with whom he had a social chat. As they were walking leisurely along they passed an oyster saloon. Stetson was particularly fond of the bivalves, and proposed that they should go in and take some. To this his friend did not demur, and they accordingly entered. Two plates of oysters came to twenty-five cents. Besides this they took a glass of ale each, which made twelve cents more. This brought up the bill to thirty-seven cents, which Stetson paid. Accordingly, adding to this twelve cents for cigars, he deposited forty-nine cents in his wife's hands that evening.

"I might as well make it fifty," said he, smiling.

"No," said she. "Not a cent over. I want the savings to represent exactly what you spend on those little luxuries, and no more."

The next evening he had nothing to deposit except the usual amount for cigars.

"It won't amount up very fast at that rate," said he, triumphantly.

"Never mind," said his wife; "I don't want you to increase your expenditures on my account. I am inclined to think that they will not often be as small as this."

She was right. The next day, being Wednesday, Mr. Stetson brought home a couple of tickets for the theater. It was a benefit night, and he was anxious to have his wife go.

"Certainly," said she. "I shall be glad to go; but you remember our compact?"

"What?"

"How much did you pay for the tickets?"

"Fifty cents apiece."

"That will make a dollar. Please hand me that amount for our fund."

"Was the theater included?" asked John, a little reluctantly.

"Certainly. That was expressly mentioned."

"Oh, well, then, so let it be. Here is a silver dollar."

The dollar was at once dropped into the box.

The next day, in passing a shop window, Stetson noticed some fine oranges.

"Just what Mary and the children would like," thought he. "I'll go in and inquire the price."

They were four cents apiece. He bought half a dozen at a cost of a quarter, which, with his cigar money, left him thirty-seven cents to deposit.

The succeeding day he spent nothing except for cigars.

On Saturday he stepped into a confectionery establishment with a friend and had a lunch. This brought that day's account up to forty cents.

When his wife added up the daily sums, she found, to her own surprise even, that she had received from her husband $2.62. He would have been astonished to hear it, but she thought it not best to say anything about it. He would have alleged that it was a special case, as they did not go to the theater every week, but then, something else was sure to come of equivalent cost, such as a ride or a concert.

So time slipped away. The necessity, according to the compact, of giving his wife as much as he spent for incidental expenses, no doubt contributed to check him somewhat, so that probably he did not spend more than two-thirds as much in this way as he had done before the agreement. Still he kept up the average of the first week.

We will now suppose the year to have glided by. John Stetson came into the sitting-room with a pre-occupied air.

"What are you thinking about?" his wife asked.

"About the half acre lot adjoining the one Holmes bought last year."

"Do you wish to purchase it?"

"Yes; I should like to, but of course I can't, not having the money."

"How much do they ask for it?"

"Holmes paid $100 for his. This is, on some accounts, preferable, and they hold it at $125."

"Perhaps you could raise the money, John," said his wife, quietly.

"By borrowing? I should not like to do that."

"You remember our fund?"

"Pshaw! That may possibly amount to $30 or $40."

"Suppose you count it, as the year is up to-day."

"Very well."

The box was opened and husband and wife commenced counting. They soon reached and passed $40.

"Bless my soul!" said John Stetson, "I had no idea that there was so much."

What was his astonishment when the total proved to be $129.40!

"You see you can buy the lot."

"But haven't you swelled the amount from your own allowance?" he asked, somewhat bewildered.

"Not by a cent. And don't you see, John, that if you had refrained from even half of the expenses we spoke of, we might have had in the neighborhood of two hundred dollars?"

John Stetson did see, and determined that the lesson should be a serviceable one. The half-acre lot was bought, and now, at the end of five years, it is worth double what he paid for it. He has also laid aside $200 a year during this period, and—all by small savings.

The Stage.

Under this caption will appear a fair and impartial criticism of the drama, actors, music, and all noteworthy matters pertaining to the stage.

The next attraction will be Henry Chanfrau in Kit, the Arkansas Traveler. Sam Mott is the manager.

Kate Blanche's artistic work in Hans, the Boatman, now on the road with Charles Arnold as the star, is attracting the favorable comments of the public as well as the press.

It is claimed that Rose Coghlan in Jocelyn drew $7,000 in one week during her recent visit to Denver. This shows that tastes differ. In San Francisco and Sacramento Jocelyn was a dead failure.

The Paris Figaro, in commenting on Mr. Frank Rothchild's American play, Almost, which is to be produced simultaneously in Berlin and Vienna, makes two mistakes when it says the play was rejected by every American manager. It was not offered to every American manager, and was rejected by none of them.

Richard Golden, the play-actor, will act the piece of Old Jed Prouty, at Mr. Hamlin's Grand Opera play-house, opposite the Court House, Chicago. He will act for seven nights steady, starting after supper and keep it up until bedtime without stopping. You have to pay to get in. This is the way Mr. Golden advertises Jed Prouty in Chicago.

The need for more American plays, plays about American men and women, American history, and American places, is becoming greater every day. It is better that they should be written by Americans, but not absolutely necessary. If intelligent playwrights of foreign birth want to write for the American market their wares will be welcome if they give us what we cry for, American plays.

A friend of Mrs. James Brown Potter wrote her three weeks ago from New York urging her to make some public statement which would set at rest gossip occasioned by the cancellation of her American dates for this season. That friend had, and still has, a high regard for Mrs. Potter. She writes this in reply: "Yours of September 9th just received. In answer, let me briefly say: All 'my friends,' both public and private, must know that I am a perfectly free and independent woman, untrammelled by any influences whatever, and that it is ill health alone which renders the cancelling of my tour in America necessary."

The late David D. Lloyd was engaged almost up to the hour of his death upon a new comedy which he was writing for William H. Crane, and which is entitled The Senator. Shortly before his death, finding that his journalistic and literary labors prevented his devoting a necessary amount of time to his dramatic writing, he requested Sydney Rosenfeld to lend him his assistance in finishing The Senator. This Mr. Rosenfeld's long experience enabled him to do with advantage, and when the completed play was read recently in Chicago to Mr. Crane and his company it was favorably received by all present and was at once put into rehearsal. The piece is described as being a sterling American comedy.

It has been a subject of wonderment that we cannot get some one to manage our local places of amusement that can command the respect of the community. For years past those who have been placed in charge of our theaters have been impressed with the idea—such limited ideas as they had—that the sole office of a manager was to see how much imposition the people would stand without revolting. A party by the name of Hall has the management at this time, who not only seeks to squeeze the last possible dollar out of the public, but sets at defiance every moral sentiment. It is a rare thing to see anything of a house at a matinee, because the ladies will not attend. It is only the fact that we have no other choice, or no one would patronize the theaters under his management. He brings the riff-raff of the stage and charges full prices, and when a first-class company comes he puts on fancy prices which the public are bound to pay or stay away. Indeed, many of our theater-going people who are ardent patrons of the drama prefer to visit San Francisco to witness first-class plays.

While Mary Anderson is spending her holidays with William Black in Scotland, "Brother Joe" is living quietly in Hampstead with his young wife, only a few doors away from Step-father Griffin. Dr. Griffin says that Miss Anderson is as well as ever she was, and quite well enough to act. In fact, he seems to be a little bit disturbed that "Our Mary" does not return to the boards at once. He intimates that she would if she could find the chance appear in "Rosalind," a character she has not yet done in London. Joe Anderson has been playing a small part in a curtain lifter at the Criterion this summer, but without attracting very much attention. People who have met Mrs. Anderson here like her very much. When her father, Lawrence Barrett, stopped at Southampton for an hour on his way from Bremen to America recently, she went down with Joe to see him. Joe thoroughly understands that he has a better chance of getting on in the theatrical profession in the United States than he has here; but, the fact is, that it is next to impossible for him to live there because he suffers so much from asthma. Only a short time after his marriage he had to sit up several nights in a chair because he could not breathe lying down. He finds, that so far as asthma is concerned, he can get along better in England, though so far as acting goes a much brighter career opens before him in America.

Book Chat.

Frederich Spielhagen, the most popular German novelist, recently celebrated his seventieth birthday.

James Russell Lowell says that he is going to spend the remainder of his life in this country. He is quite pleased with America.

Channey M. Depew's speeches and after-dinner talks have been collected by an industrious business-literary man, and will shortly be published.

Edgar Saltus says he will publish his own works hereafter. How refreshing is his honesty! There are many authors who go on publishing the works of others from year to year and never confess or reform.

Dr. Talmage has been pitching into Diogenes, and yet were that ancient philosopher prowling about in Brooklyn with his lantern, he would certainly blow it out upon meeting the honest and outspoken clergyman.

Edward Bellamy is not such a recent author as his lately acquired fame lead many to suppose. As far back as 1877 he wrote short stories for Appleton's Journal, and in 1880 he published his first book, "Dr. Heidenhoff's Process"—a nov-elette.

An alleged novel, to be published before long, is said to have been written by a woman once in, but now outside, the gates of the "Four Hundred," and is further said to expose the shams and humbugs of fashionable life in a style calculated to cause both grief and anger all along the line.

We are strongly impressed with the idea that the "Bill Nye" literature has about "petered out," as the old California miner would express it. This labored humor is very tart, and cannot fail to show that there is in reality no humor at all. The "Bill Nye" vein has been worked out, and it requires much "digging" to find a "color" in his later work.

Professional Chat.

The Pull Mall Gazette gives the following amendment as having actually been proposed in Parliament by an eminent Queen's Counsel: "Dogs trespassing on inclosed land.—Every dog found trespassing on inclosed land, accompanied by the registered owner of such, or other person, who shall on being asked, give his true name and address, may be then and there destroyed by such occupier, or by his order."

It is said that John Adams, President of the United States, when stopping at a hotel in the city of Philadelphia, picked up a copy of the city ordinances and found therein one which was to the effect that: "Whereas, it is a well-known fact that oysters are injurious to health during the months of June and July, therefore, be it resolved, that all oysters found for sale in the city during said months be seized and given to the poor."

Lord Coleridge draws the highest salary among what may be called the regular judges, his services being appraised at £8,000 a year. For forty years Lord Coleridge has been the political friend and admirer of Mr. Gladstone, with whose home rule proposition he is in hearty accord. He is a fearless, intrepid, conscientious judge. He only sat in Parliament eight years, viz., 1865 to 1873, but in that short time he successfully graduated through the solicitor-general and attorney-generalships. In 1873 he declined the mastership of the rolls, but in the same year was appointed Chief Justice of the Court of Common Pleas on the death of Sir William Bovill; and nine years ago he succeeded Sir Alexander Cockburn as Lord Chief Justice of England.

A lawyer and an editor stood on a street corner in an Ohio town and saw a man murdered in cold blood. The murderer is a rich man, and after committing the deed he said to the lawyer and editor: "Here is $1,000 for each of you, defend me before the court and the people for the crime I committed." They took the money and defended him in their own way and according to their own profession—the editor through his paper and the lawyer through his mouth. The murderer, through their joint efforts, was acquitted. But see the difference—mark the result. The people said, "The editor is a scoundrel, and did so for pay. Lo! we will stop his paper and no longer patronize him." The paper was stopped, the editor ruined financially and reduced to a pauper. But of the lawyer, the people said: "He is an able man, deeply learned in the law, and deserves great credit for having obtained the acquittal of a man guilty of murder. We will give him our law business, and pay big fees." They made him a judge, and as such he sent his partner, the editor, to the workhouse, and said he was a bad man, and should not only be deprived of the means of a living, but punished. We don't indorse the act of an editor in laboring for what is wrong or against what is right for money—but how about the lawyer?

NOTES.

A little while ago a faithful chronicler told us of President Harrison's fondness for pie. He now informs us that squash pie is the President's favorite. It is well to break such news gently, and the chronicler was wise in reserving the worst part of the story until after the elections in the new States.

Many of our young men, particularly the young collegiates, are intensely egotistic as well as dogmatic. They have no real idea how many smart people there are in the world beside themselves. It generally takes these young men about five years, some more than that, to find out how big the world is, and how little they, in fact, know.

A scientist has discovered that the microbe is responsible for bald-headedness. We have respected the microbe for the powerful influence it is reputed to exert over mankind generally, but if it be true that it is in the business of manufacturing bald heads, our respect is lessened. It shows that the microbe lacks good taste in that it slights the ladies.

Our courts here could profit and generally convenience the litigants and the bar, by adopting the rule of Placer county Superior Court, in publishing a small pocket calendar of the cases set for trial. We have just received the calendar of that court for the October term, showing the title of cases, with names of counsel on both sides, together with date of trial. It is a great convenience.

The scandals of vile people have no interest for respectable readers. Even the scandals of those of prominence in public or social circles should be suppressed in the interest of good morals. It is a mistaken idea in newspapers to give publicity to vile scandals. All the parties connected with a scandal, whether true or false are injured, and the public is not benefited by the publication.

In Kansas City the lawyers have a peculiar judicial courtesy. A judge out there became offended at the remarks of an attorney, and said: "I can lick you for that, and I will do it." With equal frankness the attorney replied to the court: "You crook your finger at me or raise your hand, sir, and you'll get the worst of it." Hostilities ended for the time, but the judge informed the lawyer what he would do when they met in some dark alley.

When we attempt to prove our own way of thinking is right, we must bear in mind that we are about to prove that all other ways of thinking are wrong. And if this should make us slow to enter on the understanding, it should make us more careful, when we do enter on it, to do it with becoming modesty. We are surely imperiously called upon to make a sacrifice of our own vanity before we call upon others to make a sacrifice of theirs.

From our observations, though at a great distance, of the action of Mayor Hugh Grant of New York, and his firmness in performing the duties of Mayor, it is not improbable that he may become the rival of Governor Hill for the Presidency in 1892 on the Democratic ticket. Mayor Grant is made of the right material to command respect, and though not of our politics, we admire his splendid qualities of manhood. By the way, is not Mayor Grant of Irish birth, which fact would exclude him from the honors of chief magistrate of the nation?

The recent attempt to disturb the remains of Ralph Waldo Emerson leads to some reflection whether some other method than interment should not be resorted to for the disposition of our dead. It is difficult to conjecture what could have been the motive to impel the opening of the grave of this poet and essayist. In the case of the robbery of the grave of A. T. Stewart, it is very clear that the object was to obtain a reward for the return of the body. Time will come when cremation will become popular. Our burial customs have rather prejudiced us against it, yet there are weighty considerations in favor of its adoption.

The telegraphic news informs us this morning that Freddy Gebhardt was about to be brought to account by the Manhattan Club for bringing in an intoxicated friend. These upper-crust club fellows are very particular about bringing in a fellow in his cups, but there is nothing whatever said or thought of "bringing out" members of the club who filled the flowing bowl and then themselves while in the club-rooms. There is a mighty distinction between going in full and coming out drunk. By all means let the fellow who so far transgresses as to bring in a "full man" be at once banished the realm. You can all go out drunk, that is all right and not to be complained of, being in accord with custom.

Probably the best time for the average civilized woman to marry, would be any age between 24 and 36. It is not said that no woman should marry earlier or later than either of these ages, but youth and health and vigor are ordinarily at their highest perfection between these two periods. Early marriages are seldom desirable for girls, and that for many reasons. The brain is immature, the reason is feeble and the character is unformed. The consideration which would prompt a girl to marry at 17 would, in many cases, have little weight with her at 24. At 17 she is a child, at 24 a woman. Where a girl has intelligent parents the seven years between 17 and 24 are the period where mind and body are most amenable to wise discipline and best repay the thought and toil devoted to their development. This idea may seem very hard on first love, but philosophers say that first love is premature and preliminary, and in its very nature only transitory. First love is rarely ever wedded and when it is misery usually follows. The worst of all marriages are early marriages and the next worst are the late marriages. Our first love begins with our old school days when our young natures are in tune with the brooklet and singing birds. But the realities of life come at maturity, and the babyish impulses give place to those mature ideas.

Easy to Convict of Vagrancy.

Our neighbor, the Bee, says that is a difficult matter to convict under the "vagrancy" law. This is error. There is no section of the Penal Code plainer or less difficult to prosecute under. Section 647 of the Penal Code declares that any one (except a California Indian) without visible means of living, who has the ability to work, and who does not for the space of ten days seek employment, nor labor when employment is offered him, is a vagrant. Every healthy beggar who solicits alms as a business, is a vagrant. Every person who roams about from place to place without any lawful business, is a vagrant. Every idle or dissolute person, or associate of known thieves, who wanders about the streets at late or unusual hours of the night, is a vagrant. Every person who lodges in any barn, shed, shop, outhouse, vessel, or place other than such as is kept for lodging purposes, without the permission of the owner or party entitled to the possession thereof, is a vagrant. Every lewd and dissolute person who lives in and about houses of ill-fame is a vagrant. Every common prostitute is a vagrant. Every common drunkard is a vagrant. There could be nothing plainer. Officers whose duty it is to guard the city's interests and to procure evidence should not encounter any trouble in finding evidence in this class of cases. The most serious obstacle in making proof in cases of living in houses of ill-fame, and being a common prostitute, has been greatly removed by the decision of Judge Armstrong, which holds that the character and reputation of these houses and their inmates may be given in evidence. Certainly officers whose duty calls them to watch such houses and their inmates for months and years, should, if they have ordinary understanding, be able to testify as to the character and reputation of such places and of their inmates. The failure to convict in many of these cases rests in the stupidity of the officers, or their design to shield. In former years occasionally juries would not convict some of the women, because of an idea that sometimes prevailed among jurors favoritism was shown. Men and women have been convicted of vagrancy in this city who were begirt with gold and backed by powerful influences. It only requires sensible and determined officers, an impartial court or jury, and a prosecuting attorney who can bring out the proper evidence. No, friend Bee, it is easy enough to convict if the right steps are taken.

The Coming Season.

The rainstorm of this week was very general throughout the State, and while we do not pretend to be an expert on wet and dry seasons, we are inclined to believe that the coming winter will be rather wet. Our belief is not founded on any meteorological observations we have made. Sergeant Barwick sent us a communication, which we published recently, in which he argued that an analysis of rainfall statistics demonstrated that dry seasons occurred every thirteenth year and that the coming season fell under the ban of dryness. The sergeant figures the problem out with great clearness. We recollect, however, that a few years ago Barwick published a cyclical demonstration in one of the dailies that the winter then approaching would be about as dry as a bone. The next day after the article was published rain set in; the storms nearly equalled those which happened in Noah's time, and we feel confident that there would have resulted a very considerable deluge had the supply of water held out. It must, however, be recollected that a great deal of water has been used up in the last three or four thousand years and that Barwick's season did not have a reasonable chance to compete with that of Noah.

Governor Waterman declined to accept the site selected by the Asylum Commission at San Bernardino.

THE OLD STORY.

An Attempted Murder and Deliberate Self Destruction.

A few minutes after 10 o'clock this morning a pistol shot rang out from a house of questionable repute on the south side of L street, between Front and Second, and a woman with her face streaming with blood ran screaming from the house and up to the saloon at the corner of Second and L. Immediately afterwards, a man known as Dutch Gus hurriedly left the house, and was pursued by officers McLaughlin and Simmons, but he would not stop, although fired at. The house was immediately visited by parties in the vicinity, and a man named Joe Smith was found lying on the floor of the bed-room in the last agonies of death.

The woman is Lucy Smith, formerly the wife of Walter Jury, now deceased. Jury was a waiter in this city, and at one time conducted a small oyster house at Third and K streets. He left a widow and several children, and the latter were sent to the Protestant Orphan Asylum, where one of them died recently. Since the death of Jury, the widow married Joe Smith, but she soon went to the bad, and became an inmate of disreputable houses on L street. It is said that Smith made many endeavors to reclaim her, but was unsuccessful in keeping her straight for any considerable length of time.

During the late State Fair "Dutch Joe," who figured in the tragedy to-day, took her to Stockton. Smith followed them and induced her to return, and there was for a time an apparent reconciliation; but she relapsed into her old-time walk and became an inmate of the house in which she was shot. But little can, at this hour, be learned concerning the facts immediately connected with the tragedy. The woman was shot directly under the ear and the bullet shattered the bones of the jaw. She was removed from the saloon to the City Receiving Hospital, and an examination made of her injuries. They are pronounced very serious. She is able to articulate, and stated that Joe Smith shot her.

Smith was shot in the back of the head, on the right side, and the bullet passed through his brain. Near him, on the floor, was a revolver, three chambers of which were empty. Some express the theory that Smith did not commit suicide, as the bullet wound was to the right, in the back of the head, while the revolver laid on his left side, and his hair was not singed. The dead man, Smith, was born in this city, at Eighth and R streets, and was aged about 28 years. He has followed the business of hack driving, and was employed for a time at the Dexter Stables as washer. A number of years ago, while he was employed as a teamster for Huntington, Hopkins & Co., he made a vicious assault upon a man in the alley back of the store, with a brick, which came near getting him into serious difficulty, but, through the interference of friends, he escaped severe punishment. His body was brought to the Coroner's office.

The "Dutch Gus" referred to is Phil. Gabhardt, who has been working in a stable in this city. Mollie Brown, who has a house next door to where the tragedy occurred, says that Gabhardt was in her house when the first shot was fired; that he had previously rapped on Mrs. Smith's door, and was there told that he could not be admitted, as the latter had company; that when the first shot was fired he ran out from the rear of the Brown House, and passed to the street through the Smith house. Mrs. Smith says that she is divorced from Smith; that he called on her this morning and asked her to live with him and support him, which she refused to do, and that while she was lying on the lounge with her back toward him he shot her.

The Weather.

The signal service reports during the past week shows that .54 of an inch of rain was precipitated, as against nothing during the same period last year. The total rainfall for the season is 1.70 inches, as against .55 of an inch to an equal date last year. The highest and lowest temperature during the week just passed was 82 and 46, while for the same time last year it was 88 and 48. The storm of the past week appears to have been rather erratic in its geographical distribution of rainfall; the greater amount of rain precipitated appears to have been in the neighborhood of San Francisco, Davisville and Santa Rosa. Davisville, which is but a few miles west of Sacramento, had over 2 inches of rain, while this city had but .54 of an inch. Such occurrences are very rare, in fact, we usually get a greater amount than does Davisville. The lowest temperature this morning was 54. It was foggy after 6 o'clock this morning in this city, lasting several hours.

Buy the "Examiner."

Leland Stanford, George Hearst, Irving Scott, A. N. Towne, John Spreckels, Horace Davis, Arpad Haraszthy, and others have contributed splendid articles for to-morrow's 40-page Sunday Examiner. At newsdealers; agency 724 J street.

Fall Millinery!

The above cut represents a POPULAR SHAPE for young ladies. Untrimmed in felt, 70 cts. Stylishly trimmed with ribbon and fancy feathers, for $2.75 and $4.00.

New Goods for this Department are placed in stock daily. Note the following prices: Rough and Ready. Straw Turbans, 45 cts. Milan Braid Turbans, $1.00. Soft Felt Cigarette Hats, trimmed with cord, 69 cts. Aigrettes, 25 and 35 cts. a bunch. Blackbirds, 40 and 50 cts. Children's Trimmed Straw School Hats, 25c. Felts, neatly trimmed with ribbon 95 cts.

Millinery Department
RED HOUSE

J Street, between Seventh and Eighth.

Fine Table
Wines

From our Celebrated Orleans Vineyard.

Produce of the
ECLIPSE
CHAMPAGNE,
530 Washington St.
SAN FRANCISCO.

CHAMPAGNE

W. B. CHAPMAN,
123 California St. San Francisco.
SOLE AGENT FOR THE PACIFIC COAST
To be sold by all first-class Wine Merchants and Grocers.

STABLE TO LET!

INQUIRE AT

No. 1713 G STREET.

Earthquake and Fire Proof
BUILDINGS

Constructed on my patent system. Perfect protection guaranteed. For estimates and particulars see E. HAWES, Twelfth and B streets, Sacramento.

RHODES & TOWNSEND HOUSE

On European Plan.

Cor. Second and J Streets, Sacramento.

ARTHUR MILLER, PROPRIETOR.

FLASHES.

Very disagreeable fellows—jurors.
The fero dealer should order his meals by the card.
Nothing makes a fellow so hot as cold treatment.
When a fellow's head is turned he never looks to the right.
This is the season of the year when the ice man is likely to freeze ont.

Next to a goose, there is nothing quite so silly as a society young man.

Many a man thinks himself a great gun when he is only a smooth bore.

There will always be romance in the world as long as there are young hearts.

Women, more than all, are the element of illusion. Being fascinating, they fascinate.

When we hear a man boast that he is self-made, we think he is proud of a very poor job.

A goose quill is more dangerous than a lion's jaw, but not more so than a woman's jaw.

Has any one ever seen a woman who can play cards without asking every deal, "What's trumps?"

In youth we clothe ourselves in rainbows. In age we have a different raiment—gout, rheumatism, caprice, doubt, fretting and avarice.

LOCAL BREVITIES.

A striped bass was caught in the Sacramento river yesterday.

George Holmes was sent up for five years for burglarizing the Lull House.

A. Coolot presented the Fire Department Relief Fund $50, as a recognition of valued services at the recent fire.

Captain H. I. Seymour was re-elected Captain of Co. "E," Robert Little was elected First Lieutenant, and Frank G. Smith, Second Lieutenant.

An afflicted woman by the name of Jennie Price is in the custody of Chief Lee, for safe-keeping, until her friends can be advised of her condition.

The charges and counter-charges between Pickett and Brusie are on hearing before Judge Van Fleet. Somebody may feel the weight of the judicial club before the matter is ended.

This is the anniversary of several celebrated battles. October 19, 1781, Lord Cornwallis surrendered at Yorktown. On this day, 1864, the battle of Cedar Creek, Virginia, was fought.

D. M. Vance was yesterday adjudged by Judge Armstrong guilty of contempt in violating an order of injunction and fined $300. Vance will have time to reflect and know better next time.

Joe Poheim, who recently established a branch of his extensive tailoring business in this city, has created a revolution in that line of business by fine work and low rates. First-class mechanics only are employed.

Edward Carlson delivered last night an instructive address before the students of Prof. Atkinson's Sacramento Business College. A large audience greeted the speaker. The subject was: "Europe via Panama, from the Golden Gate to the Eiffel Tower."

GENERAL NEWS ITEMS.

The British syndicate has not purchased the Wieland brewery at San Francisco.

Auburn has a full system of electric lights, which will be in operation to-night.

California grapes are at a premium in the East. Every pound is seized upon as soon as offered for sale.

There was a railroad accident near Howell, Kansas, and a large number of passengers injured, but none killed.

A Chinese Masonic lodge was organized in Chicago yesterday. Now look out for high-binder business in that city.

United States Attorney Carey has ordered the seizure of Krug's distillery at St. Helena for violation of revenue laws.

The Montana Legislature is republican on joint ballot, by a majority of seven. This will give the dominant party two more United States Senators.

The Cabinet at Vienna is ended and harmony is restored through concessions of Emperor Francis Joseph, who has agreed to the designations of the "Imperial Austrian army and Royal Hungarian army."

A sensation was created in the District Court, Denver, Colorado, yesterday evening when State's Attorney Field made affidavit before Judge Decker, that so long as Sheriff Weber or any of his deputies were allowed to summon veniemen, or have anything to do with the case of James and Charles Connors, of this city, who, with Jim Marshall, of Kansas City, are now on trial, charged with conspiracy to rob the Denver and Rio Grande Express, the people could not get an impartial trial, for the reason that the officers favored the ease of the defendants. This jury-fixing business is becoming a monstrous evil.

SOCIAL AND PERSONAL.

Wm. M. Crutcher, of Auburn, is in the city.

Mrs. W. W. Grissim is visiting relatives at Gridley.

E. M. Dasher is in the city making arrangements for the production of The Brass Monkey.

John M. Fulweiler, a prominent attorney from Auburn, has been in the city this week attending to land matters in the U. S. Land Office.

S. E. Carrington, formerly manager of the Record-Union, has returned from his eastern and southern jaunt. He thinks California is God's country after all.

A. J. Johnston and family are sojourning for a brief period at his mountain home near Auburn, where merciless judges who lock juries up over night because of the obstinacy of eleven men are unknown.

W. F. Knox, Jr., and Miss Mattie Todd were united in marriage on Wednesday last in Woodland, at the residence of Mrs. Curtis, the bride's sister. W. H. Govan acted as best man. J. B. Devine, Ed. Weinreich and other Sacramentans were present at the ceremony.

Chas. K. McClatchy has returned from his trip through the eastern and western cities. His health has been restored, and he looks rugged enough to grapple with the onerous duties of managing editor again. He did not let his pen lie idle during his travels, as he has furnished some splendid accounts of where he has been and what he saw, together with some sharp and pertinent comments on things that did not suit his fancy. Charley's pen has a sharp point and his nature is such that he calls things by their proper names. We are glad to welcome our friend back.

The National Grange.

The session of the National Grange will be held in this city commencing on November 13th, and the body will contain representatives from every State. Many subjects of importance will be considered, some of which will be of a political character. The power of this organization is strongly felt in every State; while not political in its nature, yet its influence is manifest. In this State the farmers succeeded in engrafting very many wise and advanced provisions in the new Constitution; and to them largely is due that our State legislation has kept abreast with advancement in agriculture. In our last number we reviewed some of the resolutions adopted by the State Grange recently, and we confidently look for some legislation touching these important subjects at the coming Legislature. We believe that the result will be that exemptions from jury duty will be very materially lessened, if not almost entirely abolished. This will result in a more equitable distribution of the burdens of jury service, and will secure a more desirable class of jurors. We have no doubt that ample accommodations will be provided by our citizens for the visitors; that they will be appropriately entertained and afforded full opportunity to acquaint themselves with the resources of this State. There is little doubt but that the railroad people will afford every facility to this end. The importance of this meeting is readily apparent. It will do more to advertise this State than anything that has heretofore occurred; for it will, in effect, submit our advantages to an intelligent jury, drawn from all parts of the Union. We anticipate that much surprise will be manifested by our visitors at the progress that has been made here in the short time that agriculture has been the prominent industry of the country. When it will be considered that our development in that line is but in comparative infancy, the possibilities of the future can hardly be conjectured.

Baseball.

To-morrow there will be a great game of ball at Snowflake Park between the San Franciscos and Sacramentos. Clarke will be in the box for the former and Knell for the latter. A close and exciting contest is expected, as both clubs are on their mettle. Game will be called at the usual hour, and trains will be run to accommodate those wishing to witness the game.

Live while you can, die when you must. Keep out of the frying-pan and trust to the broiler.

A silent tongue is an enemy to the feast. A whiff of the kitchen is sometimes better than the taste.

Merriment at meat means a long face for the doctor.

Bride the appetite with reason and save the stomach a toss in the ditch.

A lazy appetite bothers the rich man more than an active one does the poor man.

Live leisurely, unless you are anxious to die in a hurry.

No man can live happy with an unhappy digestion.

Let the burden of your table be a part of your religion.

Of all the sciences none is more essential to the welfare of humanity than cookery.

The Fleur De Lis.

The legend connected with this flower as the national emblem of France is as follows: When Clovis, King of the Franks, married the Princess Clotilda of Burgundy, 493 A. D. She was a Christian, but, Clovis, like most of the Frankish nation was a heathen. The young Queen earnestly desired the conversion of her husband, but her arguments had but little effect upon him. However, in 495, Clovis, when engaged in battle with the Allemanni (Germans) at Tolbiac, near Cologne, was hard pressed and in his necessity called upon the God of the Christians, vowing that should he be the victor he would himself become a Christian. The Allemanni were routed, and on Christian Day of the same year Clovis and several thousands of his soldiers were baptized. On the eve of his baptism an angel from heaven, it is said, presented King Clovis with a blue banner, embroidered with the beautiful fleur de lis, which he was to adopt as the banner of France. From the time of Clovis to the French Revolution the Kings of France bore as their arms first an indefinite number and latterly three fleur de lis on a blue-grounded banner.

SNOWFLAKE PARK.

Twenty-eighth and R Streets.

BASEBALL—CALIFORNIA LEAGUE.

Sunday—October 20, 1889
At 2 o'clock P. M., sharp.

Sacramento vs. San Francisco.

KNELL, Pitch. CLARKE, Pitch.

Prices of admission: Men, 50 cents; ladies, 25 cents; small boys, 10 cents; reserved seats, 25 cents—can be obtained any time at C. S. Houghton's, J street, between Sixth and Seventh, or at Park before the game. Trains leave depot at 12:45, 1:05, 1:25, and 1:45 P. M.—stopping at Third, Tenth and Eighteenth streets. Fare, for round trip, 15 cents. Admission to Park (including fare both ways), 50 cents.

STATE OF CALIFORNIA, COUNTY OF SACRAMENTO—ss. In the Superior Court, in and for said county.

The People of the State of California to Wm. Kuhlau, Peter Miller, Elizabeth Davis, Henry Greisel, Robt. Robinson, and B. F. Smith, greeting:

You are hereby notified that an action was commenced in the Superior Court of the County of Sacramento, State aforesaid, by filing a complaint in the Clerk's office of said Court, on the 12th day of October, 1889, in which action M. G. Dandried is plaintiff, and you are defendants. That the general nature of the action, as appears from said complaint, is as follows: That you, the defendants, and each of you, be required to set forth your several claims, or right, title or interest of, in and to Lots One to Eight, inclusive, in the block bounded by J and K and Twenty-ninth and Thirtieth streets, in the city of Sacramento, County of Sacramento, State of California; and that said claims, or either of them, may be determined by a decree of this Court, and that they, or either of said claims, may be adjudged and declared invalid, and that the defendants, nor either of them, have no right, title or interest of, in, or to said land, and that plaintiff do have judgment against said defendants, decreeing plaintiff to have a good and valid title, and that the defendants be forever debarred from ever asserting any claim adverse to plaintiff, and for costs and for general relief, all of which will more fully appear from the complaint on file herein, to which reference is hereby made. And you are hereby directed to appear and answer said complaint within ten days from the service of this writ, exclusive of the day of service, if served on you in said county of Sacramento; and within thirty days, exclusive of the day of service, if served elsewhere. And you are further notified, that, unless you so appear and answer within the time above specified, the plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief prayed for in his said complaint.

In testimony whereof, I, Wm. B. Hamilton, Clerk of the Court aforesaid, do hereunto set my hand and affix the seal of said Court, this 12th day of October, A. D. 1889.

WM. B. HAMILTON, Clerk.

Ed. M. MARTIN, Attorney for Plaintiff.

Oct. 19—9t

BELL & FOUNTAIN

HAVE OPENED THE

Plaza Cash Grocery

STORE,

Corner Tenth and J Streets,

And have stocked the same with all New and Fresh Goods, which they will sell for CASH at the smallest living margin.

All Goods Warranted as Represented.

Goods delivered to any part of the city.

Our Motto: "The nimble sixpence against the slow shilling!"

A. J. MUIR,

PLUMBER,

—Gas and Steam Fitter.—

Being a practical plumber, I can guarantee all work.

810 K STREET, Telephone 226.

SACRAMENTO, CAL.

C. E. REESE & CO.,

Wholesale and Retail Dealers in

Staple and Fancy Groceries,

GRAIN, FEED AND HARDWARE.

1122 J Street, between 11th and 12th.

The place where you can get the best value for your money in the city. If you don't believe it call and be convinced. Remember the number,

1122 J STREET.

Samples and Instructions for Self-measurement sent by mail on application.

L. RADLOFF,

LADIES' TAILOR,

218 POST STREET, SAN FRANCISCO.

Tailor Made Suits a Specialty.

Take a Ride on the Riverside Road

AND BE SURE AND STOP AT

BILLY GROENVELD'S

Sutterville House

And get a glass of COOL BEER. Or if you want a bottle of CHAMPAGNE Billy has it on hand, or anything else you may wish for in his line.

Always a FINE LUNCH on the Counter.

M. T. GROENVELD, Proprietor.

ANGLO-NEVADA ASSURANCE CORPORATION

OF SAN FRANCISCO.

FIRE.—Cash Capital, $2,000,000—MARINE.

Sacramento Branch:

No. 1018 SECOND STREET.

JOSEPH STEFFENS, Manager. HOWARD KIMBROUGH, Local Agent.

R. DAVIS, NOTARY PUBLIC, Real Estate and Insurance Agent.

Representing the following companies:

Manchester of England; Caledonian of Edinburgh, Scotland; London and Lancaster, England.

1002 J Street, Sacramento.

Restaurant de France,

FAURE & BECKER, PROPRIETORS.

(Successors to L. Payen.)

No. 427 K Street, Near Metropolitan Theater. Family Entrance on Fifth Street.

Catering to Families, Banquets and Wedding Parties a specialty. Telephone 228.

NOTICE TO FRUITMEN!

Keep your trees free from scale and your apples from being wormy by the use of

Warner's Scale & Insect Exterminator

FOR SALE BY

G. T. NOE, — DRUGGIST,

AUBURN, CAL.

Put up in one-half gallon and quart cans.

A. AITKEN,

PREMIUM PIONEER MARBLE AND GRANITE WORKS

423 J Street, bet. 4th and 5th, Sacramento.

Costic Tile, etc. Cemetery lots enclosed with Granite. All kinds of work done in Italian and Vermont Marble. Direct importer of Scotch and Eastern Granite Monuments. Also, Marble, Slate, Wooden and Iron Mantels, direct from manufacturers, at Reduced Prices. Call and examine.

American Steam Laundry

NINETEENTH AND I STS.—WHITE LABOR only. Linen polished in the neatest manner. We guarantee satisfaction. All ordinary mending, sewing on buttons, etc., free of charge. Washing called for and delivered to any part of the city.

Main Office at Sawtelle's Book Store, 705 and 710 J street. Branch offices at all the Hotels.

REEVES & LONG, UNDERTAKERS,

609 J Street, bet. Sixth and Seventh.

WE KEEP ON HAND A COMPLETE Stock of Coffins and Caskets; also, Shrouds of every description. Orders from city or country receive prompt attention, day or night. EMBALMING done in the best manner; and at reasonable rates.

After the Rain.

The sunset on the water's breast
Is casting down its mellowed light;
The clouds are floating into rest
Before the night.

Now that the storm has passed away,
A parable of nature lies
On path and field, for those who say
That they are wise.

Beside the placid mere I stand
And watch the rainbow's wondrous stain:
A fragrance from the moistened land
Gives thanks for rain.

A twitter from unnumbered birds
That haunt the tangled flowery ways—
What is it but the simple words
Of love and praise?

We thank our Father for the light
In which His tenderness appears;
For sunny joys—forgetting quite
To thank for tears.

Forgetting that His testament
Is written on the rainy skies—
That blessed comforters are sent
For tearful eyes;

Forgetting he that goes in tears
To sow upon a field of pain,
Shall come when harvest-season nears
To gather grain.

—Arthur L. Salmon.

THE RETURN OF THE HOE.

"Goliah Johnsing, why you so late? Supper been a spilun' on de stove dis half hour!" and Aunt Lucy faced her liege lord with sterner dignity.

"Ole Daddy Moses an' me been a-having it out."

"Havin' what out? You ain't been an' had a fuss wid Mister Benson, 'Liah Johnsing?"

"Yes, I have. Ole skinker. Here I bin a-hoein' in de fiel' all day, an' he mean 'nough ter dock my wages ten cents 'cause I warn't back at noon jest at de minute. I warn't late more'n half an hour or three-quarters of an hour. But I done give him a piece of my mind."

"I 'spose he doan want ter pay for work he doan git."

"Doan git? Why, dar was Sam Stevens an' Bill Jenkins, they talk more'n half de time, an' restin' on they handles more'n t'other half, and did he dock 'em any? Not he. He got spite 'gin me, I know dat."

"Whar'd you git dat new hoe?" queried Aunt Lucy, as Goliah hung that implement up in the woodshed.

"Nebber you mind. Wimmie always want ter tick der nose into ebberthing."

"An' what you done wid your ole hoe you took away dis noon? You didn't trade dat off for new one?"

"Yes, I did; ef you will know."

"Goliah Johnsing," blurted out Aunt Lucy, as a sudden suspicion flamed in her eyes, "dat ain't one of Moses Benson's hoes? You ain't gone an' changed off yo' ole hoe for one his'n, I hope? Yo' wouldn't do dat ef he is a skinker, an' yo' a member de church, 'Liah Johnsing?"

"Miss Johnsing, yo' jes ten' to yo' own business. Doan yo' let me heal not one mo' word 'bout dat hoe."

With closely compressed lips Aunt Lucy completed the preparations for supper. She called in the children—six, of all ages—and they sat down. "'Liah Johnsing, ask de blessin'," she said.

The meal went somewhat gloomily off. The overtures of the younger fry to either parent were grumpily met. Supper things being cleared away, young Sally sat down to the melodion and played Moody and Sankey songs for the Johnson chorus. Suddenly, as bedtime drew near, 'Liah rose and went into the house, saying as he went: "Got to go down to de sto', Lucy. I forgot I got to mow Dawkinses fiel' to-morrow, an' whetstun's worn clean down to de boue, an' I've got to start off 'fo' sto's open."

'Liah had been gone hardly a minute when Aunt Lucy called in a tragic whisper to Paul, the oldest boy, aged six years, who was just then deep in "Only an Armor Bearer," "You Paul, you come here quick, by yo'self."

Paul, used to obeying, came promptly, and was drawn close up to his mother on the settee. "Now, you Paul, I wonder kin I trust you to do something fer me."

Paul, somewhat distrustful, kept discreetly silent.

"I wish you's a little bigger, but de Lord will hole you up. Paul, you listen."

A small boy could hardly listen more intently.

"When yo' paw comes home from de sto' an' we's all gone to bed an' got 'sleep—yo' hearin', Paul?"

"Yes'm."

"Yo' git up, still's a mouse, and yo' go git dat hoe yo' paw brought home—an' doan yo' make no noise takin' it down—an' yo' kerry dat hoe ober to Mister Benson's, an' yo' take de hoe what's hangin' dar—dat's our hoe, Paul, dat yo' paw left dar by 'stake. Yo' take dat hoe an' bring it home an' hung it in de woodshed, an' doan vo' nebber tell yo' paw nothin' 'bout it."

Mr. Johnson chose an early bedtime to insure early rising for the morrow's morning. His guilty conscience did not bring about the proverbial insomnia, but long after his snores had begun to resound through the low chamber Aunt Lucy's eyes were wide open and her ears intent on the slightest noise. She grinned uneasily in the dark as she heard a slight rustle by the door, a creak or two on the rickety stairs, and her heart leaped as the shed door shut with a loud bang; but Goliah slept on. The moments seemed hours. At last came the longed-for creak on the stairs, and Aunt Lucy, with a muttered "Bress de Lord!" went soundly to sleep.

The first sun rays were shining in at the window through the morning glories, the early breakfast was smoking on the table, the six young Johnsons were straggling down stairs in various stages of sleepiness, Aunt Lucy was bending over the stove and Goliah washing at the sink, when a loud knock was heard at the kitchen door, which, being opened, disclosed Mr. Benson. By his side stood the village constable; in his hand was an old and much-battered hoe. Goliah saw the hoe and his under jaw fell. Aunt Lucy's gaze also was riveted on the hoe.

"Goliah Johnson," said the constable, "you're my prisouer; you stole Mr. Benson's hoe."

"Fore de Lord, Mister Benson, I aint't got yo' hoe. What you doin' wid mine?"

"You needn't preteud that you left your old hoe in my barn yesterday by mistake," burst in Mr. Benson; "as if you couldn't tell this old thing from my new hoe! What have you got to say for yourself?"

"Yo' may search dis place, Mister Benson, from top to bottom an' side to side, an' yo' won't fine no stiver of yo' ole hoe. How yo' got mine I 'clar give up; but yo' can see fo' yo' self. Now, here's whar I keeps my hoe." And he swung open the woodshed door.

There hung Mr. Benson's new hoe.

"Yo' Paul!" fairly shouted Aunt Lucy, pouncing on her young hopeful, "what yo' do las' night?"

"Jist what yo' tole me. Took back dat hoe an' changed it fo' de one in Mister Benson's barn."

"Took back what hoe?" shouted Goliah in his turn. "Lucy Johnsing, what yo' bin stickin' yo' fingers in?"

"Well, 'Liah, I 'lowed I warn't goin' to have no hoe in dis house what doan b'long to us by rights, 'n so I tole Paul las' night to git up an' change de hoes back agin; an' if he done it how dis one comes heal clar beats me."

"Lucy Johnsing, see what you's bin an' done wid yo' meddlin'! I took back dat hoe 'fore I went to bed, when I made 's though I was gettin' de whetstun, and then yo' went an' changed 'em back agin."

"'Liah Johnsing, why yo' keep secrets from yo' wedded wife? Why yo' didu' tell me 'bout dat?"

By this time Mr. Benson saw there was something more in the matter than he had supposed, and, sending away the constable, he got from the worthy couple, with much circumlocution, the story of the night's mistakes. Being a man with some sense of humor, he was quite mollified by the comicalities of the situation, and even went so far as to take breakfast with the Johnsons.

"An' after dis, 'Liah Johnsing," was Aunt Lucy's moral, "you'd better think twice 'fore yo' keep any mo' secrets from yo' lawful wedded wife!"—Drake's Magazine.

FRIEND & TERRY
LUMBER CO.

Wholesale and Retail Lumber Dealers, Also Shakes, Bolts, Ties, Doors, Windows, Blinds and Screens. Main Yard and Office, No. 1310 Second Street. Branch Yard, corner Twelfth and J Sts. P. O. Box 233. E. J. HOLT, Manager. Sacramento

OSBORN & FOLGER

DEALERS IN
ICE and COAL, HAY and GRAIN.
New 10-ton Fairbanks' Hay Scales.
N. E. cor. Fifth and I Streets.
Wood Yard, 806 I Street.

R. H. PETTIT,

Wholesale and Retail Dealer in
IMPORTED & DOMESTIC CIGARS

Smoke the "Lone Fisherman,"

The BEST FIVE-CENT CIGAR in the Market.

NO. 225 K STREET.

PAUL GRAF,

Manufacturer of and dealer in Saddles, Harness, Robes, Collars, Whips, Spurs, Brushes, Currycombs, etc.

1130 J Street, near Twelfth.
Repairing Neatly Done.
Harness Made to Order.

SECOND HAND

"REMINGTON" TYPE WRITERS

FOR RENT AND FOR SALE.

Type Writers' Supplies of All Kinds.

AT THE

YOST AGENCY, 1007 FOURTH STREET.

CHAS. J. FREDERICKS & CO.

Fashionable and Practical

HATTERS,

802 J STREET,

Importers and Manufacturers of

Fine Hats and Caps.

Latest Novelties on hand and constantly arriving. REPAIRING A SPECIALTY.

J. O. MILLS,

High Art Crayon Portraits

Executed from Life or Tin-types or Photographs. Inquire or leave orders at

406 J STREET, or 413 K STREET.

San Francisco Studio, 12 Dehoue street, between Sixteenth and Seventeenth, Church and Sanchez streets. References: Timothy Lec, Chief of Police, Col. Guthrie, Capt. Fouratt.

O'BRIEN'S, 607 J.

SWEEPING REDUCTION IN LADIES' SHOES.

Best French Kid, hand turn, worth $7, reduced to $6. Ladies' French Kid Button, low heel, long vamp, worth $5, reduced to $4. Misses' and Children's Canvas Shoes reduced 25 per cent.

Headquarters for the Bartlett Springs Water on Draught.

THE OFFICE,

1008 Fourth Street, Next to Cal. State Bank.

H. D. GAMBLE, Proprietor.

Telephone 199. Office Hours from A. M. to P. M.

SAN FRANCISCO

Steam & Dyeing Works

Removed to 524 K Street.

Branch, 805 K St. Dye Works, 2511 J St.

All orders promptly attended to. Don't make a mistake—Main office at Capital Transfer Company.

JOHN STEEN, Proprietor Dye Works.

Trunks Removed, 25 Cents.

JAS. LONGSHORE,

SACRAMENTO TRUNK FACTORY,

530 K STREET.

Trunks, Valises & Bags Wholesale and Retail.

Waterhouse & Lester

DEALERS IN
IRON, STEEL, CUMBERLAND COAL,
Wagon Lumber and Carriage Hardware,
SACRAMENTO.

CALL AT 1118 J STREET,

—AT—

Fred Futterer's Saloon

And Get a Glass of Cool Beer.

The best Wines, Liquors and Cigars always on hand.

POOL AND BILLIARD TABLES.

FRED FUTTERER, 1118 J Street.

A. L. HART,

ATTORNEY-AT-LAW

Sutter Building, cor. 5th and J.

W. A. ANDERSON,

ATTORNEY-AT-LAW,

No. 209 J Street,

Sacramento.

W. A. GETT, JR.,

Attorney at Law,

Southwest Corner of Seventh and J Streets,

SACRAMENTO, CAL.

F. F. TEBBETS, DENTIST.

No. 914 SIXTH STREET,

Bet. I and J, west side, opp. Congregational Church.

DR. H. H. PIERSON,

SURGICAL & MECHANICAL DENTIST

511 J Street, bet. 5th and 6th.

Gas administered for the painless extraction of teeth.

Joseph Hahn & Co.,
PHARMACISTS,

S. W. cor. Fifth and J Streets, Sacramento.

CHOICE PERFUMERIES, Etc.

Prescriptions carefully compounded, at all hours.

A. C. SWEETSER & CO.,

Real Estate & Insurance Brokers

Lands For Sale in all parts of the State.

Some Good Investments in School Lands.

Send for Catalogue.

Office, No. 1012 Fourth Street,

SACRAMENTO, CAL.

R. W. PARKER,

Dealer in Choice Family

GROCERIES and PROVISIONS

Sold at the Lowest Cash Price.

Give him a call and be convinced.

Corner of Seventeenth and N Streets.

Also, Office of the Superintendent of the City Cemetery.

BELL & CO.,

GENERAL AUCTIONEERS.

Salesroom, 927 K Street, Sacramento, Cal.

Regular Salesdays—Wednesdays and Saturdays at 10 o'clock A. M.

Assistants—W. T. Crowell, Real Estate; J. Pulvermacher, Bookkeeper; J. Lambert, Furniture and Stock.

Particular attention paid to sales of real estate, house sales, and sales of farms, stock, etc.

Highest price paid for all kinds of household goods.

Barrett & Berkey

PACIFIC RESTAURANT,

OYSTER HOUSE AND

WINE PARLORS

701 J Street, cor. 7th.

CANCERS,

Ulcers, Wens, Lumps, Excrescences, etc.,
Positively Cured or No Pay.
No Knife Used.

As to the success of my treatment, I give the names of a few of the many cured. By addressing them they will give any information required—and it pays to investigate before being treated.

Mrs. O. C. Neilsen, Grass Valley, cancer.
John Service, Auburn, lupus.
Patrick Lynch, Sacramento, cancer.
Mrs. Jno. Shaw, Grass Val., birthmark removed.
N. S. Peck, S. P. R. R. Sacramento, cancer.
J. L. Woods, Washington, Yolo county, cancer.
John W. Douglas, Rocklin, cancer.
Miss Mamie Lynch, Yolo, tumor removed.
Chas. McLaughlin, Sacramento, cancer.

I might give many more. Those afflicted are invited to call and investigate for themselves. Consultation at office free. Send for circular.

Office, 426 K Street, Sacramento.

DR. J. H. SHIRLEY.

Jack Frost in St. Petersburg.

One day I made up my mind to go out on foot. I armed myself from head to foot against the cold, wrapped myself up in a huge great coat of Astrakhan fur, pulled a fur cap over my ears, wound round my neck a cachemire scarf, and thus ventured out into the street, having no part of my person exposed to the air but the tip of my nose.

At first all went well; I was astonished to feel the cold so little, and smiled to myself at the tales I had heard. As the two students on whom I called were not at home, I set out on my return home, when I fancied that the passers-by looked at me with some anxiety, though no one spoke to me. By and by a gentleman, perhaps of a more talkative turn than the rest, said, as he passed me, "Nofs." As I did not know a single word of Russian, I thought it hardly worth while to stop for a monosyllable, so I walked on. At the corner of the next street I met a foschik, who drove his sledge furiously, but great as was his speed he also thought it necessary to speak to me, and cried out, "Nofs! nofs!"

Finally, as I entered the Admiralty square, I found myself face to face with a mougick who did not say anything at all, but, taking up a handful of snow, threw himself upon me, and before I could free my arms from their numerous wrappings, he washed my face all over, and rubbed my nose especially hard. I did not see the joke, particularly in such weather, and getting one hand out of my pocket, I gave him a blow which sent him spinning some distance. Two countrymen passed at that moment, and they, having looked at me for a moment, threw themselves upon me, and in spite of all I could do held my arms down, while my friend the mougick took up another handful of snow, and, as if determined to have his joke out, began rubbing as hard as ever. But if my arms were not free, my tongue was, and thinking myself the victim of some mistake, or of some assault, shouted for help at the top of my voice. An officer ran up and asked me who was annoying me.

"What, sir?" I cried, with a tremendous effort ridding myself of the three men, who, as if nothing had happened, quietly walked off down the street, "did you not see what those fellows were doing to me?"

"What were they doing?"

"Why, they were scrubbing my face with handfuls of snow! Do you think such practical joking is in good taste, especially in such weather as this?"

"But, my dear sir, they were doing you a great service," replied my new acquaintance, looking me straight in the face.

"How, sir?"

"It seems to me your nose was freezing."

"Good gracious!" I cried, putting my hand to that feature.

"Sir," said a passer-by at this moment to the officer; "sir, I beg your pardon, but your nose is freezing."

"Much obliged to you, sir," replied my companion, as if he had been informed of the most every-day occurrence. Stooping down he took a handful of snow and performed for himself the same service that I had received from the poor mougick whom I had treated so roughly in return for his good nature.

"You mean, then, that if it had not been for that man—"

"You would have lost your nose."

"Then, excuse me one moment."

And I set off at full speed after my mougick, who, thinking that I wanted to demolish him altogether, took to his heels, so that as fear is naturally more fleet of foot than gratitude, it is probable that I should never have caught my man, but that the bystanders, seeing him flying and me in hot pursuit, took him for a thief and stopped his way. Coming up, I found him holding forth with great volubility, and protesting that his only crime had been on excess of philanthropy. Ten roubles which I put in his hand explained my pursuit of him. The mougick kissed my hand, and a man standing by, who spoke French, advised me in future to take better care of my nose—an unnecessary piece of advice—for from that moment, until I found myself safe at home, I never once lost sight of it.—From the French of Alexandre Dumas.

M. Jules Ferry recently went to a town in the Vosges and found some citizens assembled in the street to hoot him at the close of a public meeting. The ex-premier, much to their surprise, went among them and in a friendly, jocund way, asked how much they were paid to shout him down. "A day's wages," they replied. "Well," said the ex-premier, "I will give you, down on the nail, two days' wages to cry, 'Vive Ferry!'" The demonstrationists cheered him immediately and continued to shout in his praise until long after sun down.

A new hat is invented, which will expand to accommodate the head in the morning and shrink gradually toward night. The majority of men do not want such a hat, but those who do need it are reckless as to the cost, and there is a fortune in store for the inventor.

October's child is born for woe
And life's vicissitudes must know;
But lay an opal on her breast
And hope will lull those words to rest.

WM. J. HASSETT.

A. J. JOHNSTON.

A. J. JOHNSTON & CO.General Printers,

Lithographers, Electrotypers, Stationers, Book
Binders, Blank Book Manufacturers.

—THE—

BEST APPOINTED PRINTING OFFICE

NORTH OF SAN FRANCISCO,

Competing with that City in Quality of Work and Prices.

—410—

J STREET, SACRAMENTO, CAL.

Klune & Floberg,

WATCHMAKERS and JEWELERS
Agents for Rockford Watch Co.
NO. 428 J STREET, SACRAMENTO.

A. G. JOHNSON.

CLAUS ANDERSON.

ANDERSON & JOHNSON,The Leading Merchant Tailors,

SUITS MADE TO ORDER AT REASONABLE RATES.

No. 1014 Seventh Street, Sacramento.

W. D. Comstock, 501 -- 507 K, cor. Fifth

On Exhibition, THE LARGEST AND BEST SELECTED STOCK.

FAIR DEALING!

LOW PRICES!

BAKER & HAMILTON,

San Francisco and Sacramento,

Importers and Jobbers of

Hardware, Iron, Steel, Coal, Powder,MACHINERY*And Agricultural Implements.

Send for Catalogue.

F. KUEHNE & CO.,

NO. 906 NINTH STREET,

Between I and J,

SACRAMENTO,

Carpenters and Contractors

Store and office work a specialty.

ICE BOXES for Breweries and Saloons always on hand and made to order.

Jobbing and Repairing promptly attended to.

CURTIS BROS. & CO.

Wholesale and Retail Dealers in and Shippers of all kinds of

Fruits, VegetablesAnd GENERAL PRODUCE.

Careful attention paid to the selection and packing of Choice Fruits and Vegetables for distant markets. Goods delivered in city free.

308 and 310 K Street, - - Sacramento, Cal.

B. Ruhl

Bookbinder, Paper Ruler and

Blank Book Manufacturer.

Periodicals, Magazines, Music, and all kinds of Binding neatly done at the lowest prices.

No. 409 J STREET,

SACRAMENTO.

ANHEUSER & BUSCH
BEER

Can be found on draught only at

John Gruhler's Saloon

No. 522 J STREET.

The finest and best Wines, Liquors and Cigars constantly on hand.

Patronize Home Industry!CITY BREWERY

FRANK RUHSTALLER, Proprietor.

GENUINE

Pilsener Felsen Beer.

Corner Twelfth and H Streets,

Telephone 201.

SACRAMENTO.

CELEBRATED

WEINER LAGER BEERCAPITAL BREWERY

LOUIS NICOLAUS,

Corner Twelfth and I Streets

SACRAMENTO.

FIFTH AVENUE SALOON,

1015 Fifth Street, between J and K,

E. DIETERLE, Proprietor.

Philadelphia Lager Beer on draught, five cents a glass. Also, fine Wines, Liquors, Cigars, etc.

THE FINEST IN THE LAND.

Agent for the Celebrated W. J. LEMP'S ST. LOUIS LAGER BEER

WISSEMANN'S SALOON,

Klebetz & Green's Old Stand,

1020 Fourth St., bet. J and K, Sacramento.

GEO. WISSEMANN, PROPRIETOR.

Families and Saloons supplied by bottle or keg.

Butchers' Home,

1020 J Street,

Between 10th and 11th, : Sacramento, Cal.

Fine Wines, Liquors and Cigars. Also,

BOCA BEER ON DRAUGHT.

JACOB GRUHLER, Prop'r.

CAPITAL ALE VAULTS.

Established in 1870, and still maintains the same reputation for keeping the best WINES, LIQUORS and Cigars in the city. The finest Hot Lunch in the city from 11 to 2. Clam Chowder a specialty every night.

NAGELE & SVENSSON, Prop'rs.

Telephone 38.

302 J and 1005 Third st.

How it Originated.

And behold, as Abraham sat in the door of his tent, a strange creature appeared before him. It was like unto a woman in form, and its face resembled even that of Sarah, his wife; but its figure was such as Abraham had never seen before. As Abraham gazed upon the mysterious figure, he observed a curious hump upon its back, the significance of which he could not conceive. The creature spake unto him, saying: "Abraham, wherefore wonderest thou? Is it not meet that thy wife, Sarah, should seek to find favor in the eyes of her husband?" Then was Abraham's heart oppressed, for her words were as the words of a prophet, and their meaning was not revealed unto him. He answered, and said unto her: "Sarah, hast thou not found favor in my sight? Have I not often said that thou wert comely, and have I ever besought thee to add to the gifts which the Lord hath bestowed upon thee? Interpret unto me, I beseech thee, the significance of this deformity, that I may understand it." Then Sarah answered, saying: "When the Lord created woman He wot not of the fashion, and is it unlawful that I should seek to rectify this oversight? Peradventure, I have improved myself greatly, and will become the admiration and envy of all the daughters of Lot." Then Abraham's anger arose, and he laid hands upon Sarah, his wife, and straightway removed from her the abomination, which she had devised in the wickedness of her heart. So Abraham found favor in the sight of the Lord, and his flocks multiplied and he waxed very rich. And the bustle was seen in the land no more forever. —Cincinnati Enquirer.

The Veteran's Mishap.

Two young men were standing on the Postoffice steps yesterday afternoon when a man with a decidedly military bearing hobbled up. He greeted one of the young men as he passed. "That's a fine, soldierly looking chap," said the other. "Yes; he's a veteran—Colonel Jones, of the G. A. R." "Did he lose his leg on the battle-field?" "Yes; at Gettysburg." "Ah! Repelling Pickett's charge, I suppose?" "No; a monument fell on it.—Pittsburg Chronicle.

One day, said an old miner, I was taken with chills and headache, signs that my old enemy, malaria, was on hand. My quinine box was empty, and I was looking forward to a restless, sleepless night. In desperation I peeled a raw onion and slowly ate it, and then went to bed, with warm feet and an extra comforter, when presto! I was asleep in five minutes, and awoke in the morning free from malaria and ready for the day's duties.

Son—Papa, how do they catch lunatics? Cynical father—With large straw hats and feathers and white dresses; jewelry and neat gloves my, boy. Mamina—musing—Yes; I remember that's how I dressed before we were married.

Edwin K. Alsip & Co.

ESTABLISHED 1860.

REAL ESTATE

AND INSURANCE AGENTS.

FARMING LANDS A SPECIALTY.

Catalogues issued monthly.

No. 1015 Fourth Street, Sacramento.

WESTERN HOTEL

209 to 219 K Street.

The Leading Hotel of Sacramento, Cal.

FREE BUS TO AND FROM HOTEL.

Meals, 25 Cents. Rooms, according to Location.

WM. LAND, Proprietor.

SCHOOL.

PUPILS of the Public Schools who wish to review during their vacation will find BAINBRIDGE COLLEGE the place. We make a specialty of Grammar School and High School Studies. No extra charge for Penmanship or Elocution drill. You can attend in the cool part of the day; hours, 8 A. M. to 1 P. M. J. C. BAINBRIDGE, Principal.

No. 1017 J Street, Sacramento.

King Bros.

State Capitol Cash Grocery, 131 J Street, corner Second.

Goods sold on small margin, strictly for cash. Best Brands of Wines, Liquors and Cigars.

H. WACHHORST Leading Jeweler of Sacramento

SIGN OF THE TOWN CLOCK,

No. 315 J STREET, SACRAMENTO.

J. A. MOYNIHAN.

G. E. MOYNIHAN.

Moynihan's

418 J STREET.

FOR THE LADIES:

Just received, direct from Manufacturers, an elegant line of Silver and Oxydized Bonbonniere Boxes, Ladies' Cachon Flasks, and other Novelties. Call and inspect them. THE ONLY FIRST-CLASS HOUSE IN THE CITY.

J. R. Wheat.

DITTMAR & WHEAT,

A. Dittmar.

Sacramento Lounge & Mattress Factory

No. 916 J STREET.

JOE POHEIM, The Tailor,

MAKES THE BEST-FITTING CLOTHES IN THE STATE.

Fine Tailoring at Prices Thirty-five per cent Cheaper than any other Establishment on the Pacific Coast.

LATEST DESIGNS OF FALL AND WINTER GOODS

Now on Exhibition at

NO. 600 J STREET, Corner of Sixth, SACRAMENTO.

BRANCH STORES. 203 Montgomery Street, 724 and 1110-12 Market Street, San Francisco; 49 and 51 South Spring Street, Los Angeles; 1021 and 1023 Fourth Street, San Diego; 105, 107 and 109 Santa Clara Street, San Jose; 73 Morrison Street, Portland, Oregon.

JAS. G. DAVIS Furniture, Carpets and Wall Paper

411 AND 413 K STREET,

Branch, 315 K St. Send for Catalogue. Prices Lowest.

BOOTS AND SHOES made to order. Boots, $6 to $11. Shoes, $4 to $9. Ladies' Shoes, best quality French Kid, $5 to $7.

REPAIRING DONE at lowest prices.

NONE BUT BEST mechanics employed.

WE GUARANTEE to make perfect fitting to the worst of crooked and crippled feet.

COMPETE WITH any shoes on the market.

216 J Street

—AND—

208 K Street,

SACRAMENTO.

A. CASELLI

& COMPANY.

Gregory Bros. Co

Established 1852.

COMMISSION MERCHANTS,

Packers and Shippers of California Fruit and Produce,

126 and 128 J STREET,

San Francisco Office, 313 Davis St. SACRAMENTO.

Hotfilter & Grafmiller,

MANUFACTURING JEWELERS,

Jewelry made to order. Watches, Clocks and Jewelry Repaired and Warranted.

No. 1026 Sixth Street, Sacramento.

GO TO Nolan & Son's FOR FINE SHOES,

BRANCH OF SAN FRANCISCO.

603 J Street, Sacramento.

The Only Retail House in Sacramento that manufactures their own goods.

Try Our Famous $3 Shoes.

W. R. STRONG & CO.

Founded 1852.

Fruit Packers

and Shippers.

PROPRIETORS OF

CAPITAL NURSERIES,

SACRAMENTO, CAL.

RAILROAD TIME TABLE.

Southern Pacific Company

PACIFIC SYSTEM.

Sept. 9, 1889.

Trains LEAVE and are due to ARRIVE at SACRAMENTO.

Lv.	Trains Run Daily.	Arr.
7-00 A	Calistoga and Napa	11-40 A
4-05 P	Calistoga and Napa	7-20 P
11-00 P	Ashland and Portland via Chico	3-40 A
5-05 P	Deming, El Paso and East	7-05 P
7-30 P	Knight's Landing	7-55 A
4-30 A	Marysville (Mixed)	4-25 P
9-00 A	Los Angeles and Mojave	9-55 A
8-00 P	Second Class, Ogden and East	6-30 A
10-30 P	Central Atlantic Express
	(Ogden and East)	3-40 P
3-00 P	Oroville	9-50 A
11-00 P	Oroville	3-40 A
3-00 P	Red Bluff via Marysville	9-50 A
10-40 A	Kidding via Willows	4-05 P
7-00 A	San Francisco via Benicia	8-30 P
4-05 P	San Francisco via Benicia	10-10 P
4-00 A	San Francisco via Benicia	10-10 A
*10-00 A	San Francisco via Steamer	*6-00 A
11-20 A	San Francisco via Livermore	*2-25 P
3-05 P	San Francisco via Benicia	11-40 A
11-20 A	Sau Jose	2-25 P
9-00 A	Santa Barbara	9-55 A
5-05 P	Santa Barbara	7-05 P
7-00 A	Santa Rosa	11-40 A
4-05 P	Santa Rosa	7-20 P
9-00 A	Stockton and Galt	7-05 P
5-05 P	Stockton and Galt	9-55 A
8-00 P	Truckee and Reno	6-30 A
10-30 P	Truckee and Reno	3-40 P
8-30 A	Colfax	6-00 P
7-00 A	Vallejo	11-40 A
4-05 P	Vallejo	*8-30 P
*12-15 P	Folsom and Placerville (Mixed)	*10-25 A
*7-15 A	Folsom and Placerville	*2-40 P
*5-20 P	Folsom	*6-50 A

*Sunday excepted. †Sunday only. ‡Monday excepted. A for morning. P for afternoon.

A. N. TOWNE, Gen'l Manager. T. H. GOODMAN, Gen'l Pass. and Ticket Agent.

California State Bank

DOES A GENERAL BANKING BUSINESS.

Draws Exchange on all the Principal Cities of the World.

OFFICERS:

PRESIDENT.....N. D. RIDEOUT
VICE-PRESIDENT.....FRED K. COX
CASHIER.....A. ABBOTT
ASSISTANT CASHIER.....W. E. GERBER

DIRECTORS:

C. W. Clarke, Jos. Steffens, N. D. Rideout,
Geo. C. Perkins, J. R. Watson, Frederick Cox,
W. E. Gerber.

Capital Iron Works.

Vertical and Horizontal Engines

BOILERS,

STEAM AND POWER

PUMPS,

Deep Well Pumps,

Hand Pumps,

Stock Pumps,

PUMPMAKERS' SUPPLIES.

HORSE-POWERS, WIND MILLS,

Tanks and Tank Houses.

904 K Street, Sacramento.

CHANGED HANDS.

SACRAMENTO EXCHANGE,

(Formerly Wm. Gamble's.)

1012 SEVENTH STREET.

Fine Wines. All the celebrated brands of Liquors and Cigars. ROBERT ALLEN, Formerly of Agricultural Park.

ALBERT GRUBBS,

No. 1417 Fourth Street,

Will do all kinds of House Cleaning, Lay Carpets, Whitewashing, and everything in that line.

He also has the only wagon for the REMOVAL OF DEAD ANIMALS, and any orders left at his place of business will receive prompt attention.

Remember the address!

No. 1417 Fourth Street, Sacramento, Cal.

JESSE SLAUGHTER,

Office, No. 1217 Fifth Street.

Plastering, Whitewashing, Cleaning of Cesspools, Etc.

Also, CITY SCAVENGER.

Burying of dead animals attended to at short notice.

Don't forget the number—1217 Fifth street, the old stand, where I have been for 25 years.

THEMIS

Vol. I.

SACRAMENTO: SATURDAY, OCTOBER 26, 1889.

No. 36.

THEMIS: published weekly, by A. J. Johnston & Co. Publication Office, 410 J Street. Subscription—One year, by mail, $3 00; six months, by mail, $1 50, in advance; per month, by carrier, 25 cents. (Entered at the Post Office at Sacramento as second-class matter.)

From the outlook it is assured that the reception that will be tendered the National Grange at its coming session in Sacramento will be creditable to our people. This city has better facilities for the accommodation of visitors than any other on the coast. In this matter our citizens have started in early and practically. It is unfortunate that the session of this body will be held here in November, at a season of the year when we have the least to offer in the way of attractions. However, a comparison will not be unfavorable with the conditions that will exist at a corresponding time in the older States to the east. The suggestion that we tender our visitors a collation is one of merit. We do not believe in an elaborate banquet, where the caterer arranges the spread at so much per capita. A collation can be gotten up that will be pleasing, and one that will exemplify in a measure the products of this State. It is not alone Sacramento that will be interested in the entertainment of the delegates to the National Grange. Every county of agricultural resources will feel interested in this general matter, and before the delegates leave for their homes they should be afforded the best opportunities possible to visit the various portions of the State and to acquaint themselves with its unlimited resources. There was wisdom shown in the selection of Sacramento as the place for holding of the sessions of the National Grange. That no city in the State is better able to receive a large number of visitors was demonstrated not long since when we provided accommodations that were ample for the Grand Army, and the reception to them at the new Pavilion is a matter to our credit. If it be possible, we suggest that our Grange visitors be taken over the State. We have no doubt that satisfactory arrangements to that end can be made with the transportation companies, for they have shown a disposition to be liberal in matters looking to State development.

There may be one feature of misfortune in the latest admissions of States into the union. With the exception of the Dakotas it would seem that the new acquisitions to our national sisterhood will be abundantly able to take care of themselves. It appears, however, that already a cry is raised to relieve starvation in some portions of the Dakotas, and that subscriptions are being asked. Except in matters of unlooked-for calamities, the other States of the union have not called for aid from their sisters. It is possibly a mistake that Dakota Territory should have been divided into two States. Had the territory been admitted into the union as one State it could have supported itself; as it is, it seems likely that both will for a time be a burden upon the older States. We of California are sympathetic, and we have an abundance. We forced our admission into the union. We had a state government in operation almost a year before our recognition. The union has been benefited more by our admission than by what we have or can derive by our union with the sisterhood. From the very outset we have been much more than self-sustaining. In the matter of mining our State produces about $20,000,000 per annum; our wheat crop amply supplies our domestic consumption, and our exportations are not inconsiderable; we supply our own markets with an abundance of fruits and grapes, and ship innumerable carloads to the east. We regret that the showing of the Dakotas has been so meagre. This suffering will, of course, be immediately relieved. It is to be hoped, however, that there will not—as usually happens in this country—be an overdoing in the matter. There should be some system adopted for the collection and distribution of relief funds, as it very often occurs that the moneys are diverted from the objects for which they were raised.

It is proclaimed by the ultra wing of the democratic partisans in Congress—those following the lead of Mills of Texas—that any and all legislation not in accord with the peculiar views of that statesman will be obstructed in such manner as to defeat final action at the ensuing session of the Fifty-first Congress. In the past it has been, under the rules of the House of Representatives, within the power of an individual member of that body to arbitrarily obstruct useful and necessary legislation, in a spirit of pure "cussedness" aside from any other consideration. In the October number of the North American Review Thomas B. Reid, member from Maine and a prominent candidate for the speakership of the House, furnishes a splendid article upon "Obstruction in the National House." It is shown that the rules of the House were made on the hypothesis that each member could be expected and relied upon to do his public duty, and would conform to the spirit and intent of the rules and not violate them in spirit for selfish and individual motives. Rules were made to facilitate business; but members often, for the purpose of retarding business, invoke certain rules contrary to their true intent and spirit. The system of "filibustering" to defeat or obstruct legislation is not in harmony with the dignity of such a body of men as the House of Representatives of the greatest nation on earth; and in no sense should it be tolerated or made possible by any arbitrary rules.

If our recollection is correct, at the last session of Congress, when Congressman McKenna, of this district, was endeavoring to have the general government repay to California the amount of direct tax paid by our State during the war, which was just and equitable, the southern obstructionists availed themselves of the rules of the House to delay and ultimately defeat, for the time, the fair and proper measure. This was done by that rule which allows the yeas and nays to be recorded, and the constitutional right was perverted by calling for the yeas and nays on every frivolous motion or question. Other important public legislation was defeated by members antagonistic to such legislation by introducing some long bill and then calling for the reading of the same in its entirety, thus delaying the action of the House beyond the special time fixed for action on the measures sought to be enacted. Mr. Reid says: "When a legislative body makes rules it does not make them, as the people make constitutions, to limit power and provide for rights; they are made to facilitate the orderly and safe transaction of business. Members are representatives, not acting in their own right, but in the right of their constituents. As a body they represent the whole people of the United States, and have, therefore, no right to limit their own power. Rules should not be barriers; they should be guides." There are cases where dilatory motions are justifiable and justified. In cases where majorities attempt to trample upon the rights of minorities, then minorities are justified in interposing retarding actions. This is a matter that addresses itself to the representative duty; but to place it in the power of an individual member who may oppose some legislation to defeat that legislation is wrong in principle and contrary to the idea of legislation. The next House (the Fifty-first Congress) will make its own rules, and, as Mr. Reid says: "To suppose that the opposition will refuse to do their legislative duty unless they can dictate its rules is the wildest dream of parliamentary insurrection that ever presented itself to human vision." Still, it is threatened by Roger Q. Mills and others that unless they have their way in certain matters, every possible obstruction will be thrown in the way of legislation by the next Congress.

Last Sunday Rev. William H. Hill, who for eight years has been the chaplain of San Quentin prison, resigned that position on account of failing eyesight. Reverend Hill is a native of Connecticut, and a number of his earlier years were spent in Albany, N. Y., where, from 1840 to 1846, he was engaged on the Journal as reporter and assistant editor. The first number of the Albany Evening Journal appeared March 22, 1830. The paper was established and for many years edited by Thurlow Weed, and wielded a powerful influence in state and national politics. Connection with the Journal made Mr. Hill familiar with public affairs and afforded him an opportunity for acquaintance with public men. In 1854 Mr. Hill came to California as an ordained minister of the Episcopal Church. For many years he was pastor of Grace Church in this city, and served for several terms as superintendent of our city schools. Afterward he resided in Los Angeles, and since 1881 was prison chaplain.

Let us plant rosemary there. On October 25, 1883, passed from existence on earth a bright genius and one of the founders of civil government in this State. Yesterday was the anniversary of the death of that veteran and pioneer editor, James McClatchy. The writer was one of his closest, warmest and most confidential friends. There can be no more fitting time to revive his memory and pay a deserved tribute to that name which should be dear to all citizens of this city as well as the State. In this era of push and bustle we are too prone to forget those who have gone before and crossed the dark river, and rarely recall the virtues, even the recollections of our departed friends and comrades. Nature made but few such men, and when the summons came for James McClatchy to the celestial sphere, a void was created that has never been filled. When James McClatchy tramped weary, footsore and penniless through Mexico for this city, over forty years ago, he but disclosed that indomitable will that attended him through his life. He landed in Sacramento in June, 1849, and as early as 1850 was the correspondent of the New York Tribune. His life was devoted to journalism. He was a remarkable man, and his habits and tastes were fixed and regular. He was prompt in all his engagements, and expected and exacted promptness in all those with whom he had dealings. Always courteous to his subordinates, as well as to all with whom he was brought in contact. Some years ago we drew a pen portrait of James McClatchy at his desk, and it is appropriate at this time. We have often watched him enter his sanctum in the early morning—his cordial greeting, "Good morning, gentlemen," has a place in our memory yet. He was not a man of show or ostentation, and his office was encumbered only with such articles of furniture as were useful, which consisted of a table with upright case for stowing away papers and slips. On his left was a large bookcase containing Chambers' Encyclopædia, the Codes and Statutes of California, several scientific and medical works, a classical dictionary, history of California, Greeley's Conflict, the Bible, Progress and Poverty, works on political economy, Moore and Shakespeare, a historical atlas, and other statistical works, including the Tribune Almanacs. We enter the sanctuary on the editor's left and find him leaning low over his table writing with nervous rapidity with a stubby pencil, upon small sheets of ordinary wrapping paper, in proportion of about six lines to a page. On the table lie slips and cullings, and to his right is the latest Tribune Almanac. There lies open before him the city charter, and it is safe to predict that the next issue of the Bee will contain a scathing article on the reckless improvidence of the early authorities in foisting upon the people the great municipal debt, or an attack on the ruthless destruction of city and valley property by the hydraulic miners. There is a pair of dilapidated scissors lying upon slips marked "Condition of the State." These are flanked by a piece of ancient glassware which does duty as a paste pot. There are many manuscripts which bear characteristic scribbling, "Public Echoes," "To be considered," peeping out under a pile of exchanges which show the editor's favorites, from which he has clipped numerous little slips for future use. James McClatchy was a very rapid writer, and a more rapid thinker. He possessed the faculty of getting at the meat of a subject at a glance, and could digest a proposition or article with the quickness of thought itself. On the wall hangs a picture of Colonel Edward D. Baker, the old Gray Eagle of oratory, and one of the editor's warmest friends, and to whom, shortly before he was killed at the battle of Balls Bluff, James McClatchy sent a Pony Express dispatch (there were no telegraph lines then across the continent), which saved California from being listed with the Confederate States, and averted the seizure by the rebels of our arsenal and arms on this coast. At his right is a basket which contains the slushy and rejected effusions which bear his characteristic mark X, meaning oblivion as far as the Bee is concerned. The sanctum, to an outsider, would present the appearance of the utmost confusion, but the veteran editor had a system of unsystematic arrangement peculiar to himself, and woe betide anyone who disarranged his papers or slips. We enter the sanctum, but he continues to work, not apparently noticing our advent. He finishes his sentence and looks up with an inquiring look, saying, "Well, Citizen A, what can I do for you?" That look is enough to convince any but a hide bound bore that McClatchy's time is more valuable than money. If, however, the caller has anything of moment to say, his object is quickly divined and at once answered, whereupon he resumes his writing with a vigor that means, "Now, sir, I have answered you; good day." With those who know him this would be sufficient, but should any one encroach longer upon his time, he would be greeted with such an answer as would set his face ablaze with shame. James McClatchy at work was no respecter of persons—great or small, rich or poor, statesman or plebeian; if he encroached on his time in the editorial room he would be brought to realize his insignificance. Thus we used to see James McClatchy in his lifetime at his work. In the career of this noted journalist we have another illustration of over work, and its results. His was a plain case of the wear of the human machinery beyond its capacity—a case of "hot axle." Whenever and wherever there was a public necessity, we always found McClatchy to the front with all that energy and power he was known to possess, battling for the public welfare, and for the advancement of his community and his State. There was no half hearted business with him. He was feared by his enemies and loved by his friends. The little mound that marks his last resting place on earth serves one whose life was one continuous self-sacrifice. Let us plant rosemary there.

THEMIS, the literary paper of Sacramento, is being extensively quoted, which in time will prove to be bread cast upon the waters.—California Topical Talker.

The Topical Talker has passed the mile-post—the Rubicon in newspaperdom. Our sprightly contemporary is made of material that is not afraid to "speak out in meetin'." From our observations during the period of its existence those who control the columns are of the free lance order, and bow to no power save their own sweet will. In addition to its general literary character, we find some learned disquisitions on the sciences, particularly the science of medicine. The people of San José, as well as those of the State, can feel a just pride in the Topical Talker.

MY FIRST BEAU.

My first beau was named Longfellow Tibbs. He had been named after the distinguished poet at a very early age, and without any thought of the future. I scarcely think if his parents had known what a very short fellow he would grow up to be they would not have distinguished him by an appellation so open to jokes. However, they did it. I had known him as a little boy, and when I was seventeen years old and keeping house for my Granduncle Joshua, he called and sent up his card. He had come to the city to honor the firm of Tape & Buttons with his presence behind its notions counter. I was pleased to see him, and told him so, and he replied: "I scarcely expected it. I thought you would not have known me. The ravages of time must have changed me greatly. They have only improved you, you know, but, combined with care, they have traced many lines upon my brow, I know."

I remembered that he had recently acquired a step-father, who was said to flog him frequently, so I looked sympathetic. "You certainly had long curls and wore frocks when I saw you last, Mr. Tibbs," I said, "and you must be nineteen now."

"And a half," he added, gloomily, "and a half. However, my heart is young yet. You are keeping house for an uncle, I am told, Miss Rosina?"

"Yes," I said, "he is awfully nice and so lonely. Mamma spared me to him for that reason."

"What a happy man he is! How enviable," said Mr. Tibbs, "to have a niece to keep his house."

"Perhaps, Mr. Tibbs," said I, "when you are as old as Uncle Joshua you may also have a niece to keep house for you."

"Perhaps," he said, gloomily, "but I don't see how that can be, as I have neither brothers nor sisters."

Just then a bell rang, and Uncle Joshua called over the stairs to me to "Ask the little boy to stay to dinner, and come at once."

Mr. Tibbs refused this ceremonious invitation with a little hauteur. He prided himself on being rather old, and departed for the time. However, he came again, and still again, and in the course of a month began to propose to me.

I speak correctly. Other people, I believe, "pop the question" once and have done with it. I never knew of the most ardent passion outliving three rejections; but Longfellow Tibbs went through a course of them as though they were lessons in something. He always went away in despair, but returned to the charge as fresh as ever. His tailor bill must have been greatly increased by his tender passion, I am sure, for he always went on his knees to offer himself, and was twice caught at it—once by the chambermaid and once by Uncle Joshua. At last he began to threaten self-destruction, and one evening left me, swearing that I should never see him again alive. I did not believe that he was in earnest; but I felt a little anxious, nevertheless, when a week passed by without any news of him, and I rather missed him, too, I must admit. But judge of my horror when one evening a messenger boy put into my hands an envelope sealed with black wax and wearing a mourning border an inch wide, and opening it, I read these words:

"Miss or Madame: The inclosed having been found upon the body of a gentleman who has just drowned himself in the Hudson river, I inclose it to your address, imagining that it may interest you.
(Dictated.)

THE CITY CORONER."

Trembling, I tore open an envelope which was inclosed, and read thus:

"Dear Rosina: Yes, standing on the verge of a watery grave, I may address you thus. Dearest Rosina, your cruelty has driven me to desperation. Without you I am wretched. You will not be mine; therefore I will no longer live. Ere you read this I shall be no longer capable either of love or of despair. Yet, if my departed ghost can visit these terrestrial scenes, I shall come to you in those bright moonlight hours I have so loved because they brought me to your side, and you shall know that I am with you—by a breath, a whisper, or a touch.

"In my death perhaps you may give me what in my life you have denied—your love. Your wretched and devoted
"LONGFELLOW TIBBS."

I read the document to the end and went off into hysterics. Happily Uncle Joshua was away on a fishing party, and no one came to me but the chambermaid. She was young, pretty and sympathetic. I felt obliged to have some confidante, and I told her everything. She wept with me over the "poor young gentleman's" untimely fate, but declared that I was not to blame, for "nobody could marry every one that asked them," and instanced one Patrick O'Rourke, who threatened to dynamite himself the next blast whenever she declined his offer. "And how can I say yes," said Nora, "when I like Pat Gorman far the best. And it would be me he'd murder if I jilted him."

But Nora could not console. I was utterly miserable.

I cried myself sick, and actually took to my bed, Nora ministering to me tenderly. And when Uncle Joshua returned, he found me wrapped in a shawl and sitting up amid cushions and pillows, a very wreck of myself. I did not tell him what had caused my illness, and he insisted upon it that I had been "stuffing myself with sweets" in his absence. He brought home with him a very sardonic old gentleman, who looked like the portraits of Voltaire, and they had a very sociable time of it in the dining-room over cards and punch, and evidently did not want me. As for the old gentleman, his very glance made me shiver. I was nervous, and on the verge of becoming a shattered wreck for life. I could not bear the gaslight or noise of any kind, lived on beef tea, and wept constantly.

One evening Nora had placed me in a large arm-chair on the balcony and left me alone for awhile, and I think I had dozed off, when, opening my eyes, I became aware that a figure stood before me. It was motionless. Its arms crossed on its breast, its eyes rolled up, but by the moonlight I saw the face of my unhappy adorer, Longfellow Tibbs. He had declared that he would haunt me, and here he was. I should doubtless be tormented by his reproachful spirit for the rest of my days, or rather, nights. It was simply awful. I uttered a long shriek and put out my hands to ward the specter off. They were caught in two of solid flesh and blood. The figure dropped on its knees before me. This is no ghost. It was Longfellow Tibbs in proper person, very much alive indeed. "Forgive me!" he sighed. "Angel of my soul, forgive me! It was all a ruse to try your affections. I wrote both letters myself; I did it to put you to the test. But now"—and he made preparations to embrace me, to which I put a stop at once—"now, my angel," he continued, "I will no longer be denied. Your anguish has proved that I am not indifferent to you. Beneath the thought of my death you have withered like a rose smitten by the wintry blast. Cheer up—cheer up, my angel! Your Longfellow lives and still adores you."

At these words my indignation got the better of me. I arose to my feet and looked at him scornfully. "Mr. Tibbs," said I, "if I had been as fond of you as you pretend you are of me I would not—could not like you after what you have done; and I care nothing for you—nothing!"

Longfellow Tibbs folded his arms and regarded me tragically. "There is but one explanation of this insensibility," he said, "you love another."

As he spoke, a sudden thought occurred to me. I resolved to pay him back in his own coin. I bowed my head in silence.

"You are betrothed to another?" cried Longfellow. I bowed again.

"His name—that I may wreak vengeance upon his head!" demanded Mr. Tibbs.

"You may see him if you like," I said.

I arose, finding my strength quite miraculously restored to me, and crossed the room softly, beckoning him to follow. The house was an old-fashioned one of the double sort, and at the back of the hall was a curious little window that gave light to the kitchen stairs. Beside this window I paused. It opened into the large dining-room. At the table in the center of the apartment sat Uncle Joshua and his ancient friend, whose head was as bald as a billiard ball, and who had lost every tooth in his head. Without a word I pointed to this individual.

"He!" gasped Longfellow.

"No one else," said I.

"False one, you have sold yourself for gold!" said Mr. Tibbs.

I did not deny the impeachment. Mr. Tibbs folded his arms and stalked toward the front door.

"Adieu," said he.

"Good-by, Mr. Tibbs," said I.

"I dreamed," said Mr. Tibbs, "that woman was to be won by love. I find that wealth is the only talisman. No matter. Let him beware my vengeance."

I never saw him again, but shortly after some one threw a rotten egg at our venerable guest as he stood upon our doorstep, and I always suspected—and so did Nora—that it was the vengeful Longfellow.

The Colored Statesman.

The N. Y. World has the following concerning Frederick Douglass: Mr. Douglass is without a peer as the foremost man of his race in this country. He is up in the seventies, but is wonderfully well preserved. You may see plenty of men twenty years his junior who seem older than he. He is in excellent health, hale and vigorous, with, to all appearances, years of active life before him. There can be no doubt of his peculiar fitness for the official post to which he has been appointed. Laying down my pen at this point for a moment, I took it up with an idea of saying that Mr. Douglass made a mistake when he married his white wife, and that she made another, but I guess on the whole I will not. As they say in Congress, "I withdraw the remark." So long as Mr. and Mrs. Douglass are satisfied—and I am told that in the domestic relations peace flows as a river—I don't suppose it is anybody's business. It was a long time before the colored people here—who look upon Mr. Douglass as the children of Israel did upon Moses—forgave him for not choosing a wife, when he wanted a second, from among the daughters of his own people. On two occasions, within a few weeks after the marriage, I heard colored orators at public meetings go out of their way to score Mr. Douglass for his connubial eccentricity. They cried aloud and spared not. It will be remembered that he married a copyist employed in his office when he was Recorder of Deeds for the District of Columbia. Nobody, not even Mr. Douglass' own children, had the slightest suspicion of the coming event, and all Washington held up its hands in surprise.

The Well-bred Girl.

The well-bred girl thanks the man who gives her a seat in the street-car, and does it in a quiet and not in an effusive way.

She doesn't turn round to look after gamblers or posing actors on the street, and she doesn't think that her good looks are causing the men to stare at her.

She doesn't wear all her jewelry in the daytime, and she understands that diamond rings, ear-rings and bracelets were intended for the evening alone.

She doesn't go to supper alone with a man after the theater is over.

She does not declare that she never rides in street-cars.

She does not accept a valuable present from any man, unless she expects to marry him.

She doesn't talk loud in public places.

She doesn't shove or push to get the best seat, and she doesn't wonder why in the world people carry children in the cars, and why they permit them to cry.

She does not speak of her mother in a sarcastic way, and she shows her the loving deference that is due her.

She doesn't want to be a man and she doesn't try to imitate him by wearing stiff hats, smoking cigarettes, and using an occasional big, big D.

She doesn't say she hates women, and she has some good, true friends among them.

She doesn't wear boots without their buttons, or a frock that needs mending.

She doesn't scorn the use of the needle, and expects some day to make clothes for very little people who will be very dear to her.

That's the well-bred girl. She's the sort that you want for your wife, and the one that will not run into the D. C., but who will be faithful through sickness and through health, through sorrow, and if need be, through shame; who will never waver in her love, and in whom the heart of her husband may safely rest.—Bab, in Buffalo News.

Signs of a Boy.

A gun in the parlor, a kite in the hall,
In the kitchen a book and a bat and a ball,
On the sideboard a ship, on the bookcase a flute,
And a hat for whose ownership none would dispute;
And out on the porch, gallantly prancing nowhere,
A spirited hobby-horse paws at the air;
And a well-polished pie plate out there on the shelf
Near the tall jelly jar, which a mischievous elf
Emptied as slyly and as slick as a mouse,
Makes it easy to see there's a boy in the house.

The Stage.

Under this caption will appear a fair and impartial criticism of the drama, actors, music, and all noteworthy matters pertaining to the stage.

Sembranch is soon to sing the part of "Elsa" at Berlin. She is a good violinist and pianist as well as a singer.

Bijou Heron, daughter of Matilda Heron and wife of Henry Miller, has left the stage. She has a family to look after.

Maude Granger has been engaged by John Clinton Hall for his production of Mrs. Ettie Henderson's drama, Almost a Life.

Sardou is writing a play for Coquelin, Son & Company, in which they will be seen at the Porte St. Martin when Sarah Bernhardt and "Theodora" move to Lyons.

Nevada City has a spell of the amateur fever. A number of young ladies and gentlemen gave a dramatic entertainment this week, which received public favor.

Among the theatrical attractions announced for the present season is a drama which contains a scene in which a young lady tries to climb through a barbed-wire fence.

Edwin Booth paid $500 for a seat at the benefit of the family of Charles B. Bishop. This shows the appreciation in which Bishop was held by the greatest living actor.

M. B. Curtis will soon return to the stage in a new and peculiar play called Shotschew. Curtis would be wise to remain in obscurity. He has afflicted the public enough in the past.

"What I want," said the playwright, is a good title for my drama. "Why don't you call it Turn About?" "But it has no significance." "It has, certainly. Your drama is a fair play, isn't it?"—Harper's Bazar.

M. Goldmark, composer of The Queen of Sheba, has written a new symphony, Prometheus, which will be played by the Philharmonic orchestra of Vienna. He is at work upon a new opera, founded on Goethe's "Egmont."

A drama by M. Jacques Bram is entitled Jena, the Revenge of the Nations. It is written with patriotic sentiment and lofty style, and includes among its personages Napoleon, Berthier, Davoust, the Princess von Hatzfeld, etc.

In New York a society is contemplated, the purpose of which is to annihilate the husbands of actresses. This society might go one step further and cause the sudden demise of the young snobs who hang around the stage doors.

With the Kendals in this country, likewise the Wyndhams,

Wilson Barrett, Mr. Terriss, et al., our London neighbors must be having a dull time. But Uncle Phineas T. Barnum has just gone over to represent Yankeedom. He will amuse them.

The melodramatists, having made use of every other form of disaster by land or sea, will, no doubt, next introduce the thrilling spectacle, by no means rare in our large cities, of a human being at the mercy of an electric current on the cross-tree of a telegraph pole.

Charles Gaylor the playwright, states that he wrote a dramatization of Gibbon's book "For the King," from which The Suspect and other plays were taken about thirteen years ago. Since then Hart Jackson, Effie Ellsler, Helen Barry and Henry Lee have appeared in pieces founded on the work.

One of the cheapest, and at the same time most prominent manners of advertising an actor or actress, is to announce that he or she is about to invest fifty or a hundred thousand dollars in real estate in the locality of the publication. Actors and actresses who do not possess a title of the amounts mentioned, are portrayed as making most marvelous investments in various parts of the country.

Numerous biographers of Wilkie Collins appear to think that his play The Frozen Deep was acted only in presence of the queen by an amateur company that included the author with Charles and Alfred Dickens, Charles Dickens, Jr., Mark Lemon, Edward Pigott, Augustus Egg, Shirley Brooks and George Vining; but as matter of fact it had some popularity on both sides of the water. It was played for a considerable time in the Boston Museum, when L. R. Shewell was the leading man, and the final scene in the cave on the Newfoundland coast, with breakers hissing on the beach, a cascade chinning down the rocks and a vessel rocking on the sunlit sea, was one of the most delightful of stage pictures.

Ellen Terry has one of the largest waists—28 inches. Mary Anderson's waist a few years ago was 24½ inches, now it is 26 inches. One of her favorite shades in dress is green; she likes soft, clinging Liberty silks. She always wears her hair very loose. Miss Eastlake has a 28-inch waist. Her soft, fluffy hair and the soft, easy-going silk gowns she wears give her a rather untidy appearance. Mrs. Bernard Beere doesn't wear stays, and has a waist 27 inches. Dorothy Dene's waist is 24 inches. Mary Rorke has a 23-inch waist, Kate Vaughan has the smallest on the stage; it measures 21½ inches. Mary Moore's waist is 22 inches. Miss Norreys has a 22-inch waist. Grace Hawthorne's waist is 25 inches.—The Stage.

The following is a brief outline of the plot of the new play Fabio Romani: Fabio, the hero, is supposed to be dead, and his body is entombed in a vault. He regains consciousness and escapes from the vault after stumbling upon a coffin filled with treasure and discovering that the catacomb is a storehouse of a band of brigands. He hastens home only to find his false wife in the arms of his treacherous friend. The remainder of the play is devoted to the accomplishment of the revenge of the hero. He kills his false friend in a duel and his wife is about to be left alone in the Romani vault to die of starvation when she goes mad; an earthquake shatters the tomb, the waters rush in, and she is drowned. When Fabio has reached a high point of land Vesuvius bursts into an eruption, belching sheets of flame that illuminate the final tableau.

Through unforeseen circumstances a "tragedian of the city" was deprived of the services of his comedian, and in due course another joined his company. Next day a rehearsal of Hamlet was called, and in time the grave scene was reached. When the cue came the comedy gentleman descended into "Ophelia's" grave and commenced singing, "Walking Down Broadway," when the following conversation ensued: Tragedian—That is not the song, you know. Comedian—Oh, all right. I only put that in for the moment to fill up the time. Tragedian—I see, I see. Comedian—Quite so. I shall sing something else at night. Tragedian—Something else! There are the words the immortal bard wrote. Comedian—Yes; but I don't sing them any more. They are too old-fashioned. I'll give the boys something newer—something that will knock them, never fear. I'm all right. The tragedian was here carried off the stage fainting.—New York Dramatic News.

The scepter of musical supremacy has moved about strangely from place to place during the centuries that we have any record of music. In the earliest times we get glimpses of a musical conservatory in no less a place than ancient Thebes, and we can believe that this system of music had some influence upon that pursued at a later epoch in that musical center, Jerusalem. But it was Alexandria in Egypt that was the Becca of the ancient musician from the first century of the Christian era. It was here that the water organs were made for the Roman market, those mystical instruments which were heard in all the ancient theaters. It was here that the original peace jubilee was held, in which 600 musicians took part. Of course, in the days of Pericles, Athens was the musical center, and in the early Christian times, or rather from the third century, after the Christian Church had formulated a ritual in which music had an important part, it was Rome. Then came the Finnish cities, and it was not until a comparatively late epoch that the cities of Germany became the nurseries of the higher branches of composition.—Boston Herald.

Gus Williams, the German comedian, has a memory as capacious as a State-street night car, and many people wonder how it contains so much. His repertory of yarns mount up among the hundreds, and the majority of them are new. Yesterday he told about a countryman who visited New York City and dropped in on a sale of animals on Park Row, which had been widely advertised. The place was filled with showmen, among them Barnum, Forepaugh, Coup, Sells and Robinson, and the countryman looked on as an interested spectator, without making a single bid, until the eloquent auctioneer put a fierce, though beautiful, tiger under the hammer. Then the meek-looking countryman awoke from his lethargy and raised Mr. Barnum's first bid. He kept on raising Barnum until the old showman went over and asked him to let go. "You don't want such an animal," he said, "because you have no place to keep him." Still the old man kept on bidding, and finally the tiger was knocked down to him. Barnum approached him again and said: "See here, my friend. I am P. T. Barnum, the showman, and I would like to have you tell me why you have bought that ferocious tiger?" The old fellow looked at him a minute and replied, "Well, if you're Barnum, I don't mind telling you. The fact is, I lost my wife three weeks ago, and I'm lonesome."—Chicago Herald.

Book Chat.

Harriet Beecher Stowe says that her declining years would be happier if somebody had accused her of plagiarism.

Swinburne, it is said, never carries a stick or an umbrella when out walking. He is indeed the "good gray poet," never having punched anybody's eyes out.

An alleged newspaper man wrote a piece of doggerel dedicated to General Alger some time ago, and sent him a proof with this cool assertion: "I have drawn on you for $500."

A new novel, "Sister San Sulpicio," by Armando Palacio Valdés, author of "Maximina," is said to contain fine passages, and possess the especial merit of departure from the French school.

The Calabrian novelist, Nicola Misasi, has published a volume of stories founded on historic facts. One of these, "The Drama of Pizzo," narrates the tragic end of the unhappy Murat.

Dumas' Island of Monte Cristo was recently purchased by an Italian nobleman living at Florence, who intends to build a handsome villa there and to maintain a fine yacht to connect the island with the mainland.

Speaking of Queen Victoria's literary tastes, a recent writer says: "She still finds pleasure in Trollope's novels. Tennyson is her living idol. Walter Besant is another writer whose works stir the aged monarch, and Mrs. Humphrey Ward's 'Robert Elsmere' was read, not once, but twice by the Queen of England. She has met many American writers in her day, but is not familiar with their works."

Frank Dempster Sherman contributes a "pome" to Harper's Bazar, beginning thus:

Like a clear eye looking up
At the blue, inverted cup
Lies the lake, serene and calm,
In the mountain's open palm.
Smooth, it mirrors like a glass,
Argosies of clouds that pass,
Boatwise, with their fleecy sails
Filled with fragrant heaven-gales.

The public are not so much interested in poetry as they are in some matters, the European wheat supply, for instance, but there is a certain point beyond even which the bards should not venture. When a lake is a clear eye one moment, lies in an open palm the next, and then in the same breath becomes a mirror over which argosies of clouds go sailing, it is time for the ordinary prosaic individual to quit all other business and, in the language of the vernacular, "kick."—Chicago Herald.

Our esteemed contemporary, the Pekin Gazette, brings us the intelligence that it has been in existence a thousand years and that seventeen of its editors have been beheaded. The paper is better than it ever was. Still we are not in favor of this way of improving papers. While we might care to recommend it for some of our more or less esteemed contemporaries, yet we think we have plans that will satisfy ourselves quite as well. With the headsman's consent, we will jog along under the old methods.—N. Y. World.

Professional Chat.

A member of the bar went up to one of our judges while an attorney was making an argument and asked him why he did not choke off such a long-winded argument. The judge replied: "Because he is like the statute of limitations, the more he is interrupted the longer he runs."

A long-winded lawyer was arguing a case in bank, when, seeing that one of the judges had fallen asleep, he suddenly stopped. "I shall wait," he said, addressing the presiding judge with much dignity, "until your associate has finished his nap." "Oh, you needn't wait for that," was the disconcerting reply; "he's sure not to wake up until you're quite done, counselor."

Does it matter what kind of a book people kiss when magistrates swear them? If it does, then a magistrate in a district in this county has gone beyond the bounds of law. Witnesses in his court have been swearing a considerable time by a mutilated Latin dictionary. "Some time ago," the justice said, "I borrowed a Latin dictionary and it was just about the size of my Bible and looked for the world like it. The back was torn and mutilated and the edges were red. The dictionary, as I thought, finally disappeared and could not be found. I kept swearing witnesses right along with the Bible, as I thought, when in fact, it was nothing but the dictionary. How did I find it out? Why, the other day, just as I wound up a big case and was rendering my decision, the book fell out of my hands into my lap, open. There it was, as plain as day, the old dictionary." "Did you suspend trial?" "Suspend nothing. I just went right along as if it was a Bible sure enough. Nobody, you may be sure, in that office knew what I found but myself."—Savannah News.

During the political campaign of 1871 the Democrats nominated a county ticket composed largely of young men, and which was denominated the "boys ticket." On this ticket was Tom Clunie and Matt Johnson for the Legislature and Charley Jones for District Attorney. The young gentlemen here named laid out the plan of their campaign and stumped the county together, alternating each evening so that on one evening Clunie should speak first, and the next meeting another should have the distinction of opening the ball. In this county during those days there were booked twenty-three appointments which meant twenty-three speeches from each of the candidates. As the campaign progressed it developed, of course, that our young statesmen had one set speech each which was delivered by the card at the several meetings. By the time the trio had spoken eight or ten times, the remarks of each other had been pretty effectually memorized. Well, the campaign was drawing to a close and at one of the most important precincts, it occurred to Matt Johnson that it would be a good joke on Clunie to appropriate his speech, and it being his turn to open the ball, he arose and with great dignity delivered almost verbatim Clunie's set speech. Clunie did not happen to be present during this time, being out among the boys "setting 'em up." At the close of Matt's speech, Clunie was called for and commenced his address. He had not proceeded far when he was informed by the president of the meeting that Matt Johnson had said the very same things he was uttering. Clunie realized at once that he had been tricked, so he brought his address to a close, and came from the stand as mad as a hornet. The laugh was on him, however, and he soon became reconciled to the innocent joke. The campaign was a forlorn hope, and they all had the satisfaction of knowing that it did not prove a good year for Democrats.

NOTES.

In our search after truth, we must equally discard presumption and fear. We must come with our eyes and ears, our hearts and our understanding open; anxious, not to find ourselves right, but to discover what is right; asserting nothing which we cannot prove; believing nothing which we have not examined; and examining all things fearlessly, dispassionately, perseveringly.

Corsets for French military officers are small stays about ten inches wide made of drill and whalebone. They are much worn by the officers of the Zouaves, and cost $8 apiece. What a figure our soldiers would cut laced up in corsets. It is said, however, that some of our dashing holiday military officers, doing alleged staff duty on the brigade and division staffs, follow the example of the French officers.

We like a happy, joyous disposition. The dignity of gravity is not in accord with a happy, merry heart. It is said that the gravest beast is a donkey and the most solemn bird is an owl and the grand man is a fool. It is recorded of Plato, the philosopher, who was given to laughter, would, while chatting and laughing among friends, say, "Silence, friends, let us be grave for I see a fool coming." The Bard of Avon was right: "Mistrust that man, who has no mood for laughter."

On November 5th, ten States will hold elections. Iowa elects a Governor and Lieutenant Governor. Maryland, Comptroller and Attorney General. Massachusetts, Governor and State officers. Mississippi, Governor and State officers. Nebraska, Supreme Judge and two Regents. New Jersey, Governor and State officers. New York, Secretary of State, Treasurer, Comptroller, Attorney General and State Engineer. Ohio, Governor and State officers. Pennsylvania, State Treasurer. Virginia, Governor and State officers.

The warm rains have given to vegetation an invigorating start. In a few days all nature will literally smile. The earth will be carpeted with green verdure and variegated flowers. What a grand revelation this scene will be to our eastern brothers of the National Grange when they come to this country next month. From frosts and snow, and all the dreariness of dread winter, to the brightness and beauty of balmy spring, will be a transition they can scarcely realize from their eastern standpoint, until the fact is experienced. Ours is certainly the land of realized hopes.

There are many people who profess to admire those things, which they do not understand. This is true in art, in music, and more particularly in literature. It is positively amusing to hear some inspired idiot discanting on the beauty and artistic work of some painting, who could scarcely note a distinction between a landscape and marine view. In literature there are those who read the latest novels embodying occultism or esoteric ideas, who know nothing whatever of either, yet parade their little smattering of knowledge to a degree offensive to those who are learned. Let it be announced that there is a new novel which has gained notoriety for some strange, supernatural or incomprehensible nonsense, and those people are the loudest in their praise.

The downpour of this week would seem to presage a wet winter, if anything can be judged by signs. As is usual about this time of the year, weather predictions have been numerous, and as a rule wrong. The fact seems to be that the climate of California is about the most independent institution in the world. No two seasons have been alike, and there seem to be no conditions by which the future can be judged. It is, however, not at all unlikely that in a few years when our observers shall become possessed of a greater volume of meteorological data, by comparisons, predictions in a degree approaching accuracy can be made. The work of the Signal Service department has already proved of extreme value, but it has been in operation so short a time that it may be said to have just commenced operations.

The Second Adventists fixed yesterday for the world to come to an end; that all the nations of the earth should have been blended into one people, speaking one tongue, and that over all for a thousand years one spiritual ruler would hold sway. These people believed that if this did not happen, that on October 26th, to-day, the sun would remain stationary on the horizon, and on its upper and visible arc will appear an angelic host, and in the midst of this host a "woman clothed with the sun, and the moon under her feet, and upon her head a crown of twelve stars." Then the seven trumpets are to be sounded by the seven angels, and the "third woe" as predicted in the book of Revelations, will have begun its fulfillment. It is now 1 o'clock on the day fixed, as we go to press, and there are no indications of the sun remaining stationary nor of any of the signs named by our Adventist friends. There is evidently a mistake in the date.

THE CALIFORNIA GOLD DISCOVERY.

Another Futile Attempt To Rob Marshall of His Credit.

Periodically the claim is made that James W. Marshall was not the discoverer of gold at Coloma. It would consume all of the space in our present issue to but briefly refer to the various claims that have been made. The discovery was made in January, 1848, and at this late day the claims of another and new candidate are urged. Recently the Portland Oregonian published an editorial headed "Why a Monument?" and in it argued that Marshall was not entitled to recognition, in that his discovery was the result of accident and not of scientific investigation. The publication was followed by an article by Stephen Stants in the West Shore, wherein he claims that Charles Bennet was the original gold discoverer.

That Bennet was one of the men employed in the construction of the mill and race-way at Coloma will be admitted, as well as that he was one of the first to see the newly discovered gold. We have, however, the statements of three of the other men who worked there, and who were present at the scene of the discovery, and they concur that the credit is justly due to Marshall. These men were entirely disinterested. We can dismiss the criticism of the Oregonian, that credit is not due because Marshall's discovery was accidental, as somewhat absurd, for most important discoveries were purely accidental. If Bennet had any claim to the discovery it is strange that during the forty-one years that have elapsed since the discovery no intimation has been made of it until now, particularly when so much has been published on the subject, and so long after his death and the death of Marshall. We may well regard the claim of Marshall as being settled, not only by the positive and almost uncontradicted evidence of those in a position to know the facts, but also by the operation of the statute of limitations.

We have had in our possession for some years a report of an interview we had with Philo West, formerly of this city, but now residing in Yolo county. The statement has not before been published. In it Mr. West speaks of Bennet's connection with the gold discovery, and his statement in that regard is in the main corroborated by accounts of others published years ago. To us Mr. West stated that he arrived at Coloma early in October, 1848, from Oregon. When he arrived there all of the parties who had been on the ground at the time of the discovery were still there, and frequent conversations were had relative to the incidents connected with the discovery of the gold in the tail-race of the mill. Mr. West stated that as it was then represented, three men—William Scott, Charles Bennet and Marshall—were working in the tail-race from which the water had been turned, throwing out stones, when the first piece of gold was picked up. No one knew if the material was gold, and that fact was not definitely ascertained until late in February or early in March, 1848. When it was found that the substance was gold a dispute arose among the three men named as to which one had first discovered it, and being unable to agree and determine to whom the piece belonged, they mutually agreed to present it to Mrs. P. L. Wimmer, the only woman then in that section of the country. After the discovery Bennet determined to go below and have the metal tested, and collecting a small quantity proceeded to Sutter's fort, ostensibly to have a set of blasting tools made by the blacksmith, but really with the intention, if the substance proved to be gold, to procure a grant of the land from the military government. After leaving the fort he proceeded to Yerba Buena (now San Francisco), and stopped about a store kept by E. H. Von Pfister, to whom he exhibited the dust, and asked him if he could test it. Von Pfister replied that he was not acquainted with metals, but that there was a man in town—Isaac Humphreys—who was skilled in that line, and who had worked in the Georgia gold mines. Bennet was introduced to Humphreys, who, after an examination, pronounced the substance gold, but was unable to determine its value. An understanding was then arrived at between Bennet and Humphreys that they should enter into a partnership to mine for the gold and purchase it from others; and that Bennet should endeavor to procure the land grant, and for that purpose he proceeded to Monterey, the then seat of government of the country. Humphreys gave him a letter to a jeweler at Monterey, who was something of an assayer, requesting him to assay the dust and determine at what price it would be safe to purchase.

Bennet went to Monterey, but failed to secure the grant. He, however, had the assay made, and the return was that it was a safe buy at $13 or $14 per ounce; that it was certainly worth more than that, but that it was impossible to determine the exact value with the limited means for assaying then at hand in the town. Returning to Yerba Buena, Humphreys and Bennet set out for the mines. The former suggested that they go direct to Coloma, by Daylor's ranch, and avoid going to Sutter's fort, but Bennet explained that it was necessary to go to the fort to get the drilling tools. When they reached the fort, early in March, they found the men at work as usual, on the mill and race, and no attempt at gold gathering had been made, save that some of the men had collected a small quantity each, with no idea of its value. Humphreys set about constructing appropriate implements for washing out the gold, and proceeded to work. The others made rockers patterned after his, and the first mining was commenced. Mr. West states that when he arrived at Coloma no one could fix the date of the discovery, but it was placed in January or early in February. It was further stated that Bennet's idea in getting the drilling tools was to blast the boulders and procure from them gold, as he supposed the metal came from them.

It will be seen that Mr. West states that a dispute arose among three men as to which was the owner of the first gold, and that Bennet was one of the disputants. However that may be, the statements of the others that were there unequivocally accord to Marshall the credit, and their statements in that regard agree as to the circumstances. The Oregonian states that "this discovery of gold by Marshall did not reach San Francisco until May, 1848." In its correction that the news reached there before, the writer in the West Shore is correct, for the first published announcement of the gold discovery appeared in the Californian on March 15, 1848. It was as follows:

GOLD MINE FOUND.—In the newly-made raceway of the sawmill erected by Captain Sutter, on the American Fork, gold has been found in considerable quantities. One person brought thirty dollars worth to New Helvetia, gathered there in a short time. California, no doubt, is rich in mineral wealth. Great chances for scientific capitalists. Gold has been found in almost every part of the country.

That Sutter and Marshall at the very outset endeavored to secure an exclusive privilege to operate the mines, is evidenced by the following letter, which was published in the report of the Secretary of War, in 1850:

HEADQUARTERS TENTH MILITARY DEPARTMENT, Monterey, California, March 5, 1848.

Sir: I last evening received your letter of the 22d of February, together with the lease to certain lands on the waters of the "American Fork," a tributary of the Sacramento, made by certain Indians of the Yalesummy tribe to yourself and Mr. James W. Marshall.

The United States does not recognize the right of Indians to sell or lease the lands on which they reside, or to which the tribe may have a claim, to private parties. It would therefore be improper in me to sanction any lease of lands made by Indians to individuals, because, after the war, should the United States extinguish the Indian titles to these lands, they would find them encumbered with private claims, which certainly would not be recognized; for, as soon as the Indians' titles to any lands are extinguished, they are at once a part of the public domain.

R. B. MASON,
Colonel 1st Dragoons, and Governor of California.
To Captain J. A. Sutter, Sub-Indian Agent, New Helvetia.

Not the Man.

We have observed that one Duden has figured in the Police Court as defendant in a little case. We are prompted to remark that the party referred to is not George Duden of the Lake House. It is not necessary that this announcement be made for the benefit of any of the many acquaintances of George, for they know that he is a gentleman of too much dignity and discretion to engage in a physical combat, especially with a man of the size of the prosecuting witness in the case referred to. However, in this country, we can never tell when a prominent citizen may run for an office, and under the vicious system of American politics we can not tell to what extremity a losing candidate may resort to defeat an opponent.

The Weather.

The Signal Service reports show the total rainfall in this city for the past week to have been 4.20 inches, making 5.40 inches for this season, as against .55 of an inch to an equal date last season. The highest and lowest temperature during the week just past was 72 and 50, while for the same time last year it was 85 and 46. At 5 o'clock this morning rain was falling from Roseburg, Oregon, to Sacramento and San Francisco, measuring during the 24 hours from .28 to .70 of an inch. At noon to-day, the barometer was low and falling slowly with light southerly winds and stormy weather. The temperature east from Denver to Chicago ranged from 30 at North Platte to 44 at Chicago; 34 at Omaha and 36 at Denver.

"Gettysburg."

At Market and Tenth streets, San Francisco, the famous panorama of the great battle of Gettysburg will be presented for an indefinite period about the 18th of November. This is one of the grandest exhibitions ever known, and excels the "Battle of Waterloo," "Vicksburg" or "Missionary Ridge." Mrs. M. G. C. Edholm, an agent for this exhibition, visited this city last week in the interest of the enterprise.

Hymenial.

On Wednesday, October 30th, at 1 o'clock, at the Synagogue in this city, Mr. M. S. Fisher of San Francisco will lead to the altar Miss Bertha Hirsch, the beautiful daughter of Mr. Max Hirsch. The young lady has been raised in Sacramento, and all of her friends wish them all of the happiness possible.

Fall Millinery!

The above cut represents a POPULAR SHAPE for young ladies. Untrimmed in felt, 70 cts. Stylishly trimmed with ribbon and fancy feathers, for $2.75 and $4.00.

New Goods for this Department are placed in stock daily. Note the following prices: Rough and Ready Straw Turbans, 45 cts. Milan Braid Turbans, $1.00. Soft Felt Cigarette Hats, trimmed with cord, 69 cts. Aigrettes, 25 and 35 cts. a bunch. Blackbirds, 40 and 50 cts. Children's Trimmed Straw School Hats, 25c. Felts; neatly trimmed with ribbon, 95 cts.

Millinery Department
RED HOUSE

J Street, between Seventh and Eighth.

Fine Table
Wines

From our Celebrated Orleans Vineyard.

Produce of the
ECLIPSE
CHAMPAGNE,
530 Washington St.
SAN FRANCISCO.

CHAMPAGNE

W. B. CHAPMAN,
123 California St. San Francisco.
SOLE AGENT FOR THE PACIFIC COAST

! o. sale by all first-Class Wine Merchants and Grocers.

STABLE TO LET!

INQUIRE AT

No. 1713 G STREET.

Earthquake and Fire Proof
BUILDINGS

Constructed on my patent system. Perfect protection guaranteed. For estimates and particulars see
E. HAWES,
Twelfth and B streets, Sacramento.

RHOADS & TOWNSEND HOUSE

On European Plan.

Cor. Second and J Streets, Sacramento.

ARTHUR MILLER, PROPRIETOR.

The Sacramento Dailies.

The Examiner last Sunday issued a forty-page edition, the largest newspaper ever issued on the coast. Several pages were devoted to sketches of the newspapers and editors in this and other Pacific Coast States and Territories. The articles relative to the Sacramento journals are illustrated with portraits of E. B. Willis and C. K. McClatchy, the managers, respectively, of the Record-Union and the Bee. The review in the Examiner of those journals and their managers is as follows:

The Sacramento Daily Record-Union, the morning journal of the Capital City, was formed in February, 1875, by a consolidation of the Sacramento Union and the Sacramento Record, both morning papers of equal size and similar appearance. The Record-Union is owned by the Sacramento Publishing Company. W. H. Mills, the General Land Agent of the Central Pacific Railroad Company, was the first general manager of the paper and George F. Parsons, now connected with the editorial staff of the New York Tribune, its first editor. The present general managers of the Record-Union are E. B. Willis and T. W. Sheehan, while J. A. Woodson is chief editorial writer. The Record-Union is Independent Republican in politics and prints all the Associated Press dispatches, together with specials. In April of this year the publication of a Sunday edition was commenced. The Record-Union occupies the three-story brick edifice built for the Union in 1861.

E. B. Willis, the present managing editor of the Record-Union, has had a journalistic experience covering over twenty-five years. He has held prominent positions on the Herald, Democrat and Star of New York city, the Chronicle and Bulletin of San Francisco, was the first editor of the Virginia City (Nev.) Chronicle, and was for nine years city editor of the Record and Record-Union of Sacramento. He was the official reporter of the Constitutional Convention of 1879, and is well known throughout the State. Mr. Willis was born at the Brooklyn (N. Y.) Navy Yard, August 19, 1847, at the residence of Commodore Evander Berry, after whom he was named.

J. A. Woodson, the chief editorial writer of the Record-Union, has been connected with the Record and Record-Union for over fifteen years.

[Concerning Mr. Willis, the Examiner could have added that he is one of the most accomplished short-hand reporters in the State, and one of less than half a dozen who can properly report the proceedings of a legislative body, or a speech or argument. He is a gentleman of rare literary and journalistic accomplishments. Mr. Willis is prominent in Masonry, and has held many important positions in that order.—Ed.]

The Bee was commenced as a morning daily February 3, 1857, but was changed two months later to an evening paper. James McClatchy was its first local editor, and in a few months became editor, and subsequently one of the proprietors. He held the editorial management up to the day of his death, in 1883. The interest of the surviving partner was then purchased by the family of the deceased editor, and the business continued under the old firm name of James McClatchy & Co. The sons of the veteran editor, in addition to being owners, have had since his death the active management of the paper, C. K. McClatchy acting as managing editor and V. S. McClatchy as business manager. Its editions are run off on a fast perfecting press. The Bee publishes a weekly edition, a paper of seventy-two columns.

Charles K. McClatchy is one of the owners and the active editorial manager of the Bee. He is thirty-one years old and is a native of Sacramento. After leaving school he entered the Bee office and served his apprenticeship under his father, James McClatchy, whose fearless editorial policy gave the Bee the splendid reputation it has preserved so well. In 1879 Charles K. McClatchy was admitted to the partnership, and in 1883, on the death of his father, he assumed the active editorial control of the paper.

[There is not a brighter or keener writer on this coast than Charles K. McClatchy. He inherits his father's force and vigor, and has in addition, that gift not possessed by his father, the ornate with sentiment and humor. He is quick to observe the public wants, and fearless in proclaiming what should be the policy and duty of men occupying places of public trust. Friend or foe who does not come up to the Bee's standard of virtue while exercising a public trust, must not expect to escape criticism or censure if he does not walk in the straight path.—Ed.]

A Large Bear.

County Clerk Hamilton has received from a tannery in San Francisco a magnificent bear robe. The skin was taken from a black bear killed early in September on the middle fork of the American, near Eleven Pines, El Dorado county. It is but just to remark that Billy does not claim to have killed the animal. It was slain by Dick Young, an experienced bear hunter, and the skin was presented to Mr. Hamilton by Young.

A Scrap of History.

We have before us the sheet of paper upon which Fred. M. Somers, now of Current Literature, was writing when he was assaulted by Assemblyman John W. Wilcox, the "Mariposa blacksmith," in the Assembly chamber in this city, in January, 1876. At that time Mr. Somers was the legislative correspondent of the San Francisco Chronicle, and in one of his letters wrote: "The resolution of the Assembly to commence work at 10 o'clock in the morning, and exhaust themselves on the general file every day, did not suit their ideas of what would be profitable to them, and so they deliberately, and with malice aforethought, dug up the work of the lobby of years ago, and took the corpse to Wilcox, the 'Mariposa blacksmith,' to deliver an incendiary oration over." The publication of the letter drew from Wilcox a speech to a question of privilege, in the course of which he said: "This has reference to the resolution offered by me the other day calling for a committee for an investigation relative to the Golden City Homestead Association. Now, Mr. Speaker, I have to say that not one single member of the lobby ever knew anything of the matter. Myself and one or two others were the only ones cognizant of the fact that it would be presented to the Legislature, and I don't know of any more dissatisfied with the affair than some of the members of the lobby themselves. And when a representative of the press of this State, on this floor, shall so far forget himself as to abuse the courtesies that have been extended to him, I shall move for his expulsion from the floor. But in this case, or in any other case that reflects upon myself, while I characterize him as a low, dirty blackguard, an infamous, slanderous liar, I will here say that I shall not appeal to the House for redress, but shall resolve myself into a committee of one and take him by the seat of the pantaloons and throw him out of one of these windows." The matter was followed by several severe criticisms in the columns of the Chronicle, and on the 17th that journal said: "That immaculate legislator, Wilcox, 'the Mariposa blacksmith,' resents the imputation that he has espoused the cause of the impecunious lobbyists now in attendance at Sacramento, and on Saturday attacked the reporter of the Chronicle for making public what is a current belief at the State capital. The brutal tone of his remarks was strictly in keeping with his political course heretofore in this State. The man who sold out the workmen of San Francisco at a congressional convention at San Jose a few years since is not above selling himself to the lobby if a sufficient consideration is forthcoming for the transfer. We will watch the course of this model statesman in the future, and will take pleasure in informing the public of his acts as a member of the legislative body. Should he not have materially changed his former practices, the lobby will find in him an earnest champion." The next day while Somers was writing at his desk, Wilcox, who is an extremely powerful man, approached him from behind, and without warning, struck him a heavy blow on the head with a large cane. Somers fell bleeding and insensible to the floor, and for a time it was believed he would die. The cowardly nature of the act aroused a strong feeling against Wilcox. He was indicted for an assault with intent to commit murder, by the Grand Jury, and was tried in the old County Court before the late Judge R. C. Clark. The trial lasted several days and was participated in by several of the most prominent lawyers in the State. Wilcox was convicted of an assault and fined $500—the extreme penalty. In passing sentence the Judge expressed displeasure at the jury reducing the offense and intimating to Wilcox that he had escaped luckily. The sheet of paper upon which Somers was writing at the time is bespattered with blood, and shows that the blow was given as he was in the act of writing the word "to."

Bainbridge's Business College.

Passing up J street, one day last week, we had occasion to call on Professor Bainbridge, and, as we went into the building, we could not help remarking the improvements made during vacation. New carpets, freshly painted walls, bright blackboards, and everything clean and in good order. It is remarkable, the success of this school. It received the first prizes at the State Fair and the Stockton Fair this year. But that is not the most important, for schools are for the purpose of educating the young, and in this particular Professor Bainbridge has been remarkably successful. His pupils stood first in the examinations for teachers' certificates in the counties of Sacramento, Placer, Plumas and Stanislaus. Send your boys and girls to Bainbridge's College, and they will receive instruction that will fit them for a useful and honorable career.

Style and Fashion.

The firm of Anderson & Johnson, the leading fashionable merchant tailors, have received an invoice of elegant fall and winter goods. This firm is unsurpassed in stylish cuts and fits. The work from this house is above criticism.

LOCAL BREVITIES.

On November 7th an entertainment will be given for the benefit of the Hebrew Sunday School, at Turner Hall.

About half-past six this morning Chief O'Meara was notified of a fire in the tea store next door to the Red House. The fire originated from the coffee roaster in the back end of the store. The damage is very slight, as the fire was soon extinguished.

We, in our last issue, showed how to convict of vagrancy. The Police Court has demonstrated the correctness of our views by convicting a man by the name of Langlois of that crime, who is said to possess a $20,000 bank account. Judge Buckley is administering the proper medicine.

Yesterday was a regular field day in Department Two of the Superior Court, Van Fleet, Judge. There were twenty-six cases on the law calendar, and twenty-three cases set for trial. In Judge Armstrong's Department the afternoon was occupied in hearing the law calendar for that Department.

Samuel M. Hoover, a pioneer resident of the county, died at his home on the Cosumnes yesterday morning. He was a native of Pennsylvania, and was aged sixty-two. Mr. Hoover was a prominent hop grower, and since 1850 was identified with matters looking to the material development of the resources of the county. His funeral will take place at old Elk Grove at 11 o'clock tomorrow.

SOCIAL AND PERSONAL.

J. C. Ball, a prominent lawyer of Woodland, is in the city.

The widely known democratic politician, Matt. F. Tarpey, of Oakland, is visiting the Capital.

The little folks were royally entertained by the little daughter of Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Hale at their elegant residence yesterday afternoon, on the occasion of the sixth anniversary of the birth of the little hostess.

Phil. Douglass and wife were the recipients of a complimentary party by their friends on Wednesday evening at their residence. Feasting and darning was the order of the evening, and a happy and joyous affair.

J. J. Campbell of the Galt Gazette was in the city Monday. Our business manager paid the Gazette a visit last week, and found it in a flourishing condition. Galt, he says, is improving very rapidly, and the business men seem prosperous and happy.

Bainbridge Business College

J. C. BAINBRIDGE, PRINCIPAL.

No. 1017 J Street, Sacramento.

A full Business Course, together with Short-hand, Telegraphy, Bookkeeping, Penmanship and all the branches usually taught in schools of this kind.

A full corps of Teachers of the first rank only employed.

MRS. BAINBRIDGE has charge of the Music Department.

A. C. SWEETSER & CO.,Real Estate & Insurance Brokers

Lands For Sale in all parts of the State.

Some Good Investments in School Lands.

Send for Catalogue.

Office, No. 1012 Fourth Street,

SACRAMENTO, CAL.

R. W. PARKER,

Dealer in Choice Family

GROCERIES and PROVISIONS

Sold at the Lowest Cash Price.

Give him a call and be convinced.

Corner of Seventeenth and N Streets.

Also, Office of the Superintendent of the City Cemetery.

Barrett & Berkey

PACIFIC RESTAURANT,

OYSTER HOUSE AND

WINE PARLORS

701 J Street, cor. 7th.

C. E. REESE & CO.,

Wholesale and Retail Dealers in

Staple and Fancy Groceries,

GRAIN, FEED AND HARDWARE.

1122 J Street, between 11th and 12th.

The place where you can get the best value for your money in the city. If you don't believe it call and be convinced. Remember the number,

1122 J STREET.

Samples and Instructions for Self-measurement sent by mail on application.

L. RADLOFF,
LADIES' TAILOR,
218 POST STREET, SAN FRANCISCO.
Tailor Made Suits a Specialty.

Take a Ride on the Riverside Road

AND BE SURE AND STOP AT

BILLY GROENVELD'S

Sutterville House

And get a glass of COOL BEER. Or if you want a bottle of CHAMPAGNE Billy has it on hand, or anything else you may wish for in his line.

Always a FINE LUNCH on the Counter.

M. T. GROENVELD, Proprietor.

ANGLO-NEVADA ASSURANCE CORPORATION

OF SAN FRANCISCO.

FIRE.—Cash Capital, $2,000,000—MARINE.

Sacramento Branch:

No. 1018 SECOND STREET.

JOSEPH STEFFENS, Manager. HOWARD KIMBROUGH, Local Agent.

R. DAVIS,
NOTARY PUBLIC,
Real Estate and Insurance Agent.

Representing the following companies:

Manchester of England; Caledonian of Edinburgh, Scotland; London and Lancaster, England.

1002 J Street, Sacramento.

Restaurant de France,

FAURE & BECKER, PROPRIETORS.

(Successors to L. Payeu.)

No. 427 K Street, Near Metropolitan Theater.

Family Entrance on Fifth Street.

Catering to Families, Banquets and Wedding Parties a specialty. Telephone 228.

NOTICE TO FRUITMEN!

Keep your trees free from scale and your apples from being wormy by the use of

Warner's Scale & Insect Exterminator

FOR SALE BY

G. T. NOE, — DRUGGIST,
AUBURN, CAL.

Put up in one-half gallon and quart cans.

A. AITKEN,PREMIUM PIONEER MARBLE AND GRANITE WORKS

423 J Street, bet. 4th and 5th, Sacramento.

Costic Tile, etc. Cemetery lots enclosed with Granite. All kinds of work done in Italian and Vermont Marble. Direct importer of Scotch and Eastern Granite Monuments. Also, Marble, Slate, Wooden and Iron Mantels, direct from manufacturers, at Reduced Prices. Call and examine.

American Steam Laundry

NINETEENTH AND I STS.—WHITE LABOR only. Linen polished in the neatest manner. We guarantee satisfaction. All ordinary mending, sewing on buttons, etc., free of charge. Washing called for and delivered to any part of the city.

Main Office at Sawtelle's Book Store, 708 and 710 J street. Branch offices at all the Hotels.

REEVES & LONG, UNDERTAKERS,

609 J Street, bet. Sixth and Seventh.

WE KEEP ON HAND A COMPLETE Stock of Coffins and Caskets; also, Shrouds of every description. Orders from city or country receive prompt attention, day or night. EMBALMING done in the best manner; and at reasonable rates.

HER STRATAGEM.

"And to think," said Henrietta Mapes, "that I should have been so utterly idiotic!" "You couldn't foresee the future, child," said Miss Snaggs, an unfortunate poor relation, who acted the part of maid, dress-maker, and toady in general to Miss Mapes. "You seemed to be doing the best for yourself all the time."

"Well, I thought so," sighed Henrietta. "I know I am a beauty, Sarah, but time will fly; and Sissy had the interest of $100,000, and was perfectly correct in his dress and deportment, and of a good old family, and such an idiot that I could twist him around my finger, and I accepted him; and here comes his uncle, with a million—and a man of 60 is not so dreadfully old—and falls in love with me on the spot. Look at those hot-house roses! The basket must have cost $25; and a note with them. Listen, I'll read it to you:

"May I see you alone on Thursday evening? I have a most particular question to ask—one on which my future happiness depends."

"Of course, that means an offer of marriage."

"Of course," said Miss Snaggs. "A million! Why, I'm told that its nearer two! And how you could enjoy it. But an engagement is not a marriage. Why don't you break with Mr. Doodles and marry Mr. Crump?"

"I don't see how I can, when I've sworn so often that I adored him," said Henrietta. "But if he could only be brought to quarrel with me, or to change his own mind (he has not got any mind, still I don't know how to express it otherwise). It's a dreadful thing to make an enemy out of an old lover. He always does something spiteful when he gets a chance. But if he thinks he does it himself, and feels remorseful, you may count on him as a friend."

"Henrietta, I was reading the other day about a girl who wanted to get rid of a dreadful old, rich man that her mother wanted her to marry, so that she could marry a handsome, poor young man—just the reverse of what you want, you know—and she made him believe she was painted. She had a complexion of cream and roses really, but she rubbed rouge on her handkerchief, and made him think it came off her cheeks. Now, you might try that."

"Why, Sarah," cried Henrietta, "I declare I never thought you had so much wit. I believe I could get rid of Sissy that way. But I might put a pound of rouge on my handkerchief, and he'd never think of its having come off my cheeks unless I said so."

"If you tell me to do so I'll make him believe you make up like a ballet girl," said Miss Snaggs. "There's not much time to waste. This is Tuesday. Mr. Crump wants his answer Thursday. You can't live in anything like style on Mr. Doodles' income. He spends it all on himself now. I'll really enjoy doing the deed. Shall I?"

"Oh, pray do!" cried Henrietta. "I'll see that you have everything you want after I am Mrs. Crump. You know I'll keep my word, Sarah."

"Very well, then. Write a note and get Mr. Doodles to call this afternoon, and you hide yourself. I'll fix it," said Miss Snaggs.

And Henrietta instantly sat down at her desk and penned the note, which Sarah took to the postoffice, stopping at the druggist's on the way home for more material for the trick she intended to play on Mr. Doodles.

At 4 o'clock that afternoon Miss Snaggs sat in the little parlor where Henrietta usually received her suitors, when two small boys below the window drew attention to the "dude," and the bell rung. Shortly a shaven head, an eyeglass, a collar stiff as cast iron and upholding the chin of the wearer as though it were a surgical appliance, a pair of very full trousers, and a slope-shouldered coat with a hot-house blossom in his button-hole, a small mouth opened over too many very prominent white teeth, and a voice like that of a parrot uttered these disconnected words:

"Beg pardon—servant directed me—Miss Etta—not here? Sing'lar—pointment—ah—unaware—"

"Oh, come in, Mr. Doodles," said Miss Snaggs. "Don't go away. Sit down, and I'll finish these things and take 'em up, and then she'll come down and see you. It won't take long to put 'em on, you know."

"To put them on—eh—beg pardon!" cried Sissy Doodles, changing his eyeglass into his other eye, as if he fancied the original one deceived him. "Put them on?—beg pardon—don't comprehend."

"Just catch hold of this, while I braid it," said Miss Snaggs, offering Mr. Doodles a loop at the end of a long golden tress, which had figured in private theatricals several years before. "This is her back hair; and this," she said, as she took a frizette from a hand-box, "is her front hair. That only needs a pinch of the curling-irons. Don't be impatient, Mr. Doodles; she'll be all the sweeter when you see her."

"She! You don't mean Miss Henrietta? Those—eh—he—bec," and he made a curious little wicker, like a rabbit. "Those don't belong to her; she doesn't wear them?"

"Indeed, she does, Mr. Doodles," said Miss Snaggs. "I thought, of course, she had mentioned it."

"No, never mentioned it," said Mr. Doodles. "Eeh—he—hee—never mentioned it."

He subsided into silence for awhile, while Miss Snaggs took from a bowl a large set of false teeth—discarded by Henrietta's grandfather when he bought his new set—and began to polish them carefully.

"Nice, becoming teeth," she said, holding them up.

"She wears those, too?" inquired Sissy Doodles, gravely.

"Oh, yes," said Miss Snaggs, "I don't believe she has ever reposed confidence in you, Mr. Doodles."

"She—she hasn't!" gasped Sissy Doodles. "Tee—he—hee! I—I must go. Pointment—urgent—see a mau—come back. Best regards."

He departed. Not long after a messenger boy arrived, bringing a note, with the Doodles coat-of-arms upon the seal. Within were these words:

Owing to a want of confidence which should exist, and does not, Mr. Sylvester Doodles presents his compliments to Miss Henrietta Mapes, and thinks, perhaps—perhaps—don't you know—it would be best to meet no more.

"After I'm married, I'll ask him why, and tell him I married Mr. Crump out of spite," said Henrietta. "It's always nice for a married woman to have an admirer or two."

Precisely at this moment Sissy Doodles tumbled out of a cab into the arms of his uncle, who, being a stalwart old gentleman, carried him into the house and up-stairs before he asked questions. Having dumped him into a large chair, he inquired: "What's the matter, Sylvester?"

And Sissy answered, plaintively: "I've had a blow, uncle."

"Where's the fellow?" cried the uncle. "I'll trounce him!"

"It—it—he—hee—tee—tee—he ain't a fellow," said Sissy. "It's a girl! It's a blow to the feelings."

"Forget her, old chap," advised the uncle. "I was engaged to her," said Sissy. "It was—oh, dear me!—it was Miss Henrietta Mapes!"

"And she likes some other man best?" asked the uncle, pointing his gray whiskers before the glass.

"N-n-no," said Sissy. "She hasn't exhibited confidence. She—she is false."

"Love cannot be ruled," said the uncle. "Hearts go where they will." And he thought of his letter and the hot-house roses.

"It ain't her heart; it's her hair, and her—her complexion and her teeth," said Sissy. Then he told his awful tale to his uncle, who repeated:

"Dear, dear! Shocking!" from time to time. "Still it was a lucky escape for you," he added when Sissy paused.

"Vewy," said Sissy. "Fancy having a wife mostly false—vewy lucky."

"How deceptive women are!" said Uncle Crump, who was almost as idiotic as his nephew, though of fine, impressive presence.

Then he shuddered, and refrained from calling upon Miss Henrietta Mapes on Thursday evening, and shortly espoused a widow whose substantial charms were stamped with the tokens of reality.

Henrietta Mapes is still waiting for an eligible offer, and frequently reproaches her poor cousin Snaggs.

"If it hadn't been for your absurd plan I should at least have had Sissy Doodles," she declares.

And Miss Snaggs knows too well that this is true to do anything but weep.

FRIEND & TERRY

LUMBER CO.

Wholesale and Retail Lumber Dealers, Also Shakes, Bolts, Ties, Doors, Windows, Blinds and Screens. Main Yard and Office, No. 1310 Second Street. Branch Yard, corner Twelfth and J Sts. P. O. Box 233. E. J. HOLT, Manager. Sacramento

OSBORN & FOLGER

DEALERS IN
ICE and COAL, HAY and GRAIN.
New 10-ton Fairbanks' Hay Scales.
N. E. cor. Fifth and I Streets.
Wood Yard, 806 I Street.

BELL & CO.,

GENERAL AUCTIONEERS.

Salesroom, 927 K Street, Sacramento, Cal.
Regular Salesdays—Wednesdays and Saturdays at 10 o'clock A. M.

Assistants—W. T. Crowell, Real Estate; J. Pulvermacher, Bookkeeper; J. Lambert, Furniture and Stock.

Particular attention paid to sales of real estate, horse sales, and sales of farms, stock, etc.
Highest price paid for all kinds of household goods.

SECOND HAND

"REMINGTON" TYPE WRITERS

FOR RENT AND FOR SALE.
Type Writers' Supplies of All Kinds.
AT THE
YOST AGENCY, 1007 FOURTH STREET.

CHAS. J. FREDERICKS & CO.

Fashionable and Practical

HATTERS,

802 J STREET,

Importers and Manufacturers of

Fine Hats and Caps.

Latest Novelties on hand and constantly arriving. REPAIRING A SPECIALTY.

J. O. MILLS,

High Art Crayon Portraits

Executed from Life or Tin-types or Photographs. Inquire or leave orders at

406 J STREET, or 413 K STREET.

San Francisco Studio, 12 Dehane street, between Sixteenth and Seventeenth, Church and Sanchez streets. References: Timothy Lee, Chief of Police, Col. Guthrie, Capt. Fouratt.

O'BRIEN'S, 607 J.

SWEEPING REDUCTION IN LADIES' SHOES.

Best French Kid, hand turn, worth $7, reduced to $6. Ladies' French Kid Button, low heel, long vamp, worth $5, reduced to $4. Misses' and Children's Canvas Shoes reduced 25 per cent.

Headquarters for the Bartlett Springs Water on Draught.

THE OFFICE,

1008 Fourth Street, Next to Cal. State Bank.

H. D. GAMBLE, Proprietor.

Telephone 199. Office Hours from A. M. to P. M.

SAN FRANCISCO

Steam & Dyeing Works

Removed to 524 K Street.

Branch, 805 K St. Dye Works, 2511 J St.

All orders promptly attended to. Don't make a mistake—Main office at Capital Transfer Company.

JOHN STEEN, Proprietor Dye Works.

Trunks Removed, 25 Cents.

JAS. LONGSHORE,

SACRAMENTO TRUNK FACTORY,

530 K STREET.

Trunks, Valises & Bags Wholesale and Retail.

Waterhouse & Lester

DEALERS IN
IRON, STEEL, CUMBERLAND COAL,
Wagon Lumber and Carriage Hardware,
SACRAMENTO.

CALL AT 1118 J STREET,

Fred Futterer's Saloon

And Get a Glass of Cool Beer.

The best Wines, Liquors and Cigars always on hand.

POOL AND BILLIARD TABLES.

FRED FUTTERER, 1118 J Street.

A. L. HART,

ATTORNEY-AT-LAW

Sutter Building, cor. 5th and J.

W. A. ANDERSON,

ATTORNEY-AT-LAW,

No. 209 J Street, Sacramento.

W. A. GETT, JR.,

Attorney at Law,

Southwest Corner of Seventh and J Streets,

SACRAMENTO, CAL.

F. F. TEBBETS, DENTIST.

No. 914 SIXTH STREET,

Bet. I and J, west side, opp. Congregational Church.

DR. H. H. PIERSON,

SURGICAL & MECHANICAL & DENTIST

511 J Street, bet. 5th and 6th.

Gas administered for the painless extraction of teeth.

Joseph Hahn & Co.,

PHARMACISTS,

S. W. cor. Fifth and J Streets, Sacramento.

CHOICE PERFUMERIES, Etc.

Prescriptions carefully compounded, at all hours.

R. H. PETTIT,

Wholesale and Retail Dealer in

IMPORTED & DOMESTIC CIGARS

Smoke the "Lone Fisherman,"

The BEST FIVE-CENT CIGAR in the Market.

NO. 225 K STREET.

PAUL GRAF,

Manufacturer of and dealer in Saddles, Harness, Robes, Collars, Whips, Spurs, Brushes, Currycombs, etc.

1130 J Street, near Twelfth

Repairing Neatly Done.

Harness Made to Order.

CANCERS.

Ulcers, Wens, Lumps, Excrescences, etc., Positively Cured or no Pay. No Knife Used.

As to the success of my treatment, I give the names of a few of the many cured. By addressing them they will give any information required—and it pays to investigate before being treated.

Mrs. O. C. Neilsen, Grass Valley, cancer. John Service, Auburn, lupus. Patrick Lynch, Sacramento, cancer. Mrs. Jno. Shaw, Grass Valley, birthmark removed. N. S. Peck, S. P. R. R. Sacramento, cancer. J. L. Woods, Washington, Yolo county, cancer. John W. Douglas, Rocklin, cancer. Miss Mamie Lynch, Yolo, tumor removed. Chas. McLaughlin, Sacramento, cancer.

I might give many more. Those afflicted are invited to call and investigate for themselves. Consultation at office free. Send for circular.

Office, 426 K Street, Sacramento.

DR. J. H. SHIRLEY.

STATE OF CALIFORNIA, COUNTY OF SACRAMENTO—ss. In the Superior Court, in and for said county.

The People of the State of California to Wm. Kuhlaw, Peter Miller, Elizabeth Davis, Henry Greisel, Robt. Robinson, and B. F. Smith, greeting:

You are hereby notified that an action was commenced in the Superior Court of the County of Sacramento, State aforesaid, by filing a complaint in the Clerk's office of said Court, on the 12th day of October, 1889, in which action M. G. Dandridge is plaintiff and you are defendants. That the general nature of the action, as appears from said complaint, is as follows: That you, the defendants, and each of you, by required to set forth your several claims, or right title or interest of, in and to Lots One to Eight, inclusive, in the Block bounded by J and K and Twenty-ninth and Thirtieth streets, in the city of Sacramento County of Sacramento, State of California; and the said claims, or either of them, may be determined by a decree of this Court, and that they, or either of said claims, may be adjudged and declared invalid, and that the defendants, nor either of them, have no right title or interest of, in, or to said land, and that plaintiff do have judgment against said defendants, do decree plaintiff to have a good and valid title, and that the defendants be forever debarred from asserting any claim adverse to plaintiff, and for costs and for general relief, all of which will more fully appear from the complaint on file herein, to which reference is hereby made. And you are hereby directed to appear and answer said complaint within ten days from the service of this writ, exclusive of the day of service, if served on you in said county Sacramento; and within thirty days, exclusive of the day of service, if served elsewhere. And you are further notified, that, unless you so appear and answer within the time above specified, the plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief prayed for in his complaint.

In testimony whereof, I, Wm. B. Hamilton, Clerk of the Court aforesaid, do hereunto set my hand and affix the seal of said Court, this 12th day of October, A. D. 1889. WM. B. HAMILTON, Clerk.

Ed. M. MARTIN, Attorney for Plaintiff.

Oct. 19—99

Wonderful Trees.

There are a great many curious and remarkable trees in the world, an account of which would interest my readers; and I have a mind to say a little about several of these trees. The account of them which I give you is compiled from various sources, and can, I think, be relied on as accurate.

THE GREAT CHESTNUT TREE.

On the side of Mount Etua there is a famous chestnut tree. Which is said to be one hundred and ninety-six feet in circumference just above the surface of the ground. Its enormous trunk is separated into five divisions, which gives it the appearance of several trees growing together. In a circular space formed by these large branches a hut has been erected for the accommodation of those who collect the chestnuts.

THE DWARF TREE.

Captains Ring and Fitzroy state that they saw a tree on the mountains near Cape Horn which was only one or two inches high, yet had branches spreading out four or five feet along the ground.

THE SACK TREE.

There is said to be a tree in Bombay called the sack tree, because from it may be stripped very singular natural sacks, which resemble felt in appearance.

THE IVORY-NUT TREE.

The ivory-nut tree is popularly called the Tagua plant, and is common in South America. The tree is one of the numerous family of palms, but belongs to the order designated as screw-pine tribe. The natives use the leaves to cover their cottages, and from the nuts make buttons and various other articles. In an early state the nuts contain a sweet milky liquid, which afterward assumes a solidity nearly equal to ivory, and will admit of a high polish. It is known as ivory-nut, or vegetable ivory, and has recently been brought into use for various purposes.

THE COW TREE.

This tree is a native of Venezuela, South America. It grows in rocky situations, high up the mountains. Baron von Humboldt gives the following description of it: "On the barren flank of a rock grows a tree with dry and leathery leaves; its large woody roots can scarcely penetrate into the stony soil. For several months in the year not a single shower moistens its foliage. Its branches appear dead and dried; yet, as soon as the trunk is pierced, there flows from it a sweet and nourishing milk. It is at sunrise that this vegetable fountain is most abundant. The natives are then to be seen hastening from all quarters, furnished with large bowls to receive the milk, which grows yellow, and thickens at the surface."

THE TALLOW TREE.

This tree is found in China. It is called tallow tree because a substance is obtained from it resembling tallow, and which is used for the same purposes. It grows from twenty to forty feet in height.

LACE BARK TREE.

In the West Indies is found a tree, the inner bark of which resembles lace, or net-work. This bark is very beautiful, consisting of layers which may be pulled out into a fine white web, three or four feet wide. It is sometimes used for ladies' dresses.

Miss Frances E. Willard has been trying to induce the Pullman Car Company to abolish the smoking-rooms of the "sleepers." As the smoking-rooms are entirely separated from the rest of the car the only ground of objection to them must be that they contribute very greatly to the comfort of masculine travellers. But Miss Willard says that she can detect faint odors of cigar-smoke in the body of the car and on that plea she insists upon the total extinction of masculine comfort. Her case is like that of a lady who complained to a baseball manager that the robing-tent was so placed that she could see the players in too scanty costume from her windows, and when the tent was removed to the further end of the field wrote thanking the manager for his courtesy, but added that it was of no avail, inasmuch as she could still see what went on in the tent by using her opera-glass.

Away among the Alleghanies there is a spring so small that an ox on a summer's day could drain it dry. It steals its unobtrusive way among the hills till it spreads out in the beautiful Ohio. Thence it stretches way a thousand miles, leaving on its banks more than a hundred villages and cities and thousand cultivated farms, bearing on its bosom more than half a thousand steamboats. Then, joining the Mississippi, it stretches away and away some 1,200 miles more till it falls into the golden emblem of eternity. It is one of the great tributaries of the ocean which, obedient to only God, shall par till the angel, with one foot on sea and the other on land, shall lift up his hand to heaven and swear that time shall be no longer. It is a rill—a rivulet—a river—a bean, boundless and fathomless as eternity.

Judge—Prisoner, the evidence shows that you brutally assaulted the plaintiff. Have you anything to offer in extenuation? Prisoner No, sir. My lawyer took all the money I had.

WM. J. HASSETT.

A. J. JOHNSTON.

A. J. JOHNSTON & CO.General Printers,

Lithographers, Electrotypers, Engravers, Book Binders, Blank Book Manufacturers.

—THE—

BEST APPOINTED PRINTING OFFICE

NORTH OF SAN FRANCISCO,

Competing with that City in Quality of Work and Prices.

—410—

J STREET, SACRAMENTO, CAL.

Klune & Floberg, WATCHMAKERS and JEWELERS
Agents for Rockford Watch Co.
NO. 428 J STREET, SACRAMENTO.

A. G. JOHNSON.

CLAUS ANDERSON.

ANDERSON & JOHNSON,The * Leading * Merchant * Tailors,

SUITS MADE TO ORDER AT REASONABLE RATES.

No. 1014 Seventh Street, : : : Sacramento.

W. D. Comstock, 501 -- 507 K, cor. Fifth

On Exhibition, THE LARGEST AND BEST SELECTED STOCK.

FAIR DEALING!

LOW PRICES!

BAKER & HAMILTON,

San Francisco and Sacramento,

Importers and Jobbers of

Hardware, Iron, Steel, Coal, Powder,MACHINERY*And Agricultural Implements.

Send for Catalogue.

F. KUEHNE & CO.,

NO. 906 NINTH STREET,

Between I and J,

SACRAMENTO,

Carpenters and Contractors

Store and office work a specialty.

ICE BOXES for Breweries and Saloons always on hand and made to order.

Jobbing and Repairing promptly attended to.

CURTIS BROS. & CO.

Wholesale and Retail Dealers in and Shippers of all kinds of

Fruits, VegetablesAnd GENERAL PRODUCE.

Careful attention paid to the selection and packing of Choice Fruits and Vegetables for distant markets. Goods delivered in city free.

308 and 310 K Street, - - Sacramento, Cal.

B. Ruhl Bookbinder, Paper Ruler and Blank Book Manufacturer.

Periodicals, Magazines, Music, and all kinds of Binding neatly done at the lowest prices.

No. 409 J STREET,

SACRAMENTO.

ANHEUSER & BUSCH
BEER

Can be found on draught only at

John Gruhler's Saloon

No. 522 J STREET.

The finest and best Wines, Liquors and Cigars constantly on hand.

Patronize Home Industry!CITY & BREWERY

FRANK RUHSTALLER, Proprietor.

GENUINE

Pilsener Felsen Beer.

Corner Twelfth and H Streets,

Telephone 201.

SACRAMENTO.

CELEBRATED

WEINER LAGER BEERCAPITAL BREWERY

LOUIS NICOLAUS,

Corner Twelfth and I Streets

SACRAMENTO.

FIFTH AVENUE SALOON,

1015 Fifth Street, between J and K,

E. DIETERLE, Proprietor.

Philadelphia Lager Beer on draught, five cents a glass. Also, fine Wines, Liquors, Cigars, etc.

THE FINEST IN THE LAND.

Agent for the Celebrated W. J. LEMP'S St. LOUIS LAGER BEER

WISSEMAN'S SALOON,

Klebetz & Green's Old Stand,

1020 Fourth St., bet. J and K, Sacramento.

GEO. WISSEMAN, PROPRIETOR.

Families and Saloons supplied by bottle or keg.

Butchers' Home,

1020 J Street,

Between 10th and 11th, : Sacramento, Cal.

Fine Wines, Liquors and Cigars. Also,

BOCA BEER ON DRAUGHT.

JACOB GRUHLER, Prop'r.

CAPITAL ALE VAULTS.

Established in 1870, and still maintains the same reputation for keeping the best WINES, LIQUORS and Cigars in the city. The finest Hot Lunch in the city from 11 to 2. Claw Chowder a specialty every night.

NAGELE & SVENSSON, Prop'rs.

Telephone 38.

302 J and 1005 Third st.

FLASHES.

A smooth talker does not always tell the plane truth.

Pianos are very honest—they are always upright and square.

The moon is always brightest when it is full—not so with man.

The American girl can have a Dey in Algiers, and her Knight in England.

Death does not end all, says the minister. No, the doctor's bill comes after.

A laundress is like a heavy sea. She is always washing things over board.

A physician was sued by another to whom he sold his practice, and then declined to give it up. This enraged the purchaser; but then almost any doctor gets into a temper when he loses his patients.

The man who all the while recounts the deeds he did last year,

And tells about the schemes he'll work when future days are here,

Is very apt to be the one who at the present time

Is living off his relatives and hasn't got a dime.

Mining Around Folsom.

Miners around Folsom are getting ready to prosecute work on their claims, and some have been working them with excellent success during the past two or three weeks. Some excellent finds have been made, and a number of new claims opened. There is a great deal of good mining ground around Folsom, and the results of the labors of some of the miners are satisfactory to them, and they all do much better than they would do were they working for wages.—Folsom Telegraph.

BELL & FOUNTAIN

HAVE OPENED THE

Plaza Cash Grocery

STORE,

Corner Tenth and J Streets,

And have stocked the same with all New and Fresh Goods, which they will sell for CASH at the smallest living margin.

All Goods Warranted as Represented.

Goods delivered to any part of the city.

Our Motto: "The nimble's pence against the slow shilling!"

A. J. MUIR,
PLUMBER,
—Gas and Steam Fitter.—

Being a practical plumber, I can guarantee all work.

810 K STREET, Telephone 226.
SACRAMENTO, CAL.

Edwin K. Alsip & Co.
ESTABLISHED 1860.

REAL ESTATE

AND INSURANCE AGENTS.

FARMING LANDS A SPECIALTY.

Catalogues issued monthly.

No. 1015 Fourth Street, Sacramento.

WESTERN HOTEL

209 to 219 K Street.

The Leading Hotel of Sacramento, Cal.

FREE BUS TO AND FROM HOTEL.

Meals, 25 Cents. Rooms, according to Location.

WM. LAND, Proprietor.

King Bros.

State Capitol Cash Grocery, 131 J Street,
corner Second.

Goods sold on small margin, strictly for cash. Best
Brands of Wines, Liquors and Cigars.

H. WACHHORST

Leading Jeweler of Sacramento

SIGN OF THE TOWN CLOCK,

No. 315 J STREET, SACRAMENTO.

J. A. MOYNIHAN.

G. E. MOYNIHAN.

Moynihan's

418 J STREET.

FOR THE LADIES:

Just received, direct from Manufacturers, an elegant line of Silver and Oxydized Bonbonniere Boxes,
Ladies' Cachou Flasks, and other Novelties.

Call and inspect them. THE ONLY FIRST-CLASS HOUSE IN THE CITY.

J. R. Wheat.

DITTMAR & WHEAT,

A. Dittmar.

Sacramento Lounge & Mattress Factory

No. 916 J STREET.

JOE POHEIM, The Tailor,

MAKES THE BEST-FITTING CLOTHES IN THE STATE.

Fine Tailoring at Prices Thirty-five per cent Cheaper than any other Establishment on the Pacific Coast.

LATEST DESIGNS OF FALL AND WINTER GOODS

Now on Exhibition at

NO. 600 J STREET, Corner of Sixth, SACRAMENTO.

BRANCH STORES: 203 Montgomery Street, 724 and 1110-12 Market Street, San Francisco; 49 and 51 South
Spring Street, Los Angeles; 1021 and 1023 Fourth Street, San Diego; 105, 107 and 109 Santa Clara Street, San Jose; 73 Morrison Street, Portland, Oregon.

JAS. G. DAVIS Furniture, Carpets and Wall Paper

411 AND 413 K STREET,

Branch, 315 K St. Send for Catalogue. Prices Lowest.

BOOTS AND SHOES
made to order. Boots,
$6 to $11. Shoes, $4 to
$9. Ladies' Shoes, best quality French Kid, $5
to $7.

REPAIRING DONE at lowest prices.

NONE BUT BEST mechanics employed.

WE GUARANTEE
to make perfect fitting
to the worst of crooked
and crippled feet.

COMPETE WITH
any shoes on the market.

216 J Street

—AND—

208 K Street,

SACRAMENTO.

A. CASELLI

& COMPANY.

GO TO

Nolan & Son's

FOR

FINE SHOES,

BRANCH OF SAN FRANCISCO.

603 J Street, Sacramento.

The Only Retail House in Sacramento
that manufactures their own goods.

Try Our Famous $3 Shoes.

W. R. STRONG & CO.

Founded 1852.

Fruit Packers

and Shippers.

PROPRIETORS OF

CAPITAL NURSERIES,

SACRAMENTO, CAL.

RAILROAD TIME TABLE.

Southern Pacific Company

PACIFIC SYSTEM.

Sept. 9, 1889.

Trains LEAVE and are due to ARRIVE at SACRAMENTO.

Lv.	Trains Run Daily.	Arr.
7:00 A	Calistoga and Napa	11:40 A
4:05 P	Calistoga and Napa	7:20 P
11:00 P	Ashland and Portland via Chico	3:40 A
5:05 P	Denning, El Paso and East	7:05 P
3:00 P	Knight's Landing	7:55 A
4:30 A	Marysville (Mixed)	4:25 P
9:00 A	Los Angeles and Mojave	9:55 A
8:00 P	Second Class Ogden and East	6:30 A
10:30 P	Central Atlantic Express	3:40 P
3:00 P	Oroville	9:50 A
11:00 P	Oroville	3:40 A
3:00 P	Red Bluff via Marysville	9:50 A
10:40 A	Redding via Willows	4:05 P
7:00 A	San Francisco via Benicia	5:30 P
4:05 P	San Francisco via Benicia	10:10 P
4:00 A	San Francisco via Benicia	10:40 A
*10:00 A	San Francisco via Steamer	$6.00 A
11:20 A	San Francisco via Livermore	2:25 P
3:05 P	San Francisco via Benicia	11:40 A
11:20 A	San Jose	2:25 P
9:00 A	Santa Barbara	9:55 A
5:05 P	Santa Barbara	7:05 P
7:00 A	Santa Rosa	11:40 A
4:05 P	Santa Rosa	7:20 P
9:00 A	Stockton and Galt	7:05 P
5:05 P	Stockton and Galt	9:55 A
8:00 P	Truckee and Reno	6:30 A
10:30 P	Truckee and Reno	3:40 P
8:30 A	Colfax	6:00 P
7:00 A	Vallejo	11:40 A
4:05 P	Vallejo	11:30 P
*12:15 P	Folsom and Placerville (Mixed)	*10:25 A
*7:15 A	Folsom and Placerville	*2:40 P
*5:20 P	Folsom	*6:50 A

*Sunday excepted. †Sunday only. ‡Monday excepted. A for morning, P for afternoon.

A. N. TOWNE, Gen'l Manager.
T. H. GOODMAN, Gen'l Pass. and Ticket Agent.

California State Bank

DOES A GENERAL BANKING BUSINESS.

Draws Exchange on all the Principal Cities
of the World.

OFFICERS:

PRESIDENT.....N. D. RIDEOUT
VICE-PRESIDENT.....FRED K COX
CASHIER.....A. ABBOTT
ASSISTANT CASHIER.....W. E. GERBER

DIRECTORS:

C. W. Clarke, Jos. Steffens, N. D. Rideout,
Geo. C. Perkins, J. R. Watson, Frederick Cox,
W. E. Gerber.

Capital Iron Works.

Vertical and Horizontal Engines

BOILERS,

STEAM AND POWER

PUMPS,

Deep Well Pumps,

Hand Pumps,

Stock Pumps,

PUMPMAKERS' SUPPLIES,

HORSE-POWERS, WIND MILLS,

Tanks and Tank Houses.

904 K Street, Sacramento.

CHANGED HANDS.

SACRAMENTO EXCHANGE,

(Formerly Wm. Gamble's.)

1012 SEVENTH STREET.

Fine Wines. All the celebrated brands of Liquors
and Cigars. ROBERT ALLEN,
Formerly of Agricultural Park.

ALBERT GRUBBS,

No. 1417 Fourth Street,

Will do all kinds of House Cleaning, Lay Carpets,
Whitewashing, and everything in that line.

He also has the only wagon for the REMOVAL
OF DEAD ANIMALS, and any orders left at his place of business will receive prompt attention.

Remember the address!

No. 1417 Fourth Street, Sacramento, Cal.

JESSE SLAUGHTER,

Office, No. 1217 Fifth Street.

Plastering, Whitewashing, Cleaning of Cesspools, Etc.

Also, CITY SCAVENGER.

Burying of dead animals attended to at short notice.

Don't forget the number—1217 Fifth street, the old stand, where I have been for 25 years.

Gregory Bros. Co

Established 1852.

COMMISSION MERCHANTS,

Packers and Shippers of California Fruit and Produce,

126 and 128 J STREET,

San Francisco Office, 313 Davis St. SACRAMENTO.

Hotfilter & Grafmiller,

MANUFACTURING JEWELERS,

Jewelry made to order. Watches, Clocks and Jewelry
Repaired and Warranted.

No. 1026 Sixth Street, Sacramento.

THE EMERSON

Vol. I.

SACRAMENTO: SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 2, 1889.

No. 37.

THEMIS: published weekly, by A. J. Johnston & Co. Publication Office, 410 J Street. Subscription—One year, by mail, $3 00; six months, by mail, $1 50, in advance; per month, by carrier, 25 cents. (Entered at the Post Office at Sacramento as second-class matter.)

This is the state of man: To-day he puts forth
The tender leaves of hope; to-morrow blossoms,
And bears his blushing honors thick upon him;
The third day comes a frost, a killing frost,
And—when he thinks, good, easy man, full surely
His greatness is a ripening—nips his root,
And then he falls—

Death—so pitiless. A week has passed; the press has chronicled the ending of those who were very near to us; nothing remains but to express reverence for their memories. Death cannot be understood; it is the killing frost. In its presence man is appalled. Be mortal never so rugged, sturdy and brave, he will falter when he hears the appealing voice of his dying little one, "Papa, help me," and realizes that he is powerless to relieve. It is then that man feels his insignificance; he feels the presence of a power that is not of this earth—a power that crushes. In all ages and among all peoples, there has been and is a feeling that we will meet our dead again. It is a feeling that is at least comforting. There is a palliation of the throes of dissolution in the sentiment we have, that when we shall have crossed the dark river we will again meet those whom we loved on earth. This feeling robs death of his victory; the grave becomes but a resting place for that which served in the life here.

On the 28th, John McNeill, a pioneer merchant of this city—a good man—passed away. We have said he was a good man—more cannot be written. Since the early 50's he was prominently identified with the business interests of Sacramento. While connected with all matters of charity, his benefactions were without ostentation. The later years of the life of John McNeill were saddened by the cruel strokes of death. His only daughter died years ago. His boy, Godwin, died in Trinity county, October 13, 1884, in early manhood. John McNeill was childless—alone. Following these misfortunes, he was stricken with paralysis. That he wished for death, and to join his children, and that he so expressed himself, was but natural. It can be understood that a man young in years can, in a measure, withstand the destruction of his offspring. Calamities of this nature, occurring in the evening of one's life, bring about a despondency that ends only when the eyes are closed in eternal slumber. The dispensations of Providence seem in some instances to be unnecessarily severe. Men who are kind and who have hearts have swept from them their cherished ones; that under such circumstances there remains fortitude, is a matter for wonder. It would almost seem that with these conditions there would be envy of those more fortunate. Yet it is that calamities of this character soften those who are afflicted; their hearts expand.

On the afternoon of the 27th, Mrs. Charles Crocker died unexpectedly at San Francisco of apoplexy. Her husband died in August of last year. This lady was well known in Sacramento, where a large portion of her life was spent and where her children were born and reared. Throughout her life she patronized with liberality institutions of charity, and since the death of her husband devoted herself to the fostering of education and the alleviation of suffering. Her good works will perhaps never be fully known to the world. There will, however, be very many who will respect her memory—humble, yet deserving recipients of her bounty. The death of such a lady is an event to be sincerely regretted.

On Saturday, Richard E. Gogings died in San Francisco. A native of Baltimore, yet he was reared and educated in Sacramento. He was stricken with consumption and fell in early manhood. Since the death of his father he conducted the drug business that had been established in early days. His circle of acquaintances was large; he was universally esteemed by those who knew him and his death was a matter of general sorrow.

There are times and circumstances when those who are desirous of finding a fault can easily contort some word or expression into a meaning to suit their purpose, whether intended or not. Mexico seems to be about in that condition at this time, when her governmental department magnifies the unguarded speech of Minister Mizner into an affront to the Mexican Government. In diplomatic affairs the agents of governments cannot be too careful in what they say or do. The very term "diplomacy" literally means to hear what the other side has to say without anything of a committal nature from our side of the question. It is a game of skill, this diplomacy, and adroit fencing is the order. The home government, as a matter of course, cannot affirm the remarks of any of its Ministers or agents, which were not embodied in the instructions and legitimate authority of the agent. The presumption that the government is responsible for and authorizes every extraordinary remark made by such diplomatic agents should not be construed as the expression of their government, unless made in the due course of diplomatic relations or the administration of governmental affairs. But a great many nations do hold the respective governments responsible for every act and expression of their ambassadors, therefore, the utmost caution should be used in all they do or say. While Minister Mizner did not intend any affront to Mexico, his reference to any of her affairs with any other power was indiscreet, and could not in the very nature of the relations between the general governments be sustained by the Department of State of the United States. It is a good idea for all persons holding diplomatic positions to follow strictly the letters of instruction, and be silent as the grave upon all other matters.

We have just read a lecture delivered a short time ago at Philadelphia by Rabbi Joseph Krauskopf, D. D., wherein he indulges in some sharp and pertinent criticisms upon the Christian attempts to convert the Jews. The learned Rabbi calls the attention of the adherents to the Godship of Christ to the fact that there is a greater necessity for divine interposition for many of the Christian families than for the children of Israel. The five thousand years of history attached to the Jewish religion shows that the faith in the Mosaic teachings have not been in vain. The thousands of years of suffering for unflinching devotion to the highest truths have not been endured for naught. The five thousand years of constant lavishing of blessings upon mankind is not to be rewarded with an obscure death. The eminent Hebrew lecturer proclaims that his religion has hewn its name wherever the highest civilization abides. His people have endured their faith, which has outlived Syrian Kings, Egyptian Pharaohs, Roman Cæsars, Arabian Caliphs, and Christian Inquisitors. With such a history as that of the Jewish faith and devotion to their religion, it seems absurd to think that these people could ever be imbued with any other belief than that taught them by their fathers. There is some ground for our Hebrew brethren to declare that some of the eminent ministers have approached the border land of Judaism. Beecher, in the latter part of his life, held close to Judaism. The Unitarians, also, are not far from the Hebrew faith. When we look deep into the history of this persecuted race, how can a reasonable and thoughtful man help having admiration for the devotion to their faith. No religious sect in the world compares with them in maintaining a strict adherence to the precepts taught them by their fathers and the Old Testament. We sometimes read of a Jew being converted, but we suspect that this alleged conversion is only on the surface. Once a Jew always a Jew, is their doctrine. There is one misconception of history, and that is, that it is generally understood that the Jews crucified Christ. This is a palpable error. Christ was tried by authority of the Roman Government, under Roman laws, and by a Roman Judge. As a matter of fact, not under any Jewish authority. We have read a number of lectures by Rabbi Kraushopf, upon various important subjects, and in them find some of the broadest and most liberal views expressed.

The present administration at Washington has evidently taken the right view of the silver question. The Secretary of the Treasury shows that the net standard silver dollars in the treasury in July, 1886, was $94,000,000. In July, 1887, the amount fell to $67,000,000. The following year there was but $42,21,000,000. On the 10th of October, 1889, there only remained $5,000,000. From this showing it is plain that the demand will soon exceed the supply. We want plenty of silver in circulation. The gold bugs may object, but let Congress authorize the purchase and coinage of more silver.

The suggestion to in 1892 have an exhibition in connection with the State Fair of articles illustrative of the history of the Pacific States and Territories is to be commended. There is no other State that can furnish a display of this character that will be more attractive, and the time is appropriate for the collection of the articles contemplated in the proposed exhibit. A few years since, an exhibition, local in its character, was arranged and displayed at the Crocker Art Gallery. While it embraced but comparatively few articles relating alone to this State, an astonishingly interesting State display was made. That exhibition was on display for several days and attracted general attention. The project now suggested is one much broader, and it can be carried out with no expense. Every city and town in the States and territories comprehended have articles of historical interest, and their aggregation in an exposition will be instructive and beneficial.

The proposition to organize a company to bore wells to ascertain if natural gas can be found in the vicinity of Sacramento is one of excellence and reasonably promises to result in success. Natural gas has been discovered in many portions of the State, notably in the neighborhood of Stockton. Near Boca, when the snow is crusted and an inverted funnel thrust into it, in certain localities sufficient gas can be collected to give a flame. The disastrous explosions in the tunnels of the South Pacific Coast Railroad at Highland, some years ago, were due to natural gas. In the '50's it was discovered at Geyserville, Sonoma county, and the digging of wells was abandoned on that account. On Sonoma creek it has been collected and used for domestic purposes. The first artesian well at Stockton was the celebrated Court-house well, bored during the years 1854-1858 to a depth of over 1,000 feet. The water brought up considerable gas and afterward a number of other wells in the vicinity produced like results. As early as 1883 gas was used in that city for domestic purposes. Gas has also been found near Nicasio, Marin county; in Byron Springs, Contra Costa county; near Kelseyville, Lake county, where it has been used to make steam; in the foothills back of Davisville, in Solano county; on the Norris ranch across the American river, a few miles from Sacramento; eight miles east of Red Bluff, in Tehama county; on Caspar creek, in Mendocino county; at a number of places in Humboldt county, and elsewhere in the State. We have collated this data from a very interesting report on the subject of natural gas, written by Adolph H. Weber and published in the report of the State Mineralogist in 1888.

It is but reasonable that gas will be discovered in localities where coal exists, and explorations have demonstrated that that mineral is plentiful in this valley. A number of years ago a careful geological survey was made of this State, and, writing of the Sacramento valley, the engineers declared that it had been once an inland sea, and predicted that explorations would demonstrate the existence of coal of various ages. So far as their declaration as to the coal is concerned, there has been a verification. That this valley was once submerged and an arm of the ocean is testified to by the remains of marine life that have been found, and the evidences of erosion by the washing of waters that exist in the foothills about the valley. A very striking evidence of the existence of former marine life is on the northwestern bank of the American river, immediately below the town of Folsom. There exist the remains of an extensive oyster bed in the bluff. In other places in the foothills remains of other marine life have been found to such an extent as to give warrant for the theory advanced by the gentlemen connected with the survey. While, in the search for gold there has been perhaps a more extensive exploration of the earth in California than in any other portion of the world, yet we little know what is hidden beneath our feet.

...than was, and while in the enterprise about to be projected it may be possible that natural gas will not be found, there is every probability of the discovery of substances equally as valuable. Some twenty years ago a well was bored at a flouring mill in the neighboring town of Lincoln in search of artesian water. The water was not found. Afterward an examination was made of the borings, and it was observed that a stratum of lignite coal had been penetrated, and also one of potter's clay. The coal mine was opened, but the quality of the coal was so inferior that the further development of the mine proved unprofitable. The working of the mine, however, further developed the bed of clay. From the boring of the well referred to has resulted the establishment of the largest pottery works on this coast, and one of the most extensive on the continent. Similar results can be anticipated reasonable from the work about to be prosecuted in this county.

We are not aware that there has been preserved a scientific record of the borings of the well on the Norris grant. We have no doubt, however, that in the contemplated work careful attention will be paid to the different strata that will be penetrated. From the names of the gentlemen who have connected themselves with the enterprise, we feel assured they embark into it with earnestness.

It is not strange that all Europe sulks and says our "All American" picnic will be but a junketing party. Such a congress with them is an impossibility—notwithstanding their great age and experience. Representatives from all the American governments meet—armed only with pens—arrayed in the apparel of civilized humanity. No bomb-proof undershirts—not escorted by animated arsenals; but like men whose confidence in each other is established. America makes plows and produces prosperity. Europe makes guns and beggars—that's the difference.—Tempest.

It is now reported that the last books of Euclid have been discovered in India. Those whose school days are past will reflect with joyous thankfulness upon what they escaped by their not being discovered before.

Farm and Barnyard Notes.

We were a granger in our earlier years and wrestled with the obdurate soil of Placer county for a living. We reformed, however, and went into professional life. When we were younger and less informed than we are now, we tried to make a living by the publication of an agricultural paper in this city. We do not care at this late day to deceive anyone, and we say this because some of our farmer friends have asked us to run in this paper an agricultural column. If we ever knew anything about agriculture we have long since forgotten it; we had occasion to forget but little. We have received several communications from the patrons of the former journal, asking our opinion in regard to several matters of farm economy. One granger friend writes that he has a young cow that will not stand to be milked. He wants us to tell him what to do about it. Strictly speaking, it is a matter between him and the cow, but we suggest a remedy told us by an old farmer when we were a boy. Cows, in those days, in California, were not as docile as those of modern times; it was a matter of peril for a man to attempt to milk one; they would not stand until fully relieved of the lacteal. The suggestion the venerable farmer made to us, and it worked out well, was to grab hold of the tail of the cow when she started to run, and to not let go until she tired herself out in running about the corral. The theory was that if this thing was repeated several times, the cow would reason it out that she would either have to stand quiet while being milked or make an exhibition of herself before the other cows, running around the corral with the stalwart granger hanging on to her tail. In the days we speak of, we made a success of this plan, and after a few lessons, we would educate a cow to surrender her milk to us as readily as to a calf. Of course, we never did believe that the cow considered us as handsome as a calf, but she permitted us to milk her as a matter of necessity; not duty. We have grown somewhat heavier since; we are not as fleet as we were then. We do not know precisely how we would now look chasing after a cow under those circumstances. We, however, tender to our farmer friend this information. It may be of value both to him and the cow.

Speaking of the Agriculturist, we regard its publication as the greatest wrong we ever perpetrated. We presume the advice we gave to farmers upon subjects we knew nothing about justified our assassination. The statute of limitations makes us now safe. At one time, during a cold winter, the paper was in a deplorable condition, financially. We had no wood, but plenty of coal oil, which we had taken on a grocery advertisement. The printers would soak bricks in pans of the oil and burn the oil out in the open grate. One characteristic of carp cultivation, one of our patrons came in from Freeport to pay his bill. He looked at the burning bricks for quite a while, but seemed ashamed to display his ignorance by any inquiry. Finally, he asked one of the printers if they were real bricks, and declared that he never knew that a brick would burn. The printer gravely told him that the soil of the Sacramento valley was largely composed of decayed vegetation, and that bricks made from it were the very best of fuel. The farmer went home, told his wife about the matter, and he subsequently wrote to the office that she had called him an old fool, and accused him of seeing too many men while in the city. We did not deem it prudent to further refer to the subject.

Synthetic Somnambulism.

Dr. B. W. Richardson, in his Asclepiad, makes some most interesting observations upon what he terms "Synthetic Somnambulism," induced by inhalation of the vapor of amylene. This agent is obtained by acting upon pure fusel oil, or amyl alcohol, with chloride of zinc. It is a liquid of an oily character, nearly colorless, and with an odor resembling raw whisky. Its composition is $C_{10}H_{16}$. It acts feebly by the mouth or when given hypodermically. Its real properties are brought out by inhalation. "There is some excitement and quick inebriation, followed by powerlessness of the limbs, and sudden collapse and coma, with insensibility to pain, but not always; and, indeed, rarely with an equivalent loss of consciousness." This consciousness is, however, a mere semblance, as the person on recovery does not remember the period when, to the bystander, he was apparently wide awake. Dr. Richardson tested this phenomenon on himself. Before inhaling the amylene, he determined that he would test for sensibility by pinching his hand. He says: Soon after inhaling I forgot myself altogether; but four minutes from the time I took up the jar I was quite conscious again, waking as if with a start, and thinking the experiment a failure, the amylene having acted so quickly that there was no interval during which to test the sensibility. But, turning now to my wrist, I found I was wrong in this suspicion, for there were deep marks of pinches in several places, and, further, the bottle containing the amylene vapor had been replaced on the table, with the stopper firmly adjusted, as I had intended." He then details several cases of unconscious action. In one observed by Snow, a child under the influence of amylene, during a severe surgical operation, was playing with a ball, talking and laughing, and on awaking knew nothing of what had occurred. Another subject went to a bookshelf, took down a book, walked about the library, and then returned to the chair, laying the book on the table, without the slightest recollection of performing these acts. A gentleman, "while sleeping under the vapor, unlaced and took off his boots, and put them into an adjoining room, by the door, evidently under the impression that he was going to bed. He then lay down on a couch and composed himself to sleep," but woke almost instantly, having no conception of what had occurred. "The most curious example was in a woman, who took amylene as an anesthetic for the extraction of a tooth." She went to sleep; but, as the dentist was about to operate, rose, observing that she was not ready, walked deliberately about the room, then seating herself again, said: "Now, I am quite ready." at the same time opening her mouth widely. The extraction was a difficult one, but she showed no signs of pain, nor any recollection on awakening. Commenting upon this most interesting subject, Dr. Richardson says: "It is thus clear that the human mind, through its manifestations, may be made to exhibit a mere objective consciousness, apart from the ordinary subjective consciousness of daily life * *. The analogous phenomena, apart from experiment, and spontaneous or natural, are seen in perfect counterpart in somnambulism. The somnambulist is in precisely the same state * *. He pursues acts of consciousness of which he is not self conscious; he presents a mere objective consciousness. I will not say it is certain, but the evidence is as clear as inferential evidence can ever be, that persons who are subjects of somnambulist movements through some abnormal process of digestion or respiration, of the starchy elements of food, produce in their own organisms, by their own organic chemistry, an agent, which, like amylene, destroys remembrance, and, perhaps, judgment and reason, but which leaves the brain still able to act and to direct the limbs to do things which they could not do better in the most wakeful hour."—Occidental Medical Times for November.

One of the illusions is that the present hour is not the critical, decisive hour. Write it on your heart that every day is the best day in the year. No man has learned anything rightly until he knows that every day is doomsday. 'Tis the old secret of the gods that they come in low disguises. 'Tis the vulgar great who come dizen with gold and jewels. Real kings hide away their crowns in their wardrobes, and affect a plain and poor exterior. In the Norse legend of our ancestors, Odin dwells in a fisher's hut and patches a boat. In the Hindoo legends, Hari dwells a peasant among peasants. In the Greek legend Apollo lodges with the shepherds of Admetus, and Jove liked to rusticate among the poor Ethiopians. So, in our history, Jesus is born in a barn, and his twelve peers are fishermen. 'Tis the very principle of science that nature shows herself best in beasts; it was the maxim of Aristotle and Lucretius; and, in modern times, of Swedenborg and of Hannemann. The order of changes in the egg determines the age of fossil strata. So it was the rule of our poets, in the legends of fairy lore, that the fairies largest in power were least in size. In the Christian graces, humility stands highest of all in the form of the Madonna; and in life, this is the secret of the wise. We owe to genius always the same debt of lifting the curtain from the common, and showing us that divinities are sitting disgusted in the seeming gang of gypsies and peddlers. In daily life, what distinguishes the master is in using those materials he has, instead of looking about for what are more renowned, or what others have used well. "A general," said Bonaparte, "always has troops enough, if he only knows how to employ those he has, and bivouacs with them." Do not refuse the employment which the hour brings you, for one more ambitious. The highest heaven of wisdom is alike near from every point, and thou must find it, if at all, by methods native to thyself alone.—Emerson

With long suffering sympathy and much humor I hear the last wild wail of critics as they wither in the fog. Grave dramatic censors writing upon an empty stomach upon an empty theme. Grave literary censors munching the sandwich of starvation in garrets of incapacity. Carping economists suffering from cramps. Dyspeptic socialists poisoning themselves to death with doses of their own society. A dozen common characters gather in the cellar of a pothouse and plot the reconstruction of the world—while mighty infidels marvel at the mistakes of Moses and mock at heaven, until they cry for music to banish from their minds the black abyss which they have pictured as the eternal residence of man. Lazy revolutionists and long-haired anarchists munching gratuitous grub, crying: "Iconoclasm! Iconoclasm! Down with the Government! Let us all go to hell!" A shadowy poet climbs amid the clouds—a skeleton painter sketches his artistic doom. The ignorant stare and stumble in the streets. The ambitious woman sets her soul upon a diamond—casting her life in a circle of brass. A quiet minority of the people, healthily contented with their limit and lot, live out their lives in love and laughter—while the scene shifts and the panorama plays.—Tempest.

"Ninon."

Ninon de l'Endos, who was born in 1616 and died October 17, 1706, enjoyed, like Helen of Troy, the gift of perennial youth. Her life is a striking illustration of French society and morals during the seventeenth century. She was one of the brightest conversationalists in the brilliant circle of Parisian society. The great Conde sought repose after his artillery toils in the society of Ninon, and the subtle La Rochefoucauld could here only satisfy his longing for personal beauty in conjunction with the charms of veracity and wit. Moliere and La Bruyere were constantly to be met in her salons, and what she spoke they wrote. She was well informed on all subjects, spoke several languages, and performed with much skill on various musical instruments. There seemed to be nothing that she dreaded more than forming a permanent connection of marriage. In her character there was an entire absence of maternal feeling, which apparently had no place in her breast. Of her two sons, one, called La Voissiere, became an officer in the French navy, and died in Toulon in 1732. The other was a son of the Marquis de Gessay, and named by his father Villiers. The name of his mother was studiously concealed from him, and in this state of ignorance he reached the age of 19. Having heard of the wonderful charms of Ninon, he was introduced to her and become desperately enamored at first sight. The mother endeavored to moderate his ardor and conceal the truth, but in vain, and found herself obliged to state the fact. The confusion and horror experienced by Villiers on hearing this unexpected announcement was so great that he snatched up a pistol and blew out his brains. Yet the volatile mind of his mother was comparatively little affected by this terrible incident. The story has been introduced by Le Sage as an episode into "Gil Blas." In her old age Ninon declared that if she had her life to live over again, she would begin by hanging herself; in that case it were probably well if she did.

Our Coal Will Never Give Out.

However prodigal man may be in his use of earth's treasures, he can never annihilate one atom of her substance or transport it beyond her domain. In his "wasteful" consumption of fuel, he is only restoring its elements to their primeval condition as constituents chiefly of the aerial and aqueous oceans which surround our globe. It follows, then, that the more rapid the combustion, the richer becomes the atmosphere in its power to sustain and force vegetable growth. If it were possible for that period, so often predicted, to arrive, when the 6,000,000,000,000 tons, more or less, of fossil fuels now stored up in the earth's coal-bins, shall have been consumed, the atmosphere will simply have returned to its primeval condition, that which preceded the Carboniferous period. The only essential difference, therefore, which will mark the two remote geologic periods, the past and the future, will be due to whatever reduction will have taken place in the sun's energy. But whether that condition is destined ever to return to earth or not, one thing is certain: it will not be through human instrumentality. Ages before its arrival the percentage of carbonic acid in the atmosphere will have passed the point possible to the continuance of human life.—North American Review.

The term Mugwump has of late come into pretty general use. Several years ago, when the word was first used by the New York Sun, the London Saturday Review said: "American political slang is a marvelous thing, and Mugwump is one of its most peculiar terms. It is an Algonquin word which has survived in the local speech of the New England coast, and which was brought to light again in the newspapers about a year ago. Dr. J. Hammond Trumbull, the chief authority on the dialects of the Indians of North America, has recently explained that in the language of the Indians of Massachusetts and Connecticut 'Mugquomp' (or as it is now written, 'Mugwump') means, literally, 'great man,' and it was the title of a captain or superior officer. In Eliot's Indian translation of the Bible, it stands for captain, leader and duke. The first settlers, having borrowed the word from the natives, used it to indicate a man of importance, and in time it acquired an ulterior significance, and was taken to mean a man who thought himself of some importance."

A discovery was made here that will be of great interest. It consisted of three government postage stamps, issued according to the law by the postmaster at St. Louis, for the State of Missouri, in 1845, the denominations being two of the ten cent and one of the twenty cent series. These stamps were issued in five, ten and twenty cent denominations, and are among the rarest and most valuable to stamp collectors of all those issued by authority of the government for use as postage. J. H. Wymer was postmaster of St. Louis in 1845, and gave the order for the plates to J. M. Kershaw, a local engraver. The five and ten cent stamps are found on two varieties of paper. The twenty cent were printed from an altered plate of the five cent, and are perhaps the rarest stamps known. The stamps bear the arms of Missouri, with "St. Louis" above and "Postoffice" below, are rectangular in shape, and printed in black on blue paper.—Chicago Herald.

The Stage.

[Under this caption will appear a fair and impartial criticism of the drama, actors, music, and all noteworthy matters pertaining to the stage.]

Denman Thompson completed his fifty-sixth year a few days ago. He is still the same old Uncle Josh who won the hearts of theater-goers in The Old Homestead.

Rose Coghlan has added A Wolf in Sheep's Clothing and London Assurance to her repertory. London Assurance has been cut down to three acts, so that both plays can be given the same evening. Sheridan's Rivals has been curtailed and now Boucicault's London Assurance has been treated in like manner.

We are to have another dose of that unreal absurdity of child character called "The Little Lord." The idea of such philosophical expressions coming from a little child as this play presents, discloses a cruel torture upon the child mind rather than pleasurable emotions to the audience. Such a sensational personation does not become the legitimate drama.

The young lady spoken of in the dispatches of yesterday, Miss Craddock, who has made a marked success upon the New York stage, is a Marysville girl, and the daughter of Judge Craddock, a prominent attorney and an ex-Judge of Yuba county. She created the leading lady's part in the new comedy, A Man of the World.

Lew Dockstader has a burlesque on Shenandoah, which he calls She and Dora, which is taking New York by storm. Last week Bronson Howard, the author of Shenandoah, desiring to witness the burlesque, and not being like Henry Irving, sent the following quaint note to Dockstader:

MY DEAR MR. DOCKSTADER: May one of the collaborators in the play you are now doing have two seats to-night and charge it to royalty.

Sincerely yours,

BRONSON HOWARD.

So delighted was the playwright with the performance that he enthusiastically proposed to Lew to "swap" plays, a scheme which the minstrel jocularly agreed to, yet seriously declined.

Actors who have died on the stage: In Great Britain, Palmer, who was almost a star, fell dead while playing before a Liverpool audience. Peg Wofington, while playing Rosalind, was paralyzed and never recovered. She had just uttered the words "I'd kiss as many of you as pleased me," when her voice was hushed and was never again heard on the stage. The once famous comedian Foote was also paralyzed while performing in his own comedy, The Devil on Two Sticks, and never recovered. Another case was that of Moody, who held respectable rank on the British stage, and whose last appearance was as "Claudis" in Measure for Measure. Just as he exclaimed, "Aye, but to die and go we know not where," he sank to the floor and was borne off a corpse. James Bland, who also had a respectable position in the profession, expired in the Strand Theater. Edmund Kean affords another very impressive instance. While playing Othello in London, just as he exclaimed "Oh, then, farewell," he fell into the arms of his son, (who took the role of Iago,) and had just strength enough to say, "Speak to them, Charles, I am dying." He was borne off and revived for a while, but death soon closed his checkered career. Hanley, the comedian, became speechless on the stage, after uttering the words of "Launcelot Gobbo," "I have an exposition of sleep come over me, and he never spoke again. Cummings, who occasionally appeared in tragedy, expired while performing the role of "Ducement," in Jane Shore. Barrett, who was so clever in old men's parts, after playing "Polonius," was carried home a corpse. Mrs. Glover was struck with paralysis on the occasion of her farewell benefit, and died three days afterward. Mrs. Lindley, the once popular vocalist, expired at a concert while singing "I Know That My Redeemer Liveth." A very remarkable occurrence of this kind took place at the Holiday-street Theater, Baltimore, in 1874. John Ferris, while playing a leading role in Lady Audley's Secret, was borne off the stage in a helpless condition and died before morning. McCullough broke down on the stage in a manner that proved worse than death, for he only survived to become a lunatic. Lastly, Charles B. Bishop expired in the midst of a scene in Lord Chumley.

Book Chat.

King Kalakaua of the Sandwich Islands is writing an epic poem on Hawaiian legends. Hawaiian goes up from the reading public.

Another astonishing story regarding Amelie Rives-Chanler comes from Europe. It is said that she has become devoted to the violin, and often rises at night to play upon it.

It has come to light that the death of the late Amy Levy, the young London novelist, was intentional and was caused by the fumes of charcoal. She was disgusted with the heartlessness of the world at large.

It seems to be pretty well settled that the country will have a new prayer book in 1892. In the meantime a great deal of good may be obtained from a sincere and earnest study of the ideas contained in the old one.

"Etudes de Femmes." By André Mellerio. Five studies of women, entitled: Henriette Suzor, Blanche Chaptal, Madame Anbierge, Claire Aubrey, and Marcelle Levanneur. The author is a new votary of the psychological school.

Tolstoi's "realistic" works are the products of a civilization inferior to our own. Their immense popularity is a fact to be wondered at. It is artificial and will soon collapse. The fame of his books in this country is only a reflex of the incomprehensible alacrity with which they were taken up in France.

According to a paper read before an Eastern literary association, shorthand has flourished more or less for two thousand years. Cicero's famous writer, Tiro, is known to have had rivals in his own time, and Caesar's feats in dictating several letters simultaneously while traveling still remain unequalled. But shorthand, as now understood, is the product of the present century. It is computed that the literature relating to the subject would fill no fewer than 13,000 volumes, and England alone has given birth to 307 different systems.

George Ticknor Curtis, the lawyer and author, says: "Mr. Blaine thinks the proper way to adjust the matter of international copyright is by treaty, and I agree with him. Should Congress enact a law like the Chace bill, then we wouldn't know what legislation we would get on the other side. There would be a great deal of risk about it. By a treaty the matter could be reciprocally adjusted at one stroke.

Mr. Blaine seems to have positive views, and I think he will do something for us authors. He is the only Secretary of State we ever had with the disposition and influence to accomplish anything in this direction."

Judge Albion W. Tourgee has begun a serial in the Chicago Advance which promises to be as strong and popular a discussion of the relation of the church to the masses, and the failure of present methods of Christian work, as "A Fool's Errand" was of the race problem. "Nazirema" in its first three chapters describes the Church of the Golden Lilies, its aristocratic congregation and its very popular young pastor, the Rev. Murvale Eastman, who startles his wealthy, self-satisfied, adoring flock, upon his return from the long summer vacation, by preaching from the text: "There were two men in the city, the one rich and the other poor," and saying: "Are the rich to grow richer forever and the poor to grow forever feebler and more dependent? Must it always be accounted better to be rich than to be wise, or strong or pure? Is the dollar mark the real measure of human values?" etc.

"Who is 'The Duchess?'" is a question often asked by the thousands who read the novels of this remarkably popular writer. And perhaps never has a nom de plume more completely screened the identity of its owner. "The Duchess" is really Mrs. Margaret Hungerford, residing in a home of comfort and beauty in Ireland's famous county, Cork. She is an industrious woman, and writes a complete novel with more ease than many of us would exercise in writing a short article. She is domestic in her nature, and dislikes to talk about her work. Her modesty is proverbial among her friends, and many of her neighbors in the little Irish town where she lives are ignorant of the fact that "Madame Hungerford," as they call her, is the author of the novels that lie on their tables. She rarely associates her personal self with her literary nom de plume in her correspondence with friends or strangers. The authoress, in years, is past middle age, but retains a youthful appearance. She is fond of children, and their little characteristics are often incorporated in her stories as she sits writing at her window, watching them at their play on the lawn beneath. It is estimated that more copies of her novels have been sold than of those of any living writer. Any new story by her is always sure of a wide reading on both sides of the sea. Of what is generally regarded as her most popular story, "Phyllis," more than a quarter of a million copies have been sold. Her literary work brings her a neat income, enabling her to live in comfort. She has been twice married, her present domestic relations being of the happiest nature.

Professional Chat.

"Needless was written law where none opprest;
The law of man was written in his breast."

The prayer for general relief in the lawyer's complaint is considered by the lawyer as paramount to the Lord's Prayer.

The mode in which the rule excluding hearsay evidence in courts of justice is enforced is amusingly caricatured by Dickens in the famous case of Bardell vs. Pickwick: "I believe you are in the service of Mr. Pickwick, the defendant in this case. Speak up, if you please, Mr. Weller." "I mean to speak up, sir," replied Sam. "I am in the service to do and plenty to get, I suppose?" said the judge, with jocularly. "O, quite enough to get, sir, as the soldier said ven they ordered 'im three hundred and fifty lashes," replied Sam. "You must not tell us what the soldier, or any other man, said, sir," interposed the Judge; "it is not evidence." "Very good, my Lord," replied Sam.

Death has made a sad havoc among the members of the bar of this county. Here is a roll of the dead: Judge R. C. Clark, Henry Edgerton, W. B. C. Brown, James C. Goods, Presley Duulap, James W. Coffroth, George Cadwalader, W. B. G. Keller, Judge Lewis Ramage, James L. English, Henry Hare Hartley, Charles A. Waring, Peter J. Hopper, Thomas Conger, Peter Hauuan, Thomas W. Gilmer, I. S. Brown, Samuel Cross, Joseph W. Winans, W. R. Cautwell, Joseph S. Wallis, George R. Moore, F. H. Moore, Harry R. Snow, Henry C. McCreary, Philip L. Edwards, Thomas C. Edwards, Ham. C. Harrison, James E. Smith, John G. Hyer, Gov. J. Neely Johnson, Wm. Neely Johnson, — Thompson, Col. L. Sanders, Horace Smith, Judge Robert F. Morrison, Edw. Sanders, Murray Morrison, Thomas Sunderland, Gov. Milton S. Latham, Judge E. B. Crocker, Frank McConnell, — Mueller, William H. Weeks, William S. Long, William I. Ferguson, Tod. Robinson, J. C. Foster, Humphrey Griffith, — Hopkins, John Hereford, Al. Hereford, George H. Carter, E. P. Weeks, Hal. Clayton, James H. Hardy, Col. E. J. C. Kewen, B. F. Ankeny, George W. Spaulding, S. P. Scankier, Thomas G. Hodgdon, Judge James H. Ralston, F. S. Mumford, Col. E. D. Baker, Henry Meredith, Judge Silas W. Sanderson, Charles A. Tuttle, Col. J. C. Zabriskie, P. W. S. Rayle, John R. McConnell, A. H. Lynch, Daniel J. Thomas, Gregory Yale, John C. Burch, Judge Chas. T. Botts, D. R. Sample, — Reed, and Judge Lewis Aldrich.

Some years ago a Chinaman was murdered in a wash-house at Davisville, and the post mortem, made by Dr. M. Gardner, now of this city, demonstrated that the death-wound had been inflicted by a slash with a knife in the right side of the neck, by which an artery had been severed. On the trial, in the Superior Court at Woodland, Hon. Charles T. Jones, who had been employed to participate in the prosecution, undertook the cross-examination of a large Tartar-looking Chinaman, who had testified to an alibi for the defendant. He stated that from an adjoining apartment he witnessed the killing of the deceased through a knot hole, and that the fatal blow was stricken by a Chinaman other than the defendant. It is hardly necessary to remark that the murderous Mongolian described by the witness was never found—in fact, it was very apparent that he was a myth. The witness told a tolerably straight story on direct examination, but on cross-examination Mr. Jones placed a pencil in the Chinaman's hand and directed him to illustrate how the assassin held the knife and used it. The witness held the pencil in his right hand, and facing the attorney, indicated a stab that would have penetrated the left side of the neck. Jones pinned him down, and suddenly asked: "If the knife was held in the right hand, and the blade entered the left side of the neck, how did it happen that the wound was on the right side?" The Chinaman hurriedly replied: "Oh, him knife go clear through!" It was so palpable that the story was manufactured that the defendant narrowly escaped with his life, and the jury convicted him and sent him to the penitentiary for the balance of his days.

NOTES.

It is alleged that some of the Sacramento policemen violated the game laws. Why that is nothing—it is a notorious fact that they are silent witnesses to the violation of the "gaming" laws in this city all the time.

The following is an inscription on a banner presented to a society of "old maids": "Women are an evil, but they are also a blessing. They remind us of onions that make us weep, but that we love, all the same."

A young lady writing from Venice, in describing parts of her career in that water-bound locality, said: "Last night I lay in a gondola on the Grand Canal drinking it all in, and life never seemed so full before." Our young lady friend must have been exceedingly full after "drinking in the Grand Canal."

There is great demonstration among the members of the Chinese Mission workers in this city on the alleged conversion of a Chinese woman. Wonder how much time and money has been spent to accomplish this result? Would it not be a good idea to try a little conversion tactics on some of our alleged Christians?

We observe in an exchange, the McArthur Democrat-Enquirer, published at McArthur, Vinton county, Ohio, that "J. Christ of Madison township" is running on the democratic ticket for County Coroner. In this case we would infer that Mr. Christ is running for a dead thing. Particularly why he is running on the democratic ticket in this age of reform movements we do not understand.

Ten well known women are going to write on the subject: "Some Things We Should Do if We Were Men." One of the things they would do if they were men would be to remove their hats when they go to the theater, or else get ejected. We wonder what a woman would not do if she was a man. With her knowledge of women, what a terror she would be among women if she was only a man.

We favor Chicago as the place for holding the World's Fair in 1892. It is more convenient for the western coast, and the eastern visitors and visitors from all parts of the world will not be content to stop at Chicago when they visit the fair, but will come to witness the grandeur of the Pacific coast environment and the place for holding the World's Fair.

There are two kinds of originality, individual and absolute. Individual originality consists of rediscovering over and over again what was known years ago, of the searching on independent lines for what might be found with ease in the accumulated treasures of the ages, which are common property. Therefore, what we call individual originality is a loss of valuable time. Absolute originality consists of a perfect knowledge of the gems of thought found in the works of the great ones that are gone, and of an independent building on this foundation.

During the contest for the location of the Northern and Central Citrus Fair, we advocated Oroville as the proper place. We are glad that the selection has fallen to that deserving little town. It is now in order for all hands to join in making the fair a grand success, and we feel assured that there will be nothing left undone by Marysville and other places which favored the latter city to aid and assist in promoting the success of the deserving enterprise. Oroville was one of the main stays toward the citrus fair in this city a couple of years ago, and Sacramento will respond on this occasion for Oroville.

Why not have women on our Board of School Directors the ensuing term? Women are naturally fitted to teach the young, and to deal with the delicate problems of education. There are many things relating to school government which could be better managed by competent women. We suggest that our citizens consider this matter, with a view to placing some of our prominent lady educators on the Board of Education this coming term. Woman's tact is better in many instances than man's genius. In fact, woman's tact and impulse is superior to man's reason or genius. She has the inborn gift and inbred advantage in all matters pertaining to the education and training of the child.

Epicurus taught his expectant scholars that Prudence is the mother of virtues and of wisdom. Prudence tells you that gratification only gives edge to the hunger of your appetites, and that passions kindle with indulgence. That sensual pleasure is pain covered with the marks of happiness, which, stripped from her face, reveals disease, disquietude and remorse. Prudence brings to you a train of virtues. Temperance bridges desire. Fortitude strengthens you to bear afflictions and those persecutions which the malice of man invents. Justice gives you security among your fellows. Generosity endears you to others and sweetens your nature. Gentleness takes the sting from the malice of your enemies, and makes you dearer to your friends. Gratitude lightens the burden of obligations. Friendship is the crown of our joys. Thus says Philosophy, and shows us the way to rein passions and to govern our minds and be happy. She cannot change the laws of nature, but teaches us to accommodate to them.

"If ye had not ploughed with my heifer," said Samson, "ye had not found out my riddle." The common expression "ploughing with my heifer," has its origin in the Book of Judges, of the Scriptures. It was the custom at feasts and gatherings to spend the time in making riddles, and Samson gave out one which he allowed the Philistines seven days to find out. If it was solved, Samson was to give the Philistines thirty dresses. If they failed, he was to receive a like number of dresses. The riddle was as follows: "Out of the eater came forth meat, and out of the strong came forth sweetness." The Philistines puzzled in vain for three days, when they went to Samson's wife and frightened her into a promise to exact the solution from Samson. With man's characteristic weakness, he told his wife the answer, and she straightway informed the Philistines, who, on the seventh day, gave answer: "What is sweeter than honey, and what is stronger than a lion?" Samson was very angry, and said: "If ye had not ploughed with my heifer, ye had not found out my riddle." The riddle was prompted by the fact that Samson had killed a lion, and in its dead carcass a swarm of bees hived and deposited their honey. Thus, out of the eater came forth meat, and out of the strong came forth sweetness.

THE CALIFORNIA GOLD DISCOVERY.

Charles Bennet's Visit to Captain Von Pfister—Interesting Correspondence.

We last week published a statement by Philo West in regard to the connection of Bennet with the gold discovery at Coloma in January, 1848. We are in receipt of the following interesting data relating to that matter. We think that all data relative to the discovery should be preserved in print. That Marshall was the original discoverer of the gold at Coloma cannot be gainsaid successfully. The matter has been so satisfactorily settled, that, as we stated last week, it is now too late to be regarded as a subject for controversy:

SUISUN, Cal., October 28, 1889.

WIN. J. DAVIS, Esq.—Dear Sir: Yesterday I read an article in THEMIS from your pen in regard to the discovery of gold, wherein you mention E. H. Von Pfister's name, but erroneously locate him at Yerba Buena. I have Von Pfister's biography before me, and I herewith send you a copy of that portion bearing on the discovery of gold. You will see that Bennet told the assemblage at Benicia that "gold had been discovered" while digging the race at Sutter's mill. If you can make any use of it you are welcome to do so. Von Pfister dictated this biography in 1879. He died at Benicia about five or six years ago.

Yours, etc.,

GEO. A. GILLESPIE,

Secretary Association of Solano Pioneers.

The extract from Von Pfister's biography is as follows:

Edward H. Von Pfister first came to the coast of California in 1846, and being so well pleased with the climate, he determined to settle here. With this object in view, he went to the Sandwich Islands and purchased a stock of general merchandise, and returned here in March, 1847. His first intention was to open a store at San José, but, while yet at Yerba Buena, Dr. Semple, the founder of Benicia, had heard of the advent of the enterprising Von Pfister, and he determined that the new stock of goods and its owner should be brought to Benicia. Semple went to Yerba Buena in a whaleboat, and succeeded in getting Von Pfister to consent to visit Benicia, which he did, going back in the whaleboat with the doctor, consuming four days in making the return trip. They made soundings all the way up to verify the claims made by the doctor that the location of his embryo town was unsurpassed for commercial purposes. Von Pfister was convinced by the doctor, and made up his mind to locate. He purchased an unfinished adobe building, and after putting it in condition, opened out his stock of goods in August, 1847.

Early in May, 1848, one evening while a number of persons were assembled in Von's store talking over the prospects of the State, a gentleman present said a good coal prospect had been found near Mount Diablo. Another said if that was true and coal should be found to exist in quantity, a great future was in store for California. A stranger who had been a quiet listener to the conversation, said: "Gentlemen, I have something here which, if it is what I think it is, will beat a coal mine and make this the greatest country in the world." He then produced a little buckskin bag holding about $100 worth of gold dust. The dust varied in size from a flaxseed to a good sized pea. This he handed around for the inspection of those present. He said his name was Bennet, and that the "stuff" had been found in Coloma, while digging the race for Sutter's mill. Thinking it might be gold, he had brought it down to Sutter's fort to find out, but as there were no chemicals there, he was on his way to Monterey to submit the metal to Governor Mason. If it was gold, there was any quantity of it. Bennet went forward on his journey, but the Beniciaites were incredulous. However, in a few days after this event there was a great rush down the river and by land of people, who possessed samples of the new discovery. Some carried it in stockings, old boots, and anything that would hold the yellow dust. Some of those who came down the river had old rattle-trap boats, which required constant bailing to keep them afloat; pieces of blankets were utilized for sails and everybody was greatly excited at the now almost certain discovery of gold. About this time Sam Brannan, who had been a shipmate of Von Pfister, came along, and said gold had really been discovered, and that the mines were good. He advised Von Pfister to pack up his goods and go to the mines with them. This he did. He chartered Dr. Semple's flatboat and in six days reached Coloma with his goods. At Sacramento he was joined by Brannan with an equal quantity of goods, and the firm of Von Pfister & Brannan did a thriving business until October when Von Pfister sold out and left the mines relocating in Benicia.

It is quite evident that Captain Von Pfister was in error as to the date of his interview with Bennet, for the gold discovery was announced in print about two months before the time he fixes. In the San Francisco Call of October 31st we are again startled by the statement that the Wimmers discovered the gold, and that the son of Wimmer picked up the first piece and handed it to Marshall. The claim of Wimmer was first made, we think, about 1855, and has periodically been revamped in various forms since. The last publication preceding that in the Call was in the Examiner recently, and that enterprising journal published pictures of P. L. Wimmer and his wife and a lengthy interview with them. The various stories of the Wimmers are so violently inconsistent that they have never been seriously regarded by persons who have given the subject careful investigation. The statements of disinterested parties who were at Coloma at the time, the official report of Colonel R. B. Mason, the acting Governor, and the published statements of Samuel Brannan, Captain Sutter, and others who visited the scene of the discovery shortly after it was made, accord the credit to Marshall. Colonel Mason's report to the War Department, under date of August 17, 1848, recites that "accompanied by Lieutenant W. T. Sherman, I started on the 12th of June last to make a tour through the northern part of California. My principal purpose, however, was to visit the newly discovered gold placer in the valley of the Sacramento." After stating that they were compelled to return, he said that, resuming the journey, they reached San Francisco on the 20th and found that all, or nearly all, its male population had gone to the mines. They reached Sutter's fort on the morning of July 2d, and there delayed to participate in the first public celebration of our national anniversary at that fort. The Colonel evidently carefully examined into the entire matter, and of the discovery said: "One day Mr. Marshall, when walking down the race to this deposit of mud, observed some glittering particles at its upper edge. He gathered a few, examined them, and became satisfied of their value. He then went to the fort, told Captain Sutter of his discovery, and they agreed to keep it secret until a certain grist mill of Sutter's was finished. It, however, got out, and spread like magic." He stated that at the time of his visit upward of 4,000 people were employed in mining there, and that many were engaged likewise elsewhere. This report was extensively published immediately after its reception at Washington in newspapers and in books. In the face of all the testimony, we reiterate that it approaches the ridiculous to now attempt to rob Marshall of his credit, and deem it unnecessary to further discuss the subject.

GENERAL NEWS ITEMS.

The late rains injured the grape crop in the foothills.-----Geo. W. Hancock is not wanted at Los Angeles' Citrus Fair.-----The cruiser "Charleston" has been accepted.-----The report of negro outrages on women in the South has proven to be false.-----Four vessels are wrecked on the Mexican coast. The loss is $200,000. Crews all saved.-----Miss Ida Schnauer, aged 17, committed suicide on account of the cruel treatment of her father, at San Francisco.-----Rumored heavy defalcations on Wall street, New York.-----Public debt reduced nine millions this last month.

Fall Millinery!

The above cut represents a POPULAR SHAPE for young ladies. Untripped in felt, 70 cts. Stylishly trimmed with ribbon and fancy feathers, for $2.75 and $4.00.

New Goods for this Department are placed in stock daily. Note the following prices: Rough and Ready Straw Turbans, 45 cts. Milan Braid Turbans, $1.00. Soft Felt Cigarette Hats, trimmed with cord, 69 cts. Aigrettes, 25 and 35 cts. a bunch. Blackbirds, 40 and 50 cts. Children's Trimmed Straw School Hats, 25c. Felts, neatly trimmed with ribbon, 95 cts.

Millinery Department
RED HOUSE

J Street, between Seventh and Eighth.

Fine Table
Wines

From our Celebrated Orleans Vineyard.

Grand Humbly & Co.
Producers of the
ECLIPSE
CHAMPAGNE,
530 Washington St.
SAN FRANCISCO.

CHAMPAGNE

W. B. CHAPMAN,
123 California St. San Francisco.
SOLE AGENT FOR THE PACIFIC COAST

To be sold by all first-class Wine Merchants and Grocers.

STABLE TO LET!

INQUIRE AT

No. 1713 G STREET.

Earthquake and Fire Proof
BUILDINGS

Constructed on my patent system. Perfect protection guaranteed. For estimates and particulars see E. HAWES, Twelfth and B streets, Sacramento.

RHODES & TOWNSEND HOUSE

On European Plan.

Cor. Second and J Streets, Sacramento.

ARTHUR MILLER, PROPRIETOR.

FLASHES.

A hungry man will not ask for pie.
The alleged funny papers need a new crop of funny men.
The honest people are not those who boast of their wealth.

Veneered social celebrity only fascinates and deceives the verdant.

We have come to the conclusion that there is too much alleged literature.

The Citrus Fair: The villains (Oro-villians) still pursue her. Later.—They've caught her.

Save the peace and let the expense go on. It is a waste of ready cash to pay debts with it.

At the Pension Department there is a classification called "Original Widows." Is there any other kind of widows?

Cleveland might in one sense be compared to Mahomet. The Hill would not come to him, so he went to the Hill.

The man with red hair is more fortunate than the rest of mankind. He is furnished with a head-light for his train of thought.

The turkeys now forsake their glee,
And breathe a long-drawn sigh.
They scan the calendar and see
Thanksgiving drawing nigh.

And the pig looks toward the corn heap,
With a sad and hungry eye.
If he wasn't a hog he'd surely weep,
As he thinks he soon must die.

Ah! who can tell how hard it is to climb
And breathe a long-drawn sigh.
Ah! who can tell how many a soul sublime
Has felt the influence of malignant star,
And waged with Fortune an eternal war,
Check'd by the scoff of Pride, by Envy's frown,
And Poverty's unconquerable bar,
In Life's low vale remote has pined alone,
Then dropt into the grave unpitied and unknown!

The State's Death Rate.

The deaths registered in 85 town districts of the State during the month ending on the 20th, in a population of 813,350, correspond to an annual rate of 13.08 a thousand, the total mortality having been 891. To zymotic diseases were due 110 deaths, giving an annual rate of 16.2 a thousand. Of these, 32 were due to typhoid fever, 26 to cholera infantum, 20 each to diarrhea and dysentery, 8 to cerebro-spinal fever, 3 to scarlet fever, and 1 to whooping cough. From diseases of the respiratory organs, 191 deaths resulted, giving an annual rate of 2.81. Of these, 118 were due to consumption, 50 to pneumonia, 14 to bronchitis, and 9 to pulmonary congestion, the rate being 1.74 and .737 for consumption and pneumonia respectively. From diseases of the heart 96 deaths resulted. The average annual death-rate from all causes, occurring in the ten largest cities and towns in the State, and representing a population of 612,000, was 13.55. The highest rate for the month, occurring in cities having a population of 10,000 or more inhabitants, was reported from San Francisco, the lowest from Eureka and vicinity.

Juvenile Prattle.

It was a very rainy and wintry day when little Monroe Gilman, five-year-old son of C. H. Gilman, attended the Kindergarten school for the first time. His parents fixed up a real nice lunch for him and he started off to school as big as life; and when noon-time came his parents ate their lunch, not looking for him, and, when they had finished, the little boy came in and said: "I had a splendid lunch; them bananas were fine." "What are you doing home?" his mother inquired. "Well," replied the little lad, "I came home to eat my lunch," and they discovered that he had brought his lunch back home from school and ate it. On another occasion, while he was reciting his little prayer and saying, "God bless papa; God bless mamma, and God bless my sisters and my brothers," he hesitated a moment, and the nurse said: "Go ahead; and God bless the stable-boy." The little one looked up and said: "See here! I ain't going to pray for the whole world; let them pray for themselves."

Violations of the Game Laws.

Now that public attention is prominently called to violations of the game laws, it is to be hoped there will be vigorous prosecutions in cases where the fact will justify such proceedings. The laws on the subject are very stringent and so generally understood that there can be no excuse for their violation. If the facts are as stated, that a wholesale slaughter of deer, without regard to sex or age, is carried on in some counties, should the matter be continued it will not be long before there will be a complete extermination of the animals. The matter is one of great interest to sportsmen, and no doubt will be vigilantly looked into.

Roller Skating.

The Skating Rink, corner of Sixth and M streets, will be opened for the season this evening by Messrs. Holden & Clark. The former gentleman managed the rink some years ago, and was deservedly popular with the public. Recent improvements have rendered this rink the best on the coast.

LOCAL BREVITIES.

The verdict in the Kammer case was a practical acquittal, and a veritable censure of the prosecuting witness. Harry Day was sent up for three years for burglary. Ed Daly received 280 days in county jail, and a severe lecture over the jury's shoulders. The Japs are at enmity with the Chinese in this city. Fred Eisenminger received a beating at the hands of an unknown. The application of Mrs. Hall, the wife of Manager Hall, of our local theaters, for permanent support, is on hearing before the Superior Court at San Francisco. Some miscreant stole a sheep from the butcher's shop on Seventh and P streets. The Agnew asylum received $12,000 yesterday. The Iron Molders' troubles seem to be adjusted. Both departments of the Superior Court were engaged the greater part of yesterday in hearing contested law points. A show of the "one-night-stand" order, called "Minnie Madden's Company," was given last night at the Metropolitan, to a very meagre and disappointed audience. The Sacramento and Stocktons will play a game of baseball at Snowflake Park to-morrow. Game will be called at 2 o'clock p. m. Trains will be run as usual. There will be the additional attraction of a baloon ascension after the game. No extra charge. Collector P. F. Dolan collected $1,470 county licenses for the month of October.

The Weather.

The highest and lowest signal service temperature for the past week was 70 and 42, while for the same time last year it was 79 and 40. There was .90 of an inch of rain, making for the season 6.02 inches, as against .55 of an inch to an equal date last year. There is quite a cold wave at present east of the Rocky Mountains, preceded by snow and wind, where the telegraph wires are down. Cattle on the vast ranges destroyed. At the same time we, of the Pacific slope, are luxuriating in a fireless, frostless and winterless wave, where the sun ever shines and the birds ever twitter.

On Tuesday last a miner who had been out among the hills, prospecting, found a nugget in a pan of dirt he washed out that experts estimated to be worth almost $50. The find was made in the vicinity of Robbers' Ravine, and the finder had only been out for a couple of hours.—Folsom Telegraph.

Sulfonal.

Sulfonal is a preparation discovered less than a year ago, and comparatively little is as yet known of its effects. In fact, it is yet an experiment in the medical profession. The action of the drug is almost the same as that of chloral and bromide of potassium, which are common drugs now used for patients suffering from symptoms of mania a potu. Sulfonal is a product of the distillation of coal tar, and is a white powder, having somewhat the appearance of epsom salts, though the crystals are rather smaller in the former. The drug is a hypnotic. After a patient uses it for a short time it has a quieting, soothing effect, and he falls asleep. When he awakes he finds himself refreshed, and, what is a great feature in favor of the drug, he is free from the distressing symptoms that follow the use of chloral and like drugs. A man can take an overdose of any hypnotic and become dazed, though it seems exceedingly improbable that any intelligent person, having his right senses, would take enough to produce that effect. Sulfonal has a somnolent effect always, and if a man should take an overdose he could keep himself awake by walking around, but he would certainly be in a half stupor—his intelligence would be blunted.

That the use of the new drug is attended by great danger is attested by a case reported by Dr. R. R. Pettit in the Medical News, in which a fatal result to a female patient followed the administration of 30 grains of sulfonal in two doses with an interval of 75 minutes. The patient was insane—melancholia type—and chloral, bromide of potassium, and cannabis Indica were used to procure sleep, but were unsatisfactory. Forty minims of paraldehyde was given without any effect. She went to sleep after the second dose, and at the end of 12 hours was sleeping naturally. Later antidotes were administered without avail, and 40 hours after taking the sulfonal she died.

Gems of Thought.

To-morrow may never come to us.
Do not mistake notoriety for fame.
One fib is often the cause of ten more.
Do not let others spend the money you earn.
Apprehension of evil is often worse than evil itself.
A false grounded hope is but a waking man's dream.
Mean fortunes and proud spirits act like fuel and fire.
Don't do work unworthy of you if you can avoid it.
Virtue and a trade are the best portions for children.

The Bowery and the Meaning of the Word.

There are doubtless many people in the city who do not know the origin and history of the famous old name, the Bowery. There are others, perhaps, who may know, but never associate the word with its meaning. The street took its name from the old Dutch word signifying "pleasure grounds." Years ago, before New York came into the hands of the English, when it was owned and governed by the Dutch and was called New Amsterdam, the Bowery of to-day was a big stretch of farm lands. Farms came to be called boweries, and when the city spread up toward the north end of the island, and the farm lands were covered with buildings, the name Bowery was still applied to what became one of the city's principal and most enterprising thoroughfares. For many years the name was equally appropriate to the street, for it was the mart of many hundreds by day and the pleasure resorts of as many by night. Here were to be seen all classes of men, and here might be bought anything from a piano to a pin. The Bowery of to-day has fallen into a sickly decay, but to certain classes it is no less attractive than when it was in the full swing of its prosperity. The glaring lights and endless strains of wretched music are the signs of decaying life which still makes an effort to maintain a healthy vigor, but of the Bowery of old, the "pleasure grounds," nothing is left but the faded photograph of the original, which has been touched and retouched in various colors until it has become a hideous daub.—New York Tribune.

The Ink of Antiquity.

According to the Roman naturalist, Pliny, and other authors, the basis of the ink used by ancient writers was formed of lampblack or the black taken from burnt ivory, and soot from furnaces and baths. Some also have supposed that the black liquor which the cuttlefish yields was frequently employed. One thing is certain, that whatever were the component ingredients, from the blackness and solidity in the most ancient manuscripts, from an inkstand found at Herculaneum, in which the ink appears as thick as oil, and from chemical analysis, the ink of antiquity was much more opaque, as well as encaustic, than that which is used in modern times. Inks of different colors were much in vogue. Red, purple, blue and gold and silver inks were the principal varieties. The red was made from vermilion, cinnabar and carmine; the purple from the murex, one kind of which, called the purple encaustic, was appropriated to the exclusive use of the emperors. Golden ink was much more popular among the Greeks than among the Romans. During the middle or dark ages the manufacture both of it and of silver ink was an extensive and lucrative branch of trade, and the illuminated manuscripts which remain are a striking proof of the high degree of perfection to which the art was carried. The making of the inks themselves was a distinct business, and another connected with it, and to which it owed its origin, was that of inscribing the titles, capitals as well as euphatic words, in colored and gold and silver inks.

A Clerical Error.

In a country church the curate had to give out two notices, the first of which was about baptisms and the latter had to do with a new hymn book. Owing to an accident he inverted the order, and gave out as follows: I am requested to state that the new hymn book will be used for the first time in this church on Sunday next, and I am also requested to call attention to the delay which often takes place in bringing children to be baptized; they should be brought on the earliest day possible. This is particularly pressed on mothers who have young babies. And for the information of those who have none, added the rector in gentle, kindly tones, and who, being deaf, had not heard what had previously been said; for the information of those who have none, I may state that if wished they can be obtained on application in the vestry immediately after service to-day; limp ones, 1 shilling each; with stiff backs, 2 shillings.—London Figaro.

SNOWFLAKE PARK.

Twenty-eighth and R Streets.

BASEBALL—CALIFORNIA LEAGUE.

Sunday November 3, 1889
At 2 o'clock p. m., sharp,

Sacramento v. Stockton

—ALSO,—

Baloon Ascension and Parachute Jump

By PROFESSOR J. W. PRICE,

To take place immediately after the ball game, and without additional charge.

Prices of admission: Men, 50 cents; ladies, 25 cents; small boys, 10 cents; reserved seats, 25 cents extra.
Trains leave depot at 12:45, 1:05, 1:25, and 1:45 p. m.—stopping at Third, Tenth and Eighteenth streets. Fare, for round trip, 15 cents.
Admission to Park (including fare both ways), 50 cents.

SKATING RINK.

GRAND OPENING,

Saturday Evening, November 2d.

MILE RACE

—AND—

FANCY SKATING.

STATE OF CALIFORNIA, COUNTY OF SACRAMENTO—ss. In the Superior Court, in and for said county.

The People of the State of California to Charles Farley and J. W. Richmond, greeting:

You are hereby notified that an action was commenced in the Superior Court of the County of Sacramento, State aforesaid, by filing a complaint in the Clerk's office of said Court, on the 24th day of October, 1889, in which action Michael Haley is plaintiff, and you are defendants. That the general nature of the action, as appears from said complaint, is as follows: To require you, defendants, to set forth the nature, character and extent of your claims to that certain real property in the City of Sacramento, County of Sacramento, State of California, known upon the official map of said Sacramento City as Lots 1, 2, 3, and 4, in the Block between T and U, Ninth and Tenth streets; and to obtain a decree of Court adjudging that defendants, or either of them, have no estate, right, or title in said premises, or any part thereof; and that defendants be forever debarred and estopped from asserting or claiming any right, title, or interest to said premises, or any part thereof; and for such other and further relief as the Court may deem fit and proper in the premises; and for costs of suit. All of which is more fully set forth in the complaint on file herein, reference to which is hereby made. And you are hereby directed to appear and answer said complaint within ten days from the service of this writ, exclusive of the day of service, if served on you in said County of Sacramento; and within thirty days, exclusive of the day of service, if served elsewhere. And you are further notified that unless you so appear and answer within the time above specified, the plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the complaint.

In testimony whereof, I, Wm. B. Hamilton, Clerk of the Court aforesaid, do hereunto set my hand and affix the seal of said Court, this 24th day of October, A. D. 1889. WM. B. HAMILTON, Clerk.

FRANK D. RYAN, Attorney for Plaintiff. [n2-9t]

STATE OF CALIFORNIA, COUNTY OF SACRAMENTO—ss. In the Superior Court in and for said county.

The People of the State of California to Coe W. Bird-sall, greeting:

You are hereby notified that an action was commenced in the Superior Court of the County of Sacramento, State aforesaid, by filing a complaint in the Clerk's office of said Court, on the 1st day of November, 1889, in which action Emma Birdsall is plaintiff, and you are defendant. That the general nature of the action, as appears from said complaint, is as follows: To obtain a decree of this Court dissolving the bonds of matrimony now existing between plaintiff and defendant, on the grounds of wilful neglect and wilful desertion, all of which is more fully set forth in the complaint on file herein, reference to which is hereby made. And you are hereby directed to appear and answer said complaint within ten days from the service of this writ, exclusive of the day of service, if served on you in said County of Sacramento; and within thirty days, exclusive of the day of service, if served elsewhere. And you are further notified that unless you so appear and answer within the time above specified, the plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the complaint.

In testimony whereof, I, Wm. B. Hamilton, Clerk of the Court aforesaid, do hereunto set my hand and affix the seal of said Court, this 1st day of November, A. D. 1889. WM. B. HAMILTON, Clerk.

ISAAC JOSEPH, Attorney for Plaintiff. [n2-9t]

Samples and Instructions for Self-measurement sent by mail on application.

L. RADLOFF,

LADIES' TAILOR,

218 POST STREET, SAN FRANCISCO.

Tailor Made Suits a Specialty.

A. AITKEN,

PREMIUM PIONEER MARBLE AND GRANITE WORKS

423 J Street, bet. 4th and 5th, Sacramento.

Costic Tile, etc. Cemetery lots enclosed with Granite. All kinds of work done in Italian and Vermont Marble. Direct importer of Scotch and Eastern Granite Monuments. Also, Marble, Slate, Wooden and Iron Mantels, direct from manufacturers, at Reduced Prices. Call and examine.

The Cat and Its Folk-lore.

Cats have the reputation of being weather-wise, an old notion that has given rise to a most extensive folk-lore. It is almost universally believed that good weather may be expected when the cat washes herself, but bad when she licks her coat against the grain, or washes her face over her ear, or sits with her tail to the fire. As, too, the cat is supposed not only to have a good knowledge of the state of the weather, but a certain share in the arrangement of it, it is considered by sailors to be most unwise to provoke it. Hence they do not much like to see a cat on board at all, and when one happens to be more frisky than usual, they have a popular saying that "the cat has got a gale of wind in her tail." A charm often resorted to for raising a storm is to throw a cat overboard; but, according to a Hungarian proverb, as a cat does not die in water, its paws disturb the surface; hence the flaws on the surface of the water are nicknamed by sailors "cat's-paws." In the same way, also, a larger flurry of the water is a "cat's skin," and in some parts of England a popular name for the stormy northwest wind is the "cat's nose." Among other items of weather lore associated with the cat, there is a superstition in Germany that if it rains when women have a large washing on hand, it is an infallible sign that they have a spite against them, owing to their not having treated these animals well. We may also compare the Dutch idea that a rainy wedding day results from the bride's not feeding her cat; whereas in the valleys of the Tyrol, girls who are fond of cats are said to marry early, perhaps, as Mrs. Bask remarks: "An evidence that household virtues are appreciated in them by the men." Once more, there is a German belief that any one who during his lifetime may have made cats his enemies is certain to be accompanied to the grave amidst a storm of wind and rain.

Apart, however, from the weather lore superstitions associated with the cat, there is an extensive class of other beliefs, as, for instance, those relating to folk-medicine. Thus, in Cornwall, the little gatherings which come on children's eyelids, locally termed "whilks," are cured by passing the tail of a black cat nine times over the part affected. As recently as the year 1867, in Pennsylvania a woman was publicly accused of witchcraft for administering three drops of a black cat's blood to a child as a remedy for croup. She admitted the act but denied that witchcraft had anything to do with it, and twenty witnesses were called to prove its success. Again, "in many regions," we are told by Mr. Conway, "a three-colored cat protects against fire, and a black cat cures epilepsy and protects gardens." We may also quote a popular rhyme much used in years past:

Kiss the black cat,
An' 'twill make ye fat;
Kiss the white one,
'Twill make ye lean.

Formerly in Scotland, when a family removed from one house to another, the cat was always taken, one reason being that it served as a protection against disease. Indeed, before a member of the family entered the new abode, the cat was thrown into it. There was a superstitious notion that, if a curse or disease had been left on the house, the cat became the victim and died, to the saving of the family's lives. It is curious, however, to find the opposite practice kept up in Ireland, where it is considered highly unlucky for a family to take with them a cat when they are moving, more especially, too, when they have to cross a river. Mr. Gregor also tells us that, in the northeast of Scotland, if a cow or other domestic animal was seized with disease, one mode of cure was to twist a rope of straw the contrary way, join the two ends, and put the diseased animal through the loop along with a cat. By this means the disease was supposed to be transferred to the cat, and the animal's life was so saved by the cat dying. This, of course, was only one of the extensive charms of which the leading idea was that of substitution. A remedy for erysipelas, lately practiced in the parish of Locharron, in the northwest Highlands, consisted in cutting off one-half of the ear of a cat and letting the blood drop on the part affected. Alluding, moreover, to the numerous other items of folk-lore in connection with the cat, there is a popular notion that a May cat—a cat born in the month of May—is of no use for catching rats and mice, but exerts an injurious influence on the house through bringing into it disagreeable reptiles of various kinds. Mrs. Latham, in her "West Sussex Superstitions," says that a May cat is supposed "to be inclined to melancholy, and to be much addicted to catching snakes and bringing them into the house." I had heard that this west-country belief existed in our village, and, very lately, observing a most dejected-looking cat by the fire in a cottage, said in jest, "I should think that cat was born in May." "Oh, yes," said the owner of it: "that she was, and so was her mother; and she was just as sad looking, and was always bringing snakes and vipers within doors." In Huntingdonshire there is a common saying that "a May kitten makes a dirty cat." This supposed ill luck attaching to a cat born in the month of May is no doubt founded on the old notion that May was an unfortunate season for births of any kind, in allusion to which there is an old proverb which says:

May chets
Bad luck begets.

According to a curious notion, still extensively credited by the north country peasantry, black cats are supposed to bring not only good luck, but also lovers, in illustration of which we may quote a well-known rhyme on the subject:

Whenever the cat o' the house is black,
The lassies o' lovers will have no lack.

Mr. Henderson, speaking of this superstition, tells us that an old north-country woman on one occasion said to a lady: "It's na wonder Jock—'s lassies marry off so fast; ye ken what a braw black cat they've got." It is considered unlucky to dream of a cat, a piece of folk-lore prevalent in Germany, where if one dreams of a black cat at Christmas, it is an omen of some alarming illness during the following year.

Equally unfortunate, too, is it for a cat to sneeze, this act being supposed to indicate that the family will have colds. Thus, we are informed by Mrs. Latham that in Sussex "even the most favored cat, if heard to sneeze, is instantly shut out of doors; for, should she stay to repeat the sneeze three times indoors, the whole family will have colds and coughs."

Lastly, there are many quaint traditions in which the cat holds a prominent place; and an amusing one, current in the north of England, we may quote in conclusion: A gentleman was one evening sitting cozily in his parlor, reading or meditating, when he was interrupted by the appearance of a cat, which came down the chimney, and cried out: "Tell Dildrum Doldrum's dead!" He was not unnaturally startled by this strange occurrence, and when, shortly after, his wife entered, and he related to her what had happened, her own cat, which accompanied her, exclaimed: "Is Doldrum dead?" and immediately rushed up the chimney and was heard of no more. Of the numerous conjectures stated to account for this extraordinary event, the most reasonable one appears to be that Doldrum had been king of Catland, and that Dildrum was the next heir.

Witches' Plants.

In most countries certain plants are to be found associated with witches and their craft. Shakespeare causes one of his witches to discourse of root of "henlock digg'd i' the dark;" likewise also of "slips of yew silver'd in the moon's eclipse." Vervain was in olden times known as "the enchanter's plant;" rue, again, was regarded as an antidote against their spells and machinations. Their partiality for certain trees is well known—According to Grimm, the trying place of the Neapolitan witches was a walnut tree near Benevento. In walnut and elder trees they are also said to be in the habit of lurking at nightfall. Witches, too, had their favorite flowers. Among these the foxglove was known as the "witches' bells;" the harebell as the "witches' thimble." Tradition asserted that on moonlight nights they might be seen flying through the air, mounted on the stems of the ragwort, reeds of bulrushes. Throughout Germany it is believed that witches career through the midnight skies on hay. Many plants were pressed into the service as charms and spells for the detection of witches and evil spirits when wandering about on their nefarious errands, particularly the St. John's wort, still largely worn by the German peasantry as a kind of amulet on St. John's eve.

FRIEND & TERRY LUMBER CO.

Wholesale and Retail Lumber Dealers, Also Shakes, Bolts, Ties, Doors, Windows, Blinds and Screens. Main Yard and Office, No. 1310 Second Street. Branch Yard, corner Twelfth and J Sts. P. O. Box 233. E. J. HOLT, Manager. Sacramento

OSBORN & FOLGER

DEALERS IN
ICE and COAL, HAY and GRAIN.
New 10-ton Fairbanks' Hay Scales.
N. E. cor. Fifth and I Streets.
Wood Yard, 806 I Street.

BELL & CO., GENERAL AUCTIONEERS.

Salesroom, 927 K Street, Sacramento, Cal.
Regular Salesdays—Wednesdays and Saturdays at 10 o'clock A. M.
Assistants—W. T. Crowell, Real Estate; J. Pulvermacher, Bookkeeper; J. Lambert, Furniture and Stock.
Particular attention paid to sales of real estate, house sales, and sales of farms, stock, etc.
Highest price paid for all kinds of household goods.

SECOND HAND "REMINGTON" TYPE WRITERS

FOR RENT AND FOR SALE.
Type Writers' Supplies of All Kinds.
AT THE
POST AGENCY, 1007 FOURTH STREET.

CHAS. J. FREDERICKS & CO.

Fashionable and Practical

HATTERS,

802 J STREET,

Importers and Manufacturers of

Fine Hats and Caps.

Latest Novelties on hand and constantly arriving. REPAIRING A SPECIALTY.

J. O. MILLS,

High Art Crayon Portraits

Executed from Life or Tin-types or Photographs. Inquire or leave orders at

406 J STREET, or 413 K STREET.

San Francisco Studio, 12 Dehone street, between Sixteenth and Seventeenth, Church and Sanchez streets. References: Timothy Lee, Chief of Police, Col. Guthrie, Capt. Fouratt.

O'BRIEN'S, 607 J.

SWEEPING REDUCTION IN LADIES' SHOES.

Best French Kid, hand turn, worth $7, reduced to $5. Ladies' French Kid Buttol, low heel, long vamp, worth $5, reduced to $4. Misses' and Children's Canvas Shoes reduced 25 per cent.

Headquarters for the Bartlett Springs Water on Draught.

THE OFFICE,

1008 Fourth Street, Next to Cal. State Bank.
H. D. GAMBLE, Proprietor.
Telephone 199. Office Hours from A. M. to P. M.

SAN FRANCISCO

Steam & Dyeing Works

Removed to 524 K Street.

Branch, 805 K St. Dye Works, 2511 J St.

All orders promptly attended to. Don't make a mistake—Main office at Capital Transfer Company.

JOHN STEEN, Proprietor Dye Works.

Trunks Removed, 25 Cents.

JAS. LONGSHORE,

SACRAMENTO TRUNK FACTORY,

530 K STREET.

Trunks, Valises & Bags Wholesale and Retail.

Waterhouse & Lester

DEALERS IN
IRON, STEEL, CUMBERLAND COAL,
Wagon Lumber and Carriage Hardware,
SACRAMENTO.

CALL AT 1118 J STREET,

—AT—

Fred Futterer's Saloon

And Get a Glass of Cool Beer.

The best Wines, Liquors and Cigars always on hand.

POOL AND BILLIARD TABLES.

FRED FUTTERER, 1118 J Street.

A. L. HART,

ATTORNEY-AT-LAW

Sutter Building, cor. 5th and J.

W. A. ANDERSON,

ATTORNEY-AT-LAW,

No. 209 J Street, Sacramento.

W. A. GETT, JR.,

Attorney at Law,

Southwest Corner of Seventh and J Streets,
SACRAMENTO, CAL.

F. F. TEBBETS, DENTIST.

No. 914 SIXTH STREET,

Bet. I and J, west side, opp. Congregational Church.

DR. H. H. PIERSON,

SURGICAL & AND & MECHANICAL & DENTIST

511 J Street, bet. 5th and 6th.

Gas administered for the painless extraction of teeth.

Joseph Hahn & Co., PHARMACISTS,

S. W. cor. Fifth and J Streets, Sacramento.

CHOICE PERFUMERIES, Etc.

Prescriptions carefully compounded, at all hours.

R. H. PETTIT,

Wholesale and Retail Dealer in

IMPORTED & DOMESTIC CIGARS

Smoke the "Lone Fisherman,"

The BEST FIVE-CENT CIGAR in the Market.

NO. 225 K STREET.

PAUL GRAF,

Manufacturer of and dealer in Saddles, Harness, Robes, Collars, Whips, Spurs, Brushes, Currycombs, etc.

1130 J Street, near Twelfth
Repairing Neatly Done.
Harness Made to Order.

CANCERS,

Ulcers, Wens, Lumps, Excrescences, etc.,
Positively Cured or no Pay.
No Knife Used.

As to the success of my treatment, I give the names of a few of the many cured. By addressing them they will give any information required—and it pays to investigate before being treated.

Mrs. O. C. Neilsen, Grass Valley, cancer.
John Service, Auburn, lupus.
Patrick Lynch, Sacramento, cancer.
Mrs. Jno. Shaw, Grass Val., birthmark removed.
N. S. Peck, S. P. R. R. Sacramento, cancer.
J. L. Woods, Washington, Yolo county, cancer.
John W. Douglas, Rocklin, cancer.
Miss Annie Lynch, Yolo, tumor removed.
Chas. McLaughlin, Sacramento, cancer.

I might give many more. Those afflicted are invited to call and investigate for themselves. Consultation at office free. Send for circular.

Office, 426 K Street, Sacramento.

DR. J. H. SHIRLEY.

STATE OF CALIFORNIA. COUNTY OF SACRAMENTO—ss. In the Superior Court, in and for said county.

The People of the State of California to Wm. Kuhlau, Peter Miller, Elizabeth Davis, Henry Greisel, Robt. Robinson, and B. F. White, greeting:

You are hereby notified that an action was commenced in the Superior Court of the County of Sacramento, State aforesaid, by filing a complaint in the Clerk's office of said Court on the 12th day of October, 1889, in which action M. G. Dandridge is plaintiff, and you are defendants. That the general nature of the action, as appears from said complaint, is as follows: That you, the defendants, and each of you, be required to set forth your several claims, or right, title or interest of, in and to Lots One to Eight, inclusive, in the Block bounded by J and K and Twenty-ninth and Thirtieth streets, in the city of Sacramento, County of Sacramento, State of California; and that said claims, or either of them, may be determined by a decree of this Court, and that they, or either of said claims, may be adjudged and declared invalid, and that the defendants, nor either of them, have no right, title or interest of, in, or to said land, and that plaintiff do have judgment against said defendants, decreeing plaintiff to have a good and valid title, and that the defendants be forever debarred from ever asserting any claim adverse to plaintiff, and for costs and for general relief, all of which will more fully appear from the complaint on file herein, to which reference is hereby made. And you are hereby directed to appear and answer said complaint within ten days from the service of this writ, exclusive of the day of service, if served on you in said county of Sacramento; and within thirty days, exclusive of the day of service, if served elsewhere. And you are further notified, that, unless you so appear and answer within the time above specified, the plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief prayed for in his said complaint.

In testimony whereof, I, Wm. B. Hamilton, Clerk of the Court aforesaid, do hereunto set my hand and affix the seal of said Court, this 12th day of October, A. D. 1889. WM. B. HAMILTON, Clerk.

ED. M. MARTIN, Attorney for Plaintiff. [61]-94

Dreamland's Mariners.

We sail upon the ocean Time,
O'er an enchanted sea,
Through every age and every clime,
Dream mariners are we.

Strange Fancy there our pilot stands,
While lies the sea below,
And through the mists to wondrous lands
Guides where our ship doth go.

Each bounding wave our boat doth lift
Towards the starry skies,
As onward still we sail or drift
To where dim dreamland lies.

We sail, we sail the silent seas,
For each far port in quest,
For gardens of Hesperides,
Or Islands of the Blest.

We sail, we sail the olden seas,
In storm or pearly peace,
Past narrowing Symplegades
To find the golden fleece.

By banks of moss we dip and toss
By many crystal streams,
And every age and land we cross
That man has seen in dreams.

We sail, we sail the ocean blue,
Beneath the starry skies,
Till that fair land doth burst in view
Where old Manora lies.

O'er crystal seas we see afar
The crimson mountain tops
Of strange enchanted lands that are Just where the red sun drops.

See yonder heaven's golden bars,
Above the dome of blue,
Now seem to melt 'mid paling stars
To leave our good ship through.

We sail, we sail the starry skies,
Past Norseman's heaven cold,
By gray Olympus there that lies,
And Hindoo heavens old.

We sail, we sail the ocean blue,
We sail the starry skies,
And every age and clime pass through
That in dim dreamland lies.

For we do sail the ocean Time,
O'er an enchanted sea,
Through every age and every clime,
Dream mariners are we.

The Louisiana Lottery.

It is impossible to tell the number of tickets in the New Orleans Lottery which are sold in this State every month; but, from a conversation with a gentleman who assumed to know, we learned that not less than $200,000 is monthly sent out of the State—money fairly wasted, not to say sinfully thrown away. Do these deluded votaries of the game ever calculate what are their chances to win any of the prizes?

"We waive the quantum of the sin,
The hazard of concealing," and come down to the low basis of estimating the probability of profit. We had the curiosity to look over the sheet announcing the drawing in October, and this is what we found: The number of tickets is 100,000, costing $20 each, equal to $2,000,000, received by the projectors of the game. The amount of the prizes is $1,054,800, leaving a profit to the owners of $945,200. Out of this profit is paid agents' commission and advertising, the cost of which is unknown to us. Each can estimate for himself, but it can be seen at a glance that the net profit to the owners must be simply enormous. There are 500 prizes of $200 each; 200 of $300 each; 100 of $500 each; 25 of $1000; 5 of $5000; 2 of $10,000; 1 of $25,000; 1 of $50,000; 1 of $100,000 and 1 of $300,000. Each ticket is divided into the coupons, but the above prizes are on a whole ticket. Then there are approximate prizes of 100 of $500 each; 100 of $300 each; 100 of $200 each; 1,998 of $100 each. Making a total of 3,134 tickets out of 100,000 tickets which draw prizes. A holder of a ticket has, therefore, only one chance in 31.9 to draw any prize. In other words, to fight the lottery tiger on a system the gambler should buy each month thirty-two tickets, with the prospect then, after many months of venture, that he will win nothing. But the chances are still slimmer for the larger prizes. He has one chance in 50 to draw $100; one chance in 166.6 to draw $200; in 333.3 to draw $300; in 500 to draw $500; in 1000 to draw $1,000; in 20,000 to draw $5,000; in 50,000 to draw $10,000; and one chance in 100,000 to draw either $25,000, $50,000 or $100,000. The man who risks his money should reflect that he is not putting it into a mutual scheme where his dollar is a unit of the whole. On the contrary, it is only a moiety. If he should buy the whole number of tickets, he would only win $1,054,800 upon an expenditure of $2,000,000. The whole affair is downright robbery, and should be abated. If any police officer reads this he will probably arrest a Chinaman for conducting a lottery game.—Loomis Citrus Bell.

The Supreme Court of Illinois has decided in a case awarding heavy damages to a newsboy for injury received on a street-car, that he company in permitting him to get on a car assumed the responsibility of a common carrier, though no fare was paid.

A. G. JOHNSON.

CLAUS ANDERSON.

ANDERSON & JOHNSON, The Leading Merchant Tailors,

SUITS MADE TO ORDER AT REASONABLE RATES.

No. 1014 Seventh Street, : : : Sacramento.

W. D. Comstock, 501 -- 507 K, cor. Fifth

On Exhibition, THE LARGEST AND BEST SELECTED STOCK.

FAIR DEALING!

LOW PRICES!

Klune & Floberg, WATCHMAKERS and JEWELERS

Agents for Rockford Watch Co.
NO. 428 J STREET, SACRAMENTO.

Wm. J. Hassett.

A. J. Johnston.

A. J. Johnston & Co.

PRINTERS,

410 J Street,

Sacramento

C. E. REESE & CO., CURTIS BROS. & CO.

Wholesale and Retail Dealers in

Wholesale and Retail Dealers in and Shippers of all kinds of Staple and Fancy Groceries, Fruits, Vegetables

GRAIN, FEED AND HARDWARE.

1122 J Street, between 11th and 12th.

The place where you can get the best value for your money in the city. If you don't believe it call and be convinced. Remember the number,

1122 J STREET.

BAKER & HAMILTON,

San Francisco and Sacramento,

Importers and Jobbers of

Hardware, Iron, Steel, Coal, Powder,

MACHINERY

And Agricultural Implements.

Send for Catalogue.

F. KUEHNE & CO.,

NO. 906 NINTH STREET,

Between I and J,

SACRAMENTO,

Carpenters and Contractors

Store and office work a specialty.

ICE BOXES for Breweries and Saloons always on hand and made to order.

Jobbing and Repairing promptly attended to.

Restaurant de France,

FAURE & BECKER, PROPRIETORS.

(Successors to L. Payen.)

No. 427 K Street, Near Metropolitan Theater.

Family Entrance on Fifth Street.

Catering to Families, Banquets and Wedding Parties a specialty. Telephone 228.

NOTICE TO FRUITMEN!

Keep your trees free from scale and your apples from being wormy by the use of

Warner's Scale & Insect Exterminator

FOR SALE BY

G. T. NOE, -- DRUGGIST,

AUBURN, CAL.

Put up in one-half gallon and quart cans.

American Steam Laundry

NINETEENTH AND I STS.—WHITE LABOR only. Linen polished in the neatest manner. We guarantee satisfaction. All ordinary mending, sewing on buttons, etc., free of charge. Washing called for and delivered to any part of the city.

Main Office at Sawtelle's Book Store, 708 and 710 J street. Branch offices at all the Hotels.

REEVES & LONG, UNDERTAKERS,

609 J Street, bet. Sixth and Seventh.

WE KEEP ON HAND A COMPLETE Stock of Coffins and Caskets; also, Shrouds of every description. Orders from city or country receive prompt attention, day or night. EMBALMING done in the best manner; and at reasonable rates.

ANHEUSER & BUSCH BEER

Can be found on draught only at

John Gruhler's Saloon

No. 522 J STREET.

The finest and best Wines, Liquors and Cigars constantly on hand.

Patronize Home Industry!

CITY & BREWERY

FRANK RUHSTALLER, Proprietor.

GENUINE

Pilsener Felsen Beer.

Corner Twelfth and H Streets,

Telephone 201.

SACRAMENTO.

CELEBRATED

WEINER LAGER BEER

CAPITAL BREWERY

LOUIS NICOLAUS,

Corner Twelfth and I Streets

SACRAMENTO.

FIFTH AVENUE SALOON,

1015 Fifth Street, between J and K.

E. DIETERLE, Proprietor.

Philadelphia Lager Beer on draught, five cents a glass. Also, fine Wines, Liquors, Cigars, etc.

THE FINEST IN THE LAND.

Agent for the Celebrated W. J. LEMP'S ST. LOUIS LAGER BEER

WISSEMANN'S SALOON,

Klebetz & Green's Old Stand,

1020 Fourth St., bet. J and K, Sacramento.

GEO. WISSEMANN, PROPRIETOR.

Families and Saloons supplied by bottle or keg.

Butchers' Home,

1020 J Street,

Between 10th and 11th, : Sacramento, Cal.

Fine Wines, Liquors and Cigars. Also,

BOCA BEER ON DRAUGHT.

JACOB GRUHLER, Prop'r.

CAPITAL ALE VAULTS.

Established in 1870, and still maintains the same reputation for keeping the best WINES, LIQUORS and Cigars in the city. The finest Hot Lunch in the city from 11 to 2. Clam Chowder a specialty every night.

NAGELE & SVENSSON, Prop'rs.

Telephone 38.

302 J and 1005 Third st.

B. Ruhl

Bookbinder, Paper Ruler and

Blank Book Manufacturer.

Periodicals, Magazines, Music, and all kinds of Binding neatly done at the lowest prices.

No. 409 J STREET,

SACRAMENTO.

BELL & FOUNTAIN

HAVE OPENED THE

Plaza Cash Grocery

STORE,

Corner Tenth and J Streets.

And have stocked the same with all New and Fresh Goods, which they will sell for CASH at the smallest living margin.

All Goods Warranted as Represented.

Goods delivered to any part of the city.

Our Motto: "The nimble sixpence against the slow shilling!"

A. J. MUIR,

PLUMBER,

Gas and Steam Fitter.

Being a practical plumber, I can guarantee all work.

810 K STREET, Telephone 226.

SACRAMENTO, CAL.

Edwin K. Alsip & Co.

ESTABLISHED 1860.

REAL ESTATE

AND INSURANCE AGENTS.

FARMING LANDS A SPECIALTY.

Catalogues issued monthly.

No. 1015 Fourth Street, Sacramento.

WESTERN HOTEL

209 to 219 K Street.

The Leading Hotel of Sacramento, Cal.

FREE BUS TO AND FROM HOTEL.

Meals, 25 Cents. Rooms, according to Location.

WM. LAND, Proprietor.

Bainbridge

Business

J. C. BAINBRIDGE, PRINCIPAL.

College

No. 1017 J Street, Sacramento.

A full Business Course, together with Short-hand, Telegraphy, Bookkeeping, Penmanship and all the branches usually taught in schools of this kind.

A full corps of Teachers of the first rank only employed.

MRS. BAINBRIDGE has charge of the Music Department.

A. C. SWEETSER & CO.,

Real Estate & Insurance Brokers

Lands For Sale in all parts of the State.

Some Good Investments in School Lands.

Send for Catalogue.

Office, No. 1012 Fourth Street,

SACRAMENTO, CAL.

Barrett & Berkey

PACIFIC RESTAURANT,

OYSTER HOUSE AND

WINE PARLORS

701 J Street, cor. 7th.

King Bros.

State Capitol Cash Grocery, 131 J Street, corner Second.

Goods sold on small margin, strictly for cash. Best Brands of Wines, Liquors and Cigars.

H. WACHHORST

Leading Jeweler of Sacramento

SIGN OF THE TOWN CLOCK,

No. 315 J STREET, SACRAMENTO.

J. A. MOYNIHAN.

G. E. MOYNIHAN.

Moynihan's

418 J STREET.

FOR THE LADIES:

Just received, direct from Manufacturers, an elegant line of Silver and Oxydized Bonbonniere Boxes, Ladies' Cachou Flasks, and other Novelties.

Call and inspect them. THE ONLY FIRST-CLASS HOUSE IN THE CITY.

J. R. Wheat.

DITTMAR & WHEAT,

A. Dittmar.

Sacramento Lounge & Mattress Factory

BEDDING.

No. 916 J STREET.

FURNITURE

JOE POHEIM, The Tailor,

MAKES THE BEST-FITTING CLOTHES IN THE STATE.

Fine Tailoring at Prices Thirty-five per cent Cheaper than any other Establishment on the Pacific Coast.

LATEST DESIGNS OF FALL AND WINTER GOODS

Now on Exhibition at

NO. 600 J STREET, Corner of Sixth, SACRAMENTO.

BRANCH STORES: 203 Montgomery Street, 724 and 1110-12 Market Street, San Francisco; 49 and 51 South Spring Street, Los Angeles; 1021 and 1023 Fourth Street, San Diego; 105, 107 and 109 Santa Clara Street, San Jose; 73 Morrison Street, Portland, Oregon.

JAS. G. DAVIS Furniture, Carpets and Wall Paper

411 AND 413 K STREET,

Branch, 315 K St. Send for Catalogue. Prices Lowest.

BOOTS AND SHOES made to order. Boots, $6 to $11. Shoes, $4 to $9. Ladies' Shoes, best quality French Kid, $5 to $7.

REPAIRING DONE at lowest prices.

NONE BUT BEST mechanics employed.

WE GUARANTEE to make perfect fitting to the worst of crooked and crippled feet.

COMPETE WITH any shoes on the market.

216 J Street

—AND—

208 K Street, SACRAMENTO.

A. CASELLI & COMPANY.

Gregory Bros. Co

Established 1852.

COMMISSION MERCHANTS.

Packers and Shippers of California Fruit and Produce,

126 and 128 J STREET.

San Francisco Office, 313 Davis St. SACRAMENTO.

Hotfilter & Grafmiller,

MANUFACTURING JEWELERS.

Jewelry made to order. Watches, Clocks and Jewelry Repaired and Warranted.

No. 1026 Sixth Street, Sacramento.

GO TO

Nolan & Son's

FOR

FINE SHOES,

BRANCH OF SAN FRANCISCO.

603 J Street, Sacramento.

The Only Retail House in Sacramento that manufactures their own goods.

Try Our Famous $3 Shoes.

W. R. STRONG & CO.

Founded 1852.

Fruit Packers

and Shippers.

PROPRIETORS OF

CAPITAL NURSERIES,

SACRAMENTO, CAL.

RAILROAD TIME TABLE.

Southern Pacific Company

PACIFIC SYSTEM.

Sept. 9, 1889.

Trains LEAVE and are due to ARRIVE at SACRAMENTO.

Lv.	Trains Run Daily.	Arr.
7:00 A	Calistoga and Napa	11:40 A
4:05 P	Calistoga and Napa	7:20 P
11:00 P	Ashland and Portland via Chico	3:40 A
5:05 P	Deming, El Paso and East	7:05 P
7:30 P	Knight's Landing	7:55 A
4:30 A	Marysville (Mixed)	4:25 P
9:00 A	Los Angeles and Mojave	9:55 A
8:00 P	Second Class Ogden and East	6:30 A
10:30 P	Central Atlantic Express	3:40 P
3:00 P	Oroville	9:50 A
11:00 P	Oroville	3:40 A
3:00 P	Red Bluff via Marysville	9:50 A
10:40 A	Redding via Willows	4:05 P
7:00 A	San Francisco via Benicia	8:30 P
4:05 P	San Francisco via Benicia	10:10 P
4:00 A	San Francisco via Benicia	10:40 A
*10:00 A	San Francisco via Steamer	26:00 A
11:20 A	San Francisco via Livermore	2:25 P
3:05 P	San Francisco via Benicia	11:40 A
11:20 A	San Jose	2:25 P
9:00 A	Santa Barbara	9:55 A
5:05 P	Santa Barbara	7:05 P
7:00 A	Santa Rosa	11:40 A
4:05 P	Santa Rosa	7:20 P
9:00 A	Stockton and Galt	7:05 P
3:05 P	Stockton and Galt	9:55 A
8:00 P	Truckee and Reno	6:30 A
10:30 P	Truckee and Reno	3:40 P
8:30 A	Colfax	6:00 P
7:00 A	Vallejo	11:40 A
4:05 P	Vallejo	7:30 P
*12:15 P	Folsom and Placerville (Mixed)	10:25 A
*7:15 A	Folsom and Placerville	2:40 P
*5:20 P	Folsom	6:50 A

*Sunday excepted. †Sunday only. ‡Monday excepted. A for morning. P for afternoon.

A. N. TOWNLE, Gen'l Manager.
T. H. GOODMAN, Gen'l Pass. and Ticket Agent.

California State Bank

DOES A GENERAL BANKING BUSINESS.

Draws Exchange on all the Principal Cities of the World.

OFFICERS:

PRESIDENT.....N. D. RIDEOUT
VICE-PRESIDENT.....FRED'K COX
CASHIER.....A. ABBOTT
ASSISTANT CASHIER.....W. E. GERBER

DIRECTORS:

C. W. Clarke, Jos. Steffens, N. D. Rideout,
Geo. C. Perkins, J. R. Watson, Frederick Cox,
W. E. Gerber.

Capital Iron Works.

Vertical and Horizontal Engines

BOILERS,

STEAM AND POWER

PUMPS,

Deep Well Pumps,

Hand Pumps,

Stock Pumps,

PUMPMAKERS' SUPPLIES.

HORSE-POWERS, WIND MILLS,

Tanks and Tank Houses.

904 K Street, Sacramento.

CHANGED HANDS.

SACRAMENTO EXCHANGE,

(Formerly Wm. Gamble's.)

1012 SEVENTH STREET.

Fine Wines. All the celebrated brands of Liquors and Cigars.
ROBERT ALLEN,
Formerly of Agricultural Park.

ALBERT GRUBBS,

No. 1417 Fourth Street,

Will do all kinds of House Cleaning, Lay Carpets, Whitewashing, and everything in that line.

He also has the only wagon for the REMOVAL OF DEAD ANIMALS, and any orders left at his place of business will receive prompt attention.

Remember the address!

No. 1417 Fourth Street, Sacramento, Cal.

JESSE SLAUGHTER,

Office, No. 1217 Fifth Street.

Plastering, Whitewashing, Cleaning of Cesspools, Etc.

Also, CITY SCAVENGER.

Burying of dead animals attended to at short notice.

Don't forget the number—1217 Fifth street, the old stand, where I have been for 25 years.

THE EMERSON

Vol. I.

SACRAMENTO: SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 9, 1889.

No. 38.

THEMIS: published weekly, by A. J. Johnston & Co. Publication Office, 410 J Street. Subscription—One year, by mail, $3 00; six months, by mail, $1 50, in advance; per month, by carrier, 25 cents. (Entered at the Post Office at Sacramento as second-class matter.)

WINFIELD J. DAVIS AND W. A. ANDERSON, Editors.
A. J. JOHNSTON, Managing Editor.

We have not heard anything from the Board of Trustees about fixing the time for the election for fifteen freeholders to frame a new charter. It was ordered some months ago that an election be held for the purpose named, but no steps have been taken looking to such election. This is a very important matter, and no time should be lost in electing the Board of Freeholders. This board should have plenty of time to digest all the important matters that will come up for consideration. After this, the people must also have time to read and understand the new and proposed form of local government. When this time is given, it will be but a short time until the Legislature will convene, at which session the charter can be adopted or enacted in the form of a law, pursuant to the constitutional requirements. As we now stand, we are simply drifting along without the rudder of any adequate form of government. Every department of the city government is in an almost helpless condition. Our revenue system is the most important, and under the present status would lead to great complications, were it not for the generous character of our property owners, who have not thus far invoked extreme measures against meeting the tax obligations. Our suggestion, made some time ago, that the selection of the fifteen freeholders should be non-partisan is offered again at this time; the best and most representative men are the ones to call into this great public service. With such men, non-partisan in their character, there would be no opposition, and the choice would be unanimous. Under such circumstances, the time of holding the election would not be material, except that an early date should be fixed. There being nothing of a political party character in this matter, the two political party committees should meet together and select the proper men to execute this great trust.

The members of the State Board of Agriculture from the third ward of Sacramento City, seem to have come to a disagreement. Both are old enough, it would seem, to be able to sink school-boy jealousies when in positions of responsibility and dignity, and members of one of the most important boards of the State. We may misunderstand the purpose for which members of the State Board of Agriculture are appointed. We presumed they were to intelligently advance the material agricultural interests of the State—not to parade their personal animosities before the unsympathizing public. The good people have little interest in the matter that has brought about this serious rupture between the distinguished agriculturists from the third ward. It seems they have been calling each other "chronic office seekers." We are not prepared to say that they have not been. Yet under our system of government any citizen has a right to seek office whenever opportunity affords, and to suffer defeat. Office seeking is not a crime; if one seeks and fails, it is his privilege to stand in the next time. The gentlemen referred to seem now to be allied to different political parties; politics makes strange bed-fellows. It is, perhaps, harsh to thus speak of two of the prominent members of the ephemeral new constitution party of 1879. We, however, suggest that the next election is over a year off, and this is not the time nor is the State Agricultural Society the place for the airing of the past political successes and defeats of any of its members. Let what has gone, pass into history. Let the political future be guided by the caucusses, primaries and conventions. It is not at all unlikely that the Citrus Fair of Southern California will be held, notwithstanding the difference of opinion of the gentlemen from the third ward of this city. We do not apprehend that their comparisons of general popularity will, in any great measure, retard the development of the oranges, or the blooming of the cacti in the great south. California has much to exhibit. Of late years, special efforts have been made to acquaint the world with the wonderful of our agricultural productions. We have made no special endeavor at a display of antiquities. It seems, however, that our exhibition of political fossils may take the first premium.

Our democratic friends in the East must have put a keen edge on their political scalping knives, by the manner in which they have scalped the republicans. This is the "off year," however, and by the time the great national contest arrives, the grand old republican elephant will have recovered. It is a matter of political history that these "off year" defeats only serve to make the republicans more alert, causing them to pick their flints and look well to the priming. The remarkable results in Iowa and Ohio can only be attributed to local causes—the main one being prohibition, Sunday and sumptuary laws. The people in many localities in Iowa and Ohio are greatly averse to extreme restrictive measures, and resent the enactments of such strict and arbitrary provisions; and all these have been laid at the door of the republican party of these States. With this record the candidates had to encounter the most powerful combine in the United States—the liquor element—which, from a point of self-interest, cast their ballots in favor of democracy, because of its policy position against all sumptuary, Sunday and prohibition laws. The great national issue—the tariff or revenue reform—was not heard of in these local campaigns. Indeed, there are no national issues involved. Reasoning from this standpoint, we cannot see where or how the republican party principles have received a defeat. The party candidates in the several States named have been defeated and democrats have been elected, but this, after all, is only an individual matter, and can in no sense be laid up as a rout of the national republican party. But the democracy, with characteristic exuberance, will howl themselves hoarse over the great democratic victory. A prominent democratic official, and a leader in his party, was passing by a crowd of democrats who were shaking hands and congratulating one another upon the victory, when he addressed them thus: "You d—d fools! don't you know this is the 'off year,' and some of us have been rejoicing over such victories for thirty years, only to suffer defeat at the national contest? No, sirs! I don't jubilate worth a cent." The recent elections in the East will, no doubt, set our party leaders to thinking, and will prompt them to devise some plan to curb the cranks and extremists in our party councils of the States of Iowa, Ohio, New Jersey and New York. The "middle course is the safest and best."

It is a matter to be regretted that since the death of Washington Bartlett, California has been practically without a Governor. We have had occasion several times to refer to the inattention paid to matters of State by the present nominal executive head—inattention particularly conspicuous in matters involving the lives and liberty of men. Incapacity in the ordinary matters incident to the executive office was so promi-nently displayed during the late session of the Legislature that the people became educated to expect nothing better until the incoming of the one who will be chosen at the next election to fill the office of Governor. The selections that have been made by the people of this State of Chief Magistrates have been excellent—of men eminently qualified to discharge the duties of that important office. At the last election we chose between Swift and Bartlett—a mistake could not have been made in the selection of either if there could have been an assurance that the successful gentleman would have served out his term. Governor Bartlett, while in office, conducted a dignified and statesmanlike administration—one which commanded the respect of people of all classes and of all parties. His death while Governor was a State calamity. The selections of Lieutenant-Governors have in some instances been made without regard to the possibility that the individuals chosen might be called to fill the higher office, and the people have been made to suffer for their neglect to properly attend to matters which may become so important to them. The candidacy of Mr. Waterman for the Governorship, in view of the failure he has made while he has nominally filled that office, is generally treated as a sort of a political burlesque. If he does not know it, his friends should have the kindness to tell him that his chances of success are absolutely hopeless. He could not secure the support of the members of the political parties upon whose tickets his name was carried at the last gubernatorial election, in the event of his receiving the nomination from either of them. The republican party will not burden its ticket with dead weights that will inevitably swamp it, and political common sense will dictate that the standard bearer particularly will be one whose ability and capacity to fill the office will inspire the respect and confidence of the people. In a growing State like California a governmental head is needed. While we in no sense impugn the integrity of Governor Waterman, it must be admitted that he does not possess the capacity to properly discharge the duties of the office he holds, and the fact that he permits it to be conducted by others, would seem to indicate that he realizes his inability. That a man can successfully conduct his own business is no sure indication that he can discharge an important public trust with equal success.

The number of advocates of the proposed single tax system are increasing rapidly. At a meeting of a society in that interest, recently held in San Francisco, a committee was appointed to collect data based on land values. As many as 60,000 signers in that city have been secured to the following petition to Congress:

The undersigned respectfully pray for the appointment by your honorable body of a special committee for the purpose of making a full inquiry into and report upon the expediency of raising all public revenues by single tax upon the value of land, irrespective of improvements, to the exclusion of all other taxes, whether in the form of tariffs upon imports, taxes upon internal productions, or otherwise.

It is doubtful if the present system of raising the revenue for the support of the federal government can be improved on materially, as the burden is hardly felt by the people, and seems to oppress stump speakers and partisan editors, if we are to judge by their expressions during Presidential campaigns, more than any other portion of the populace. However, a land tax only for the support of State, county and municipal governments is the proper system to adopt. There is no justice in taxing a man for that which he creates by his industry and enterprise. That a man plants his land in orchard or vines, or builds on it valuable structures, is no reason why he should be made to pay more in taxation than his neighbor, who permits his land to lie idle, either from lack of enterprise or in the hope that the work of those about him will enhance his bare earth in value. As it is now, personal property, especially money, largely escapes assessment. The poor man cannot hide what little he possesses; moneyed men and corporations in many cases make false returns, and there is no practical means of uncovering their wealth. If taxation is laid on the land only, there can be no concealment; its value can be easily determined.

The great majority of the people are impressed with the idea that the law is an uncertainty. They reason from a stand-point of ignorance as to the law. But what gives rise to this general impression is the uncertainty of the administration of the laws. The laws are—with very rare exceptions, attributable at times to the ignorance of legislators—very certain in their meaning and purport. It is the uncertainty of the action of juries, of judicial decisions, that makes the uncertainty. Judges view legislative enactments differently, and rule directly antagonistic to each other. This is because minds differ—the processes of reasoning are not the same. Judges in the highest tribunals do not concur on important legal questions, and their judgments are often as wide of each other as the poles. The verdicts of juries are the source of the wide-spread idea of the uncertainty of the administration of the law. It often happens that there is no possible reason for the conclusion of juries, other than the expression of a will, no matter whether it is in accord with any principle of law or justice, or not. It is a proverb that there is nothing so uncertain as the verdict of a petit jury. Men's proprietary rights and men's liberties have been ruthlessly disregarded by the wilful, arbitrary and unreasonable verdicts of juries. Passion, prejudice, emotion, love, hatred, sympathy, corruption, bribery, and other motives have procured the rendering of verdicts against law and decency, disregarding the rights or liberties of parties. It is this kind of action that causes the masses to exclaim: "Law is uncertain." No, the law is not uncertain; it is only the administration that is doubtful; only the uncertainty of the action of the judicial mind; only the uncertainty of juries. It seems that the older we grow, the more skilled in the enactment of laws, the more uncertainty attends the administration thereof. It has become, in some of the larger cities, a question of tact, skill, corrupt or otherwise, to secure that counsel or influence which can aid in defeating justice, and to gain decisions and verdicts against the law; against the rights or liberties of litigants. In important legal contests, no matter in what courts, we find that the litigant, one side or the other, is desirous of securing that counsel or influence that can—disregarding the question of justice—have the greatest power over the court or jury. In such cases it is not a contest of legal skill or the force of legal accumen, but that element which gamblers call a "sure thing." Why, right in our midst, under the apparent sanction of judicial determination, we have seen some of the grossest violations of private rights—even personal liberties—and yet it is called justice. It was Judge Greer, of the United States Supreme Court, who, before he went on that bench, and while acting as a nisi prius judge, that declared, after one of these unjust verdicts, "that it takes thirteen men in that court to steal a man's farm." It would be well for some of the judges of this State to adopt that rule in the administration of justice.

A NECKLACE composed of tigers' claws mounted in diamonds is the favorite ornament of Lady Marie Ede von Ameline, the famous tiger huntress. She killed with her own hand the four beasts from whose claws her unique piece of jewelry is made, and preserves their skins as rugs. She is now traveling in America, as is another huntress, Lady Eva Wyndham Linn, who claims to have slain six man-eaters during a visit to her uncle, the Governor of Nepal.

A convention of authors and artists at Kansas City reveals to the world that the literary movement throughout the West is growing painfully intense. One of the embarrassments of travel in that section now is the uncertainty which prevails in the mind of the stranger when he is met by a committee of citizens as to whether he is in the hands of a Browning society or of a sheriff's posse.

SOME UNWRITTEN HISTORY.

Sacramento in Embryo—How Government was Established from Chaos.

PART V.

In Part II of this series of articles (May 26, 1889), we gave the date Captain Sutter landed at the present site of Sacramento City (August 16, 1839). In the latter part of September of that year he selected the place for his headquarters on the highest land in this vicinity, on which he laid out the grounds for his future fort, using mainly Indian labor in its construction. The first authentic reference to the condition of the fort and its progress toward completion is found in the report of Lieutenant Wilkes (vol. V, page 190):

On August 20, 1841, Lieutenant Commandant Ringgold, of the Wilkes' United States Exploring Expedition, left Yerba Buena with six boats to explore the Sacramento river. On the 23d the party reached the residence of Captain Sutter. That gentleman is described in the official report of the expedition as a Swiss, who had recently arrived in California and settled on his grant of land. "The spot he has chosen for the erection of his dwelling and fortification," says the report, "he has called New Helvetia; it is situated on the summit of a small knoll, rising from the level prairie, two miles from the east bank of the Sacramento, and fifty miles from its mouth. * * * * * When Captain Sutter first settled here in 1839, he was surrounded by some of the most hostile tribes of Indians on the river; but by his energy and management, with the aid of a small party of trappers, has thus far prevented opposition to his plans. He has even succeeded in winning the good-will of the Indians, who are now laboring for him in building houses, and a line of wall to protect him against the inroads or attacks that he apprehends, more from the present authorities of the land, than from the tribes about him, who are now working in his employ. He holds, by appointment of the government, the office of administrator, and has, according to his own belief, supreme power in his own district—condemning, acquitting and punishing, as well as marrying and burying those who are under him. He treats the Indians very kindly, and pays them well for their services in trapping and working for him. His object is to attach them, as much as possible, to his interests, that in case of need he may rely upon their chiefs for assistance. Although Captain Sutter is, in general, in the habit of treating the Indians with kindness, yet he related to our gentlemen instances in which he had been obliged to fusilade nine of them; indeed, he does not seem to stand upon much ceremony with those who oppose him in any way. His buildings consist of extensive corrals and dwelling-houses, for himself and people, all built of adobes. Labor is paid for in goods. The extent of his stock amounts to about one thousand horses, two thousand five hundred cattle, and about one thousand sheep, many of which are now to be seen around his premises, giving them an appearance of civilization. Captain Sutter has commenced extensive operations in farming; but in the year of our visit the drought had affected him, as well as others, and ruined all his crops. About forty Indians were at work for him, whom he had taught to make adobes. The agreement for their services is usually made with their chiefs, and in this way, as many as are wanted are readily obtained. These chiefs have far more authority over their tribes than those we had seen to the north; and, in the opinion of an intelligent American, they have more power over and are more respected by their tribes than those of any other North American Indians. Connected with the establishment, Captain Sutter has erected a distillery, in which he makes a kind of pisco from the wild grape of the country.

Sutter had at that time a creditable plant, and when he added to it the large amount of personal property obtained from the Russian-American company, under his contract of December 16, 1841, he became at once a power in Northern California, second only to the Mexican government. He pushed forward his work at the fort to completion. We have no data from which to fix the time his fort was finished.

Captain Fremont, after his perilous passage of the Sierra Nevada range, reached Sutter's Fort March 8, 1844. He tells us that Sutter's Fort was constructed of sun-dried bricks; that he had ditches around his extensive wheat fields; that the plowing and harrowing, with other agricultural operations, was entirely the work of Indians, for which they received a very moderate compensation, principally in shirts, blankets and other clothing; that, on application to the neighboring village, he readily obtained as many boys and girls as he had any use for; that there were a number of girls at the fort in training for a future woolen factory, but were then engaged in constantly watering the gardens, rendered necessary by a dry season, and that Captain Sutter was then making arrangements to irrigate his lands by water from the Rio de los Americanos, having then growing 300 fanegas of wheat. That Sutter's Fort then mounted twelve pieces of artillery, two of them of brass; that the fort was capable of admitting a garrison of 1,000 men, but there were then only forty Indians in uniform, constituting his garrison, one of whom was always found on duty at the gate. The guns were not kept in good order. The whites in the employ of Sutter were American, French and German, probably about thirty in number. That the inner wall was formed into buildings, constituting quarters of the soldiers, blacksmith shop, other work shops, dwelling house, large distillery house, and other buildings; that the fort was built on a pond-like stream, at times a running creek, communicating with the Rio de los Americanos, which enters the Sacramento about two miles below the fort.

The details of the plan of Sutter's Fort have never been published, and the necessary information to enable us to reproduce it is not readily accessible. We have inspected all the engravings extant, and find that they do not agree in details. Most (perhaps all) of them are from free-hand drawings, with some points of fancy about them. We have taken pains to explore the site of the fort, and have taken such evidence of living witnesses as is now to be had, and in the next part of this series of articles will give our readers the benefit of our explorations.

A LITERARY CURIOSITY.

A Little Volume Two Hundred and Fifty Years Old—Its Ill-fated Author—A Reminder of Revolutionary Days—Benjamin Franklin and His English Friend.

In the State Library is an ancient little volume printed in London in 1639. It bears on its title page the following:

The Commonwealth of Utopia: containing a Learned and Pleasant Discourse of the best State of a Publike Weale, as it is found in the Government of the New Ile called Utopia. Written by the Right Honourable Sir Thomas Moore, Lord Chancellour of England.

In works on bibliography this particular edition of Utopia is noted as being inaccurate. Its title page evidences the justice of this criticism in the fact that the name of its author—Sir Thomas More—is incorrectly spelled. There is not so much of interest in the antiquity of this volume as in its former ownership and handling. Though strongly bound, its little pages show wear—not the wear of careless usage, but rather that during the 250 years that have elapsed since it came from the press its various controllers have consulted it with frequency. It was once in the library of Governor Thomas Pownall, and its page margins bear many annotations in his handwriting. On the margins of pages 72 and 73 is written in ink that is almost faded and illegible the following words:

This Passage in this Book my old Friend Benj. Franklin has more than once turned to & read, when we have been talking of our British Ideas & Theories of establishing the power of Provincial Government without communication of the rights & privileges of, & Constitution of Britain, to America. THOS. POWNALL, 1774.

The writing quoted is opposite the following paragraphs in the book:

These Achoriens once made warre, in their Kings quarrell, for to get him another Kingdome which hee laid clayme unto, and advanced himselfe right Inheritor to the Crowne thereof, by the Title of an old alliance. At the last, when they had gotten it, and saw that they had even as much vexation and trouble in Keeping it, as they had in getting it; and that either their new conquered Subjects by sundry occasions were making daily Insurrections to rebell against them, or else that other countries were continually with divers Inrodes and forraignes invading them; so that they were ever Fighting, either for them, or against them, and never could breake up their Campes: Seeing themselves in the meane season, pilled and impoverished, their money carryed out of the Realme; their owne men killed, to maintaine the glory of another Nation: when they had no Warre, peace nothing better than warre, by reason that their people in warre had so inured themselves to corrupt and wicked manners, that they had taken a delight and pleasure in robbing and stealing; that through manslaughter, they had gathered boldnesse to unischiefe; that their Lawes were had in contempt, and nothing set by or regarded; that their King being troubled with the charge and government of two Kingdomes, could not, nor was not able perfectly to discharge his office towards them both: seeing againe, that all these evils and troubles were endlesse, at the last laid their heads together, and like faithfull and loving subjects, gave to their King free choice and liberty to Keepe still the one of these two Kingdomes, whether he would; alledging, that he was not able to Keepe both, and that they were more than might well be governed of halfe a King, for as much as no man would be content to take him for his Muletter, that keepeth another mans Mules besides his. So this good Prince was constrained to be content with his old Kingdome, and to give over the new to one of his friends, who shortly after was violently driven out.

Furthermore, if I should declare unto them, that all this busie preperance to warre, whereby so many Nations for his sake should be brought into a troublesome hurly-burly, when all his Coffers were emptied, his Treasures wasted, and his people destroyed, should at the length through some mischance, be in vaine, and to none effect; and that therefore it were best for him to content himselfe with his owne Kingdome, as his forefathers and predecessors did before him; to make much of it, to enrich it, and to make it as flourishing as he could; to endeavor himselfe to love his subjects, and againe to be beloved of them; willingly to live with them, peaceably to governe them, and with other Kingdomes not to meddle, seeing that which he hath already is even enough for him, yea, and more than he can well turne him to. This mine advice, Master More, how thinke you, would it not be hardly taken?

Utopia was written by Sir Thomas More, an English lawyer, statesman and writer, who was born in London, in 1480, and executed there July 6, 1535. He was a member of a distinguished family and carefully educated. He became eminent at the bar, and in early life distinguished himself in Parliament in the reign of Henry VII. After the fall of Cardinal Wolsey, he succeeded to the Lord Chancellorship of England, October 25, 1529. The same cause which led to the downfall of Wolsey—a refusal to recognize the validity of the divorce of Henry VIII from Queen Catharine, and his marriage to Anne Boleyn—brought about the destruction of More. In 1534 he was required to swear allegiance to the act of succession for securing the throne to the offspring of Anne Boleyn. Refusing, he was imprisoned in the Tower, afterward tried and condemned to death. More was a man of bravery and of wit. Of him it is said that when told that the king had been graciously pleased to commute the hanging, drawing and quartering into simple decapitation, he said, "God preserve all my friends from such royal favors." The messenger, on announcing the time of his death, told him that "it was the king's pleasure he should not use many words on the scaffold." "I did purpose," said More, "to have spoken somewhat, but I will conform myself to the king's commandment." He was conducted to the scaffold by the lieutenant of the Tower. The framework was so weak that it was feared it might break down. Said More, "See me safe up; and for my coming down, let me shift for myself." The executioner, as usual, asked for his forgiveness. "Friend," said More, "thou wilt render me to-day the greatest service in the power of man. But my neck is short; take heed, therefore, that thou strike not awry, for the sake of the credit of thy profession." He placed his head upon the block, removed his long, white beard, and said with a smile, "My beard has never committed any treason." The axe fell and his neck was severed. His head was fixed for some time on London Bridge, as was then the custom, but was afterward obtained by his daughter, who died about nine years after her father, and was buried with his head upon her breast. The detestable murders of distinguished men, which characterized the infamous reign of Henry VIII, engendered so deep a feeling among the people, that for a time it aroused the fears of the tyrant. Of his six wives he caused two to suffer death on the scaffold, two were discarded, one died in childbirth and one was fortunate enough to survive him. Anne Boleyn, on whose account Wolsey died and More and others were executed, perished at the hands of the headsman. Henry had transferred his affections upon Jane Seymour, one of the maids of honor in the court, and he married her the day after Anne's execution.

Utopia was first published in Latin in 1516, and soon afterward was translated into English, French, German and Italian. The object of the work was to exhibit a perfect commonwealth, on an imaginary island, feigned to have been discovered by a companion of Amerigo Vespucci. There society was free from indolence, avarice, luxury, want, oppression and intolerance. The title of the book has passed into a proverb, and its ideas were very far in advance of the age in which More lived. They have, in a measure, however, approached realization under the American system of government.

The connection between Pownall and Franklin with this little volume in the library, can be readily understood, when we review the lives of the two men, consider the close friendship which existed between them, and the mutuality of their sentiments in relation to the oppression by the British government of the American colonies. Pownall was born in London, in 1722, and was of distinguished ancestry. He came to this country in October, 1753, as private secretary to Governor Osbourne. The following year he attended the Albany Congress and quickly perceived the drift of American politics. In 1756 he was appointed governor of Massachusetts, and in 1760, to a similar office in South Carolina, but never assumed the government of the latter colony, as he immediately returned to England. Shortly after reaching home, he entered Parliament and served almost continuously until his death, which occurred at Bath, February 25, 1805. In Parliament he was a firm and consistent friend of America. In 1767 he vigorously opposed parliamentary taxation of the colonies, and six years before the declaration of peace was the first to announce that England's sovereignty over America was gone forever. He then advocated a commercial treaty to prostrate the French influence. In Parliament he was the first member to introduce a bill for peace with the colonies. His published writings were extensive, and he made a profound study of American politics. Franklin was twice sent to England to remonstrate against the oppressions of the British government upon the colonies. When he reached London on his second visit in December, 1764, he secured the repeal of the Stamp Act, but subsequent parliamentary action was almost equally as obnoxious. He did not return to America until March, 1775, sixteen days after the battle of Lexington. As illustrative of the treatment he received in England in 1774—the year in which Governor Pownall wrote the marginal note in this copy of Utopia, it may be stated that on January 29, Franklin appeared before the privy council to present a petition of the Massachusetts Assembly for the removal of the governor of that colony. Though a man of fame in the world of science and of the age of nearly three score years and ten, he was reviled and insulted by the solicitor general, who made a personal speech against him that was received with cheers and laughter by the lords in council. The petition was dismissed. It is not at all unlikely that while in England on these important missions, Franklin was much in Pownall's company and that their discussions of the situation of affairs in England and the colonies prompted Franklin to so often turn and read the very apt and almost prophetic extract from the writings of the unfortunate More.

Senator Sherman has adopted Mr. Gladstone's plan of not reading books until they are a year old.

The Stage.

[Under this caption will appear a fair and impartial criticism of the drama, actors, music, and all noteworthy matters pertaining to the stage.]

Jo Jefferson, W. J. Florence and Mrs. John Drew make a strong team in The Rivals.

Next week Frank Mayo will revive Davy Crockett in this city. The last time Frank Mayo was here the Royal Guard was produced.

The Witch is the title of a new romantic and tragic play which will have its first production in the Grand Opera House, San Francisco, on the evening of November 11th.

Theater-goer.—The love scene in your play isn't half so natural as it used to be. The same people do it, too. Manager.—Yes, but the lovers were married during their last vacation.

Last night Patti Rosa presented Bob at the Clunie Opera House to a good audience. To-night Margery Daw will be the attraction at the Clunie, with Patti Rosa in songs and dances.

The first number of Joseph Jefferson's autobiography appeared in the November number of The Century Magazine. Jo Jefferson says that he was almost born in a theater. He belonged to a family of actors. There are some very interesting reminiscences in this autobiography.

The orchestra is the best judge of a play. Whenever the orchestra laughs, you can be sure the comedy is a success. It is said if the cornet player is enlisted into an interest in the play, you may be assured that there is nothing wanting, and that the most critical public will approve the play.

The new Markham Opera House, at Portland, Oregon, now in course of construction, will cost upward of $200,000. It has been leased for a term of ten years by Manager Al. Hayman, who, in connection with Charles Frohman, will manage the house. It is expected it will be completed by the middle of January.

There should be some way to suppress the man who gets a seat in the middle of a long row at a crowded theater, and then insists on going out to get a clove at the end of each act, stepping on ladies' feet and otherwise making himself a nuisance. The coming back after the curtain is up is worse than going out. We have such men at every play.

Mr. Barnes of New York, a splendid play, will be presented at the Metropolitan Theater on November 13th and 14th. During the entire San Francisco engagement there were many turned away from the doors nightly. This play will make amends for the poor combinations of the past few months. There is a fine cast of real artists. Two nights is a very short engagement for such a popular play.

James E. Murdock, the veteran actor, who was a great favorite in Cincinnati twenty-five years ago, has finally taken up his residence in Boston. He began there in 1837 as a teacher of elocution and voice-culture, and he has returned, as he says, to end his days. He is seventy-nine years of age and as bright and active as a man of forty-five. "I am too old to act now," he says, "but I can still teach the use of the human voice." Mr. Murdock is a scholar, and he has known nearly all the distinguished men of his day. It is possible that he may write his memoirs.

The little seven-year-old daughter of Fred. Cooper and Georgie Woodthrope-Cooper, will in the future assume the role of "Little Lord Fountleroy" in the company now playing that drama on this coast. We saw the little tot on Thursday evening in this city at rehearsal, and she is a remarkable child. In manner and voice, as well as artistic ideas, she is superior to any child that has ever assumed the role. She mastered an act and a half of the present manner of presenting the drama, and that, too, after having learned the play by another rendition of the same. The new "star," Little Georgie Cooper, will assume the title role at Santa Cruz next week. Fred. Cooper was the late manager of the Georgie Woodthrope company. This little brilliant which he introduces upon the stage is a phenomenon. She is pretty, bright, and remarkably well developed in mind.

Barry and Fay's play, McKenna's Flirtation, which was intended to bring nothing but happiness to everybody that should have anything to do with it, has come near to causing serious trouble, says the New York Tribune. The plot of the piece turns on a love letter that goes astray, and the letter itself is read several times on the stage. To advertise the play, hundreds of copies of this letter have been made, some of them lithographed and others actually written by some young women employed for the purpose, and these letters have been sent to many people about the city. On Wednesday night "Abe" Hummel of the law firm of Howe & Hummel, went to see the play, and when he heard Mr. Barry read the letter, he was astounded, to say the least. He found the manager and told him that a few days before a woman had brought him a copy of that letter, which she had found in her husband's pocket, and asked him to bring a suit for divorce. He now understood the case for the first time. The letter began "Dear Tim," and ended "Yours forever, Mary Ellen Ryan," and the woman had mistaken "Tim" for "Jim." The manager saw her yesterday at the lawyer's office and asked her to come and see the play and learn for herself where the letter really came from.

Lawrence Hutton, in Harper's Magazine for November, has given us a history of Hamlet in the United States. The first presentation in New York was on November 26, 1761, by Lewis Hallam, who was the original "Hamlet" in America, having been presented at Philadelphia in the autumn of 1759. On the evening of November 26, 1861, just one hundred years after the first introduction of the "Melancholy Dane" Edwin Booth presented the celebrated tragedy in New York. Mr. Hutton has given a sketch of all the prominent actors who essayed this difficult role since its first presentation, and among them appears Edmund Kean, James Fennell, John Howard Payne, Junius Brutus Booth, James William Wallack, Charles MacCready, Charles Kemble, Charles Kean, Edwin Forrest, Edwin L. Davenport, James Stark, Henry Johnstone, James E. Murdock, Charles Fechter, Edwin Booth, Lawrence Barrett, Salvini, Bandmann and Lester Wallack. The greatest cast of Hamlet ever presented was at the famous Wallack testimonial, May 21, 1888, with Edwin Booth as "Hamlet"; Barrett, "Ghost"; Frank Mayo, the "King"; John Gilbert, "Polonius"; Ellen Plympton, "Laertes"; John A. Lane, "Horatio"; Joe Wheelock, the "First Actor"; Milnes Levick, the "Second Actor"; Harry Edwards, the "Priest"; Joe Jefferson and W. J. Florence, the "Grave Diggers"; Miss Kellogg, "Gertrude"; Miss Rose Coghlan, the "Player Queen" and Madame Modjeska, "Ophelia."

Book Chat.

A novel reader who has a craving for red-hot sensationism can find what he wants in "Quicksands," by J. J. Fleetwood. The book is one which no man would like to take into his family, or even be seen reading. It is not so indecent as some that are produced by the untainted young women of late. It is finely flavored, of the French school.

Ten years ago there was scarcely a good and respectable reading club in the native quarters of Calcutta, but to-day the number of such useful institutions is large, and most of them, it is gratifying to note, are in a flourishing condition. The big Calcutta Public Library in the Metcalfe Hall is poor, but these small libraries, many of which possess more than three thousand books, have a handsome surplus of show.

The death of Augier, the French dramatist, does not remove an active worker from the world. For twelve years he has written almost nothing. His deafness led him to seek seclusion, and he was not known personally to the new generation. He looked young, but his ambition had long been dead. He was an enthusiastic Bonapartist, and through his influence his nephew, Paul Deloure, became an adherent of Gen. Boulanger.

Shakespeareans may like to know, especially those who are familiar with the ana of the great poet in his birthplace, that the Indian government has given orders that all the vernacular translations of Shakespeare shall be presented to the memorial library at Stratford. No complete translation has yet been made, but there are versions of more than one of the plays in several native languages, the most popular being Hamlet and The Merchant of Venice.

Henry Adams, the historian, son of the late Charles Francis Adams, lives in Washington, and is considered a society wit. It would surprise many Washingtonians who know him to be told of his contributions to American history. Mr. Adams is a small man physically, rather reserved in manner. He has a fine library, and his collection of etchings is very valuable. He is very fond of flowers, and raises them in profusion. He is now engaged on the later volumes of his "History of the United States." His work will end with the administration of Madison.

"Ardath; The Story of a Dead Self." By Marie Corelli. Exhausted and weary, seeking vainly the inspiration which once made his every thought a poem, Theos Alwyn, the famous English poet and atheist, seeks in the heart of the Caucasus, Heliobas who once startled Paris with his mysterious powers, but had renounced the world and entered a monastery. Heliobas declares that he can free the soul from its earthly form, but refuses to send the spirit of the unbeliever into infinite space. Alwyn's own unsuspected power, however, frees his soul, and sends it out into the dark unknown.

There is a man living quietly in London who is one of the most successful writers of verse set to music that is in England to-day, yet he is not very widely known by name. It is Frederick E. Weatherly, and he is the author of "Nancy Lee," a song that has been sung in every quarter of the globe, and has brought to the author an amount of fame and money that makes him practically independent. The song was written at Oxford in an hour. Weatherly had made an appointment for a pupil whom he was coaching for the annual commencement. The pupil failed to keep his appointment, and while waiting for him the piece came suddenly to his mind, and it was written then and there. One of the strange things about the song was that it was in the heyday of its popularity about the time of the "Princess Alice" disaster. It was being sung on deck just before the vessel went down. That fact was printed in all the English newspapers, and the song suffered a temporary check in its popularity, but thousands of copies of it are now sold, not only in Great Britain, but through Australia, Canada, and in fact wherever the English language is spoken. Mr. Weatherly is the author of scores of other songs that are not so well known. He has been writing songs ever since he was an undergraduate, twenty-five years ago.

Professional Chat.

If you want to be a philosopher have no eye for painting, no finger or ear for music, no brain for poetry. Any of these will keep a man from wisdom.

General Raum, Pension Commissioner, will be 60 years old in December. He is one of the three men in Washington who are called Shakespearean in their type of head and face, the others being Justice Field and Congressman Reed. Of the three Raum is the handsomest and looks most like the portraits of the Bard of Avon. General Raum has a fine house in Washington. His wife is the happy mother of three sons and five daughters. Of the latter, three are married and one is a widow. General and Mrs. Raum are noted for their hospitality.

Colonel M——, commonwealth's attorney for — county, had unbounded influence over the presiding justice of the County Court under the old system. B——, a young lawyer, had been retained to defend a prisoner, and discovering what he conceived to be a fatal defect in the indictment, submitted a motion to quash. He was proceeding to sustain his point as best he could when the presiding justice, a fat old fellow, settled himself in his chair and fell asleep. The argument proceeded, and at its close "the Squire" roused up, and rubbing his eyes, said, "Squash'er." Colonel M—— was on his feet in a moment, and inquired, with much asperity, "Do I understand this Court as sustaining the motion to quash my indictment?" "Oh! No, Kurnil," said the Squire. "I squashes the motion to squash."—Harper's Magazine.

Probably no persons are more widely known than John Doe and Richard Roe, whose names figure so universally in legal documents in Great Britain and the United States. The origin of these distinguished personages dates back to the reign of Edward III, and the adoption of this fiction in legal practice was due to a provision of magna charta, which requires the production of witnesses before every criminal trial. John Doe and Richard Roe were thenceforth inserted as the names of the alleged witnesses. By an Act of the British Parliament, passed in 1852, to take effect on the 24th of October in that year, the use of this venerable fiction was abolished. Though obsolete in Great Britain, John Doe and Richard Roe continue to flourish in the United States, and doubtless will retain their wide popularity for years to come.

NOTES.

It is announced that ex-Congressman H. F. Page will be a candidate for his old position next year, and that he will present his name to the republican convention.

A number of Arabs, attired in their native costumes, have arrived in Detroit, and will make that city their home. The press has not so far stated the nationality of this particular lot of Arabs. When they commence to talk it can probably be ascertained by their accent.

Governor Waterman is announced as aspiring to be Governor of California. If he possesses any elements of qualification to be Governor, he has had a rare opportunity to display them since the death of Governor Bartlett. If, with the opportunities he has had, he has failed to be the Chief Executive, under what other circumstances can he expect to fill so high an office?

A few days ago Frank D. Ryan's little five-year-old tot was asking his mother some very troublesome questions about heaven and the devil. Mrs. Ryan explained to him that heaven was above and that the devil was down below. The little fellow cogitated a while, and finally remarked: "Well, I dess I bored a hole in the devil!" "Why, child, what do you mean?" said his mother. "I bored into a board and it went fro' in de ground, and if the devil is in the ground below, I bored him," said the youngster.

Sitting in a barber shop the other evening, we listened to the conversation of a number of colored gentlemen discussing upon the subject of "What is Good Eating." Presently an old, gray haired darkey gave expression to this forcible statement: "Gwa' from dar, you Californy niggers, you don't know nuffin 'bout good eatin'; 'Possum bak'd, wid sweet taters an' sun cornbread an' de dish—jiss eat 'em an' y'ed want to die if you couldn't git no mo'."

There is such a thing as a man being too good—so good, in fact, that he fails to realize the true ideal of manhood. A little of old Satan in our composition is but in accord with the laws of nature. The best men are often molded from their faults. The bright geniuses of the world would never come under the orthodox idea of goodness; our extremely good men never become great statesmen or rulers—never command armies or accomplish victories. The noted literary lights of the world come not under the category of goodness.

The Colusa Sun is now issued as a daily. The new order of things commenced November 1st. The Sun has in the past been one of the leading journals of the interior, and, while most pronounced in its democratic proclivities, has always been fair, impartial and just. As a weekly, it was bright, spicy and brim full of news, abreast with the times. As a daily, we await developments. There are many things to be considered in the issue of a daily that do not attach to a weekly. We wish our friend, the Colusa Daily Sun, success; and that community needs a daily.

Some men are born mean—inheriting it from father to son; others are adepts in achieving this distinction by continued and successful practice. The real, genuine mean man would rather acquire ten dollars by some sharp, mean trick, than to earn double that amount honestly. The mean man is found in all the conditions and walks of life, and wherever he is found, he remains the mean man. His religion is to gain some advantage by trickery. He glories in grinding down some unfortunate, struggling creditor. His methods are those of the vulture and jackal. We have a number of such in our city, who are laying up a good account for the devil. There is one profession, the law, that should be free from the mean, tricky man, but it is not.

